

THE REIGN OF HENRY THE FIFTH

Cambridge University Press Fetter Lane, London

New York Bomboy, Calcusta, Madres Torons

Macmillan

Talpo

Maruzen-Kabushi ki-Kaisha

All rights reserved

THE REIGN OF HENRY THE FIFTH

BY

JAMES HAMILTON WYLIE, M.A., LITT.D.

LATE H.M. DIVISIONAL INSPECTOR OF SCHOOLS FORD'S LECTURER IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, 1899

AND

WILLIAM TEMPLETON WAUGH, M.A., F.R.S.C.

MINGSFORD PROFESSOR OF HISTORY IN MCGALL UNIVERSITY

> VOLUME III (1415-1422)

Cambridge at the University Press 1929

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN

PREFACE

WHEN Dr J. H. Wylie died, early in 1914, he had completed the first volume of his Reign of Henry V and had corrected 96 pages of proof for the second. He left a great mass of manuscript, and much of this, thanks to the courageous devotion of members of his family, was printed in vol. 11, which appeared in 1919. But a good deal still remained unpublished, and as the editors of vol. 11 felt unable to continue their work, this eventually came into my hands. After discussion with Dr Wylie's publishers, it was agreed that I should prepare it for the press, and that, in order to complete the work, I should myself deal with such phases of the subject as Dr Wylie had not touched. It was stipulated that I should omit such parts of the manuscript as were not strictly relevant to the main theme and that the appendices, in particular, should be severely compressed.

3

The manuscript entrusted to me contained a narrative beginning with the departure of the Emperor Sigismund from Constance in July, 1415, and ending with the capitulation of Melun in November, 1420. On the greater part of the period covered Dr Wylie had apparently completed his researches. Very little of the manuscript, however, had undergone literary revision. Dr Wylie's style, it is true, was somewhat unconventional, and it would have been unpardonable to amend it according to text-book rules of English composition; but his draft abounded with colloquialisms and solecisms, which he would certainly not have wished to be printed under his name. Consequently, while the matter of chapters xlviii-lxi is substantially his, the form is partially mine, though I have kept his exact words whenever it was possible. Here and there I have corrected palpable slips; sometimes I have drawn attention to the results of research conducted since Dr Wylie's death; and I have inserted one or two passages on topics to which he had given little or no attention. Whenever I could do so without bewildering the reader, I have enclosed my own contributions in square brackets. It will of course be understood that I have not tried to verify all Dr Wylie's references; for to do this would have been to repeat research on which he had spent many years. In point of fact, however, I have collated much of the manuscript with his original authorities.

After chapter lxi Dr Wylie's manuscript degenerated in both matter and style, evidently representing a comparatively early stage of his work on the topics concerned. Chapters lxii-lxv are thus almost as much mine as his, though I have based them on his researches as far as I could and have tried to give expression to his opinions on the subjects treated, even when I did not wholly agree.

At the end of chapter lxv Dr Wylie's manuscript failed me.

For chapters lxvi-lxxv I alone am responsible.

The Appendices have caused me much perplexity. Some seventy were promised in vols. I and II. For most of them the manuscript in my hands contained no material whatever or none that could be used; and in many cases I failed to discover what kind of information Dr Wylie had intended to supply. Whenever his notes for appendices contained something that seemed interesting and valuable, I tried to use it; and I have myself written two appendices on subjects which seemed to call for special treatment. But it would have been absurd to concoct appendices which to me seemed unnecessary and which would doubtless have been quite different from those which Dr Wylie had in mind. I hope that this explanation will mitigate the disappointment of any readers who may have been led by vols. I and II into expecting a long series of original essays on a variety of recondite subjects.

The compilation of the bibliography presented many difficulties. It of course includes not only works cited in the notes of this volume, but also those cited in vols. 1 and 11. Dr Wylie left a catalogue of books he had used; but though very long, it was not exhaustive, and his curt method of referring to sources sometimes made it very hard to identify a work omitted from his list, or, if the work could be ascertained, the particular edition which had been employed. Despite resolute investigation, I have to confess myself beaten by a few of his references.

My task has proved harder and taken much longer than I expected when I undertook it. This is due partly to my own faulty estimate of its character, but partly to obstacles and interruptions which I could not have foreseen. I need hardly say that the work would never have been completed at ad but for the assistance which I have received from many quarters. To name at who have helped me would make this pretace unduly long. A few, however, must not be passed over without a special tribute of thanks. By reading my proofs, Dr. James Tait, once my teacher, later my coneague, always my friend, has placed at my service his unsurpassed knowledge of mediaeval history. It was at the instance of Dr T F. Tout that I was given the opportunity of undertaking the work, and I amparticularly gratified that he has written for this volume a short memoir of Dr Wylie, whom he knew well. I also owe much to the kindly help of another former to league, Prefessor F. M. Powicke. My friends Mr V. H. Galbraith and Mr A. P. R. Coulborn have saved me time and trouble by transcribing documents in the Public Record Office and the British Museum. I have to thank Major Algar Howard, Wandsor Herald, for his courtesy and kindness in promoting my researches at the College of Arms, and I am greatly indepted to M. le Maire of Bauge for his readiness to furnish information to a stranger. To Miss Constance Harvey, of the administrative staff of McGill University, I am grateful for valuable he p. During the past years I have of course worked in many libraries, public and academic; and I have nearly always found that those whose duty it was to aid me have interpreted that duty in the most generous spirit. While reluctant to make distinctions, I cannot forbear mentioning the Library of Harvard University, where visiting scholars are welcorred, assisted, and trusted with a liberality which immensely increases the advantages derived from access to the Library's splendid resources.

From beginning to end my wife his been my constant helper, crowning her manifold contributions to this work by compiling an exceptionally troublesome index.

I cannot withhold an acknowledgment of the patience and consideration with which I have been treated by the byndics of the Cambridge University Press and its successive Secretaries. Nor should I conclude my task without testifying to its effect in confirming the admiration and respect which I have long felt for the distinguished scholar with whom, though I did not know him in life, I have had the honour to collaborate. Every page of his manuscript bears witness to his indefatigable industry in research, his unquenchable thirst for knowledge, and his unswerving zeal for historical truth. He was, it should be remembered, an amateur in the best sense of that honourable though much abused designation. The work which this volume completes was, in the words of the preface to vol. ii, "the sole occupation of his leisure and the last thing in his thoughts when he died." What he would think of this volume I dare not surmise, but I am glad to have been the means of preserving from loss some of the fruits of his devoted labours.

W. T. W.

MONTARAL, QUII Oct ber 28, 1928

CONTENTS

					PAGE
MFMO	IR by T. F. Tout, D.Litt., F I	3.A			ίκ
CHAPTER XLVIII	SIGISMUND IN FRANCE .				ı
XLIX	SIGISMUND AND HENRY .				9
L	HENRY'S SECOND EXPEDITION	N: .	Prepa	RA+	36
LI	Henry's Second Expedition Invaded			Y D'Y	ςo
III	Conquest in Lower Normani			,	65
LIII	CIVIL STRIFE IN FRANCE .				77
LIV	THE FATE OF OLDCASTLE .		*		85
LV	ABORTIVE DIPLOMACY .		4	1	97
LVI	THE CONQUEST OF LOWER NOT				107
LVII	THE SIEGE OF ROUEN .				118
LVIII	ROUEN IN ENGLISH HANDS				143
LIX	FURTHER BARGAINING .				150
LX	THE CONFERENCE OF MEULAN				161
IXL	DIPLOMATIC FAILURE AND M
	CESS
LXII	THE DUKE OF BURGUNDY'S SKI	JLL		•	184
LXIII	THE TREATY OF TROYES .				196
LXIV	THE DAUPHINIST RESISTANCE				207
LXV	THREE YEARS IN ENGLAND			,	219

Contents

CHAPTER				PAGE
LXVI	HENRY IN PARIS			224
LXVII	NORMANDY, 1420-1422 .		-	235
LXVIII	HENRY'S LAST VISIT TO ENGLAND			265
LXIX	Βλυσέ	-		293
LXX	THE ANGLO-BURGUNDIAN RECOVERY			311
LXXI	Meaux			337
LXXII	The Indefatigable Diplomatist			358
LXXIII	THE REGENT OF FRANCE		٠	378
LXXIV	THE CLOSE OF THE REIGN IN ENGLA	ND	•	393
LXXV	"IN MANUS TUAS, DOMINE".			406
	Appendices A. Z ²			427
	LIST OF PRINTED BOOKS TO WHICH	REFE	R-
	ENCE IS MADE	٠		449
	List of Manuscript Authorities	USED		536
	INDEX			538

MEMOIR

By T. F. TOUT, D.LITT., F.B.A.

Y friendship with Wybe goes back to 1890, the year in which Lactried in Manch 200 which I settled in Manchester. I had already made great use of his first volume of the History of Elemy IV because it had failed to my lot to write the life of that King for the Distributy of National Biography. I well remember the occasion on which I first met him personally. It happened that I took down the proofs of my article to the Chetham Literary to verify some references. There I found Wyle at work and we soon got into conversation. He was immense y interested in my errand, asked to see my proofs, made a few suggestions about them and did not in the least in nd the rather guarded commendation which my bibliography bestowed on his first volume. It is no great distance from Manchester to Rochdale and our interest in mediacval history, and membership of the same Oxford College, brought us so close y together that we remained great friends until the end. He even robbed himself of hours normally devoted to Laucistrian history in a hopeless attempt to teach me the elements of golf. But I learnt a great deal from him historically, and chall ever cherish the memory of his gindliness, devotion and learning, and shrewd sense. I gladly pay what tribute I can to his memory.

James Hamilton Wile was born in London on 8 June, 1844. He was educated at Christ's Hospital, whence he went with a scholarship to Pembroke College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in classical moderations and a second in Literae Humaniores, graduating B.A. in 1868 and M.A. a few years later. He was subsequently an assistant master at Trinity College, Glenalmond resigning in 1874 when he was appointed an Inspector of Schools. In the same year he married Miss Agnes Machren.

In a Inspectorare claimed Wylie for the next thirty-five years. It was a time when inspectors of schools were less frequently moved about that in these later days and he was stationed at Rochdale netween 1877 and 1895. Thence he was transferred to the Weish March, residing successively at Shrewsbury and Hereford. In 1901 he was moved to London where he had charge of a large district in the Fast Fiel. In 1906 he was promoted to be Divisional Inspector in the North Eastern Counties, and shifted his quarters to Bradford without giving up his house in Hampstead. On his retirement in 1909, he settled down at Hampstead until his death on 28 Feb. 1914. Mrs Wylie two sons and two daughters still survive him.

Wylie was a mond inspector, conscientiously discharging all his official work, zealous in promoting educational developments and taking a kindly interest in the schools and their teachers within his district. Though never pushing himself forward, he played a not unimportant part in the local concerns of his neighbourhood. It was largely on his advice that the surplus of a subscription for the erection of a statue to John Bright in Rochdale was devoted to the estab ishment of a small followship for the study of Ergash Laterature at Manchester University. Let generally be restricted his non-official activities as far as possible. Even before he entered the service of the I ducation Office, he had taken up a lifelory task from which he seldom allowed himse f to be diverted. I his was the writing with minute care and from the best sources the detailed history of England from the accession of Henry IV onwards. It was difficult enough to put together such a work "during," as he said, "the broken reference of a busy official life, often at a distance from original sources of information." It could only be done by utilising every scrap of leisure, and by concentrating himself on it with rare self-deviation. He reduced his social obligations to a minimum, and his holidays to what was recessary for the health of a young family. By twelve years of selfdenial and he the strictest control of his less re hours, he was able to publish his first volume.

What circumstances led Willie to become the historian of fifteenth century I holind it is hard to say. His historical elucation at Oxford had not brought him nearer to the Middle Ages than the early Roman Empire, and there is little evidence of the motives that turned his interests into this particular channel. There is a tamily legend to the effect that, when still a school-master in Scotland, he entered into an agreement to write a chapter upon Henry IV in a little elementary history book. He gradually got so interested in his task that the little back was forgetter and he had stambled accidentally into his life's work. It was lucky that his appointment to Rochdale in 1877 put the venerable Chetham Library at Manchester within easy distance of his home. There he established himself as soon as his official task was over for the day; there he found most of the printed authorities for his subject and a sympathetic he per in Sir Herry Howorth, then one of the most active of the Chetham feoffices, who did his best to add to the library new books that helped his work. Wylie's dedication of his first volume to Humphrey Chetham's memory shows his appreciation of the companionship of his books "in the quiet seclusion of the college preserved to us by his liberality as a relic of the Lancastrian age."

The first volume of the Hittery of England under Henry II' was published in 1884 by Messes Longmans. Though it only ranged from 1399 to 1404, a sanguire title page declared the work to be "in two volumes." As a matter of fact four were found necessary. They appeared in 1894, 1896 and 1898. Including the two years of preparation, their composition involved the work of twenty-six years.

During this long period Wy ie worked out for himself the method of investigation to which he remained faithful for the rest of his life. His aim was to collect in chronological order the detailed story of the years he was investigating. He seldom paused to generalise or recapitulate. If he were diverted from his course, it was through the lure of some strange word or priese, or by the attraction of some treadent that lay remote from the general current of his work. Unities have expatiated upon his excessive love of detail, his digressions, and his rather "modernist" attitude to mediaeval civil sation. But he was deat to the written or spoken exhortations of his advisors. It was his own method; it suited him, it enabled him to cover the ground and he was not going to alter it. Yet within these lines he showed a real development in his historical power The inadequacies of execution tound in the early part of the first volume are scarcely to be found in his later work. His grasp over his material became greater, his acquaintance with tingrinted sources became deeper and he trusted more and more to the material contained in the Public Record Office. Starting with little knowledge of any history outside his period, he learnt history by writing it and saw more and more clearly the general tendencies of his time. After all he had no reason for dissatisfaction. A solitary scholar, starting with little below encouragement, he succeeded in doing for the reign he made his own more than any historian has done for any other corresponding period of our mediacyal history. Even the first volume inspired competent scholars to express the wish that every reign in mediacyal history should have its annals set forth with the same thoroughness that Wylie had devoted to the early years of Henry IV. But the best of his critics noted in later instalments a "marked advance in thoroughness and historical grasp" and declared his book "the only monograph in the last two centuries in English medieval history which can compare in thoroughness of research with the corresponding volumes of foreign historians." There are few mediacyalists who would dissent from this opinion.

Recognition slowly came with the completion of Wyhe's work. In 1899 he was elected Ford's Lecturer on English History at Oxford, and in 1902 Manchester University gave him the honorary degree of L it D. He still went on with his historical work, publishing in 1900 the six hard lectures on The Council of Constance to the Death of John Has (Longmans) This was perhaps the least successful of his writings. It is not acking in thoroughness, insight and learning, but his method of detailed chronological narration was particularly cl-adapted to lecture conditions. He was, however, soon at work on lines more congenial to his habits. His ambition now was to deal with the reign of Henry V in the same elaborate fashion with which he had examined that of his father. Somewhat hampered for want of books when stationed at Shrewsbury and Hereford, he welcomed his establishment in London as giving him easy. access to the Record Office and British Museum. He now gave himself a little more lessure to look around, and a few valuable notes in the English Historical Review showed the lines. on which he was workings. He also made a report on the records of the Corporation of Exerci, for the Historical MSS. Commission, which was published after his death in 1916. As previously, he covered most of the ground before he published anything, but after 1909 his release from otheral duty enabled him to devote his whole time to his new venture. At last in 1914 the Cambridge Press issued in stately form his Reign of Henry V, 1413-1415. This was the last book which he himself saw through the press. It was quickly followed by a breakdown in health which made further work difficult. However, he had his second volume ready for the press and had corrected the proof sheets of nearly a quarter of it when death came on 28 Feb 1914 The war delayed its publication until 1919 and his family saw it through the press. But the rest of his manuscript was far from complete, and required almost complete recasting, while the last period of the reign involved still more drastic treatment. It is a matter of congratulation to all lovers of good scholarship that this work, "the sole occupation of his leisure and the last thing in his thoughts when he died," has now been given to the world, supplemented and brought to a conclusion by the care of a younger fellow-worker in the same field.

³ Sec, for impance, Dr Charles Plantmer's review of vol. , in Eng. Hut. Rev. 1₆ 786-8.

Prof. Taic in Ib. 18, 761 | 54 xt1, 351-34 xt4, 557
 Ib. nin, 96, xxi, 7x34 xxiv, 84, xxix, 3xx

Google

Origina from

CHAPTER XLVIII

BIGISMUND IN FRANCE

Thank is no need to recount the events? which led up to the journey of King Nizikmund from Constance westward in his vain endeavour to incuce Pope Benedict to submit himself to the decision of the Council. Leaving Constance on July 18, 141 (, he arrived at Perpignan on Sept. 191, and left it again on Nov. 7. The story of the fruitless conferences that took place there belongs to the ecclesiastical rather than to the secular history of the time. But in undertaking the journey Sigismund. had other plans in view besides the hearing of the Schism. Five days before leaving Constances he had called a mice ing of the four nations and aduressed them in reterence to the purpose of his coming journey. He said that his heart was set not only on securing the union of the Church but on establishing peace. between the kings of France and Englands, between the dukes of Orléans and Burgurdy, and between the Feutonic Order. and the Poles, so that the way mach, be cleared for a crusade. agains' the piasphering Turks in the Holy Land. But this programme was far too heavy to be carried out, and it is not surprising to find it subjected to repeated mountcation. On Aug. 107, when at Narbonne, he declared that his chief purpose was to secure the submission of Benedict; that accompashed, he would go back to Constance at once. Four days later at was rumoured that the lynguish had captured Harbeur and were already besieging Rosen, whereupon he decided that he would certainly visit Pans after sending a bishop or two beforehand. to urge a suspension of hostilities till he should arrive, and shout the same tiese he told envoys of the duke of Brahant that

WILL

^{*} They are fully treated in Welle, Comstance, chap in a Martène, Arec. is, 2640.

* [Finke, Acta, ii. 49], Value, iv. 311.

^{*} Post to fail de l'égiment autres choms de leurs affaires. Lagre, 173 * Récomment is the garateurs in 322, January 2022 Cours eg. à métaire à la Motatia. For his previous fospaich of envoys to the langued France and England confying. his with to make peace me il t. Liv. 23, Vita, 23, Karge ord, Lit. 329, Wyse, Constance, he depended on their master to to n him in Paris and help in the task of reconciliations. Then for some months his attention was many given to the wearisome negotiations which culm nated in the conference at Narbonne on Dec. 13, 1415, when it was agreed that the potentates who had hitherto apheld Benedict should send representatives to the General Counci, authorising them to join in any proceedings against him if he still remained obdurate. It was now generally hoped that Sigismund would go back to Constance and wind up the business of the Council, but as not less than three months must elapse before the Spanish contingent could arrive there, he decided at least to visit Paris and see what could be done in the cause of peace*. On hearing of the fall of Harffeur, he haddespatched Hartung van Caux and Nicholas of Reibnitz² to the French headquarters, offering to mediate for a truce, but by the time they arrived at Rouen the French were confident that they had Henry in their power and were fully resolved to fight. The envoys were therefore detained until it was too late to discuss the matter. Sussmund used to say afterwards that if the French had allowed them to proceed, there need have been no-Agincourt at all.

Niem, Vita, 41, Care, Kanales, 121

Dyster, in. 2902q.

On leaving Narsonne Sigismund made his way by easy stages to Avignen, where he staved three weeks, enjoying dances and tourneys and living with his suite at free quarters, while the townstrien made him a present of 3000 gulden. During his stay word came in that the daugh n was dead and that the dake of Burgundy was I kely to force his way into the capital. This staggering news upset his plans, and when he announced that he would half at I your it was be leved that he would after a lireturn at once to Constances. It was therefore with somewhat uncertain prospects that the party moved upthe Rhone?. On Jan. 22, 1416, they entered Lyons, where they spent a fortught, while the chronicler, Eberhard Windecke, was despatched to Geneva to endeavour to raise money. At Lyons Sigismund was visited by envoys from both

Valou, w 16$4 Windacke, 64
 Pulka, 404 Aschbach, 8 430; A Leroux 170

Martène, Anec is. 1659) Mansı, xxviiz 920. Dvořak, 100.

Dynacis itis aggi Altmanis te 146 Pray, 1. 261. Both could speak English (Windecke, 87) · sie wisten striten und nit anders thus," Windecke, fly.

For focuments dated at Lyons from Jan. 26 to Feb. 5, ma A. Lesons, 170; Altmann, the duke of Burgundyt and the government in Paris, the latter offering him 300 crowns a day if he would come and lend his help in bringing about an understanding with England2, and on receipt of this message he decided to go forward. But in the meantime the count of Savoy (Ariédée VIII) was pressing his claim to a dukedom, and as the French king a officials refused to allow the investiture to take place on French soil, a move had to be made across the Saône to the castle of Mortluel^a. where an edict was issued creating the count the first duke of Savoy. Thence the party moved eastward to Chambery4, where the formal investiture took place with great ceremony on Ech. 19th. The duke paid 12,000 crowes for his new dignity.

Returning to Livons, Sig smund now set his face definitely towards Paris. The exact route that he followed is not clear, but he seems to have touched the Loire at Nevers?, and he certainly approached Paris from the south. The duke of Burgundy had hy now withdrawn his troops, the road was safe and onen, and the capital whosly in the power of the Armagnacs. Signsmand's cavalcade numbered from 800 to 1000 ment, mounted on small horses? and wearing over their armout black jupons which displayed on front and back the double or apostolic upright cross of Hungary18 in ashen grey, with the motto of the Order of the Dragon, "O quam miscricors est Deus11." The provost and some of the citizens of Paris rode out to meet them at Étampes and Longiumeau, and at Bourg la Reine they were welcomed by the duke of Berry, the count of Armaphac, and cardinal Louis, cuke of Barth. Sigismund fell on the duke of Berry's neck and kissed him, and the two rode on together,

Mirot, D'Orgament, rél.

¹ Windecke, 64, Gesta, 76; Caro, Kanzler, 109; Jarmen, 1–296; Resuronet t, 162 1 Montte iit 213 Waarm, ii 114, Paradin, Beurgogne, 526, Guicheson, it 373

Bonai, 163 aq., Meneray, tt. 572.

*Resting "Canteracum" for "Chasieria um" is Acr. Salv., Ora: iii 179. Cf.
"in castro Chamberraci" (Cibestio, Akacomba, 154) and "Cambern" (Pingone, Augusta, 61) For a setter of Signmunit dated at Chambery, Feb. 10, 1416, see Curteys,

1 Ann 114]
Leibnitz, Coden, i. 309-3133 Guichenou, I. 31, ly 2523 Grillet, ii. 424 Altmann, Leibnitz, Coden, ii. 309-3133 Guichenou, I. 31, ly 2523 Grillet, ii. 424 Altmann, Cara, Kanziel, 61, l. R. Costa de Beauregard, i 250, is 130; Sickel, 119; Cordeliers, 232; Caro, Kanziel, 63; J. H. Costa de Beauregard, 2-250; 141; A. Lemoux, 132; quaring Standel, Chronic and Christian Buckerum Scriptores, 129; Justinger, 236.

* Windocke, 165;

* Le Fèvre, 1, 277, Monste ill 135, Aschbach, 18. 155

Monatr ili 137

W For the cross of Hungary as figure undis arms, on Hardt, v. 18
1 Monstr 18, 139, Winderka, 130, Fray, Hist. 18 199 2 Bouvier, 4321 Gillin, 2231 Manurot, 2723 Monstr 18, 1333 Le Fèvre, 5 277; Gall Christ in the entering the city in great state by the Porte St Jacques on Sunday March t. I new went hest to the palace on the island, where the king, who was then fairly sensible, was brought out on to the steps in the courtward to bid a formal greeting!. Thence they passed on to the Louvre, where Sigismund and all his suite were lodged during the greater part of his stay?...

This reception was encouraging, and indeed 5 gism and 5 hoses did their best to make his stay pleasant. The University sclemnly presented him with an address of welcome³, he saw the sights of Paris and the suburbs6, valuable gifts were bestowed on him and costly ban jucts given in his honourb, and throughout his visit he lived at free quarters. Nevertheless he soon took a dislike to the place, for there was continual factionfighting between the Armagracs and the Burgundians, who were always cutting one another's throats in the street?. Nonwas it long before the Parisians grew tired of Sigisfrund, They were dispusted with his dirty and shappy clothing, his shameless and promise your amours. his greed and meanness, though for this last defect he was not wholly to blame, seeing that he was, as usual, very short of money. Certain incidents seem to have caused special offence. Thus, at a banquet and dance, given at the cuke of Berry's expense, to which 120 of the most honourable ladies of Paris had been invited10, Signsmund to said to have got drunk and behaved indecently. If yen more indiscreet was his conduct when on March 16 he visited. the Palace and listened to the pleadings in the Parlement. Not content with being allowed to occupy the king's seat above the president, be caused some marmuring by wanting to preside in

M nor or agg, Le Fèvre, a 278, Caro, Kanales, 106.

Lawrest 1 423, De 1815 Auctionin, il 2014 [Finle; Acts, Sv. 432]

* Mirot, 172 sq | Jun 529; Montreus, 444, Valois, in 357

* Montreus, 1444.

* Windecke, 654 St Denys, vi. 44

* Montreus, 1449.

* Montreus, 1449.

* Montreus, 1449.

* Bourgeois, 69 n.; Valois, in. 358. But of Finke, Acta, in. 455, n. 1].

* Bourgeois, 69; Jun 530; St Denys, v. 746

Mare, is 141. Dentile, Auctorium, ii 203; St Denys, 7, 744; Bourgeon, 69; Jun 529, Donn d'Azeq, i. 182, Gesta 76, Chron Giles, 67

Bourgeons, 69 n ; Basier Chron v. 1514 Alemann, 131; Valon, iv. 354; Gall Cheiet, vis. 142

¹⁵ Montress, 1448 sqq lean de Montressis account of Sigismund's conduct in Parts, which is serv bater in i scurrie on his been regarded by most modern writers an aution who is no roughed the writer was an Paral at the time and there is no hing in his story incominated is to setum we have it the character of 5 grammed. Jeon de-Moretinal was a range of Notre Dame and Roues and provise of 5t Pierre at Life per Finke, Kiemere Queden, 465 sqq.; Grude, t. 156; Foppens, R. 198; Psquot, H. 262; A. Thomas, Joh. de Monsterolio, 1 sqq.; Feret, 17 143; Piaget, Cour, 410)

person³. It happened that a cause was before the court in which a Provencial, Guillaume Seignet, lord of Vaucluse, and Guy Pestel were contending for the stewards up of Beaucaire. The former being at a disadvantage because he was not yet a knight, Signsmard asked him in Latin if he would like to be made one, and borrowing a sword from one of his attendants, knighted the man forthwith. The court could not conceal its amazement at this unmarinerly encroachment on the prerogative of their absent king?; but in the end French politeness prevaised?, and the incident stands entered in the official register without any sign of protest. The court, it is true, was afterwards severely blamed by the Council for allowing such a flagrant defiance of the legal maxim that the king was emperor in his own realms; but the digrity conferred was never cancelled, and two years afterwards the new knight was despatched to Praguet as an official representative of the king of France.

It must not be supposed, however, that the five weeks spent by Sig smurd in Paris were altogether given up to galety and sight seeing. From the very day of his arrival he was constantly conferring with brench politicians in the hope of making peace, and according to his own account? he offered to marry his only child and heiress Elizabeth, who was out seven years old, to one of the French king's sons if this would forward the desired end. There are, indeed, serious difficulties in accepting this statement, for the dauphin was married and his brother betrothed, while Educateth herse finad been promised more than four years. previously to her future husband, Aibert IV, duke of Austria®. But the statement is an keeping with the careless aparit in which Sigismund approached his thorny task. He seems to have thought that he had only to ask and to have, that Harfleur and all the French prisoners would be given up by England, and that the two countries would then join him is driving out the Turks! The opinion among his suite was that there might be a truce for four or five years, and that at the end of that time

* Sauval, it 5 * "Sour d'internalation," Monste til. 1314 Bourgeois, 69.

7 Cura Kanzon run

^{*} Bave, F. 1444 St Denys, v. 7444 Jun gig. Doubt d'Artq, l. 1814 Boulay, r. 1991.

For Charles V's reseatment of any claim to overlordship when the emperor Charles IV wasted Paris in 2378, see Beaucourt, 1, 261.

* Brancourt, Les Chartier, 171 D. Delaunay, 11, from Panquier, lib. vii. ch manyin.

* Apen planteurs portorents," Moustr. iii. 236. Cf. Alterana, i. 132

P. Foyer, v. g. ege. 1914 Windocke, 251 1 referen in 1831. J. Caro, Karolet, rus.

a new generation of Frenchmen would be growing up who might choose between revenge and a final peace!. But at a council meeting towards the end of his stay Signsmand himself. kept saving that he was fired of these endless guarrels and of this scand-lous imprisonment of so many princes of the likesbe would very soon have them all back, and he quie hoped to see a peaceful ending to it all as soon as he had had a talk with the king of England*.

Surjumum diawa ted the return of certain messengers sent to raise money in Brussels Bruges, Louvein, and other important towns, and then, on April 13, set out from 5t Deats, where he had been staying for some days? That night the party slept in the castle at Beaumont, and on the 15th, after crossing the One, they reached Beauvais, Here they were joined by Renaud de Chartres, the young archbishop of Rheims, who proceeded with them to long and4. Signmund was odged in the bishop a pulsee, and stayed at headwars to keep his haster?. Leaving the city on April 21, the party took the road to Abberille, whither Signsmand had already sent messingers notifying his a spreach; but when it was known that hinglish envoys wearing the crossof 5t George were with the party, these harbingers were received with open insult and narrowly escaped with their lives!, Sig-smand and his suite therefore crossed the Somme at Pont Remy, and rode or to the great Benedictine abbey of St Riquier" Thence they proceeded by Montread to Fraplest, turning aside to visit the critic couple at St. Josse, where Signimund, though received with the utmost honour by the about and convent, was not moved by the sight of the saint's body to leave so much as a penny behind. It yidently the fee ing shown at Abbeville was spreading, the captain of Boulogne had been out to Mortreus to see how the party would be received there!!

* Bt Drive, v. 1464, "une sultimarch Jacticabas," Mostreid, 2449, willer, 24-4 Bourgeon, 623; Boulay, v. 316. On Feb. to be had written to the duke of Oričans and other leading French principers in England promising that he would labour fee their release, Carteys, f. 166 a [125].

Wirdecke, 6-55 Bailer Chron w 1625 Mountr in 2365 Altmutte, t. 2325 Long, 83. Gesta, v6. Tit Lav. 231 Vita, v61 Monte, loc cit 1 Pray, ii 1644 Kingsford, Lit. 327, Champollion-Figenc, Lettres, it 362; Gall Christ in 137. For a infe-construct for the archbolion, dated April 26, 2476, to list till Aug. 2, see Rym. in. 342; Beaucourt, i. a61

* Busier Chron. w 161, J. Meyer, 148; Monow, loc est-

Caro, Kanales 1144 Monre ut 116

Windecke, 65, 2001. J. Meyer, 248, Monter, 22, 237.
 J. Meyer, 248, Baye, 21, 276.

E. Dupont, 210.

and when they reached Boulogne on April 24, the townsfulk, though they sent out presents of food, refused to admit Signsmund with nother walls a ness his retinue was reduced to 200. mounted men*. At this he showed great indignation and fold the captain to take the gifts away, as he had enough provisions. of his own. He stayed for a meal in the lower town by the waterside?, and then moved on. Six hundred horsemen came out of the town, with trumpering and other music, to escort him honourably on his way, but he sent them an angry message. to be gone. This embarrassing episode brought down upon the people of Boulogne a letter from the duke of Berry4. Its terms are not known, but they may well have been severe, for Sigismund regarded the behaviour of the townspeople as a scandalous insults, and contrasting as it did with the splendid welcome that awaited him at Caiais, it could not fail to have a marked effect upon the temper in which he continued the negotiations, English terratory was entered on April 25%; the English garrisons on his route had been instructed to receive him in their very best array?, and a mile from Calais the cavaleade was met by the governor—the earl of Warwick—with a splendid escort of knights and archers. Signsmund had already had proof of the earl a skill in the lists, and now, delighted at his reception, he declared that Warwick was second to none for wisdom, good breeding and valour".

In this pleasant fashion began the second stage of Sigism and's peacemaking tour, from which so much had been capected. Meanwhile his own kingdom of Hungary was in imminent danger from the Turks, and the Council at Constance was crying aloud for the return of its only hope. But throughout Sigismund. went about his business in the same leisurely and casual way, spending no less than a year and a haif away from Constance. Ine truth seems to be that he stayed wherever he was comfortthic, and that once in he was usually unable to get out for want. of the necessary funds to carry him on. His estimates of time and distance were in any case ridiculous. Thus, when on April 5,

Windecks, 23 E Dupost, 26a Auchborn a 161

^{*} Received May 1 * famens mericion sur le fint du Roydes Rivermann," E. Dapont, 92

Caro, Kannes, 4:4

Ord Pr. Co. 11 195.

Moratz iii. 137.

Rocs, 166. Carysfort, p. xxxiv; Woromer, Lin. 256; Dogdale, Baronage, 2, 245.

Warwickih i 409 W Vene in Hardt, S. c. 289 299; Lenz, 77.

1416, he summoned his vicegerent, John Kanitza, archbishop of Gran, to come from Buda Pest with Hermann, count of Cilly, and take part in the negotiations, he added that he would probably be back in Constance by Whitsuntide, and, having brought the Council to a satisfactory conclusion, would return to Hungary before the end of the year.

1 Martène, Anec. ü. 1662, Altmann, 1. 131.

CHAPTER XLIX

SICISMUND AND RENRY

Burons Signsmund had left Paris, it was known in Fingland that his arrival might soon be looked for, and on April 7 the sheritis were ordered to summon all knownts and squires to be in London by the 16th to give him a welcome. It was believed that he was already at Calais, and 300 vessels were hastily sent over from Dover to bring the party across? All the arrangements were put into the hands of Sir Walter Hungerford, and the royal others posted down to Dover to arrange that all expenses should be charged to the king's account. On April 26 a safe-conduct was issued for one of Signiffund's secretaries. but some days were still to elapse before Sigismund himself lanced. Thus there was plenty of time to complete the preparations. Beds were mended and repaired for the visitors' use). The royal barge was covered with scarlet cloth and furrished with custions of imperial and Lucchese costs of gold. All towns on the route were ordered to supply provisions. to the visitors without taking any money from them?

It took several days to get higismunct's horses and hapgage on board at Calais, but on May to he made the passage in five hours and landed the same night at Dover. As his ship neated the land, the duke of Gloucester and other magnates rode into the water with drawn swords, and the duke, as Constable, declared that they would resist his landing un esship dis laimed all imper a rights over Fingland.

¹ Rym. in. 3394 Lett. Bit. I, pp. nxviil, 160-

² Ryon, but the 3 Tit, Lav. 233 Kaugsford, Let 349. The Council had already advered hat the derit of the hang a shape should be provided with funds for her purposes, Ord. Priv. Co. 8, 1844.

^{*} Rym. 12, 340. 4 Ibid. 340. 4 Exchequer Accts 406/16
* Ibid. 7 Rym. ix 340

Altmans, it is The date is wrongly given as April 30 by Windecke (66) and as April 21 by Monomelet in 132. If Cours of Embars I is blett 2.12. It will as Windecke, 661 Tit. Lev. 23. Vite, 935 Kingsford. Lit. 327. Windecke, who followed on May 1, took two days and two nights to cross from Calas to landwick, and landed "well-night drowned."

¹⁰ This story has been generally discredired by modern writers, who thought that it resid on no better authority than that of Hell. Helioshed, and Redman, his the incident is described by the "Translator or Livius," who had the story from "the horisorable course declared that he came merely as the king's friend and as a mediator, and was then forefully welcomed and lodged in the castle. Next day the party reached Canterbury, where they were received by Archt ishop Chichele and stayed three days. visiting the churches and Becaet's shrines. It had been arranged by the Council that at each of the two halting-places between Canterbury and London Signmund should be mer by one of the larges brothers with a number of nobles and warriors just returned from the victory, who would afterwards fall in and swell the train as it moved onwards to London* No. at Richester* the party were received by the duke of Bedford, incerher with the eurl of Oxford, the lords Camovs and Powys. and his William Bour hier, the constable of the Tower, and at Dartford* the doke of Ctarence was awaring them, accompanied by the early of March and Huntingdon, the lords Grey of Ruther Posnings, and Abergavenry, and Sir John Cornwall. On May 74 he mayor, altermen, and a turns of Lordon came our to som the escort at Blackfeath, and the king himself was posted at St Thomas. Watering® attended by 1000 magna es in their richest array. The wo monarchi kissed and did much obeisarce each to each', and the long procession moved on, the 'most victorious' king riding with his "most superillust ions brother  on his right and Archbishop Chichele on his left? At bouthwark they crossed the bridge, and entered the crowded and beflagged city, where the people throughd every street to catch a glumpse of the "unknown lang. " After Earle of Demonie - Kingsford, First Life, 69. (The idea to of the earl and the traight fifthe material as resed to him are discussed in Approve # 21.5 Associate the in-lediscovered by Mr. K., golfred, who regar a it as a comp, among it by year again shows the boothe and tend the century there was a level of the forgonized had demanded tel literat Nerra III sempleras, un Regis rémina y juanuados lampera de Romanionias. wene in Anglium historium netere a dieto Hege Herdren, et de que tesebat terem auto disperser anguament. Cumique her aucmiet presti fan Ren ent acto ente de prentoe. die f. Quid a. inn homme wil pr. is pr terrebat man per solum guidant. Quid lenprint it and true de la ejecture pertale la bacama, respersione desde allas de fire l'amor-Moterne la Galeire C. E. H. R. anna 250 mpg., Than books the a disconnected the story. preserved in the First Life

Winderke, 66, 200; Bailer Chron v. 163. 1 Ord Prw. Co. ii. 194 Gueta, yé aq j W. B. Rye, y j Anchasol. Cant. vi. 473 not at Canterbury, or Norge ford, Chron 124

Gesta, 77; Cipgrave, De Illimer, Hen, 118; Kingsford, loc. cit.

* Wals. 21. 319; Chron Lond. 103, 159; Kingsford, Chron. 71, 124, Pstry. Mem. 617. Lett Bk. I. p. navni; Basier Chron, v. 1623 Altmann, L. 134.

* Brut, 11. 31 ;; Kingsford, Chron 124, Lit 299.

1 lbd 105. Geets, 78, Chron. Gilm, 67.

* Chron. Lond. 103; Lib. Met. 133 10 Basier Chron. v. 163, Mosett. iii. 1441 Wauma, is. 132, Tit. Liv. 143 Vita, 16.

a halt for a Te Deam at St Paul's, they passed on to Westminster, where the palace was given up to the visitoes1. King Henry crossed to the archbishop's palace at Lombeth, which was to be his residence as long as his guests should stay. What Sigismund thought of his reception does not appear from any recorded words of his own, but an English chroni ler declares that he was delighted, and one of his suite declared that no king was ever more hardsomely received, and that Sigismund backed words to express his admiration for the spiendour of the horses and the magnificence of the noble and lovely women who came out to meet him in their costliest gowrst. But the best proof of Sigismund's satisfaction is afforded by the length of his stay. If his own estimate is to be trusted, he meant to remain but a few days in order to be back in Constance by Whiteuntide, and it a true that many of his retinue took passage for home within a month. He himself, however, slaved nearly four months and put Henry's hospita ity to the severest strain* Four days after his arrival an item of (.666, 230 4d occurs in the Eachequer records as the cost of his journey from Calais to London?. Throughout his visit the choicest wines and meats were set before him every day, and the royal servants waited at his table. Honours and gifts were showered upon him. He received presents wherever he went. A ng Henry gave him 5000 nobles in two gilt basins in gold head, two silver-gilt cups: and a gold mixer, together with rubies, pearls, and arrethysts believed to be worth 40,000 crowns. Horses with an endid harness and trappings were presented to him and to members of his suite", though, to do them justice, they gave a number

Gesta, 77; Waln at 316; Kirgsford, Chron. 144; Chron. G.les, 66; Brut, 11-35; Riley, Mem. 627.

* Vita, 75- * Windecke, 66.

* Payments for shipping for their passage are recorded in Inc. Hole a Pien. V. Paich., Jane 3. 5, 74.16.

*Contemporary opinion was much impressed by the expense to which Henry was put by Signmond's visit, of Visa, 7 is that if a Surrector with Brist, if 36 is a p. Kongaford, Let 176, (E.H.R. main 41) (from a Later channel from the Creation to 18, 6, calcate from a selection to 18, 6, calcate from a selection printed by Ma Kingstord to an article eroted. An Historical Colorison of the Fifteenth Century. E.H.R. man 31, 191 [].

Time Roll 4 Here V. Pinchi, May 12, 1816. Exch. Acets, 321, 6, May 9, 1416; itsid 206 24 (1).

Ench Aces. 404/26 Windecke, tux fiz sq., Justinger, 237, St Denys, vs. 54-

For Acres 51. A

⁴ Gerts, 77; Walt, il. 3 rg; Kingtford, Chron. 1213 Brut, il. 38 rg Ench. Acets 406 16. In completely wearhe engineers a convenience studied that a separate entrance was made for the hing to pass into the Enchoques without disturbing the privacy of his guest. In Roca Hen. V. Paich. July 4, 1416)

of horses to the English king! Henry even gave Sig smund his collar of 55, which he henceforth wore in public on all ceremonial occasions2. He was lavishly entertained at banquets by the great nobles and other notable Englishmen?; the king's horses were placed at his disposal, and he hunted in the forests to his heart's content. King Henry took him about to see the country. Parliament, which had really finished its business before Easter, actually re-assemiled in honour of his visit. Everything, in short, had to give way to his convenience, and it is pleasing to learn that Signsmund greatly admired all he saw, pronouncing the land to be one of great nobility and worthiness, and plenteous of good and rich people, and plessed of governance, with abundance of all worthy commodities.

Of all the honours lavished upon Sigismund, by far the greatest in contemporary est matten was his admission to the Order of the Garter. Four vacancies in the Order had occurred during the previous year through the deaths of Henry Lord. Scrope, who had been executed at Southampton, the earl of Arundel, who had died on his return from Harileur, the duke of York, who had been killed at Agincourt, and Sir John Dahridgecourt?. It had been decided that the gaps should be filled by Sir William Har ngton⁶, the earls of Huntingdon and Oxford, and William Lord Zouche of Harringworth, but the last had died in November, 1415, and a vacant stall thus remained at the king's disposal. St George's Day was the proper day for the annual chapter and the admission of new kn ghts, but it was customary to postpone the festival if April 23 fell within fifteen days of Easter 36. The date fixed for this year was May 24-1, and preparations were made for an installation of exceptional magnificence. On May 18 orders were given that the best lodgings in the castle and the college at Windsor should be made ready for Sig smund and his suite in. The garter Exch. Acets. 166/24 (1).

^{*} Walls il. 326; Rym. via 165, x. 434 19 : 441, cf. Montreul, 2444 * Waurin, il. 234: 4 Vita, 36. 6 San vol. il. Waurin, il. 214. Kingsford, Lit. 200. A San val di gan

⁷ See vol. i. 327

^{*} Harington succeeded Scrope. He died March 22, 1440 (Betta, pp. 14), elva, clx). * See vol. 1 40, 71 E.

See Statutes of Hen. V in Ashmole, Instr., App. 11 "Die dominico in clavibus regationum," Gesta, 71, Curreys, f. 166 b., Lett. Bk. I.

pp ravn., i61, Riley Mem 617, Basier Chron. v. 161

Ansun. 1 19, Ashmole, App. cixxi, which should be dated 4 (not 7) Hen. V. Tighe and Davis, t. 114, from Ashmole MS 1125, f. 101 b.

and the blue salt manile were supplied as required by the gratutes, and on Friday, May 22, they journeyed down, escorted by the existing king hts, each booted and spurred and in his habit. On the to ickning day the earl of Suitals conducted the cardidate to the baths, and he was then ushered in to the chapter-house to be invested as a knight elect, a gentleman of blood and without tenroach amongst the mightiest and most illustrious princes and the most powerful nobles of England. The installation took place on the Sunday in St George's Chapet. At this ceremony King Henry took care to occupy the chief place both in the procession and at the Mass: but at the feast which followed in the great hall, Sigismund was invited to preside at table, having on his right King Henry, with Louis duke of Brieg and Nichelas of Gara, the count galatine or ban of Hungary, and on his left the duke of Bedford with Bishops Beaufort and Lang ey⁴, the former as prelate of the Order? Of these occupants of the high table only Signs. mund and Henry were served with the three great "subtleties," which represented 5t George being aimed by the high n. fighting the dragon, and entering a casile accompanied by a hing a daughter leading a lamb. That Signsmund alone shared these cainties with Henry was probably intended as a mark of protitude for a gift which Sig smund had made. He had a special interest in St George, in 1408 he had founded the Order of the Dragon*, and he had somehow obtained hossession. of what purported to be the champion's heart. When the earl Basier Chron, v. 161.

4 Originally called the chapel of St. Edward, but rebails and renamed by Edward all with Segmented on his right.

The present chapel dates from the seign of Henry VI.

* Reaching "Directing" for Develope" in Chron. Lond. 155, and "Dyretyn in Third Fifteenth Cent. Chron. 55.

* Aubenole, 235, 514, Brits, big Chron. Lond. 1394 Greg. Chron. 1134 Fallyan, Three Fifteenth Cent. Chron. 55; Tighe and Davis, 214.

On the occasion of his marriage with Eurbara of Cilly, Dec. 22. Pray, Hist. 5, 149; Figer, 2, 4, 683; Aschbach, 3, 263; Caro, Kaneles, 16, 21.

^{*} Kingsford, Chron. 124.

* Cf. Statutes of Henry V in Ashmole, Instit., App., Each. Accts. 406/26, which is the document murked for row de compute parlemble, penes camer. In Royal 15, 314-16, it could be payments for covering the bed. past balteum, for covering the large school with handlekin, and for covering the bath murle, in front, and in the bottom, for the azel of Suffolk and his servant. For the exciset known example (1377) of the both as part of the process in the excusors of knighthood, see $14w, i, p. xiii.

The Emperous kept the state at the mote, I have Fefteenth Cent. Cheon 45; Fabyan, 581; Anstin, it 65. In Curteys (f. 164 b), however, Henry seems to proude, of Warwick fought before him in the lists at Constance, he offered him this holy relic to take back with him to hingland. The earl, however, had requested that Sigismund would retain it and bring it with him on his projected visit. This he had now done. At Windsor they had only one of the saint's bones, a piece of his arm, and part of his skulls, so that his heart was a very welcome present. What has become of it no one knows, but it was certainly shown to some Bohemian visitors in 1460. and was carried in procession every year down to the time of Henry VIII4. To the modern historian, however, 5t George's heart is less interesting than the statutes promulgated at this chapter, which are our earliest authority for the regulations of the Order, all previous ones having wholly perished.

Sigismund had not entirely neglected the object of his mission during the first weeks of his sojourn in hagland, for the terms of the a liance projected two years before had been reexamined and the question of peace had also been denated hetween the two kings and their counsellors. Serious corsideration of this, however, had del berately seen deferred in the expectation of the early arrival in England of William, court of Holland, Zealand and Hamau th. The court had married Margaret, daughter of Philip the Bold, duke of Bargundy, his orly daughter and he ress, Jacqueine, was the wife of the daubhin Jean". He had always been on good terms with Signsmund, and was regarded as a common friend of France, England, and the limite. Although his family connections must have rendered him suspect to the dominant party in Paris, it was at the suggestion of the king of France that he had been invited to mediate. The count, who was a knight companion of the Garter, had intended to be present at the installation of Sigismund, but owing to stress of weather 10 t was not unt I May 28 that he and his imposing retinue reached.

Russ, Hut. 269.

Monast vi 2364 sq., Tight and Davay a 232, Anitis, ia 40

² Rozmial, 45.

Rous, 26v | Anstu, 1. 19, 1i. 40, 430 | Beltt, Ivili | Tighe and Dava, i. 214; E R R wave ye Capgrave (3.3), each that Signers and processed an image of St George made Feliz, zlviu, for text, me Ashmole, App. Anshs. 11. 64. Mr St. John Hope believes them to be merely a sevine of the original statutes of Edward III (Stall Plates, 1, 2).

Wyles, Constance, 25: St Denys, vi 51: Gesta, 77. Chron. Giles, 68. Cf vol 11 291

9 St Denys, v. 748. Since 1390, Beitz Eri

30 Goldan, Statut, i. 148, Const. Imp. i. 190; Mient, iv. 171.

London¹. The chief members of the party were lodged in the bishop of Fly's hostel in Holbren2, and the king's new guests shared in the sumptuous fest vities in honour of Whitsuntide and Trinity Sunday³.

On the count's arrival the peace question was at once taken up in earnest. The French envoys and the leading Trench prisoners played a very active part in the negotiations, the purpose of the latter being to regain their freedom at any cost On June 4 Signamund, with his customary or timism, expected that an understanding between England and France would be reached in two days. But Henry, while professing willingness to agree to peace, insisted not only that the French should leave him in possession of Harflett and a belt of adjacent country sufficient to support its garrison, but also that they should yie'd all that had been conceded to Edward III by the treaty of Bretigny? In other words, he would waive his claim to the crown in return for the whole of western France except Brittany. The French envoys had been led to suppose that Sigismund would secure much better terms than these for their country, and there were consequently "manifold and diversid scussions," A proposal that met with some favour was that while negotiations were in progress the town of Harfleur should be handed over to Sigismund and the count of Hollard, all measures for its recapture or defence being suspendeds; and it was also suggested that the principal prisoners should be released on giving hostages for their return in case the negotiations should break down. Neither plan was adopted; the proposal about Harbeur was very ar popular, and it was corrently believed that the French envoys and prisoners had been convicted of treacherous intentions?. It was however agreed that, subject to the any royal of the French king commissioners should at once arrange for a three years, truce, and that within five weeks from

Cousmon, 236, Caro, Kanzlel, 113, 219 Rym 1x. 427

* Ryan 1x, 787; Champollion Pagenc, Lettres, 11, 164.

Basler Chaon, v. 1633 Cappe. 1133 Gesta, $2 mg Kingsford, Chron 1244 Lenz, 97. They came up the river to Lambeth, Kingsford, lec. cit., Hardyng 376.

Exch. Accus 406,263 Chron. Lond. 1043 Kingsford, Chron. 1233 Chron. Ric. H. -Met. VI, 43; Brut, ii 351; Le Fèvre, t. 279.

Gesta, $2; Waumn, ii. 232; Le Fèvre, t. 279.

Cotton Mil. Cleop. C. tv E 19 sq

^{*} Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte, etc. 4093 cf. Caro, Kancles, era.

⁴ Rym. in. 362. * Kingsford, Chren. 115, Genta, 795q. Lett. Bh | pp min, 152, shows that the proposal about Harfeur had failed before June 13. See also Valou, iv 361.

the conclusion of the truce the kings of England and France, together with Sigismurid and the count of Holland, should meet on the frontier of the march of Calais! Armed with these proposals, the archbishop of Rheims and his co leagues returned to France accompanied by the lord of Gaucourt, who was authorised to speak on behalf of the French prisoners. They had been preceded by Nicholas of Gara, the archoishop of Gran, and several of Sipismund's suite, who presented the proposals at Paris in a tentative way4.

It was of ill omen that the count of Holland had already fallen out with both Sigismund and Henry. He had asked the former to recogn se his daughter Jacqueline as heir to his tirles and power; but Sigismund replied that the rule of women was not for the good of the State, and asked if the count had no cousin or brother to succeed hims. Of course he had a brother, the bishop of Liege, but this was the very man be wanted to exclude. In his annoyance, he left ling and abruptly, on June 21, telling Henry that if the invis on of France were renewed, his standard-bearer would be in the field against the English Politics were now suspended. On June 26 Henry left London for Southimpton, and on the same day Sigismund set out for Leeds casiles, where he spent a months. Two days later Ralph Rochford, Robert Waterton, and Master Philip Morgan were commissioned to represent England in the negotiarions 10.

The English envoys left London on July 3. Before they reached Paris the French king had assented to the agreement made in London, and had named Beauvais as the meetingplace of the conference which should settle the terms of the 1 ft. Drays, vi. 18, 20, 241 Rym. in: 1873 Champollion-Pigent, Letter, ii 3624 Bri Min Add MS 24,062, E 191 %.

* Lit 1 m 24; Vita, 77, the archbishop's safe-conduct is dated June to (Rym in: 164).

Rym 12, 425, Monstr. 18. 146 sq.

Gesta, $2; $t Denys, vi. 16; Valors, 1v. 360. For the text of the proposals see St Denys, vi. 14-12, of Caro, Kanales, 21, 94, 108, Boadams, 1; Lenz, 10; Bom, Bündnin, 651, 655.

F Windecke, 69; Wagenan, iii. 406; Snoy, 134.

* Leyden, 1441 Le Petit, 2. 351 of the negotiations with France.

Devon 140, Chron Lond | 044 Kingsford, Chron 120, Reichstagesbach, vo. 113. Baster Chron, v. 164. His removal to Leeds from Westminster cost £300 (Exch. Acets. 328/6, June 27, 14163 Iss. Roll 4 Hen. V. Pasch., July 4, 1416, Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 24, 513, 1. 13)3 and another £300 had been past for his expenses before July 6 (im. Roll 4 Hen. V. Pasch., July 6, 1416).

10 Rym. iz. 366.

truce. News of Charles' decision soon special far and wide, often much embellished; highsmund was overloyed on hearing it², and even Henry seems to have been sufficiently impressed by it to abandon his intention of satting for the relief of Harneur in person and actually to have contemplated disbanding his fleet.

All this corfi lence was misplaced. Charles VI, indeed, was in earnest, and at a Council held in Paris on July 1 (the majorary of those present, headed by the duke of Anjou, were about to consider arrangements for a personal interview between the riva. kings*. Then, however, the count of Armagnac rose, and used al. his hery eloquence to defeat the whole project. What did they know about the terms that would be offered for a final peace! I key could only be sure, from their experience of Sigismund, that they would be in favour of the English. And what was this three years' truce? Nothing out a means for saving Harrleur from its present desperate plight. But give him his way, and God's head! he would starve it out in three months. So far he carried the Council with him!, and it was known that he had the university and the city of Paris at his back', but when he urged that they should refuse even to receive an English embassy, feeling was against him, and it was resolved to affect a sections interest in the pian and to spin out the negotiations. for a truce, while a grip was still kept on Harfleur in the hope of its speedy surrender. Accordingly sale-conducts were issued. for the three English envoys, who duly arrived at Beauvast on July 170 There they were met by the archbishop of Rheims, Gortier Co., Guillaume le Boutei ler, and Simon de Nanterre, and futile talk was kept up till the month was nearly out. The Frenchmen said that they must consult the king of Castile before they could enter into a three years' treaty, and thought that a truce of one year would be enough: the Englishmon required time to ask advice from homes, they complained that they had been insulted and prevented from leaving their iodgings, and that the negotiations were only being continued to gain time and to ensure the capitalation of Harfleut, now

For the reports that reached Bruges and Venice, see Morosini, 1 18 Carti, Kanates, 216. [Cf. Finke, Acts, w. 463]. [Getti, 83 C) vol. 1-156.

^{*} Card, Ranner, 110. [Or minor reconstruction of the St. 157, Countrot, 136. * St. Denys, vt. 24. Windecke, 142. * Minoria, 12. 100. * St. Denys, vt. 24. Windecke, 142. * St. Denys, vt. 25. * St. Denys, vt. 25. * St. Denys, vt. 25.

^{*} Caro, Kanziei, 11, 103, 107, 104, 209, 117, Bündnim, 43, 103-

believed by the French to be imm nent!. On Tilly 20, t was arranged that representatives of both sides should be at Calais. and Boulogne respectively before Aug. 16 and that further discussion should then take place, but the truth was that the negotiations had so far failed, and the struggle for Harfleur was allowed to take its course. When it was beneved that nothing more was to be looked for. Henry threw all the biame on the Fren h Councils, while Signmund, who entirely exonerated the I nglish, wept team of mortification and arger a having been cuped by the French, who were trying, he companned, to wreck the Council of Constance and destroy the Hosy Roman I mayire. Corten porary Linglish writers with one voice declaim against the bad faith and arrogance of the French[®], and when Gaucourt returned to London, he found himself actually in danger of his life. The French on their part blamed Sg s. mund for the failure, and at Constance it was evidently behered that many lenglishmen were of the same opinion, for rumours were abroad that his life too was in jeopardy some said indeed that he had been poisoned. As a matter of fact, to all outward seeming his relations with Henry were ricre friendly than ever. He had left Leeds on July 27, and on the following day had reached fitham?, where he stayed too Aug 9, and it was probably towards the end of this time that he began to suspect that the negotiations in France were I kely to fair, for on his departure he set his face for the coast! Accompanied by Henry he entered Canter surv on Aug. 1211. and on the 15th-the very day on which the French and English fleets were at death blows in the beine-the two kings signed a treaty of mutual nelp and alliance18, the

Gesta, $43 Elmham, Lib. Metr. 1373 Capgrava, De Illustr. Hen. 119

Morsson, st. 101 n. Champolhon-Figure, Lettres, st. 161 Могента, н. тот п. * Rym. z. 24, Kingsford, Lit. 278, Windeche, 67; Caro, Bündnue, 47, 55, Kanziel, sof 110 Lenz, 112, Menucourt, a 263; Vaion, 10 363

Gesta, 104, 107, Elmham, Lib. Metr. 146, Tit. Lav. 274 Vita, $15 Chron. Gales. 92. Kingsford, Chron. 123, Lit. 287; Capgrave, Chron. 315, De Ificute, Hen. 120; Bodl. MS. 406, F 2246

Counnet, 118; Leyden, 144. 7 Rym in. jeg; Caro, Manenne, 40. Hardt, f. 1903 Aschbach, ii 166. Basler Chron. v. 164; Gena, $5. 10 Basier Chron , loc cat Signsmund's horses had already been sent across to Durilitcht (bridget Statut 1 24h Crist Imp 4 , Maris, it 17, and his over 1 had 50 160 for the procked (Rym. in 165). (The fourth volume of Finke's Acts. Concilii Constantion was which appeared after the first proofs of this book had been passed, throws now Lights can be great and a surgestation of the forest state of the Article Article while administrage but disciplines the state what had happened by he predict a support and another members of of discussions between the French and the English (p. 465)]. II Basher Chron , soc. cit.

If Rym is, 177-26 s. [It was come term before the treaty became generally known.]

sole visible fruit of his protracted visit. In the preamble Sigismund stated that his whose heart was set on restoring unity to the Church, and to further this end he had put forth great efforts to reconcile France and England. He was however, utterly disappointed. He had put steady pressure on the king of France, had sent him formal articles agreed on by binself and the count of Holland, and had nearly got them accepted by the French royal family and the French Council, when the king, a lover of discord and child of schism, had rejected them in order that he might break up the unity of the Church with his pestiferous devices, as he had ever done. His emissaries had been at the root of all the opposition encountered by Sigismund at Perpignan, his greedy hands had robbed the Empire of many fiefs and rights, and now that Sigismund had conje to help his brother of England to recover his due, the French offered him nothing but jeers and mockery. At last, therefore, he had made up his mind to stop these machinations, and in the name of the Lord had reso ved to make with his injured brother an alliance on the following terms:

(a) He and his successors would from henceforth and for ever be friends, allies, and confederates of Henry and his sons, or, if Henry should have no son, then with his brothers the dukes of Clarence, Bedford, and Gloucester or whoever should succeed him, to resist attacks from every power and every person, save only from the Church and the pope;

(4) Merchants and craftsmen of either party should have free access to the dominions of the other, provided that they paid the customary dues and submitted to the existing laws!

(.) Neither party should harbour traitors, rebels, or exiles banished from the lands of the other, or go to war against the other except in direct seaf-detence, but each would help the other in recovering their respective rights from France

Soon after Sig smund reached London in May, 1416, there arrived there a number of ambassadors from the duke of Burgundy^a. One object of their presence was the arrangement of a trade truce^a, but they also concluded a general truce between Herry and the duke, which was to last from July 13 to Michaelman, 1417⁴. When they left they took with them

2 Monste, 10. 144. 2 Cf. vol. 31. 299. 4 Rym. 12. 313

I has was one of the terms offered by Henry IV when he sent envoys to Sign much in 14t t Simonyi, v. 147.

a letter for the earl of Warwick, captain of Calais, which he was to communicate with all haste to the duke of Burgundy's Henry, in fact, while sanguine of the success of the negotiations with the Armagnaca, was careful to insure against their fa lure, and while the prospects of an agreement still seemed good, the earl of Warwick? and the duke of Brieg had been instructed to visit the dake of Burgundy together on behalf of their respective povereigns. They started from Calair with a large company of "wise and honourable mer"," and reached Lille on July 204, where they were received with great honour by the duke and his son, the count of Charolam. They were splendidly enter tained, and had many interviews with the duke and his courseliors during their stay of eight days. I key had brought the duke an invitation to be present at the conference which was expected to take place near Catais in the coming October and this the duke read by ac epted, to the amazement of mary', who were shocked at such dealings netween a subject and the enemy of his sovereign. Such astonishment was intensified when a few days later the men of Picardy refused to obey an neder from Paris bidding them attack the English, pleading that the duke had forbidicen them to take up arms against those with whom he had a truce except at his express command? On Aug. 12 the Council repeated, its order*, but at nightful, of that very day a large force of Burgundians from Picardy, Champagne, and the Thierache threatened the very gates of Paris. They had come up sudden y by forced marches 10, hoping to be admitted during the night by their friends inside the walls. Disappointed in this, they waited till sunrise, and then for four hours swept the ground without the walls like a hurricane, carrying off or destroying everything that came in their way, while the garrison, as if stubehed, let them work their wis unopposed24. After psundering between Dammartin

* 44 was paid to be earl's receive for his postney and mages (Devon, 347, July 29, # 44 Was paid to Incamiration to the fact age 14 0, 1416, For Acc 2 49, D, Each Acce. 12616, Jan 49, 14 0, 5 1 in 447

11 Ibid, 1655 Felibien, iv. 3621 Doubt d Ason, i. 385.

A copy was deposited in the Exchequer on 'one 16 (Kall and Inv. 8. 94). The enfe-conducts on the errors were dated June 24. Kerrost 264). For 466-13, 44 perd to Warwick as arabamadur to the date of Burgandy see Int. Kon 4 Her. Y. Pasch June 27: 8416.

t link wally trackers, as p

^{*} Tit Liv. all, Kaigiford, Lit. 336. * Musite m. 147. * News of the refund reached Pare on Aug. ss (Raye, m. 263 eq.) ... St Denys, vs. 42.

and 5t Denis, they moved off to Beaumont on the Oise, where they entered the castle of the duke of Orléans, killed the captain, slaughtered the garrison, threw twenty-eight of the townsfolk into the river, and then decamped by the bridge as suddenly as they had come. Later they obtained admission into Nesle, whence they carried off a hundred cartloads of plunder¹. Soon afterwards the duke of Burgundy was declared a rebel³.

Meanwhile Sig amund had at last left England. He had been present at a solemn service in Canterbury cathedral to give thanks for the great naval victory, and his servants quietly let fall along the streets of the city some singular farewell thes in Latin acrostic bidding angelic England rejoice in her glorious victory4, and Englishmen felt flattered at the compliment, even though it was flung over the horse's tail⁵ On Aug. 21 the two kings trave led together to Dover, and on the 25th Sigismund and his suite took ship and crossed with a fair wind to Calsis?, where he was lodged in the Prince's Inn in the Staple buildings*.

It had originally been intended that Henry should also cross from Dover*, but the naval activity of the French had caused a change in the arrangements, word having been sent to the Cinque Ports to have a strong fleet assembled at Sandwich to convoy the king across by the longer route1. After Sigismund had so led Henry therefore betook himself to Sandwich11, where quarters had been prepared for him at the Carmelite

1 St Denys, vi. 44. * On Aug 30 (D Sauvage, 146). The news reached Henry on Aug. 21. He was on his way to Carteebury from Small ythe, where he had been on business relating to vessels building there. He rode straight to Casterbury, and the service apparently took place the some day (Gests, 4 Gesta, 92, Chron, Giles, Io, Elmham, Lib. Mett. 1414 Usk, 120, 1834 [E H R.  FIG ("An Hutorical Collection of the Fifteenth Century," ed. Kingsford)].

"Post caudas equorum succum project," Streeche, 268

* Basler Chron v 164 Reichstagsakten, viii. 124.

* Basler Chron., loc. est. The date is incorrectly given by many contemporary and modern writes. For a inter of Significant dated Calan, Aug. 26, see Reichstagsakten,

 The Prince's Inn was near the south west corner of the market-place (Lulion 103).

* The Prince's Inn was near the south west corner of the market-place (Lulion 103). 30% jao), borne of its rooms had been repaired against the visit of the Emperor of Gremany, and it had been furnished with two new states (Each Acoust 17.5). For a neture of the Staple buildings, afterwards called the Hôte de Guise, are Leoney (3)

* Hale timue had been ordered to anemole there by Aug. 49 (Lett. Bk. 1. 1644 Rym. 2K 376,

Tit. Liv ag. * Documents were dated at Sandwich on Sept. 1, 3, 4 (Cal. Pat. 1416-12, pp. 42, 48, 33, $4; Claus. 4 Hen. V, 27; Chane. Warr. 664/684) friars. The town was crewded with notables. Archbishop. Chickene was there", and Bishops Beautort and Langley, together with Henry E trhugh Gilbert Ta bot John Finnington, and many other barons? Beaufier was ledged at 5t Clement's vicarage, and as he was crossing with Henry, he handed over the great seal on hept, a to a clerk of the Chancery, John Map ettinf, who was to do iver it to Simon Gaunstede, the new keeper of the chancery rol st, in whose custedy, it was to remain at the Converts' House in London tal the chancel or's return. On the same day the duke of Clarence was appointed keeper of the kingdom during the king's absence.

keets wessels were now ready in the harhour, and about noon on this same day the lung wert on board?. Soon after the fleet sailed, however, the wind dronged, and before long the saliors had to take to their ours in a dead calm. Nevertheless, with the help of the tide, they made the passage is twelve hours. At Calais Sigismund was waiting on the heach; the two kings embraced, and passed up through the town, chatting and joking "as Imperial Highnesses should?" It was in a conversation a your this time that higherund told Henry that he locked upon

2 On the worth wort of the town, between the remparis and New Erret (Hasted, en nie gab Mayant er ageb

On Sept. 1, in a document dated. "In hospitics neared" at Sandwich, he appointed. prior Woodnesburgh, of Christ Church, Canterbury, as his vicin during his absence (Conc. III. 379).

In the subsidy roll of 1.12 he appears as owning property in London yielding and a year (Archaeol, Journ. why 75). He was a receiver of pensions for Gascony in the purhament of March, 1446 (Rot. Parl. 14 79). In 1417 he appears as claiming 10 marks from the estate of Richard Prentys diceased (Claus. 5 Hers. V, 9 656. Wyln. 1. 331, 119). He was chancellor of Queen Joan, and at his death in 1412 was rector of Broadwater, nesse Worthung, where his beam is stal to be seen (Antiquary, xviii. 96; Mackkin, 147).

He was appointed on June 3, 2415 (Foss, Judges, iv 320). On July 4, 2416, he had betters of general attorney for Beaufact who was going abroad with the hing (Rym. ix. 370). Giuanoscie had teen in the service of the ducky of Laurenter (Wylie, iv. 186, Duc-Law: Accts. Various, 27/6). As various umes he held pushends of York (Le Neve, 18-274), Larenter (food. ii. 137), and Chichaster (Cal. Fat. 2416-22, p. 223), and in 24 th- 19 he was made architector of Nottingham (Le Neve, iii. 234). He was a receiver of petitions in the parliaments of 1439 and 1420 (Rot Pael iv 220, 123). For his accounts as keeper of the Domus Convenorum from June 3, 1415, to Feb. 9, 1411, during which time he was keeper of the chancery rolls, me Euch. Acces. 251/19 (in a pouch). His will was proved in 1423 (Challoner Smith, i. 220, Henrewy, p. clas.), and his successor as keeper of the rolls was appointed on Oct 28, 1423 (Fost, Jodges, 19, 10.4. In 1412 he owner property as London yarding 45 pr hat a year (Archarol. Journ Row 71).

A C. Place of the propt

* Rym. iz. 125, Gesta, 93; Capgrave, de Illustr 110 * There is no evidence that Signerand spoke English, but both he and Henry had a good knowledge of French. Cf. Wylis, iš: 131, 401.

Calais as his greatest jewel¹, and gave him the famous advice that if he wished to secure an easy crossing to France for the recovery of his rights, he must keep both Calais and Dover as sure as his two eyes2.

During his six weeks' stay in Calais, King Henry was lodged in the castle³, where a new stone house had been specially built for his suite within the baney adjoining the north walls. Workmen had been busy for some time past making good the walls and barriers; houses had been new tiled and buildings generally. tidied up, so that Sigismund might have a good impression as he passed through the town Before either Henry or Signsmund had left England, [2000 had been abotted for their household expenses in Cala's", and £2894. 13r. 4d. had been paid for wine? and floor for salt fish and stockfish to be ready against the king's arrival. Spices to the value of £200. were bought from Calais merchants*. Silks, damasks and arras were sent across 10. There were tents and pavilions draped with cloth of gold 1, one of which was arranged as a chapel in front of the eastle, and another as a hall. Henry took [4000 in cash with him11, and an additional 2000 marks were sent over from London on Oct. 4 to meet the expenses of the king's chamber14. Provision had also to be made for military contingencies: for instance, £280 was paid for salipetre on Sept. 318, and on the 18th order was issued that all who had lately been in the retinue of the duke of Bedford should cross to Calais with all speed 14.

> Hyra thought it was a jewel most of alle, And so the same in Latin did it calls.

(Pol. Songe, ii. 192, Pauli-Hertsberg, 54.) 1 Pos. Songs, ii. 1384 Gosta, 942 Pauli-Hertsberg, 94 D.K.R. zliv. 543. Among those who heard Signamurd give the council was probably Walter Hungerford, the neward of the boundfull, who twenty years afterwards mad the "Libell" which contains the amendous, and pronounced it as true as the Gospel (Pol. Songs, ii. 205; Pauli-Heetzberg, 64)

The castle was on the north-west side of the town, separated from it by a large dicch; see Sandeman, 30.

 The home was to ft. long, an wide, and so high (Euch. Acets. 187/4).
 Ibid are the account of William Canton, controder of Caims, dated June 8, 1418. which supplies much valuable material for the history of Catan from 1413 to 418

 Exch. Accss. 328/6, Aug. 10, 1416. 1 Ibid, July 18, 1416; Iss. Ros, 4 Hen. V. Fasch., June & July 23, 1416.

* Ibid. Micho Nov. 4, 1416.

* Im Roll 4 Hen. V, Patch., Sept. 5, 1416. bid. Aug 10, 416. Dievon, 147.

n Gerts, 98

Im. Roll 4 Hen. V, Patch., Aug. 10, Sept. 1; Devon. 348
 Im. Roll 4 Hen. V, Mich., Nov. 4.
 Ibid. Patch., Sept. 3.

" Claus, 4 Hen. V, 13 d.

The greater traft of the visit was given up to momentous diplomatic negetiations. These were mostly shrouded in mystery, and contemporary writers differ greatly in their guesses as to the real nature of what went on. Some said that Henry had gore across because he was so keen for peace that he would not leave the French the least excuse for continuing the war!, but such a view is untenable in face of the Capterbury treaty. Others supposed that he went to Calais as a compliment to Sigismund, or perhaps to stimulate the loyalty of the place by a personal visit and "for other matters which he perhaps determined to transact at the same times." But the presence of the archbishop, the chance lor, the keeper of the privy seal and a full court is expense that the "other matters" were of supreme moment. The negotiations with France had not been irrevocably broken off, and it may be that the altered position at Hardeur had made the French really anxious to treat for terms. When it was known that Sigismund was about to cross the strait, messengers from Rouen and Abbevale arrived at Boulogne seeking news as to the coming of the king of England³. The French Council instructively felt that Henry's arrival was a presage of mischieft. Nevertheless, it was not long before negotiations were resumed, and though neither Charles nor any exalted substitute for him was expected to appear, the archbishop of Rheims, Gortier Col, and others had reached Calais is Sept. 9 with full instructions to treat further with Henry^a. They were received with all respect and had interviews with both Henry and Sigismund; but in retal ation for the way. in which the English envises had been treated at Beauvais", neither they not their suite were permitted to leave their lodgings without special leave. They lived at their own cost, and if one of their servants had to go out to buy provisions he was accompanied by the master of the hostel in which they were quartered? Such studied (asult, however, did not prevent business, which was conducted on the English side by Archbishop Chichele, the earl of Dorset, and Rochford, Waterton, and Morgan, the three envoys who had been at Beauvais. The

* Aym. is, 187. Their commission was dated at Paris, Aug. a4 (ibid. 198); their Wals, d. 3.16, Hypodig 47 t. Capgrave, 315, Kingsford, Lrt. 187 1 Yita, 18, 4 Regioult, 59, Deseillas, lav. Somm 4-6 * For a letter of the dauphin dated Sept. 27, calling upon all to heal divisions and renot the king of England, see Luzarche, a.

mfr-conducts were dated Aug. 24 and Sept. 6 (shid. 377, 386).
"Have sunt acts suit quit tales sunt data nostris," Eimbans, Lib. Metc. 143. Genta, 94; Chron. Gales, $1; Capgrave, De Libert. 120. kym. ix. 317.

proposals of the French were embodied in a schedule formally addressed to Sigismund as the originator of the effort to restore peace. They offered to re-open the marriage question (which they had previously declined to consider as long as the English were in Harfleur) and to pay down a large sum of money; and should the English not agree, they begged that Sigismund would lend them substantial aid from the I-mpire or at least send them some message of advice, for they badly wanted peace, or, failing that, a long truce with the restoration of Harfeur. This puzzling memorandum appears without date or explanation in a volume of the Cotton Collection which has been much damaged by fire and water, it purports to be a supplement to other proposals already communicated; but unless these went very much further, they had no chance of success. Nevertheless the conversations were continued for some three weeks, until the impending arrival of another visitor. rendered advisable the departure of the French. Their passports were indeed drawn up on Sept. 29t, before their efforts had yielded any fruit; but on Oct. I powers were issued to Chichele and his colleagues to treat more definitely for a truce. The French had come prepared to consent to a truce of a year. but they were unable to obtain more than a short one to last from Oct. 9 to the following Candlemas?, and even this trivial achievement is said to have been due to the special intervention. of Sigismund. The truce was to apply to the whole sea route. from the entrance to the Mediterranean to the coasts of Norway", a special proviso being inserted that no vessel should benefit by it unless the owner or master made a declaration of acceptance and received a certificate from a specially anpointed authority in Calais or Boulogne¹⁰. The truce was

* Ryen iz. 317, from Cotton MS. Calig D. v; nothing of a is now decipherable in

Rym 1x, 399.

30 Ibid. 401.

Merouni, ii. 138. [Sigismund had throughout had great hopes of a marriage. alliance between the rival countries (Finke, Acta, iv 450)]

^{* &}quot;Junta en quae verbu et scripto cidem Regine Migenau plensus en municita.

^{*} DKR zliv 58; [There is no ground for the suggestion that any secret had been been well known at Constance (Finke, Acta, iv. 465, 47 aq.)]

* Rorn in 150, 247, Henry Warr, keeper of the privy war, was now substituted for the said of Durset on the commission.

* Rym. in 357 made of the duke of Burgurdy's course to must Henry and Significand. It must have the earl of Dorset on the commission.

* Rym. ix 297

* Ibid. 397, 4281 Cal. Dipl. Doc. 218. For order of the duke of Clarence to procession his truck (dated Oct 11, not Oct 1 at Rym 11 402), we Lett Bu I :64 formally ratified on Oct. 201, but it was a hollow sham, which merely covered. Henry's preparations for the winter and left him free to pounce with the return of spring. It locks, in fact, as if the English accepted it merely to have a pretext for ending the negatiations and getting rid of the French envoys, for no sooner was it signed than they were escorted over the frontier to the west⁸, just as the duke of Bargundy was approaching Calais from the east.

* Microsine, a 126, 121 See letter of the duke of Anjou written in Farm, Oct 10 (Bouche, il. 438).

The duke had not been allowed to forget his acceptance of the invitation to attend the conference at Calais. On Aug. ¢ Bishop Caterick, who was about to leave for Constance, was commissioned with two squires to meet his representatives and arrange the details of the interview. On Aug. 19 they arrived at I ille, where they staved eight days. It was, however, contidered advisable to make provision against a possible failure of the duke to appear in person!. The Burgundians in fact were doubtful whether it was wise of their lord to commit himself. to the treacherous English; when, as the time of the meeting approached, he moved towards the rendezvous, he kept a large body of troops near at hand, and finally his council demanded that at least two cuces and four earls should be delivered up by the English as hostages for his personal safety. The messengers who presented this proposal at Calais were received most graciously by Henry, who talked them into consenting that the sole pledge should be his brother Humphrey!. On Oct. 1 a safe-conduct to hold good for fitteen days was issued in favour of Duke John: he might enter Cala's with $00. armed men, while the duke of Gloucester swore that he would remain at Gravelines with the count of Charolais until the duke of Burgundy had actually returned?.

At four o'clock on the morning of Oct. 4 Goucester, accom-

Rym. in. 350 sq.4 Commemnher, 1824 Dehauten Finot, a. 319, Brut, u. 559.

¹ Rym fit 404. Cf. Tit Lev up "abere jum sunt."

Rym. In. 174.

On Ang to, Hugh Mortimer, John Horizgham. Philip Morgan and others were nurhered to take the doke's horage in ram be anothed not be walling to meet Henry in person. They were to fix the rate of payment that his men would receive if they hriped the English. Houlogne, Headin, and a third place, the name of which cannot be decephered, were to be garranned in his interest, but would be given up as soon as the towns of Eu, Alençon, and Clermont had been captured. Other points were left for future discussion (Cotton MS. Calig. D. vii. 6, 17, the document is only partially legible). [On Aug. 22 Segumund expected the duke to be in Calais by the end of the month (Finke, Acta, iv. 465). On Sept. 8 it was believed that he would arrive in a few days (shed. 471).]

* Gosta, 15, 96.

panied by about 800 men, left Ca ais and passed along the shore to the river Aa, which formed the eastern limit of the English. march. They ranged themselves along the bank, while Lord Camoys, Master Henry Ware (keeper of the privy seal) and Robert Waterton went forward into Gravelines to exchange and ratify documents. This done, the duke of Burgardy came out and stood on the French bank; then at a signal both he and the lengtish duke advanced and shook hards in the bed of the stream. Fach then passed on, Glouces'er being received by the count of Charolais and Burgundy by the earl of Salisbury. The English duke was conducted to St Omer, where he was solendidly entertained, though he wellnigh caused a rupture by an act of rudeness to the count. Meanwhile the duke of Burgunds, escorted by 200 mounted men, rode on to Calais. The earl of Warwick and Sir Thomas Priningham came out to meet him and conducted him to the hostel that had been prepared for his reception. His first visit was to Signsmund, and much interest. was stirred as to the manner in which he would be received. for Sigismund had an old grudge against him over the repayment of the ransom money of Nicopous, and a far sorer point was the question of the duchy of Britisht, which higismund had set his heart on recovering for the House of Luxemburg. But old antipathies on noth sides had been previously smoothed: the duke had bound himself to give satisfaction respecting the ransom by a definite date, and his readiness for the interview may have been quickened by recent events at Canterbury. As he came into the imperial presence he bowed twice and would have made a deeper obcisance but that Signsmand stepped forward, embraced him, and set him at his side. After taking spice, they said farewell, and the dake made his way to the castie, where he was received by King Henry with similar teremonial in the large hall. The two afterwards retired to an inner apartment, where they remained closeted tegether till nightfall. Three days were spent in discussion, and on Oct. 6 the king entertained the duke at a great banquet in the tent in front of the castle. Then four more days were passed in conferences of the strictest privacy, and on Ocr. 13 the duke returned to his own land, the duke of Gloucester was restored. and the fate of France was sealed for a generation Monnte in phanq, Wauen in 131, Cordones, 255 Baster Chron v. 1651. Lessambe, 105 Baranie, c. 67, 70, Genta, 20 apg., Capgrave, 235, Hall, 70, 1. Histori, bu. 556.

When Elinham wrote the notes which are our chief guide to these momentous events, he could only say that the outcome of the interview was a mystery). Some held that the duke had taken an oath to be Henry's subject?, there was also a rumour that Signsmund had pressed for the marriage of one of the duke s daugnters to the duke of Bedford1; but the general belief was that the duke had been playing with the king and that he would prove a double-dealers. We are now, however, in possession of a document which sumplies the key to the whole situation. In it the duke declared himse f convinced of the justice of Henry's claim to the crown of France and ready to support him in prosecuting it. He acknowledged him as his sovere ga, but preferred to postpone his formal homage till some considerable part of France had been conquered. In the meantime he would help him by a lisecret means, and be ready, as soon. as he was called upon, to act openly with all his force, whi e if for form's sake he should have to make the usual exception about not taking arms against the actual king of France, it would be understood on both sides that such a stipulation rea sy meant nothing. In return for all this treason no recompence whatever appears as having been offered by Figury, but it is stated by a contemporary that the duke was promised a share in the gains of the coming conquest. So scandalous is the whole transaction that it is not differing that Burgundian. chroniclers have shrunk from admitting that the duke really gave his consent to it?, though they are constrained to confess. that the using and court at Paris had no doubt that the duke had committed himself to an alliance with the king of Iring and a. As for modern writers, they have mostly supposed that the document, a though footed as "written and signed with our own hand and sealed with the privy seal of our arms at Calais. the --- day of October," was only a draft never actually

* The rate for man current at Net see, Morsing is full

I Ibd., Waerin, n. 232.

Gesta, 103, Elmbam, Lib. Metr. 146
 For this supposition, see Color, 41, 126

Serie qui ser ho qued resno re può det eura tenume regem nostrom tota mo tempore la amphibolis et ambig bass et sie resiquine, et quod fi abter reuse orientem Galles num inten etur Jupiet, unus in pubben et asus in occusto. Cesta, 103 sq. Cf. Ermham, Lib. Metr., loc. est.

^{*} Rym is 1933 of * Monda in 163

Monstr. au. 164; Wauein, il uny; Le Fèvre, 1. 184.

I be day of the month a left blank in Rym in 196.

signed). But the fact that the duke had sent no help against the English when called upon to do so in the summer of this very year, that he expressly told his officers in Palardy to refuse to act unless they received orders directly from himself, and that he had been entertaining English envoys at Lille and talking over the very details that appear in the document is damning evidence that he was a party to the agreement in spar to, whether he actually put his seal to it or not. Henry's view of the dake's position is revealed in a message which he sent in the summer of 1418 asking the duke how he could explain his conduct in view of the "trewes taken bitwin us and hyma."

The duke, it seems, played false with Sigismund as well as with Charles VI. It is well attested that he did homage to Sigismund for his possessions in the counties of Burgundy and Alost⁴; but no sooner had he left than he entered into negotiations with the estates of Brabai t and undertook to defend them against any attempts that Sigismund might make to bring them back into dependence on the Empires.

Immediately after the departure of the duke of Burgundy, there arrived in Calais a messenger from his bitterest enemy, the duke of Argent; but why he came and what he did we do: not know, for the business of the conference was now regarded as ended, and there was a speedy exodus of the leading men concerned in it. Beaufort, the chancellor, had returned to Lordon by Oct. 127, and the king set sail in the early morning of Oct. 164. He and Sigismund took leave of each other on the shore, embracing several times with tears and kisses. Sigismund distributed 2000 crowns among the Englishmen who had formed part of his suite during his visit, each man of gentic blood, we are told, receiving twelve marks and each valet six10. Handsome presents were given by Henry to all the visitors, ² Delpit, 2223 Gesta, 213 n. Above, p. 10. Wate in 117, Nameth, 150 from other magister Birmster cum Ricardo Beaucharap nobile comite Wagwiei"; Wisdecke, 48; Monstr. ili. 163; Waurin, il. 137.

Dynter, 324, 770
For his rafe-conduct, dated Oct. 6, 100 Rym ix 401.

7 Rym. 1x. 3$5. 8 Bauer Chron v. 165, Nicolas, Navy, n. 4al, whose alternative date, Oct 9, in deflainly wrong.

M E.H R. unin. gra-Montreutl, 1444.

¹ So Barante, (ii) 190 (""projet de traité "); Beau court, 1. 240 ("sous forme de minute") q K nyeford, 175 (a document ready drafted for agreeture but not actually aigmed); Lanz 130 Kervya de Lettenhove, fit ge-though the English were accused of kaving been less liberal than the Irenchi. Henry's passage was tempestuoust, but on the 18th he was back at Lambeth's in readiness for the opening of parliament next day4. The chief histness was the confirmation and publication of the treaty of Canterburys, so that henceforth the position of the parties concerned could not possibly be misunderstand.

As soon as King Henry had left Calais, there was nothing to justify Sigismund's further absence from Constance. Some initial delay was caused by the emperor's breach with the count. of Holland, who now failed to carry out an undertaking to provide ships for the transport of Sigismund and his suite to Dordrecht⁶. An over and journey through Flanders was contemplated, but the mutual suspicions of Sigismund and the duke of Burgardy frastrated the former's efforts to secure a satisfactory safe-conduct). In the end ships were hired at Dordrecht, and, mining to Calais, took Signmund's party on board as soon as the prevailing rough weather abated. They put to sea on Oct. 24 accomparised by the duke of Gloucester, Sir John Tiptoft, and other notables, but, aithough convoyed by four large English ships ander the command of Peter Carew, they hugged the shore timally and took ten days over the voyage". They were met by representatives of the count at Derdrecht, whence the English escort went home, loaded with gifts for themselves and Henry!. Sigismund's unwonted liberality, however, had exidently reduced him to grave straits. for he negotiated a loan with some Hanse merchants who happened to be in the town if, and also sent I berhard Windecke, the chronicler, to bruges to see what he could raise on the collar of the Corter, together with some valuable jewers and all the presents that the English had given him at Calais. A handsome amount was secured, the uding 10,000 crowns on

1 Windecke, 79

* Thid; Baster Chron. v., 165; Reichstagtalten, vit. 185; Otterbourne, 278; Walt. R. 327; Genta, 2043, E.H.R. Andr. 317. Devon. 348.

19 Stieda, 64.

¹ Monterul 1411 1 Knewford Lit 1 a R m ir 40 2 Brut, 15 31 1

^{*} Ibid aca, Cic Dipl Dor 318, Rot Parl or 96 sog , Beschstigiskien, via 194 537, Gesta, 1053 Chron. Giles, 91

Waidecke, 693 Wagenaar, ila. 406. Aschbach, 1. 165.

Engelbrechtst, 111, Gesta, 107, [E. H.R. 2017. 511, where it is said that Signsmand ment to the king many green our griss, morniaring garments of clock of good and a unicom's horn more than ux feet leng] the collar, but it was with difficulty that Windecke, after his master's return to Constance, got out of him the money to redeem the pledges1,

On Nov. 7, after three days in the town, Sigismund and his party left Dordrechts. His departure marks the end of his ambitious attempt to act as arbiter of western hurope, hven now, however, he seemed in no hurry to return to the General Council. He spent eight days at Nymegen, three weeks at Aachen, five days at Cologne, nine at Lucge, and afteen at Luxensburgh. Here he had a conversation with John Tiptoft, who had been despatched by Herry to make arrangements for his co-operation in the approaching campaign in France. T ptoft was accompanied by Philip Morgan and Hartung van Clux; but, though a l three had been commissioned to conduct important diplomatic business at Constance, Tiptoft and Clini went back to England, Icaving Morgan to go on alone⁴. The emperor a slow progress hitherto had been partly due to the necessity of trying to compose certain political differences that were vexing the Nether ands and the Rhineland. But when he left Luxerrburg on [2n, 21, 1417, he was evidently determined. to press forward, for after calling at Metz and Strasbourg, he crossed the Black Forest so quackly that he reached Constance on the 27th. As he rode into the city he had round his neck King Henry's 55 collar, which had become part of his customary. ceremonial dress*, and on the following Sunday he wore the blue mantle of the Garter at High Mass? I wo days after his arrival he sent for the members of the English "nation," shook hands with them, and made a speech in which he praised the king and his brothers and commended the whole realm. He had been specially charmed with the way in which divine service was conducted in the English churches, the vestments and ornaments had made him think himself in Paradise: but Reichstagnakten, vil. 215; Basler Chron v. 165; Akmann, t. 136.

436 Windecke, 69, Akmann, I. 340; Asthbach, R. 275, Hardt, W. 1090; [Finke, Acu.,

7 Rem au. 435

¹ Windecke, I 2 ng

^{*} Reschstagiakten, oc. tst., Baster Chron. 26; 1999. Windecke, 69, Hegel, it. 61; Altmann, 1-136, 1; 1999. 140; Dynter, 22. 326. Caro, Kanziei, 228:19., Bundaim, $6, For Aces 31, A.C. Rym. 22. 4:00:199.

b. 85]

* "Zowre Livere of the Coler above by a necks," Rym. &, 4345 "midus Angline regis ordinis we torque autone," Montresti, 14445 "liberatant seu derham continue deleverun, Rom in 441.

this may have been no more than a piece of the carolery characteristic of his speeches to ecclesiastics1.

There has been much discussion of the truits of Signmund's enterprise. That Elemps intended to make the treaty of Canterbury a working instrument of policy is shown by the fact that on Dec. 2, 1416, he authorised his representatives at Constance, together with John Liptort, Philip Morgan, and Hartung van Clinit to approach any of the electors or princes of the Empire and to attach them to his interest by accepting their ho mage in return for grants of mores?, as he had recently done with Dietrich von Mors, archaishop of Cologne, whose predecessors had occupied a similar position in regard to previous kings. of Incland? In the following August, moreover, Tipfoft, Morgan, and Clux were again in Germany, and apparently remonstrated with Signmund, then at Constance, on his failure to render military heir to the Finclish, extracting from him a promise to be on the Erench front er with a large force on May 1, 14184.

As for Nigismund, his purpose in concluding the treaty has been interpreted in every conceivable way bome have supposed that Henry dominated him by his superior diplomatic skill, and thus in a moment became the arbiter of huropean politi sh. Others have regarded the treaty as a non-comin ttal document containing no promise of actual assistance on either side, and that therefore Signsmund looked upon it with

I A letter written to Henry by John Fermior, who was powers, given an account of what passed (Rym. in 424). The writer is probably the same in John Fermi or Forst or Forster (Rot Parl. iv 494), who was one of the delegates of Archbuhop Chichele (Conc. iii 369). He was archdencon of Surrey from Aug. 30, 1414, to 1417 (Le Neve, iii. 29), and dean of Wells from 2425 to his death in 1446 (third. i. 1515). Monast, ii. 2836. Of for his letter Usk, 315.

2 Rym iz. 422, Cal. Dipl. Doc. 3183 Reschizgrakten, vii. 296, 338. Of Rym. 10 4.7 For /3 went the ugh Upon it to two minute or Duckeland' at Consumer in the spring of 1417 "of the long sight," see Devon, 352, May 25, 8427.

3 Thus in 1907 Archbuhop Frederick of Sazzwerden, did homogeto Richard II and ^{*} Thus in 1997 Archbubep Frederick of Saarwerden did homage to Richard II and disclared home. His variables consideration of an annual pickness of a groop. His most a a aqq., Gall. Christ. iii 703). He undertook to protect all Englishmen trading with Cole and to furnish a series a arm when required for as the wrong with the English king, who would pay all their expenses. Little seems to have come of the compact, and there is no evidence that the allowance was over paid under Heavy IV; but in 2416 the arrangement was senewed (though the for was now only 2000 nobles), and while Signmund was in London representatives of the archbohop did homage on his behalf. See Rym. in 343, 346, 347, 459; Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 291; Deven, 268 Caro, Kanzlei, 129, 130, 131, Bandrins, 87

^{*} This view is favoured, e.g. by Pauli (Bilder, 194, 196), Beaucourt (i. 265), Lindner (u. 197), Valois (iv. 261).

indifference. Others again have thought that, whatever its meaning, Sigismund never had any intention of carrying it out, but signed it to secure an escape from England, where his resition was becoming dangerous owing to the refusal of the count of Holland to supply him with ships for his return. This is the view of his own panegyrist¹, who says that he had to fatter King Heary and sign a number of promises in order to keep on good terms with him and get away quietly; while the French believed that he accepted the treaty as the only means of raising money enough to carry him homes. A modern writer has argued that an alliance with England was vital to the success of the Council of Constance, but England's interest in the union of the Church was not increased by the conclusion of the treaty, nor is there any evidence that it was likely to dec me without it. It has also been contended that it was Sigismund who imposed his wishes on Henry, hoping to make use of the power of England in recovering the lost provinces of the Empire' or perhaps even in conquering France herself. Of a I these views the last seems to me the most probable. On Sigismund's arrival at Dordrecht he at once wrote to Henry assuring him that he should certainly have his assistance against France, while Henry promised him in return that he would take no step without first informing him of it?, and when at Luxemburg in the following January he deciared to Tiptoft that he would be on the French borders with a large force by the following midsummers. That he was in earnests is proved by the fact that on his way back to Constance and at the Council itself he did his best to induce the princes and electors of Germany to take sides with England and wrote to the Genoese in the hope of detaching them from the French albance, actually Monuenil, 1449; 3t Denys, vi. 56.

 Caro, Bündniss, 61. Cf. A. Leroux, 150.

* Gollet, 1015, Repin (Tindal), 1. 517

Lone, 203, Benecuest, 1. 1673 J. Meyer, 248, who adds "eticam totam Galling emperia unde ablata est valueret reddere.

Rym. ir 427, 430. Caro, Bündnus, 26.

66 St Denvis, vi. 56, Manueull, 1444; Rym. 18, 607. They all agreed and offered to raitt 3000 lances.

F So Bew, Bündrum, 654; Stubbu, sii. 93. ■ Windecke, 65 - CE Zeder, via 55, Caro, Bundrum, 59. Lenz (102) contempts oualy rejects this explanation, but Heis (Hundriss, 651), while sourcing at it as the notion of "hokey," admits that it may not be far from the truth.

^{*} For the view that Signmand was all along smoore, being justly energed by the decent and murigue of the Farnch at Beauvais, see Gierth, 431 Caro, Kanniel, 98. Bündmis, 45, 53.

persuading them to put two carriels at Henry's disposit!. On March 22, 1427, he wrote to the Presch king telling him outright that he had allied himself with England in order to recover the rights of the Holy Empire", and he sent a copy of the treaty to the Count Palatine and other German lords. On May 2 he formally ratified it at Constances; eleven days later he made a public declaration that he had signed it's and when on June 10 envoys from the Hanse towns were urging him to support a claim for 10,000 marks which they had against. Lingland, he broke into a rage and told them that whoever was against his brother was against him took. When Elenry was preparing for his invasion of Normandy in 1417, it was commonly believed in Paris that Sig amund was ready to confer the province of Dauphine on one of Herry's brothers in order to assert his rights over it as part of the old kingdom of Aries?. [On April 29, indeed, he entered into a military alliance with the duke of Burgundy, and though the duke would not undertake to aid Sigismurd against Charles VI, Sigismund was apparently bound to help the duke against his esenues in France*.)

Never heless, though he seems hones ly to have meant to send 3000 men at arms to help the English, he replied with mere promises of what he would do next spring! when Henry definitely applied for the "brother's assistance that he hoped to have of him!!," and in the end Henry was left to atruggle on aione. At Constance, indeed, no one took him seriously, and when he indignantly reproached Pope Martin V for not regarding him as an enemy of France, the pope said that he had a ways regarded this camity as an affair of words12. It is true that in March, 1419, Henry still spoke of his alliance with Signers and as inclused able 13, and that Signers and, for all his inactivity, never repudiated the treaty of Canterbury, and as late as July, 1420, c a med that his "protherhood, league, and 1 Ibid. 344. * Rechtigaken, vil. 291, 14 .

* Hansecene, rt. 431. T Ordonnances, x. $14 I for the text of the treaty, see Junte, iv applies it is summarised by Valous,

[v 174]
Rym. In Yoy; Reichstagsakten, vii. 353.
* Rym. In Yoy; Reichstagsakten, vii. 353. 64 Care, Bundara, $7, Kandel, 138 " In July, 1417, Caso, Kanzici, 129 Rym. R. 430.

1544. g69. " Ibid. 710 sq.

¹ Rechstagultiers, no 296, 333; Caro, Bündam, 24, Karolin, 134. In St Denys, wi. 36, however, it musted that the Genoric trained his suggestions with contempt.

Reschinguishers, vis. 296, 34. 2 Rym. x. 24.

Ibd. ix 607; cf. Martial de Paris, 40.

confederacy" with the king of England was an actual fact!. But in reality the treaty achieved nothing and proved no compensation for his fa lure to approve himse f the arbiter of Europe and the peace con pellor between France and England. He had taken his ambition very seriously, and was deeply chagrined at the fruitlessness of his miss on?. He had, however, no one to blame but himself. He had over estimated his power. of handling an exceedingly delicate problem, and in trying to play off one side against the other, he had over-reached himself. He made himself distrusted and hated by the French, who pursaid him with an outburst of venomous scurribity. In England, it must be admitted, while his oddit er excited laughters, his boisterous geniality won him popular favour, which was increased by the prevalent belief that he and the king were kindred spirits. But though he was liked, there is no indication that he was much respected or that his visit made a deep impression on men's minds. Stories of his visit to England are singularly scarce, especially when one reflects that no mediaeval emperor had ever come to the country before. In fact, the most notable memento of Signamund's stay in England is his sword, which is now one of the insignia of the corporation of York*.

Rym. z. 14-

Sor e.g. Caro, Kannies, 112; Goldast, Stat. 1. 148; Gasta, 204; Rym. 2. 14; Korner, 2944 Persona, 222.

Montreuti, 2443-52 passing St Denys, v. 34, 56, Moulay, v. 327, Responset, t. 268, 276 along Callicana, L. 228.

Mentreud, 1441

Nucquare major erat a mor sut affectio segum," Einham, Lib. Metr. 146; "nam dinalis similam sequitor;" Ibid.; "qui alternat prospeciates to fraces userial in spanner constant ambernat," Gena, 69. Cf. Vina, 19. Chron. Color, 77, Beltymon, s.

147; Rym in: 437, 710 sq. When Sigiomund was adjusted to the Order of the Garter, his sword, believe, and crest were, in accordance with custom, fixed above his still. At his death they were taken down and, ingether with his marile. Ashmole: First: 465 ing 3, affered at the altar when Mass was sung for his sou. The beliner and crest have disappeared, but after the Mass he sword became the prequeste of the dean of Sr George s, who sold it to Matter Hurry Humilap a canon of Andror who on May 1, 1419, presented it to his statue city of York. When Humship brught 1, the sword had a scabhard covered with Puby coloured select on which red dragons were weeked in silk, but a new scabbard. wie pervided for it is 1436 and again in ... (20. When it was furbished up in 1585 the muser had an interprior put upon the bude recording the origin of the tword— Bigismunci imperat. M.C. Eb. 1439 other. Heart Nay M. for 1786—164 is remorts. of the city have no doub. Out the class was unsided and has the socied is the very weapon more by Signomiad at his installation. Jewest. Augie to 44,7 hijh 4 Drake, 1814. 365)

CHAPTER L

RENRY'S SECOND EXPEDITION PREPARATIONS

White the king was at Sandwich on his way to Calais he had issued writs1 for a parliament to meet at Westminiter on Oct. 19, 1416, and, as we have seen, he was back just in time for the opening. Thirty-seven temporal lords were summored, those appearing for the first time being the earl of Northumberland, who had just been restored to his grand ather's title, and the ear a of Dorset and Arundel, the latter a first appearance being also his last. Of the judges Will am Sarene drops out, and is replaced by a nor h-counceman, John Strangways?. Of the writs summoning the commons only three have been preserved. one contains the names of the knights of the shire for Rutland, the second the names of the two burgesses returned by Dunwich, and the third those of the four representatives of Lordon*.

The king was present at the opening in the Painted Chamber. on Oct. 194. After he had taken his seat on a stepped couch, the chancellor, Bishop Heaufort, addressed the assembly on the text "Study to be quiet". He drew attention to the fact that though the king had been less than four years on the throne, this was his sixth parhament. God had rested after six days, and so must their earthly lore? The last five parliaments had been one long struggle for peace, constantly towarted by the Dated Sept. 3, Rept. Digit. Peer, 17. 835 144 © Cf. vol. ii 32 sq. Harclaim was challenged by John Mowleny, Earl Marshal, who was son of a noter of the late earl (ibrd. 32, Ret. Parl. 17. 442. Doyle, 11. 312). Hence know a famous sust, which dragged along for seventeen or eighteen years, during which the title was in abeyance. In the meantime both claimants died the tomb of John Lord Matrawers, who died in 14x1, heing still to be seen in the choir of Asundel church. In 1433 the dispute was settled in favour of his son John (Rot. Pael. iv. 443; Cotton. Abridg, 610) Dugd it 322; Report Dign. Peer, it 410), but a weeker if year vin he minesearch century led to the compilation of the famous report on "the Dignets of a Puzz of the Realm."

From Whorlton in Cleveland. He is known to have been a friend of Houseur (Ord. Priv. Co. 1, 25, 442), and became a nejeant-at-law in 2441 (Fom, Judgot, iv. 364).

^{*} Returt l'art, App p ungt 1863 letter fit. 5 rift. * Rot. Parlife 94, 2043 Stat. B. 196, Elmham, Lib, Mete, 243, 2472 Chron. Lond.

Ers | Otter bewere, 178.

Frenchmen's pride, and this one must be final. The wise man had said that we make war to have peace, and as all treaties with France had failed, peace could only be procured by taking refuge. in God's just ce and the arbitrament of the swords. After this speech the commons withdrew to the refectory of the abbey, and on Oct. 21 they presented as their speaker Roger Flower of Oakham^a, who had twice been sheriff of Rutland^a and had tik times before represented the shire in parliament⁴. It was of course the need of money which had caused the summons of this parliament. It showed as much generosity as could reasonably be expected, granting two tenths and two fifteenths, threequarters of which was to be payable next Candlemas and the remainder at the following Martinmas-Nov 11, 14175. Again, however, it was found necessary to exempt Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland⁶, and evidence of declining zeal is seen in the stipulation made that no more morey. should be asked for before the second instalment of the grant now voted became due, and that there should be no requests for prepayment in the meantime? The dukes of Clarence, Bedford, and Gloucester made a joint declaration that in case Henry should die before Martinmas, 1417, the terms should be strictly carried our, while parliament undertook that the last payment should certainly not be deferred beyond that date.

Apart from the question of money, the only important matter brought before parliament was the treaty of Canterbury. Only two statutes worthy of mention were enacted, one being a stringent re-assertion of the principle that no Irishman should hold an Irish benefice, and the other laying down that masters were not to be fined for paying wages to their farm-servants in excess of the scale fixed by the Statute of Cambridge in Parliament was dissolved on Nov. 18th. On that day the king bestowed the title of duke of Exeter, with [1000 a year for himself and his heirs, on his uncle Thomas Beaufort, earl

11888

¹ Gesta, 106 1 Rue Parl, iv 94; Return Parl, i. 303 Cf. Fifty English Wills, 55; J. Wright, Rutland, 97, 236 4 Churtfis Lat, 212

^{*} Revern Parl : 153, 159, 263, 267, 282, 184.

* Rot Parl : 95. For estimate that in 4 Hen. V, the fifteenths from all England yielded (17,932 or 61d "en clere," without collectors' expenses ((122, 61, 8d.), 100 Lanadowne M3 *61, Art 3.

Cal Pat. 1416-12, p. 51.

Stat. ii. 197 M | Rot. Parl. 27. 101. 7 Rot. Parl iv 4g. * Ibid. 96, 221.

of Dorset1, though to many this seemed but a poor return for his great services at Harfleur?. The position of the new duke was not altogether easy, for the son of the last holder of the title, who had been attainted and beheaded seventeen years before, had likewise, as earl of Huntingdon, rendered signal service throughout the French campaign, and had a strong ciairs to be restored to his father's rank and name. His lands were to be granted to him when he came of age on March 29, 1417. It was perhaps understood that the title was not to pass. to Beaufort's hears4; but it is another proof of the commanding personal influence of the king that the transaction did not lead to renewed intrigue and rebellion.

The convocation of Canterbury met on Nov. 9, and granted two tenths to be paid within a year. On Nov. 13 writs were issued for the porthern convocation to meet before the next Epiphany⁴. It assembled on Jan 5, 1417, and after voting a tenth, dispersed on Jan. 127.

Parliament and the convocations had thus provided the king with the money needed for his contemplated campaign in France. To do him justice, he employed some of his new resources in discharging old obligations. Thus the 10,000 marks which the city of London had advanced for the Agincourt campaign* were repaid on Nov. 4, 1416*. Further, on Dec. 6, 1416, the sheriffs were ordered to summon to the Exchequer all persons who at I held valuables in pawn for the payment of the second quarter's wages in the expedition of 141 (10. If ready money could not be found to meet all claims, the custody of ands in ward was sometimes offered as an alternativell, but on March 9 such resources were apparently failing, for there was skued a peremptory order that all pledge-holders should come to a reasonable agreement18

* Cont. iii 317. * Rot. Parl W. 100, 110. * Doyle, 1, 710. * Cont. iii 377; Usk, 130 316, Wals. ii 327; Duck, 75; Wake, 351; Rec. Roll. Hen. V. Mich., Mar. 3, 1417, 3 Hen. V. Mich., Oct. 10, 1427

* For payments to messengers on its. Roll 4 Hen. V. Mick., Nov. 27, 1416. Class. Hen. V. 1014

P Int. Foli 4 Hen V. Mich. * Vol. i. 474.

^{*} Ret. Parl. 17, 164 Dogd. ii. 125, Claus. 4 Hen. V. 10, Cal. Pet. 14,6-22, pp. 30, 33.
* Walt. 11 317.

* Doyle, 1, 710. 4 Doyle, 1, 710.

T Wake, 353, 411, Kitchin, Records, 135; Conc. 11 310; And Corr Ivil 41; In Roll 4 Hen. V. Mich., Jan. 29, 2417.

¹⁹ Rym. 14. 426. He g on May 1 1416, Henry Lord Frahugh had returned pledged ewels on secret ng the custody of lands of John Lord Level, secrated (Cal. Pat. 1416-22; p. 17). Memoranda Roll, Hilary 4 Heat, V, m. 33; Ord. Priv. Co. it. 239; 221.

Meanwhile, he possibility of peace was not allogether forgettern. Nerv meen after Separated had left a change came over the fee lags of the leading Reseal processes in Regional.
Busined of their release through the accuprated consumes of the court of Armagnac, they began ser out to reconsider their position. It as previous evertures on his part to be reconsider their position. It as previous evertures on his part to be reconsider their had affined the condition that they should recognise him to their limits sovereign. It sheets they had refused but the french detect in he seems had completely a recedition asked for an interview, which look place is africt privacy no one being present besides the paster and Remark Dereham, long a confidential agent of he big ish court? The take said that after repeated messages had passed between himself and his breach at home, we had come to take a new view of blenry's

ويوكا أنه والمواد والمحارث والمراجع المراجع المراجع والمراجع والمراجع والمراجع والمراجع والمراجع والمراجع me to A had did bereio to taken Marcha to project and to and of an sourt and Estometrile. References to them are received in the receils of the time. the Plant on thing to a gap the Plant to the operation the Part Annual of provinces in the form of the part of the have been assessed in France in a the harder on this assessment. I g to Discuss in all, Brown at a the spen a number of the first had been wrong tones, men house P in it is not put therein. Belleville Parison as their north, before a more, and characters P rite is pot to a 1 2 M where it body at 2 major Wilson Sections for Factors, and increase and deposition ment the laws perpendicular the best with a second to have larger time, as here images who was the rapper and the first the second of the s But he go, a good to it cannot book to their town against toget against a name, a contract that and their head of govern, some one towns in the cannot again to an again again again to the bills. * to weather changed they got sumpter-loads of cloth, summer From, gan); and it is remarkable that hefore they had been three days in London the the terror age to the west of the day to be proved to be them to the were given apportunities for metreation and aport (Origi Lett. Ser E. I. 2; Nicholi, Assurante g of Louis A mantain remail and antition in the great grown was an increase of great grown and the contract of the c donsideration such auma as 74, 10st, 13t, 4st, occeren 2st, a day were not regarded so out of the question (Rym. is, 3284 Rot. Fact. iv 4364 Devon, 4504 Ord. Priv. Co. iii. 77, ir. 44, 513 J. Stevenson, Wast, il. 419). Every facility for raising their enmorns was grant family mempagane were a more in their sound from Francia . Note the new and to the first and an experience of the sale processors that the second these case of all a very rise production of Henry a shorts. I be acceptance from the first first before participation of the Marchael Resources, who could be be believed to the garding participates. A new feet Acets. 40/17, For Acets. (6, Ev*)

1 "That might be could not Answer," Ryes in. 428

* Wylie, ill. jgr

40 Henry's Second Expedition: Preparations (CH. L.

claim to the throne of France. He had been given to understand that the English king might perhaps renounce that claim, provided that he were assured of the immediate possession of all the lands specified in the treaty of Brétigny, with the addition of Harfleur. This he considered to be a "great and reasonable proffer and speaking in the name of all the leading prisoners. he declared that if he might cross to France, he would do his best to get it accepted there. He was willing to leave his two sons and other hostages in England and to find merchants who would give security to the amount of 100,000 crowns for his prompt return. For biriself, he said that if the brench king would not agree to the terms proposed, he would do homage to Henry, merely stipulating that his promise should be kept secret, at least until his return, or his life might be in danger. He hinted not obscurely that most of the other prisoners were disposed to take the same view. Henry at once agreed that he in ght go as soon as suitable merchar is could be found to stand bail, and with the interview fresh in his mind, he wrote to T proft, who had been sent on an errand to Sigismund, instructing him to inform the emperor of what was on foot, promising further news as events progressed, and showing the conditions under which the duke would start! He was to be accompanied by the lord of Gaucourt, who was authorised to steak on behalf of the duke of Orleans and Marshal Bouckaut, who shared Bourbon's opinions. It was widely believed not only that the release of the prisoners was near at hand but also that a lasting peace with France was I kely to follow. Yet on the very day on which their safe-conducts were drawn up, Henry was so shameless as to write to Tiptoft, "I wol not leve my voyage for any Tretee that they make." In the event, the di ke of Bourbon seems not to have crossed, probably owing to

¹ Nym 180, 438,

[•] For documents relating to his release, his non-Louis being left as a heatage, and Harl MS 4763, f 174 ha Cotton MS. Tiberres, R. 30. ff, 142 h-148

⁴ Rym 17 416

⁴ The letter was dated Jan. 25, 24.17, Ryon at, 425.492, It is doubtful whether formmand ever one it (see above, 8, 25)

Significant ever saw it (see above, p. 3t)

For servants of the duke of Orlians crossing from England to France (safe-conduct) of Marian and Anna Parks.

of May 10, 1417), see Ryth it. 455.

* Rym. is. 430 (Jan 25). [The word "tretter" is almost certainly used in the sense of "negetiations," as it generally was at this line [of Ord Frir Co. 11 155, 257, 160]. It was no more shameum for Heavy to continue his operations than it was or the A testo go on aghing in November, 1918, while the terms of the Armstor were being considered by the Germans.]

the difficulty of finding sat afactory accurities, but Gaucourt really did go, after the dukes of Bourbon and Orléans had given bail in the sum of 40,000 crowns that he would be back by March 3t1.

Waile these transactions were in progress, measures were taken for the prolongation of the truce a gred in the autumn at Calais. On Jan. 18, 1417, William Bardolph, licutenant of Calair, and two others were authorised to extend it for six weeks or two months, ten days later safe-conducts were issued. for three French envoys to come to Calais¹, and there seems to have been no difficulty in arranging that it should continue till March 154. No further agreement seems to have been made before that date; but the truce was apparently maintained by tacit consent. On March 12, Henry Ware, William Bardolph, and Ralph Rochford were appointed to resume negotiations. for peaces, they left London on March 23, and in April met at Calais three French envoys—the archbishop of Rheims, Guillaume Seignet, and Gontier Col-who had come by sea from Dieppe7. It was expressly stated by Henry that these efforts after peace had been much helped by a letter previous y written by the count of Holland[®]. Their outcome, however, is not known; apparently they were wholly abortive.

In England the winter passed quietly. The king, except for a visit of several weeks to Ken Iworth⁹, where he spent Christmas, remained in or near London¹⁰. Meanwhile preparations for the new expedition were being pressed forward. The need for ready cash was as usual met by horrowing, and the pledges that had recently been redcemed soldom remained in the king's hands for long. Thus, on Jan. 8, 1417, the Pusan coller, which had been returned in the previous May before the repayment of the loan for which it was a security, was taken out of the certainly wrong in ascribing to 1416 (Lit. 216)

1 John Pickering and Thomas Suphem, cases of Exter (Ryst. 12, 412) his. Roll

4 Hen. V, Mich., 18 Jan. 1417).

4 Ibid. 418 1 Rym. iz. 414.

⁵ Ryan dx 414, 425 416 Ann Corresp Ivil. 79-4 letter which Mr Kingsford in ⁴ Ibid. 43u 4 Exch. Acces. 3xx/34. Ware was back in bid) 1 ⁷ For their safe-conducts, dated April 3, 1417, see Rym in. 445. Lendon by May 9, Enchaquer, L.T.R., Misc. Encoded Acres. 6/16.

Rym ix 418 He arrived before Dec. all, east, and staged till late in January (Int. Roll & Hen. V. Mich., Dec. 17 and 18, 14161 Otterbourie, 178; Wale. ii. 117; Chane. Ware. 136 as al).

16 The Chancery and Council records all point to this conclusion.

Henry's Second Expedition: Preparations (cu t.

Jewel House to raise 5000 marks from the citizens of London's jewels and a Shanish sword were handed to them as security for a further loan of 10,000 marks on March 84, while to Bishen Beaufort, who lent 21,000 marks, Herry pledged the crows. The public revenues were of course used for the same numose. On March 3 the Londoners lent 5000 marks on the security of half the aubuidy in the port of Londons, Bristol advanced 1000 marks on the security of the customs there*, while Bishop Beaufort's loan was, if possible, to be repaid from the customs at Southampton⁴. I nese transactions were but a few among many. Urgent letters under the privy seal were sent out, pressing for immediate loans in cash wherever money was to be found. A supply of ready money was kept up by constant leans at short notice, and the rolls are full of entries of small and large sums porrowed from abbots, priors, parsons, c ties, towns, gilds, and private individuals. There is evidence that the peremptory tone of the king's requests for aid caused some resentment", but it must be said on Henry's behalf that ar the last parliament the commons had implicitly and the lords expressly approved his action* and that most of the short-date loans were punctually repaid. The security usually offered for

I Ruc. Roll & Hen. V. Mich., Jan. 3.

It d. Mar 2, Starpe, Landon and the Kingdom, 1, 261 gene marks were repaid.

as there a sary (Im. Roll & Hen. V. Mich., Oct. 4)

Cu. Pat. 1416-22 B. 112; Rot. Park in 1912 Gesta, 106 n.

Cu. Par. 1416-22 p. 67; Letter Blc. 1, 176. (Since Dr. Wylie's death Professor B. A. New has has published his important book, The English Conquest of Normandy. 1415 1416. In Chap 17 of that work he investigates the financia, side of Henry's enserprise. On the reservoe of the year 2416 27 his statements are of much the same tenor as Dr Wylie's. He says, however, that on March 8 a second sum of 3000 marius was borrowed from London (p. 145, S. 7, citing Int. Roll 645, ..e. 4 Hen. V. Mich., Mar 19, carr] ^{*} Rec. Park iv. 95  Towns lending small sums, averaging about £20, were Windson, Newbury, There, Beiding, Henien, bis techney, Yaningfore, Wantage, Abengdon & Son Hith. Salmbury, Canterbury, Devices, Witney Sandwich, Bridgewater, Northampton, and Derby (($2). Larger leans are entered from the cathodral chapters of Welk and ha selected from the strains of Abrestshier, Abregeless Diserbouse. Constitution, blass, My much ex. Notice Ower Heating Shafterbers and Money of from the newspiled Even Readouse he British Montacute, Southwark and Wastingford and from the go their Corpus Christiand the Trinity is covertey. At these remains on appear in Fee. In a Hen. V. Mich. Inn. 20, eeb. 6, March E. 14. 2, and in Rolf a Hen. V. Mich., Feb. 2, 6, 8, 24, March E. 18. For the repayment of f. 503, 231. 44 limit by the town of Notingham and various persons in Laicestershim and I recombine, see Devon. 350. April 21. 2422. The buds p.of. Evy less f. 100 and the behop of Lineum f. 2005, both sums being repaid in 1419 (im. Rolf y Hen. V. Piech., May 27, 1419).

^{*} Cal. Pat. 1416-11, p. 111. Gesta, ioc. cit. * Ind , I h R nut gring * Etted gall

these loans was the half tenth and half-fifteenth due next Martinmas; but the money voted by parliament seems to have been collected with unwonted expedition, some of the instalments not really due till the following November having come in as early as April 61. The pressure of work at the Exchequer must have been very severe. It stands recorded in the rolls that 3282 writs, each with its separate scal, were sent out from the Exchequer between April 12 and July 74, and this was apparently not quite the busiest time. It is no wonder that bonuses for overtune were granted to many members of the staff, besides special rewards to the collectors for their extrazcal*.

In February alone £77,242 came into the Exchequer, while on March 8 £8; (7 more was received. From the occurrence of these large sums, a modern investigator has been led to interthat the receipts for this term reached ' the highest sum of any term in the reign," the estimate being that the receipts for this half-year alone—i.e. from Michaelmas, 1416, to haster, 1417 -amounted to £134,000 as compared with an average of \$142,000 for a whole year's gross receipt, while the expenditure for the half-year is given as $\int 119.072$, as against an average yearly expend ture of [122,000]. But the inference may be safely disregarded. The king was always pressing for the proceeds of taxation before they were actually due, and it must be remembered that the totals given are estimates only and not based upon an actual enumeration. Both outgoings and receipts, moreover, are fictitiously swollen by the entry of short loans and of repayments, which sometimes followed within a few days.

As fast as the money came in, it was allotted to the preparations for the coming campaign. Before the end of 1416, numerous lords, Knights, and squires had been approached

Rec. Roll 5 Hen. V, Parch., April 21, 2417 et pastin.

1 In. Roll 5 Hen. V, Parch., July 25, 4427

2 e.g. £5 was granted to the collectors of London, and proportionate amounts to the officials of other ports (las. Roll 5 Hen. V, Mich., Dec. 15, 1417).

^{*} Plannary, 1, 143, 314

Antiquery, vite 99. To the half year's expenditure, according to Rummy, must be midded £ 108,830 to make the tota for the year £227,902. [Professor Newhall's estimate {p 144, n 2} of the total revenue for the year 1416-17 (Easter to Easter) in £216,868, of which £ 221,893 came in times from the laity, £34,837 in tage from the clergy, and £23,435 it loans. He estimates the expenditure for the same period as £256,885 of which 457,481 went to the royal boundoid, and 481,185 was spent on maintaining the conquests of tate.]

Henry's Second Expedition: Preparations [cn. 1]

with a view to the securing of their services1, and I an T2, T4 17. was fixed as the date by which they were to supply information. as to how many men they could gut into the field. Feb. 14. was then named as the day on which they should come before the Council and sign indentures. On Feb. 1 the sheriffs of London were ordered to make a return of the number of archers and men-at-arms that the city could furnish⁴. On Feb. 9 all London kn ghts belonging to the king's retinue were ordered to present themselves before the Council at the Black Friars*. On March 11 more than 130,000 was paid over at the Exchequer to leaders who had signed indentures, and onthe same day a payment of figgrawas made for 400 Lancashire and Cheshire archers who were serving in the king's retinue". Gascon crosshowmen had already arrived from Bayonne? But the preparations, as usual, took longer than had been expected. At one time, it seems, the muster of the army at Southampton was fixed for Feb. 18, it was then postponed for a month^a; but so absurdly sanguine was ever this arrangement that the earl of Salisbury, who was ordered to go in advance to Harfleur to assist in meeting any emergency that might arise there, found less than half his force at Southampton on March 19, the appointed muster day".

Meanwhile munitions and stores were being assiduously collected. Thus, master craftsmen were specially brought over from St Sever to make steel crossbows10; arrowheads were ordered in England 11; and on Ech. 10, 1417, the sheriffs were

For payment of memorgers despatched for this purpose with weits under the pring. test, we far Rot 4 Hen. V. Mich , Dec. 11, 14 S.

^{*} Rym = 433

In. Roll & Hen. V. Mich., Feb. 6, 1417; Ryan in 433 of 5 Lett. Bk. 1 1754. For the normore of the duke of Clare, wanted Feb. 6, see Rich of 1443, for that of John Lord Clifford of Skipton, with afty men at-arms and 250 archers, signed on the same day, see Whitaker, Craven, 314.

⁴ Sharps, London and the Kingdom, 1 asz.

B ley, Mem 645
 Bn. Roll 4 Hen V, Mich., March 12, 1417. [On ugning their indentures, captains
 In. Roll 4 Hen V, Mich., March 12, 1417. [On ugning their indentures, captains usually received a quarter's wages-in some cases two quarters'-for themselves and their men (Newhall, op cii 1913q)]

Under the Lord of 5t Pierre, near S. Jean de Lua, Banes Pyrénées) and Menauton de Sainte Marie, sor order dated Dec. 31, 1416, in Chanc. Warrantis Ser. Is 1364, 181 [Cf. Newhall, 191, 2-1.]

Caus 4 Hen V, 5, 7; Cal. Pat. 1416-22; 9. 15

^{*} Salubary undertook to furanti joc mer-al-arms and you archer [1st Lin 12], but only by met-at arms and 190 archers were ready, and must of their belonged to other reunues (Cal. Pat x4x6-au, pp. 74 aq Brequigny, 7).

²⁶ Chanc. Ware, Ser. 1, 1364/12.

³¹ Ca., Pat. 2416-22, p. 22; In. Roll 4 Hen. V. Mich., March 18, 1417.

instructed to have six of the wing feathers plucked from every goose, except breeders, and to have them packed and forwarded to London for winging arrows2. Enormous quantities of corn and gammons of bacon "without number" were collected. though an attempt to get corn from the Baltic was unsuccessful, all export of grain from ports belonging to the Teutonic Order having been proh b ted owing to the bad harvest?

The delay in the start of the expedition was largely due to the difficulty of securing adequate shipping. The king's ships of course were few!. In February officers were appointed to requisition vessels in every port for the shipment of troops, but it proved necessary to allot many of the ships furnished by the west and south to Thomas Carew, Pons lord of Castillon, and John Mortimer, who were commissioned to keep the sea for six months with a force of more than 600 men-at-arms and 1200 archers. They undertook to safeguard the sea until the autumn, making war not only on the shipping of France, but on that of Castile, Scotland, and Genoa, unless they received express instructions to the contrary. They appear to have performed their task with zeal, for a effer dated London, May 7, mentions that sixty vessels were "in the strait " where Carew and his fellows were not suffering any enemy to pass?, and in the early summer they captured four Spanish ships with valuable cargoes*.

The necessity of maintaining so large a force to keep the seascompelled Henry to hire ships from abroad, the principal source being the Netherlands. From lists that remain we are able to make out the names of about 110 of these vessels, of which ainety one are called cogs, fourteen cravers, six ships, two busses, and two balingers, the rest being very small craft,

-4

Rym in: 416; E.H R. nnin: 512.

¹ bid cel Rym it 4373 Claus 4 Hen V, 7.
Hamrecesse, vi 362 See vot a 378 • Ord Priv Co ii 201

Acres a Hen VI, E. Carewa morter end is ratin, and shows that he had in his own sections gait men at-aims and 646 archers, the names of ail being recorded. They were carried on eleven venets, be largest being a carrack which took 201, the smallest a barge which had only two re. Exch. Access 40, 447. Post of Cascilion and Morumer were buch to lient 130 lists at all in and 300 meters (Call Pate 1414-1414).

[&]quot; Asazti, 14 bi * Exch. Acces. 48,12, 13. The spoil included forty eight buries of aren, wool in [&]quot;pakes," and one hundred curcuses of salt borf. Fir community of Henry Unitherowe to here ships in Holland and Zealand, in

46 Henry's Second Expedition: Preparations [cm. L

Goes supplied twenty-seven, Haarlem twenty-one, Dordrecht fourteen, Rotterdam thirteen Middelburg twelve, Bergen-op-Zoom five, and a few other lowns furnished yet smaller contingents. The first of these vessels was not engaged until Feb. 21 -three days after the date originally fixed for the muster at Southan pron1. There are still to be read indentures and receipts given by twenty-three of the masters. One of these documents refers to a crayer of one hundred tons portage, manned by six scamen and one paget, the rest concern cogs of much smaller capacity, ranging from forty to eighty tons portage. A master's pay was 6d, a day, a seaman's 7d, with a bonus (regardum) of 6d, a week, and a paget's 14d a day. The engagements recorded, which begin at various dates from March to June, were all to terminate on Sept. 1 or 21, 1417. Al, the men received instalments of pay at London or Southampton, but an unpaid balance remained unsettled for several years².

Venetian trading ships were forcibly pressed into service Payment was offered in the usual way, but refused by the masters², who at once wrote to the Signory Thereupon a resolution was passed in the Venetian Senate that an envoy should be sent to France and England to protest that they had not consented to the employment of their ships in the English service⁴. As no one, however, would undertake the mission the Senate had to be content with sending letters; and it is not surprising that the French regarded the presence of Venetians among the English forces as evidence of unfriend-liness on the part of their government, and attacked Venetian commerce on the high seas whenever occasion offered³. The unrewarded punctiliousness of the Venetians was not imitated by the Genoese, who readily agreed to the chartering of six of their merchantmen for 10,000 gold crowns⁴.

Early in March a number of ships had collected in the Thartes, and 1900 had already been paid to their crews in wages? On March 9 all ships in the king's service were

⁴ Exch Acets, 48,15.

^{*} Ibid 48/28-49/9.

Morosmi, in 1707 Vent. State Papers, i. 38.

⁴ Ibid.; Percet, i. 188

^{*} Ven. fitam Papara, i. 38 oq 3 Moreonai, 31. 154.

^{*} Ibid. call.

^{*} Inc. Red 4 Hen. Y. Mich., March 12, 23, and 19.

or dered to be at Southampton on April $+ \zeta^{\dagger}$. By this time troops were assembling there, for on March 25 /82,000 was sent down from London for wages under a guard of mounted archers. Of this sum £24,000 was paid at balisbury to the king's retinue, and the rest was taken to bouthamptor for the forces there?. It was clearly to the interest of the authorities to transport the troops as soon as possible. It rist, however, the date for the assembling of the ships was postponed to May 1, then to May 103, then to May 20 " without any fails " It did indeed seem as though a star, might soon be made when on Hock Tuesday, April 17, the king rode in from Westmirster to St Paul's, where he made an offering, and then passed through London saying farewell to small and great and asking for their prayers. The mayor accompanied him across the bridge to St George's church, where he made another offering, and then he went his way!. Nevertheless another three months were wasted while Henry moved about from place to place in the south, visiting, for instance, Reading in May, and Salisbury, Bishop's Waltham, and Titchfield in June and July It was not until the last days of July that he left inland regions for good, but then signs of an imm nent start began to multiply On July 21 he made what may be called his second wil.7, a

First Life, 77; Best, in 1813 Kingsford, Lit. 101.

Chane. Warr., Ser. I, 646/Ext. Igl., 2364/29; Exch. Acets. 157, 20.

³ Ord. Priv. Co. tt. 230. 2 In Roll 5 Hen. V. Parch July 15, 1417.

^{*} Ibid. 4 Hen. V. Mich., March 19, 1419. * Ibid. 7 Hen. V. Fasch , May 1, 14 7. Sewiche (231 b) mys that large numbers of thise had assembled at Portsmouth about May 6.

I is written in English and lacks the customery prove phrasmings, being limited to business details. Heavy confirms at the prevision of the was made before the rit. I it pedition of 1415 (cf. vol. 6. 539 app.), but he concerns himself mainly with the Lancauer property, with which Acchbohop Chichele and others had been enfected on July 11; a c stied cay, I has arrangement was to mainly but aleasy expressed a with that the feedfeet would re-extend him with the emission is question of he should denote this a seleacqueus will. Instituch however, sales of the or ginal feeffeer were dead, he directed that it death should recise the number to three, the survivors the old enfect two from a last of very re-reclaired in the necroment, who should then re-period the payers an of the engine, further and old to their. In out of the tweer samed. He gave restrictions, Further, that if he should decand if his emeration should not have sufficient from other sources to must all expenses, the feoffees should make up the amount and then sorrender what remained to Henry's son if he had one. Otherwise they were to divide the estate geographically on Henry a death, giving the northern half in the duke of Bedford and the southern to the duke of Conscesser. If either should die without male mut, his portion throld thereafter he annexed to the crown. It is remarkable that in this, is in his fewerer will, Henry makes no mention of his rides, brother, the duke of marches (Wills of Kings, 216 sq.) Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 118).

on the 25th he appointed the duke of Bedford to act as his lieutenant during his absence, with a salary of 8000 marks a year1; and on the next day he transacted husiness on hoard his ship at Portsmouth³.

The causes of the king's dilatoriness are not evident. Many ships and soldiers were unpunctually, but it is clear that a vast force of both had been assembled at Southampton for months, at great cost to the nation, and at some loss to the strength of the expedition, for as early as June 6 measures had to be taken to check desertions. The musters were held in various places Hampshire-Chilworths, Keo denhalls, Wallopforths, Lichbourre Down", Beausieu Heath", Portsdown's, and others -and the countryside must have suffered in many ways from the presence of such large numbers of soldiers under imperfect discipline and with nothing definite to do.

Notwithstanding the disadvantages of delay, it was perhaps well for those concerned in the expedition that it was held back until, owing to a notable English success, it could put to sea in security. At daybreak on June 2911, the earl of Huntingdon, who was cru sing in the Channel to protect vessels making their way to Southampton, fel in with a fleet of twenty-six ships under the command of Percival, a hastard son of Louis II, duke of Bourbon12. The French commander had with him nine large Genoese carracks13, and 1500 or 1600 Biscavans and other Spaniards, with 700 or 800 picked Gennese crossbowmen and lances, and his squadron had for the ast three months been watching the mouth of the Seine 14. As the fleets neared, the English suffered grievously from the uncring bolts of the Gesta, App. 266.

¹ Rym. ix. 47-5.
2 e.g. troops from Hants, Witts, Donet, and Summ, ordered to muster at South 1 Chanc. Ware 13641301 31 ampton on June 3, were none of them present on that date, and the proclamation was repeated for June 10 (Claus. 5 Hen. V. 15 d) Best. Mus. Add. MS 24,704, f 2

² Ibid. 165. Prehapi near Over Wallop or Nether Wallop, not far from Stockbridge. 4 Ibid. 161. It Chron Load 105, Kingsford Chron 7, Lit all 334 (Latin Brut), Moronni,

<sup>8. 177
11</sup> He was knighted on Sept 6, 1415 (A tieuthe, 1 103) The French communider has the was knighted on Sept 6, 1415 (A tieuthe, 1 103). The French communider has the was knighted on Sept 6. munity been identified with A exinter son of Unite John, then a prisoner in England (ib d. 204) Rosmere, it and Valler de Virrelle 1, 56 Comemporaries call him simply the "bastard of Southon" (cf. Norm. Chron., Reliot, 27; Otterbourne, 278 Kingsford, Chron. 71). 11 [bid 71

¹⁴ Morosmi, a. 16, Tit. Liv. 31; Vita, 91.

Genoese, but fortune turned when they grappled at close quarters. Both sides fought hercely and lost heavily, some 150 men being drowned or killed. After a three hours' fight, the English captured four of the carracks, together with the Bastard and a large sum of money which he had with him to pay three months' wages to the crews. The rest of the French ships escaped1. The four prizes were renamed and added to the king's ships2, three being of the enormous portage of 1200 tons and one of 8003.

St Denys, vi. 96; Juv. 536, Norm. Chron. (Williams), 176, Kingsford, Chron. 71;

Tit Liv. 3.; Vata, 93

Cal Pat 1416-22, p. 142 Woodward, ii. 253, Moronini, il. 258, Roncère, ii. 227

"He in locis ante id tempus non visie," Tit Liv 30. There is no good account of the fight, which was overshadowed by the events which immediately followed and to some sources confused with the naval battle of the previous year

W [[[

11 - Google

CHAPTER LI

HENRY'S SECOND EXPEDITION NORMANDY INVADED

THANKS to the exploit of the earl of Huntingdon, the great armsmeat, when on July 301 it at last put to sea, was able to make the pussage in full confidence and security. Of all the foreign expeditions of English kings in the Middle Ages, this is perhaps the most interesting to the modern student, for more is known of the personnel, equipment and organisation of this than of any other. Not only, as we have seen, do we possess an exceptional amount of information about the composition of the great fleet, numbering some 1500 craft, great and small, which had assembled at or near Southampton, but there still exists, in an excellent state of preservation, a bulky roll containing the names of over 5000 of the combatar to who passed muster at Southampton, a document of such value that one wonders why its contents have not long been published in full. For many years it was assumed that the roll contained the names of men who had fought in 1415, and many writers who had never seen the original were content to refer to it as the Roll of Agracourt². An examination of its contents, however, proves beyond doubt that it belongs to the year 1417, to which it is correctly attributed by two modern writers who have described. and analysed it. Each of them has counted the names in the roll, with the result that one gives the total as 7767 and the other so 73644. It is greatly to be hoped that the roll will some be printed Chron Land 104; Kingsford Chron 21; Elmhan, Lib. Metr. 140. Livint and most modern writers give a wrong date.

Figerta, 130, Tit. Liv. 315 Vitti, 51 of

It was an introducing discribed as such for some time in the catalogue of the Public. Record Office: [It is now catalogued as Each: Acets, 51/2]

 В. Williams, Genta, App. 265 seq., Ramsay, в 258
 Williams gives 2792 lances, 5912 archers, and 64 инspecified (Genta, 273). Рамону gives 1812 innous and doys archere (locavit.). [The most secure examination of the roll has been made by Professor R. A. Newball. The secults appear to be book. The Professor Conquest of Normandy, 1416-1414. The typewritters these on which this work a hand blacked becomes becomes because the number of the recognition of the rest that the rest the rest the rest the rest the rest the rest that the rest the rest the rest the rest the rest than the rest than the rest the rest than the rest the rest than the res to 1970 men-st-arms and fodg arches]

* In Best, Miss. Add. 515, 14 hoard there is a partial transcript of the roll, which contains the names verbatim down to John Nevil, http but stops after giving the first twenty-sight of his lances.

It has sometimes been supposed that we have in the roll an enumeration of the whole of Henry's force, and it has even been asserted that neither in 1415 nor in 1417 was England able to ship to France an army of more than 8000 fighting men!. This statement, however, is retured by the contents of the roll ristlf, which in its present form is certainly not complete. It has been suggested that it contains only the musters from the south and west, those from the rest of England having been lost. However that may be, the role omits the retinues of the king, the dure of Clarence , Gilbert Lord Ta both, the earl of Oxford, and Edmund Lord Ferrers of Chartley*, and we know too of neveral knights and squires who were with the expecition but whose names the roll fails to mention?. Livius, copied by the author of the File, puts the number of fighting men at 16,400, and adds particulars of the larger retinues which yield a total of 9:180, but his details are frequently in disagreement with those on the roll. A letter written in London on May 7, 1417, estimates that there would be more than 25,000 men-at-arms -an absurd computation. Contemporary French writers naturally exaggerate the size of the army: Cagny magnifies the figures to 2000 or 4000 men-at-arms and 25,000 or 30,000 archerate, Juvenal dea Uraina gives the total as co,000011, while the chronicler of St Denis names that figure as the number of the archers alone 18. On the whole, however, we are not take y to go far wrong if we accept the English estimate of 16,400; it is certainly better supported than the lower figures that have recently found favour13.

pp. colors, 1360).

Cons., 109 is [The suggestion is maniferely absord as the roll records the measure of the earl of Northa interland, word stiffers, Lord sirely of Codoor, Gullers Giadran wille, and other notable men of the parth and medlands]

Fr. Roll 4 Hen. V, so. * Rym se 4865 of Carte, Hulle a. 2301

* Livius, 31 sqq., Vita, 93.

A Ramsay, in E H.R. xvm. 614. It may be mentioned that Wohey, in a letter of Aug. 10, 1523, referred to the data of Saffalk surery of 12, 300 stem as the largest that Bod fe't finguod for the last hundred years (aetters and Papers of Herry Villy He ^{*} Fr. Roll 4 Hen. V, 20. * Tit. Liv. 32.

TCf. Rym. 12. 1953 Ond Prov. Co. 11. 2324 Feedal Aids, 1-595 Walt in 324. It should be noticed that a few days after the landing in Normandy the long spoke of his force to the men. "ordained to go with us for the first passage," which suggests that a good many were left behind (Riley, Mern. 654). [It med not be supposed, however, that all the men named in the roll saled in July.]

Living 35 eqq., Vita, 55.

Alart, Inwest. Source, 2, 126.

^{} Cagny, 109.

 Cagny, 109.

 Cagny, 109.

 Cagny, 109.

 Denys, 1100.

 Denys, detailed analysis of the compounce of Henry's army , harvard University Library,

He taking men were accompanied by a no anothe and corner cree and he cause more and winnered from Dispert and Lieux, security the horder of servants that were percent rather and the cut again communities agreemen. The finding than well lound in all necessaries for conductors serves, and con-

HU 90 . 12242 App. VII), I am convinced of the substantial correction of his om unions the war war a france of the first fine and the fire a company see as in a subject tools to be a subject to be a control to be a subject to the appears to a bounder or and the ratio form that the first operated for any a manager of the same to the same and the same and the same and the same and the In the case of the proper types and the case of a manufacture and the case of the case of the Channel int 14 7

Commission of described by the William Party, burns, and and a world of the The real of the property of the property of the second sections of the section sections of the second sections of the section sections of the section sections of the section sections of the section section sections of the section se I have been representative the rest have placed and his order to be about the gardener. From the first year and to use the first wide a discharge because the decision Routes has removied detain of a first retional tribes directly the total for the Altogether we have 9580 men.

There were in addition the man amached to the king a household. These possibles mem not to be revorded, in the army of LATS there were 1 52. We have, too, the names to be two from more who were provided by a control franchise have promotives acceptance to be an exercise of a 1 form of the second of the conthat (ideal, min. 71%, 71%, 71%, min. 987-596, 598, 599). But apart from these doubtful cases, there can hardly have been a single captain in the force whose existence is not on record. To the total of 9580 there must thus he added the men of the king a household, and at least eight, and perhaps twenty-three, retaining but no more. Now the twenty-three men in question were for the most part of no great consequence. Even if, to a real coop was between them. I feel sure, at any rate, that the total number of combatants in the expedition cannot have suiched prico-

How then, it may be asked, did Livius get his figure of 16,400? The text of the lance in an English indenture meant three mounted men (p. pr. "com lances ave Property and the second decision which has a man in a direct of growing all includes participant there a great that it that is a long of post fact. In the fact that the Burn town are a common to be a parameter for any topic of the state of mention, the 840 archers from Lancishire and Cheshire who appear in the muster-roll but are not among the contagents noticed by him, and the smiths, suppers, and other members of the large labour curps, about which he source so have known a good deal In any case the figure 14,400 rests on his ansupported authority, which, I think, most how to the conclusions drawn from the researches of Professor Newhall.]

* Tit. Liv. 334 Vita, 925 Nicolas, Navy, 21 428. For £ 1000 paid for wages of masses, energia tion, and division other artisans, see Inc. Roll 3 Hen. V. Frech., April 29, 1427, and £238. 250 6d paid to William Sunta, master-tarpentus, and fifty-note campature, shed by the

* $4 mile to a word one

File B. . . See 9 Mark . Re . . up y . No bodie twee and recent files protected or bondamping on jury to tax. For Ac to 5 a.

temporaries seem to have been impressed by the amount of food transported1.

The start was made to the sound of trumpet and clarion, with a favouring wind, the lead being taken by two of the reval shirs, known as the Areg's Chamber and the King's Hall's. It must have been a brilliant spectacle, for after the fashion of the time the ships were resplendent with heraldic devices, painted on their mile and capstans, or set up on their easiles and most heads2. The earl of Huntingdon was appointed "to govern the fleet," that is, presumably, to direct its movements, the appointment, it is carefully stated, being made without prejudice to the rights of the dake of Exeter as admiral. To the last the destination of the fleet was kept a secret even from the lung's most intimate friends. While the French expected it to make for Harfleur", where a safe landing was now assured, some preparations for defence had been made at Ardres, Boulogne, Dieppe, Le Crotoy, and St Valéry¹, but after two smooth days at sea the English sailed into the haven at the mouth of the little river Touques, on the south side of the estuary of the Seine, where the pleasure seekers of Trouvule now do their marketing. Five hundred horsemen had assembled on the shore, and made a rush to oppose the first landing-party, but on their leader being killed by the English archers, all resistance was abandoned in despair. So the whole force disembarked on the same day (Aug. 1). After giving thanks to God for this hopeful beginning, the king knighted forty eight of his princ pal followers, and formally appointed the duke of Claience constable of the host. Tents were pitched anywhere in the marshes that lay to the west of the river10, and the king and the leading captains took up their quarters in some houses near the Shorell.

Lat. 101 1 1 Liv 32. Ca. Pat. 1416-12, p. 111 Genta, 21 m; Nicolas, Navy, ii. 444.
 Vita, 96; Tit Liv 23
 Trabisons de France, 130.

4 Baum, IV 11

Gesta, 1221 Kingsford, Chron. 216, Lit. 3321 Brut, 3121 Bann, iv. 1224 Blondel,

1. 445, It Liv 33.

* Rot Norm. (Hardy), 316, Rym. 12, 552, 5543 Gesta, 1121 Elmham, Lib Metz 150; T.t Liv 13, Wals in 1214 Chron Lond 100, Kingdord, Chron 71, 116, Lit 303, First Life, 313 Beat, ii. 332; Chron Ric, H.-Hen, VI, 454 Waumn, 11241 Cordellers, 116, Biordel, 11 Life, 314 Biordel, 11 Life, 315 Biordel, 315 Biord 2343 Coustnot, 162, Cochon, 278, Ber Chron, Ing 2254 Binin, 1, 244 Blondel, 11 1634 J Meyer, 2501 Maren, 1431 Goodwin, 1551 Ameth, i. 323

¹ Im. Roll 5 Hen. V. Pasch., passing Brut, ii 382, "gomes, tripgettis, Engynet, nower, Bartuler, brygger of lethir, scaling inddres, malin, spader, shouyaet.", Kingshord,

After a day or two the king moved into the town of Touques1, beyond which, at a distance of about a mile, stood the great castle of Bonneville*, one of the strongest posts in Normandy1. Already the earl of Huntingdon had been sent forward with a detachment of troops to summon the garrison to surrender. Their hearts failed them at the first threat of siege, and on Aug. 1 the commander agreed to submit if the place were not relieved with n six days. He sent word to the dauphin at Rough that he could not hold out without help, but the messenger was hanged for bringing such craven tidings. The garrison consequently surrendered on Aug. 98, and were suffered to depart, leaving their victuals and artillery?. The French government marked its sense of the disgrace by beheading Jean Bonenfant, an esquire who had helped to arrange the capitulation without striking a blow. King Henry at once communicated his success to the mayor of London in a letter which was received with transports of joy!. The capture of Bonneville laid open all the rich vicomie of Auge 10. The garrison of Auvi lars had already offered terms, and they surrendered to the earl of Salisbury on Aug. 14th

Welcome plunder was soon brought in by foraging part es, before whom the peasants at first fled in panic to the towns 25. In the next generation it was represented that the English were a ragged rabble and regarded as wild beasts rather than men 18. But this view, if ever entertained by the Normandy peasants, was soon given up. Henry was not there as a raider but as the

Bouvier, 4324 Gesta, 1125 Tit Liv 34, Vita, 99; Series, i 993

* Walical pain

* Riley, Ylern, 654, Delpi , 219

Liv 343 V ta, 99. Robert Horoby was appointed captain (Gesta, 276).

18 Bloadel, t. 163.

Rot. Norm (Hardy), 145 eq.; 149.
 Then known as the castle of Torques and so called in the principal English. sources. It has been supposed that there was a separate costle at Touques, but there is no doubt that Bonneville is the easile referred to (see Dularue, ii. 174, Nowvenum Roam, ⁴ Rot Norm. (Hardy), 145, 184; Rym. ix 479, where the English signatories are John Corriwall and William Porter. The names of the garrison, 106 in number, see given in Rot Norm. (Hardy), 147.

^{*} Tit. Lav. 14; Vitt., 99 * Gera, 111; Tit. Lav. 14; Vita, 99.

Juv 533, Rot. Norm (Hardy), 184.

⁴⁴ Auge was gravited to the duke of Clarence before Sept. 36, 1417. Rot. North a Hardy, ¹⁴ Basin, s. 19, 311 Cochon, 179.

lawful king of the land! First he appounced that any man who robbed a monk or a priest should be hanged2, whereupon many country people donned priests' garments, tonsured their crowns, and circulated unmolested in the English camp. Soon, however, the need for this subterfupe was removed by a further proclamation against outrages on women and the plundering of people who voluntarily submitteds.

When Henry left Touques on Aug. 17, he marched along the coast towards Caen4. He left behind, however, at Bonneville a garrison under John Keighley, a Yorkshire knights, and it is probably to Keighley and his men that the English owed the capture of Lisieux during September?. The resistance offered must have been but slight; in fact, in the next generabon there was a tradition that when the English entered, they found the city deserted save for one old man and one young woman. This story has been reacily accepted by modern French writers, but its absurdity as manifest when we remember that Lisieux was a cathedral city containing a large number of churchmen, a class whose interests were notoriously well cared for by the invader, that the townsmen had already declared for the dake of Burgundy*, that it was not, as modern writers have asserted10, an open town, and that a contemporary French chronicler expressly states that the cit zens were overcome¹¹.

* Vita, 97. * Wan, it. 544 * Thid. * Orace, arry, Brist, d. 585; Champellion F grace, Lettros, 11. 539; Whitaker, Craven,

Bisin, 1 27 J. Merer, 2504 Dearse, Nouv. En. 11 283. Bisin was lishop of Listrax from 447 to 1414

[Newhall (47 and 2. 114), citing Country, 150, and Batan, (17, antibutes the expense of Lineau to Clarence and dates it Aug. 4. His authorities, however, are not been weighty in this context, and we may be once that the fall of Burney die would have here has advertised if it had been preceded by the capture of so important a place of Lucus]

Delarue, Nouv Ess. ii. 161

Sur Rym. in. 55 g for pardon to two squires in the English army who had been condemned to donth for plundering people under the hing's protection.

⁶ Keighley became captain of Linear (Geen, 476) The Cours (1995), The Lov (49), Vira lases, the expression of Conserve appared towards. the end of Sept. 419. In St. Denys, we can it is said in have necurred em-mediately after the fall of Caes. The date has generally been given in May by rails (of Leftvee Pontalis, he assignment yours. Chron , ed. Heilot, a), but this is certainly ten late, for on Tax 1, 14.18, a muster of English troops was ordered to be held at Liseus (Rot Norm, Hards, 3.59), on an 11 the king granted a probend in the athedral (stid 3.32), and in English captain was appointed here before Feb. 9 (1014 - 6.5)

¹⁹ So Puterut, 23, Sarman, Cauchen, 229. The town was certainly willed when the French meaptured it in 1449 (Blondel, Reductio, 70)

The obscurity in which the capture of Lisieux is shrouded is doubtless due in part to the fact that when the place fell all eyes were turned on Caen. Since its capture by Edward III. some seventy years before, when it was aimost untortified, Caen had been surrounded by a wall six or seven feet thick, pierced with twelve gates, hastioned with thirty-two towers?, and covered on three sides by deep water ditches?. On the south the town was protected by the river Odon, which flows through the meadows in many channels, forming islands at its junction with the Orne. One of these, the Ile St. Jean, was independently fort fied, so that the Ocon flowed between two towns, each able to stand a siege of its own! Within the circuit of the town walls, on the rising ground to the north-east, stood the great castle, begun by William the Conqueror and enlarged by his son Henry, with its huge square keep and its moat newn out of solid rock, rightly accounted one of the finest and strongest fortresses in Normandy*, while to the hinglish it seemed another town as large as Caen itself. And that was saving much, for an eather chronicler had reckoned that except for London. England had no town exceeding Caen in size?. A modern writer est mates the population of those days as at least 40,000°. The towa's chief industry was the manufacture of cloth, in particular woolien serge. There was good pasturage for sheep close at hand, and wood for dyeing grew abundantly in the meadows near the tewn10. Twenty-five trades besides the weavers were represented in the Whitsuntide processions11, and among them a special importance was claimed by the porters18 who carried goods to and from the vessels that came up the Orne to the harbour sust outside the walls.

The wealth of Caen's further indicated by the extraordinary number of its ecclesiastical foundations. With thirteen or fourteen parish churches and nearly thirty religious houses, it

```
Lechaudi d'Anny, 401, 410 | See Ant Norm al. 206.

Yaultur, 196-205; Huët, 64, 201 R. Beausepaire, 505

Tit Liv 36, 404 Vita. 101, 112.

Tit Liv 36, 404 Vita. 101, 112.

Tit Liv 36, 404 Vita. 1014 Vaulter, 198

From: i. 223; Blondei, Reductio, 219, Bouwer, Recouverment, 352

Brit, ii, 144.

Avenbury, 359.

Paneux, 13, 72.

(bid 73; Froisi, i. 223.

Paneux, 13, 72. The from was specully noted for 12 pockets, called "imques" (bid 26, I ribation, 3.7; Dearur, 11, 124, 450, Vaulter, 2-1)
```

" Brm. et " Pulieut, 72; Formeville, 295. is no wonder that it was known as the city of churches!. Besides the establishments within the town itself, there stood outside the walls the two world-famous abbeys of Sr Stephen and the Trinity, in one of which lay the body of William the Conqueror, in the other that of his wife Matilda. The latter, commonly called the Abbaye des Dames2, from the high social standing of the nuns, stood on the high ground of St Gilles near the castle, was fortified with a strong wall2, and was known as Trinity Fort4. The abbey of St Stephen was just outside the wall on the western side of the town, and like its sister was strongly fortified2. Close to the castle, furthermore, stood the collegiate church of St Sepulchre, built in the twelfth century, which was also separately enclosed to form a third detached stronghold3.

When King Henry left Touques, on Aug. 13, he sent forward the duke of Clarence with 1000 picked men. Preising on by the shortest route, this force reached. Caen next day just in time to save the suburbs, which the French had already begun to are, after the usual practice, in order to deprive the besiegers of cover near the walls?. Unarence found the I rinity abbey abandoned and at once occupied it as his headquarters. The garr son of the town and castle was too scar ty to attempt to hold the outlying defences, and an order had been given that both abbeys should be demolished. The sudden arrival of the English saved. the one, but all pregarations were in hand for firing the other, the pillars of the nave of the church being a ready undermined. But one of the monks, who loved his church rather than his country, crept out of St Stephen's in the darkness of the might, crawled on all fours to the abbey of the Trinity, and sought out the duke of Clarence, whom he found lying asleep in his armour. in a garden, with his head resting on a stone. Falling on his knees he implored the duke's intervention to save the great abbey that his forefathers had built, offering to guide him to a spot where the wall was weakly guarded. Clarence straightway got together a scaling party, and with the help of the monk

Apparently at the came time in the other, Vaultier, loc. cit

Soc. Antiq. de Norm. 20. 1921 Paneux, 31

¹ Pangung 17.
1 Cabban de Dame M Bourse Between and Chabba

¹ "Abbaye de Dames," Bouvier, Retouvrement, 348; "l'abbaye des Dames," Grud, 212

Everted between 1954 and 1959, Vaultier, S. 54, 641 of St Denys, vi. 204.
 Denrie, H. 242 Possent, 771 Sec. Antiq de Norm. 20. 2011 Vita, 202.

⁷ Tit. Liv. 25; Vun. 2023 Chron. Lond. 106; Gregory, 215

effected an easy entrance to the abbey. The few occupants were captured, but all were allowed to go free, except one whom the duke hanged for sacri ege because he was caught removing the bars from the windows of the church1.

Meanwhile the king, with the main army, was approaching. On the day of his departure from Touques, he sent to the king of France a letter in which he called God to wirness that he had striven for peace ever since he came to the throne, while his cousin had fed him with leaves but no fruit, and he now called upon him for the last time to give up the crown and kingdom of France, or worse evil would certainly come upon him. Then he advanced to Dives?, where he spent the night; the following day he reached Grentheville, where he stayed over the next day, which was Sunday and the feast of the Assumption⁴, on the Monday he moved on to Fontenay-le-Tesson, lodging at the abbey, on Aug. 17, after crossing the Orne at Allemagnes, he halted at Fterville; and on the 18th his force encamped before the walls of Caen?

Henry took up his quarters within the precincts of St. Stephen's. He mounted guns on the roofs and towers of the abbey buildings, whence he could see everything that went on in the town?. The biggest of his guns he disposed between the abboy and the western wall, under the direction of the duke of Gloucester²⁸. Much artiflery was also stationed in the fortress of the Trinity!. The whole force was divided into four sections. The earls of Hunnington, Sa isbury, and Warwick, Lord Grey of Codnor, and Sir John Cornwal, occupied the meadows on their ght. On the left the Earl Marshal and Lord Matravers lay. in the faubourg close to St Nicholas' church. The northern side was held by Gilbert Lord Talbot, Gilbert Umfraville, John Neville, and Robert Lord Willoughby, while to the east the duke of Clarence fronted the castle from his vantage-ground in the fortress of the Trinity12. Thus the town was beset from the south west to the north-east, the section to the south and south-

```
1 Wale it gas eq.; Tie Liv. 15 eq.; Veter on E Rern. in gen eq.

    Villa Sancto Salvatorio de Tyfe (Wale ir 315) Delarus, Nouv. Esc ir 465)

4 Thirt, Wale see err
* [The pure is now called $1 André de Fonteray ]
4 Dela oran 134

* The 133 You, 1031 Getts, 113

You have set.
                                              2 Walt H 122
10 Van, 104 Tat. Lw 16.
                                              11 Wals, p. 123.
12. Se Denra, 91. 104
```

east being unapproachable owing to the various channels of the Orne, though passage of the river could be maintained by a bridge of hides, which had been sent from Harfleur!

The defence was conducted by William de Montenay*, who had under him a force of the famous Genoese crossbowness. The walls were protected by mounds of earth hastily thrown up; engines were mounted at points of vantage; and on every side a gallant resistance was offered. But the big guns of the English, some of which were brought up the Orne by ship, proved terribly effective, doing great destruction among the but dings of the town, though Henry refrained from battering a weak spot in the wall lest the church of St Stephen, which stood just within, should be damaged. After about a formight of bombardment, mining, and other activities, an assault was planned for Sept. 4, the commander of the defence having refused Henry's demand for surrender. On the appointed day the king was up early, and found time to hear three Maises. before the signal for attack was given by bugle from the royal tent. Answering calls rang out from the several camps, and the first scaling parties sprang forward to plant their ladders beyond the most, into which quartities of fagg its had been cast. The defenders on their part had manned the walls to the call of horns and trumpets, and as the assailants mounted struck them. down, burled stones on them, blew quicklime into their eves, or poured upon them bo ling water mixed with oil and fat. But the English, attacking in three waves, could not be stayed, though many of the ladders proved too short and dropped use easily into the most. One of the newly-made knights, Edmand Springhouse by name, was in the forefront of a scaling party, but he missed his footing and fell into a breach of the wall, where the defenders flung their fire on him and

* Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 1513 Rym. it. 490, Delarue, 11. 21 5

* Tit. Liv. 275 Vita, 205 St Denys, vi. 2043 Delarue, New Em. 11. 268, Bras, 385

Hubb, 1523 Pament, 45. The roof of St Stephen a was nevertheless badly davinged.
For grant in aid of the chapatos of the charten, whose revenues were intenessed by the war, on Rom. is 544, Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 144

Tie Liv. 38 19. ; Vita, toll 1981; Eicehars, Lib. Metr 1173; Wale. 21. 3273; Cappra. De Libete eat. Course, 178; Bionelle, a64, 446; Racy, Mest. 657; Puncua, 49.

I For. Acces, 57, C. It had been made at Plymouth by John Janya, one of the ling a mater-carpertent, who had under him autern or eighteen carpertent, untilit, and cothiers, their first instainment of wages being pa d at Airmouth to Aug. 16. 417 Janya had at a day and the rest pat. The amount past was £14. 131-40. The bridge was shipped in texticus to Harffeld, where it was stored for a rest. It was small again in the segme of Louviers, Point de l'Arche, and Rosen.

burned him alive. The king, it is said, was heavy and sorry on hearing of his death, but the sight of his fate spurred the courage. of his comrades, and at the point where he fell the attack was pressed with redoubled vigours. It was the duke of Clarence who first broke through the defence, the king having withdrawn some of the troops on his side in order to meet a relief force which was reported to be approaching but did not appear. Clarence gained a footing on the Île St Jean at the end of the Rue Neuvel, a certa n Harry Ingles is remembered as the first Englishman to get int. Fighting in the streets followed, the English staving all the men they met, priests excepted, and after a hard struggle they reached the bridge near the Black Frairs. This they rushed, headed by the ear of Warwick, who, on reaching the great tower called the "little castle" mounted a ladder shouting "A Clarence, a Clarence, a St George 1" and was the birst on the battlements, where he planted the royal banner. There ensued a terrible conflict in the streets and houses, but Clarence's men forced their way. It ough the town and drove the brench from the bartlements on the far side. More than 1800 Frenchmen® were slaughtered in the streets; but, while many I nglish perished during the siege?, we know from a letter of the king's that the whole dreadful business of the assault was effected " with right little death of our people !! " When resistance had crased and the streets we e-p-led with dead and dying, the victors turned to the inevitable sack and plunder, and hing Henry, who had returned and entered through a gate thrown open by clarerice's troops, rade to St Peter's character give thanks.

1 Wile to 3141 Best to 314, Peter Chron 481; Kingsfood, Lit. 124.

* Par malvese garde," Cockon, 271; Delame, Nouv. Em. ii. 270; Rev. Anglo-Fr. v. 270. The street is now the Rue Neuve St Jean (Mancel, 164 Patieux, 52).

Worcester, Itin. 373

To Liv 18 og , V to, 211, Wele is 1241 Gesta, 213 n. Brut, 1. 384, Chron. Re. II Hen. VI. 45, Norm. Cheen, 179, Bonde, 2. 264, Vantier, 9, Dearwis, 2. 6, Nour Ess in 1701 Brass 19

 From document dated 1464 in Martymings or Charter Brok of Carn in Lechaudé d Aries Chartes, if 4 5. Cf. Desirve hous Lie v. 272, Paleot, 523 bauffer 9. Mattera in copia truc du turt. Bondes, 164 Baun, 1 27 giver the turne impres sion. On the other hand, Monstrelet (iii. 242) gives 600 as the figure, and Le Fètre (4. $20) puts it at no more than 500.

In Law 12, Manute on Age, Moroson, 1, 446.

* Rak y Mem 43.5 Delpot, and Bir James Harangton was among those hilled (Kongulerd, and any, of vol 1 4.8)

* Lot Law 40 (The author of he "First English Life" says (p. 92) that when order was restored Henry had all the sulvables yet unplandered brought tegether into a

The butchery at Caen has sometimes been regarded by modern writers! as due to the calculated design of a ru hiess conqueror to strike terror at the outset of his gigantic task and thus to lighten its succeeding stages; and this was certainly its effect. But to contemporaries it seemed nothing but a sad necessity. The garrison had del berately refused to yield, and they were bound to take the usual consequences. Taking this for granted, the English chroniclers claim special praise for the king in that he issued orders that no woman should be outraged, no priest molested, and no church plundered -- injunctions which unquestionably had some effect, though with all his discipline Henry could not prevent his men from sometimes getting out of hand. Let it would have been far better for his fame had he fort idden all massacre and pillage as soon as resistance had ceased; and if such heroic forhearance is too much to look for in those callous and bloody days4, common prudence might nevertheless have taught him lemency towards the people whom he aimed at making his subjects. It is humi sating to our pride in a national hero to read the language of those who suffered under his heavy hand, for when the broken spirit of the French began to revive, the foul massicre of Caen was ever foremost in their minds.

The town being completely in his hands, King Henry turned to the reduction of the castle, where the defence was rendered well-high desperate by the addition of about a thousand useless. mouths that had fied for refuge into the enclosures. Indeed, within five days of the capture of the town, the castle came to terms, having undergone neither assault nor bombardment? On Sept. 9, a document was signed in which the garrison agreed to capitulate if no relief should come before Sept. 19. Their lives were to be spared; every man might keep his horse, armour, and clothing, and a sum of money not exceeding 2000 crowns might be retained and shared by the men according to great and stronge house," and gave them to Clarence, reserving for himself only "a groully French Books. I be done developed much of the property among his men-This is one of the stories for which the earl of Ormonde is named as the narrator's authorry] their rank: but everything else was to be left behind. An armistice was granted in order that the garrison might appeal to Rouen for help, but their cry fell on deaf ears. On Sept. 20, therefore, a rich silken tent was pitched before the castle, and there the king sat in state while the governor, kneeling, delivered up the keys and the garrison passed out. A thousand of them were allowed to go without their arms to Falaises, where the English were to meet their again. The English said that the women in the castle, disregarding the terms of the capitulation, carried off a quantity of money in leathern bottles. while a fire, which the French were suspected of having started, destroyed al. the stuff that had not been taken away".

The king took up his quarters in the palace that William the Conqueror had erected in the castle balleys, and there he resided t ll Oct. 1, arranging for the settlement of the town. In a letter, dated Sept. 11, the cuke of Clarence had reported to the mayor of Landon the fall of many places besides Caen, and had stated his belief that in a short while the king a whole purpose would be achieved and that nothing was now wanted but people to settle in the captured towns and hold them. Settlers were soon invited from England to Caen, and confiscated houses were aliotted to them. A contemporary writer, who was in Paris at the time, says that 25,000 persons were driven out in one day?. Diligent search, however, has revealed the names of only to2 who refused to accept Heary's authority, and these were drawn, not merely from Caen, but from a wide area around. Modern French writers have estimated the number of the refugees at 1000°. Many no doubt did prefer flight to submission, but all the available evidence shows that the great majority of the townsfolk remained and accepted the new condit ons. It is typical of the complete resignation of most of the inhabitants that one of the earliest official documents met with after the capture of the town records permission for the Rym. tx. 39], 394; Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 166. 1 Wan, 16 31 f.

Procus, Englished to: So Delarue, il. 134, and Vaultier, 173

Rym 12: 493, Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 1631 Tit. Liv. 41, Vita, 1133 St Denys, vi. 106.

The St. Denvi, vi. 105. This etc mate has been accepted by many later uniters, while some treat it as too low. It has even been supposed that 100,000 people field from Normandy to Britishy (Masseville, iv. 62).

daughter of a Caen burgess to marry an Englishman! But if some resistance still found place among the laity, there is no room for doubt as to the artifude of the clergy. Among seculars and regulars alice, Heary's offer of protection found a ready welcome, and a list? is extant which shows that 12 3 ecclesiastical submissions were received as soon as Cach was in his possession. The list includes a number of abbeys, priories, and parish priests in the region already occupied by the English.

Meanwhile events of much interest had been occurring elsewhere. Before Henry left England, he had appointed the earl of March to take command of the transports as soon as they should have disemparked the troops at Touques and return with them to hingland to fetch part of the army for which he apparently had not been able to find rooms. Accordingly all the ships save those that carried artillery were sent back from Touques at the first possible moment⁴. Some of them must speed ly have returned to France, for at Caen on Sept. 1 Henry granted their discharge to 117 Duich vessels. and 122 English ones! The earl of March, however, after crussing for a while in the Channels, sailed early in September for La Hogue with the second instalment of the expeditionary force under the convoy of Thomas Carew and his squadron? Landing at St Vasse, the esr. marched through the Cotentin, plundering as he went. He attacked St Lo, but was beaten off, and passed on to join the king at Caen.

While Henry was at Caen, detachments of his army gained some useful successes. In the middle of August the earl of Hantingdon, Gilbert Talbor, and Gilbert Umfraville were discussion of the strength of Henry's army }

Norm. Chron. (Williams) 181, 231, (Hellot) 31. The chronology of March s sorage and subsequent exploits in the intject of much confusion in the chronicing some of which ascribe his sevier to I rance to the following spring. But the references in note 7 above seem incontrovertibly to place it in September.

But Norm: There's), sta, Sept. 30, 1417. The chrossder of St Denouggests that favouable transcript variefied to those who command to make a Englishmen (v. 104).

Dated Sept. 7 (Rym. iz. 488 seq., Rot. Norm., Hardy, 332 seq.).

Rym. iz. 466 eq. Yet twelve of the King's ships, including the Genome prim, were left in the Hamble, manned with shelvion crews (Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 144).

Tit. Lev. 34.

Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 320 seq.

^{*}Brut, it 313, 313
On Sept. 1, 1415, Thomas Carew received verbal orders from the lung to convoy the earl of March and others to "Hogges" (Ord. Priv. Co. 11, 126; Exch. Accu. 25 (2.1.) For £256 (2.1.) to paid for a spin for the triumport of the ear- of March and 2 (12.1.) For £256 (2.1.) to paid for a spin for the triumport of the ear- of March and 2 (12.1.) cather tords, with their settinues, gaing "in presentant regis," see In Rial c Hen V. Paschi, Sept. 20, 2427. [This force is taken into account above (p. 52, 2...3) in the empowered to attack enemy strongholds. By Aug. 22. Creully, with a number of dependencies, had passed into Linguish hands, and on Aug. 25 Villers-Bocage carre to terms with Huntingdon3-acquisitions which went far to secure Henry against any attempt to relieve Caen from the west. September witnessed the actual surrender of Lingevrest and Tilly-var-Sculless, and the signing of capitulations by Thury-Harcourts and Lamotte-de-Cesny?. Much more important, however, was the capture of Bayeux. The city had recently been fortified with high walls and deep mosts, and a strong castie. stood at its south-west corners. Nevertheless, it offered no serious resistance to the duke of Gloucester, who was sent against it. By Sept. 8 terms of surrender had been signed, and on the 19th the town was occupied by the English without further trouble. Next day, a Lancashire man, John Ashton, was appointed seneschal of Bayeux 19; but the completeness of the submission was such that many subordinate offices, including that of ticome, were fortawith entrusted to brenchmen²¹. All the cathedral revenues were taken into the king's hard, and he appointed a cathedral treasurer 15, but great numbers of clergy in the city and its neighbourhood had accepted English rule even before its occupation, and on making formal submission the dean and chapter soon received their own again 13. On Oct. 20 Ashton was authorised to issue tickets hearing his seal to those who should apply for them within eight days, others were to be treated as enemies 14,

```
Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 150, 286.
                                   " 1bid. 151, 186.

    Ibid. ∓çï.
```

• Ibid 265; Postel, 16, 17

* Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 16229, 3 Lockando d'Anny, 218, 222. Tex. Norm. (Hardy), 158 tex.

1 Ibid 172; Delarue, Nouv Em 11 278; Caumont, Journal, 201, 202; Postel, 7 1 Ibid 23: 30; of Norm Chron (Heliot,, 35; Beziers, Mem 221-225 The garmon numbered at least 200 men at arms and 50 crossbowmen (Rot Norm, Hardy, 151 iq.).

* Ibid. 253, 164, 167, Rym. in 493, The Lav. 40, Vita, 114, 216; Wals, is, 223

* Rot Norm (Hardy), 120, Delale, Baille, 40, 19, Peart 314, Postel 47, 221

He was lord of the major of Ashton under Lyne (Baines, Lanc. 8, 444, and had been made a length of the Bath in 1799 (hangsfort) Chron. 48) 11 Carel, 164, 171, 176, 298, 301, 305, 316, 312; Rot. Norm. Hardy), 118;

Brequigny, 14.

28 Rym. 21. 5415 Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 2 ja.

Rym. in. 330, 512, 675; Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 219, 3713 Perul, 76, 124.
 Rym. in. 304; Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 117.

CHAPTER LII

CONQUEST IN LOWER NORMANDY

Having appointed Gilbert Umfraville captum of the town, Henry left Cacnon Oct. 1. On Oct. 2 and 3 he was at 5t Pierresur-Dives², where he had news of the capitulation of the castle of Courty³: on the next day he was at Trun⁴, and by Oct. 5 he was before the strong fortress of Argentan. The townsfolk made no stand, but offered terms as soon as the English appeared³. All the inhabitants might have stayed and occupied their homes in peace, but 500 burgesses preferred to emigrate to Brittany, Anjou, or Maine.

It needed no long experience to convince the Normans that they were being abandoned to their fate, and they had no wish for a carrage such as had just failen on the people of Caen? They knew that the duke of Burgundy, then the triumphant man in France, was really allied with the English⁸; they saw that there was a prospect of just treatment under the English king, and that trixation would be lighter⁸; and so, in spite of a considerable number of irreconcilables, the bulk of them decided to submit, and if they did not (as an English chronicler asserts)¹⁰ flock in with hoisterous delight, they no doubt saw where their interest lay. The king entered Argentan on Oct. 9¹¹, and the next few days were spent in arranging the capitulation of the castles of Chailloué¹², Exmes¹³, Laigle¹⁴, Chambois¹⁵, O¹⁶, and others, together with the town of Essay¹⁷. At the populous city of Sées, with its noble

```
* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 159, Th. Liv. 43, Vita, 1.9

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 172, 173.

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 174

* Tit. Liv. 43; Vita, 119, 120; Cagny, 110; Jov. 514.

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 175; Lechandé d'Anny, 230, Paneux, Emigr. 18

* St. Denya, va. 160; Blondel, 2. 35, 229.

* Jav. 533.

* Tit. Liv. 43

* Daimux, Emigr. 92:

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 276; Caumont, Journal, 302

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), 277.

* Ibid. 106; Rym. in 502

* At Mortrée, near Alencon, Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 178

* Ibid. 160; Gena, 1.6; Gall. Chint. 22, 743

* With
```

cathedral and other important ecclesiastical foundationssome of which had been negotiating before the ling ish arrived -the fortified abbey of St Martin made a show of resistance, but this was not long traintained, and the abbot came in for the same favourable treatment as his fellows elsewhere. On Oct. 20 arrangements were in progress for the bishop to make his submission?, and by the spring he had been restored to the enjoyment of his temporal possessions and spiritual jurisdiction³, though his ecclesiastical court was transferred to Fainse⁴. A notable exception to the general attitude was afforded by the Cistercian abbey of La Trappe, at Solighy, the abbot of which, though a safe-conduct was issued on New to for him to come and confert, took to flight and was treated as a rebel. One of the monks, however, was pluble enough to be considered safe, and to him the belengings of the abbey were entrusted on Feb. 1, 14194. Meanwhile the lasty were 'strik if at all behind. hand, and lists of submissions received between Oct. 24 and 267 seem to show that they came in faster than they could be dealt with.

From Argentan the army moved on to Alencon, where the king arrived on Oct. 15% and dated documents indicate his presence. in the care p or the castle there till the beginning of December¹. The for if cations of both the town and the eastle were of quite exceptional strength 10, but although the place was well supposed. with all requisites for sustaining a prolonged siege11, yet even before Henry arrived on the ground still known as the King's Field¹², the now fami iar colloquies had begun, and as a result the English were admitted on Oct. 21, not a blow having been struck¹⁸. Meanwhile the Engl sh were rapidly extending their. hold on the region to the east of the main advance, and by the end of the month they were in possession of Verneusl and Mortagne¹⁴. The fall of Alençon, moreover, was followed by

* R. v. Soren (Hardy), 184, 196, 239, Bym. 18, 204, Gall. Chrot. 18, 598.
* Rets. 11, 174, 184, L. Howener, 11, 246.
* Courses Stat. 89. * Rot. Norm. (Fardy), 196, Rym. 18, 309.

Rot. Norm (Hardy), 242; Befougny, 265
Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 347-350.
Tit Lav. 44; Vita, 122.
For documents dated before or in Alencon, and Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 184-417)

Genta, r a a | For Aceta, 57 E, Hint MSS, Rept. 19 459 M Tit Liv 44 Vita, 123

M Odolant-Demos, 1 4, L Hommer in 155 11 Cagny 113

Rot. Norm (Hardy), 175, 195, 334, 151, 352, Rym. in. 501, 309, 451; Tit. Lav. 46, V to 120; Bréquigny, 206; D K.R. no. 686

M Cagny, a a a , and the But Norm (Handy), alle, it propagage, Int Lore 44.

a rapid push southward, which speed ly gave them Beaumontle-Vs. ornte, Dangeul, Nouans, and Beileme¹. Indeed the whole domain of the dukes of Alençon was reduced to subjection in less than fifteen days*.

The young duke, John II, was only eight years of age. After his father's death at Agincourt, he had been removed from Argentan to join the party of the Armagnacs, with whom the late duke had been so closely identified. His mother Marie, who was at Il only twenty-six, was the eldest daughter of Queen Joan, the widow of Heary IV, and the sister therefore of the duke of Brittany. Whether this relationship had any connection with the events that followed is only matter for guessing, but it is certain that the duke of Britiany had already expressed a desire for a meeting with the invader, and no sooner had Alençon. surrendered than a sate-conduct was issued guaranteeing him. free access to King Henry at any time pefore Oct. 272.

The duke of Britishy has received great praise for keeping his lands out of the range of the disastrous conflict that devastated all the rest of northern France and security for his people a period of steady progress while his neighbours were a prey to destruction; but the trimming, whereby this restful time was gained, was far from high souled or chivalrous, and while the duke was regarded with irritation by his relatives in England, he was no favourite with his neighbours in France. Nine years before he had made a treaty with the late duke of Alençon, but the friendship of his ally turned afterwards to undisguised contempts. His absence from the field of Agincourt was certainly only part of an understanding with the duke of Burgundy which developed later into a direct treaty of alliance, according to which they were to be brothers in arms, in honours, is prerogatives, and in profits! By King Henry he was regarded with special dislike?, and the enmity between England and Brittany was naturally not abated when he issued letters of marque authorising Breton ships to prey upon English trade. But circumstances had changed, and the

Odolant Demos, 1, 461

Blanchard, ü. 106.

Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 191, 194, 1013 Tit. Liv. 45; Kingeford, Lit. 347; Stut; ii. 344.

Cagny on out
 Ric Norm (Hardy) x15, Hyrn in 303
 For a farmanable convergencery opinion of him, see St Denys, vs. 32, for an unfavourable our, see Bloudel, Radgerin, 17 sinuter alliance with the duke of Burgundy had led him to seek an interview with Henry in the previous spring. A safe-conduct, dated April 13 1417, had authorised him to cross to England with a large following of bishops, counts, parons and knights:; many I ng ish lords had been summoned to Reading to arrange a ceremonial reception for him"; and four English ships had been sent to bring him from St Malo to Southampton3. The visit is referred to by no contemporary annalist, English or Breton, and there is no trace of it in the published itinerary of the duke. One might conclude therefore that it never actually took place were it not that entires in the Issue Rolls record payments of expenses for the dake's voyage to hing and, at is, however, improbable that he got further than Southampton, and what passed between him ato. Henry is who ly unknown.

Levon Feb. 18, 1417, Blanchard, Introd. p. exxis, no. 12333 cf. ibid. no. 1316 and Iun 431,432 ² Junde, 329.

Whatever his previous relations with the king may have been, he was evidently in a suspicious temper when negotiations, as we have seen, were resumed, for he refused to avail himself of his safe-conduct until a supplementary document had been issued containing a specific command to Henry's "alies" that no harm was to be done to the duke's lands while he was away. Before October was out, however, he arrived at Alencon with a large retinue?. Valuable presents were exchanged*, but all accounts agree that Henry was in no hurry to get to business. When at length an interview was arranged and the duke knelt on entering the king's presence, it was noticed that it was some. time before Henry motioned him to rise. Nevertheless, a truce was signed in the cast e of Alercon on Nov. 15, 1417, to last till Michaelnias, 14 1819. It was expressly stated to have been brought about by the influence of Queen Joan. Henry agreed not to molest the duke or his lands or to suffer anyone eise to do so, while the dake on his part would see that his subjects abstained from all acts of war against the English, an undertaking which Frenchmen rightly interpreted as dislovally to

Rym. 18, 446, Money, i. 45a.

For paymentato messengers to them, me Im. Roll . Hest. V. Mach . March els. 419-Iss. Roll 5 Hen V, Pasch , May 25, 1419, ited 6 Hen V, Pasch , Sept. 27, 1418

By Bunchard, Introd. pp. exix sqq
 In Iss. Rod 6 Hen. V. Paschi, Sept. 27, 1418, here are entrae of payments to priots. (lodernami) for bringing tim from St Malo to Southampton "ad presentain sego."

On Oct. 27, 1417, Rym. 22, 306, Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 189. Blanthard, no. 1244; of Lobinesus s. 513, 11, 915.

^{*} Ibid if 922; Vilag cay

* Rym in Cit. 6, Rot Norm Hurry and 214 In lay 45 During the duken stay at Alengon his expenses were borne by the English purse.

his sovereign, even though he never admitted that he had actually become an ally of England! At the same time he negoriated a similar agreement? on behalf of Yolande, duchess of Anjou, as guardian of her young son Louis, who had just succeeded to the dukedom at fourteen years of age. Very soon atter his father's death he had been contracted in marriage to the duke of Brittany's eldest daughter [sabel3; but Youande's policy a remarkable, for her daughter Marie was betrothed to the new dauphin Charles, who was closely identified with the interests of the Armagnacs. Her husband however, had course led reconciliation on his death-bed, and indeed the French king had given her permission to negotiate with the invader with the object of securing her son's possessions from molestation4. As for Henry, glad no doubt to secure the neutrality of a powerful opponent on the southern contines of his conquests, he agreed to abstain from any further atrack upon Amou and Maine. One curious result of these agreements was that Henry and his troops henceforth enjoyed a steady supply. of tresh lamprevs from Nantes6, but fresh lampreys were as nothing compared with the freedom he secured for a movement east to strike at the heart of all remaining oppositions.

The autumn, however, was over, and according to the military practice of the time Henry should have put his men into warm quarters and spent the winter months in preparing for a spring campaign. Such a course was the more advisable as his army, small as it was at first, had been diminished as each capture drew off a substantial portion to act as garrison, while desertions which had been numerous since the very landing, were still being reported daily even after the fall of Caen?. But the great rock fortress of Falaise still remained uncaptured, and thither, in his unresting zea. Henry despatched the army. The

1 Jur. 534, 538. * Rym. iz. 513; Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 212.
Do July 3, 1419 (Blanchard, 200. 1444, 1193) Morses, 1. 463) The macroge never took place.

7 Ibid. 229.

⁴ On Nov. 20, 2417 (Morros, 2, 4643 Russer, 21, 75, R. 279, Connexu, Countitable, 50). Yakande was very much an earnest: her envoys arrived within a few days to arrarge details. Rrm. 12, 242, Ret. Norm., Hardy. 214, and the pledged all her saids to the duke of Britishy as recursty for her full performance of her said of he harges (Ramet, 18, 74). In some quarrent in France the was applicated for acting upon sound advise (application) set Denys, vi. 262).

^{*} Rum 11, 644, Rox hore; (Hardy), 244

* Frendly negotiations with Britany and Arijon continued (Rym. 12, 150, Rot. Horm., Hardy, 107).

earl of Salisbury, who was sent in advance to prevent the inhabitants from icaying the town, had some sharp fights before the main force arrived. On Dec. 1 Henry took up his quarters before the gate on the road to Caena. On his right at Guibraya was the duke of Gloucester, while the duke of Clarence faced the eastle on the north? The town of halaise, with its walls and towers and the majestic castle on the cliff, was redolent of the story of Duke Waliam the Baytard and his mother Arlette, who dwe t at the tannery on the Arte in the valley below. All the chances were in favour of the besieged had there been any hope of ultimate relief. The eastle and the projecting rock were practically impregnable, and the winter was setting in with exceptional severity. Moreover, the garrison was heartened by the presence of many refugees from Caen and other places, who were resolved to make a desperate resistance. But Henry was und smayed. He put up huts made of logs bound with withies and rooted with tuif, and his force was thus shielded from the worst rigours of the weather. He treached his camp and fenced it with a palicate. Then, having secured an ample supply of good provisions, he sat down with the fixed reso ve to starve the Frenchmen out. Again and again they sallied forth to break the blockage, but the Firg ish were more than ready for them, and each time they fe I back builled. Within the detences the ground was frozen hard, and hailstorms brought torrents of discomport, while the guns played on the becken roofs and walls from the high ground of Gu bray. Some of the gun stones, four dan the most, are startling in their enormous sizes, and it is no wender that the clock-tower, the conduits, churches, and houses, crushed under them as they feith. Then came the inevitable disheartenment and disumon, and in spite of the determination of Olivier de Mauny®, who was charged with the defence of the place, resistance grew feebler when the walls were breached, and it was not long before negotiations for

1 Tit Lev 46, Rot Norm. (Hardy), 227.

Caleron, 25, 66, Statistique, 1. 5, 8. Norm. Chron. (Hellot). 31

Tit flor 46 Aust, 24

Californ that #86. Three which lay at the castle entrance in 1904 each measured.

about a.R. in diameter.

⁴ For repairs to walk, click and conducts see Remote 464, Galeron, Stat. i. 84. See also hid a 190 for the destruction of the somer and have of the church of the Limitary. The many was exhibit to east abid a group 1. The funy of the formhandment meres to have impressed itself on contemporary opinion (cf. Wale is 327, ht denys.

drawn up by which it was agreed that the town should yield if no renet came by the morning of Jan. 2. Refugees from places previously captured by the linglish were to be at the kinglish moreur. Linguish prisoners held in the town were to be freely released, the town garrison were to depart, leaving behind their bows and artillery, and in the meantime everything in the town should as far as possible be left as it was. It was expressly supurated that, save for the release of the prisoners, the castle was not to be considered as included in the compact. No help came within the appointed time, and after spending Christmas in the camp, the king entered halaise on Jan. 2, 2418, and soon afterwards took up his quarters within the town.

His energy was now deveted to the regultion of the castle. the position of the two sides being henceforth reversed, for the English had to attack from the lower ground, and their guns could make no impression on the castle walls, which lowered high out of effective range. Mining was I kewise use ess, for the castle rested on the soud rock. So the attalkers bridged the most on the town side, pushed up shelters to the foot of the walls, and set to work with pick and hammer to loosen the bottom course of stones, creeping into the base of the walls after one or two stones had been removed and working away in the shelter thus secured until they had enlarged the breach to a width of forty yards. The hes eged, inspired by Olivier de-Mauny, made a gallant defence, lowering lighted faggots on Chains to smoke our the English at their work; but the attackers unbooked and extinguished the faggists and persisted in their undertaking. I inding themselves outmatched at all points, the garrison beat a parley and on Feb. 1 agreed to surrencer if any relieved within afreen days? Accordingly, the English were admitted to the castle on Feb. 164, and all

* The French however, but made some consumos for poors what the ongressas penmeding (Champouters-Figure, Le tres, ii 362)

If Liv along initial our main au hierty supplemented at before by Vitta 17, 100;
 Rot Storm. Hardy, 401, 512, 157, Ging , Chron. 148, Kingsfield, Chron. 2.2.
 For a document dates in the carrie at 5 attime on Feb. 16, use Rym. 18, 244. Acrong

The foregoing narrative is based mainly on Layton (46 eqq.), who gives by far the best account of the steps. The Vita Herital (129 eqq.) follows him closely, but adde one or two details of inserest.

Rot. Norm. (Handy), 312 eqq.

[•] For a document dater in the carrie at 1 aimse on Feb. 16, we Rym 18, 244. Aroung those who stouchout in the last was a Newtonian, Edward as 4 reflect, who reflect to the resident with the town and kept up the fight in the caster. He was tried found goety, and executed, his body was quarrered and the pieces were ten to be fixed on the gates of Corn, Lunius, Admiron, and Sericus, that Posem a Hardy, 1644 Lucha odd d Analy in 1643.

resistance was at an end. Confrary to the usual custom O ivier. de Mauny and the garr, son were retained as prisoners1, though six days after the surrender he received a safe conduct to proceed to Paris, on the understanding that he would be back by April 22. On March 24, 1418, the king restored a lithe unceent privileges of the town?, and soon afterwards? made grants from the proceeds of the salt-tax to pay for repairing damage wrought to the walls and towers during the siege, subsequently sanction ing the levy of a tax on wine, beer, cider, and other drinks for the same purpose. To strengthen the defences he extended some poors that the besieged had dug at the southern base of the cliff, and one of these exists as a horse-pord to this day! The late captain received his liberty on June 28, 1418, by which time he had taken a vigorous part in repairing the difches and walls of the castle, according to one of the terms of the capitulation?.

By the end of February the king was back at Caena; but he soon moved to Bayeux*. Contemporary writers assert that this visit to the cathedral city was for the purpose of prayer, fasting and Lenten devotion16, but though this motive may have had a sunfluence, more workely considerations were as usual uppermost. Heary, in fact, wished to keep in touch with important military operations that were taking place towards the west.

On Oct. 1 Gilbert Talbot had been appointed captaingeneral of the Marches of Normandy¹¹ a term which apparently meant the region or the right flank of the main Finglish advance. Some time in the winter he led a raid into the Corentin with too or 600 men. As they returned they were overtaken by the tide while attempting to cross the pay of Les Veys opposite Isigny, get entangled in the shift ng sands, and though by hard

* Bot North (Hardy), joy; Tit Liv op . * Rot North (Hardy ; 1); * Brêquigny, 67; Galeron, Stat. 1. 29. For a detailed nanoment of them, dated April 11, 1418, see Brequigny, 15.

* In May, 1418 (Rym ix 519, Caumont, Jouenal, 207; Vautier, 27)

On April 3, 1419 (Brequignly, 67).

The Liv 46, Vita. 23, Galeron, Stat 1 60. The great round invest which is now the most striking feature of the 10 fe to m, dates in m the English nor upation of the next their years. Its name recalls the great lean Talbot, who sewer decorates the wash of some of the mores and reports their hapel of St. Prix in the kery. If reeman, it is 7%, Galeron, 30, 31, 38; D. Farner 11, 268; Ducheme, Antiquiter, 31, 306) fighting they escaped from the plunderers who swarmed out of Carentan to harass their retreat, they suffered some loss of life and were compelled to abandon their baggage¹. It was probably because of this incident that Talbot was relieved of his post on Jan. 28. Soon afterwards, however, the duke of Gloucester was sent west with a considerable force, and surrenders followed wherever his troops appeared. Vire capituated on Feb. 213 By March 10 the castle of Hambye had surrendered4, the town of St Lo followed on the 12th6 Hour days later they were followed by Le Hommet⁴, Carentan⁷, and Coutances, the last falling to the earl of Huntingdon, who had been specially commissioned to operate in that region. St Sauveur-le-Vicomte submitted on March 25, Pont d'Ouve two days afterwards10, and about the same time a similar fate befell the castles of Torigny-1, Valognes12, Bricquebec13, Néhou14, and La Haye du Puits¹⁸. Avranches, Pontorson, and other places in the vicinity had been occupied by April 1618. About this time Henry went back to Caen¹⁷.

Brequigny, 208; Galeron, Stat t. 94; Rot. Norm (Hardy), 309; Jav. 538.
For documents duted at Cann, Fab. 24-18, are Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 154; Chane. Rot Norm (Hardy), 262. B Rot Norm (Hardy), 171. Warr., Ser 1, 1364/45 24 Tie Liv. 50; Vita, 165.

[Nearly all Lower Normandy was now in English hands, and Henry had shown that he meant to act, not as a foreign conqueror, but as the kindly lord of territory that was lawfully his. Civil government was already working in the way familiar to the Normans. By the time that Henry set out on his summer campaign there were four English ballas-John Popham for Czen¹⁸, Ro and Lenthall for Alençon¹⁹, John Ashton for the Cotentined, and John Radeliffe for Evreux21. These builtages were divided into fourteen transfer, all, or nearly all, of which

Norm. Chron (Williams) 180, (Heliot) 313 Adam of Usk, 231.

* Rot Norm. (Hardy), 373 Ibid 189.

* Rym. x 553. It is near Gavray (Manche). On March 13 it was granted to the earl of Suffolk (Rot. Norm., Hardy, 319) 1bid 298 sqq * Bym. at. 555. On March 29 it was greated to Edward count of Mornia (Betquigny, so).

7 Rot Norm. (Hardy), 100 sqq

* Ibid. 196 1994 38a 19

PRot Norm. (maray), por any Rym at 565; Gests, 120; Delide, 248, 334. 10 Rym IX 566 14 Tit Liv 50; North Chron 188

22 Tet Lov 30; Vita, 142. It was granted to the earl of Suffolk (Rot Norm., Hardy, M Tit Liv go; Geita, 120 216).

28 Granted to John Cheyne (Bréquigny, 22).

18 D.K.R. zli passim; Vita, 16 5.

Appointed Dec. 14, 1417, Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 231 19.

Appointed March 8, 1418, ibid 278 19

Appointed March 14, 1418, Bréquigny, 61.

Appointed May 1, 14 if, some weeks before the town was taken (D.K.R xls. 713).

were administered by Normans!. The central government of the conquered area was provided for by the appointment of Philip Morgan as chancellor and the establishment of a chambre des compies at Caen, with John Tiptoft as president³.

Henry was manifestly anxious to reconcile the Normans to their changed iot. On April 12 a general pardon was offered to all whose annual sncome was under , 60 a year, provided that they took the oath of allegance before June 1. For a fee of 10st, a ivone might get a scaled ticket test tring to his submission; even escaped prisoners were to have the full benefit of the offer! During the winter and spring many religious houses received back their temporalities. Henry, indeed, was slow to bestow Norman estates, whether clerical or lay, on his followers. Towards the end of the winter, however, grants of land to Englishmen begin to appear frequently in the Norman rolls, though before May 1 their number was only about forty. The calendar of Norman to Ic in the 41st and 42nd reports of the Deputy-keeper of the Public Records to la to indicate the most important part of each grant, and has given the impression that the Englishmen who received lands commonly owed nothing in return save some trivial object like a dagger, a pole axe, a belt, or a hawg. In point of fact, however, those whose property included a castle were usually required to man if adequate v², while others were generally last under the obligation of defending some neighbouring stronghold or town at their own expense with all their available men whenever they were called upon to do so". Later it was usually stipulated in addition that the recipient of a grant of land should serve in the field when required with a certain number of men-at-arms and archers, so that Henry was provided with a force which cost the Treasury nothing and could be used either for the defence

L. D. K. R. Eli. 716 et passart. Rym IX. 321 See twice: P. 110. The early arrangements for the government of the Engink conquests are in many respects obscure. On this subject De Wyae left no material that could be usefuland derained examination in best deterred until a can be made in the light of Henry's final adjustment of Norman administration.

Rym 1x 571 4 Ibed passers.

* Rot. Norm (Hardy), passirs; D.K.R. tli, passirs.

Feg. Rot. Norm & Efen. V, p. 1, mm. 31, 33, 35, 40

Rot. Norm (Hardy) and Rot. Norm: & Hers. V, passire. "High Justice" was reserved by the king except in the case of one or two great men such as the duke of Clarence (Rot. Norm., Hardy, 318) or John Gary (ibid. 281). Frenchmen who received back their lands had at a rule to render merely the customary services.

 This previou appears once or twice in grants prior to May 1, 1418 (Rot. Norm. Mardy, 319 sq.; Rot. Norm. 6 Hen. V, p. 1, m. 13), but so yet it was rase.

of Normandy or for the reinforcement of the army with which he was prosecuting his conquests.

Henry's reluctance to dispose of the lands he had conquered. was doubtless due to his hope that the entire population of Normandy would accept his rule, and as an additional inducement he announced, early in May, an important modification of the unpopular pabelle or salt-tax. Henceforth there were to be no salt-garners save those of the government. All salt imported into Normandy was to be taken to one or other of these, where a tax of 2 c per cent, ad valorem would be exacted from purchasers. This was no abolition of the gabetle, as some have described it, but it greatly reduced the tax, which had been to or even 75 per cent, and, what was even more important, once the tax had been raid the salt might be freely sold at whatever price it would fetch. Most welcome of all, however, was the removal of the obligation to buy a certain quantity of salt every three months whether one wanted it or not. It may be doubted, nevertheless, whether the Normans considered the reform sufficient to warrant the grandiloquent contrast between the tyrannous Charles and the benevolent Henry which was drawn in the proclamation announcing it.]

While King Henry was at Caen, he was visited by Vincent Ferrer, the famous sain, preacher, and reformer. Vincent had been at Constance, and had then moved westward across brance in response to letters of the duke of Brittany, who had invited the holy man to come and instruct him and his subjects. He entered Brittany in February, 1418, and hepan what proved to be his last evangelistic tour. In April he arrived at kennes, and while he was there a herald came bearing an invitation for him to visit King Henry in Normandy. The invitation was accepted, and it is calculated that he was at Caen for some time after May 4, 1418. Only two English chroniclets me ation his visit to Henry, and one of these says that it occurred during the siege of Rocens; but circumstantial details are supplied by witnesses who gave evidence at the enquiry heid with a view to his canonisation, which took place in 1455. The saint preached Rem in (Rasc). For the quivile, see Viollet, Institutions, in 45th Péroset, 91 98.

 Le Mené, Diocèse, i. 357, Fages, si. 207 sq.; Blanchard, nos. 1272-43 Lobineau, fixints, si. 245.

^{*} Ramme, 480.
* Moudlard, 41) Blanchard, Vincent, 385
* Overbourne, 280, First Life, 230 199.

before the king, performed a notable miracle in his presence, and, t is said, predicted the death of the count of Armagnac, which happened in June1. [The writer of the "F rst English Life of Henry V" has an interesting account2, which he gives on the authority of the earl of Ormonde, and which ought not to be wholly discredited by the fact that he makes Vincent's visit an episode in the siege of Rouen. He says that Vincent came uninvited and preached before the king with "maruelous audacitie,' denouncing him for destroying "even Christians that had not offended him. 'The king heard him quiet y to the end, but afterwards, summoning Vincent to his presence, declared himself to be the scourge of God, sent to punish God's people for their sins. He then conversed with the friar alone for two or three hours. As Vincent passed through the hal on leaving, he spoke to those who were present, among them some of the chief English captains, and exhorted them to serve the king well; for, so far from being the tyrant Vincent had supposed him, he was the best man present that day, and his quarrel was so just and true that undoubtedly God was with him. It is difficult to believe that there is no truth in this story, but one's attitude towards it must depend on one's general view of the credibility of those passages in the "First English Life" which are derived from the earl of Ormondes. The saintly and (it appears) rather guileless Vincent returned to Brittany, where in less than a year he died.]

Fages, 13, 216 sq., 218 sq., 226, 246 sq., Moutilard, 203, 226 Otterbourne, 280. * Pages 130 sqq. * On this see App. Z*.

CHAPTER LIII

CIVIL STRIFE IN FRANCE

Where Henry was working out his comparatively easy task in Normandy, his work elsewhere was being done for him by the French themselves. Warnings of the coming invision had certainly reached Paris more than five months before Henry lander, but instead of preparing resistance on the coast the French directed their efforts to strengthening the defences of the capital and taking other measures to enable it to stand a steges, the energy they really had in mind being not the English. but the duke of Bargundya. Erightful lawlessness prevailed. throughout the land. Life and property were unsafe in town and country alike, and brigards made travelling almost impossible.

The king had sunk into incurable decay4. After the death of the daugh in Louis in December, 1415, all intrigues had as their object the capture and control of the new cauphin John. For the moment the game was in the hands of the duke of Burguney, who had the rine points of possession. The boy was barely eighteen, yet for ten years he had been kept eway from France and brought up in Hamault under the eye of the dake's sister Margaret, who had just mar ied him to her only daughter Jacqueline. In the autumn of 14 6 the Council, which the death of the duce of Berry had left under the influence. of the dake of Anjou, summoned the new heir to come to Paris without the duke of Burgundy*, and an effort at reconcil attenwas made, the mediators being the count of Holland and the duke of Britishy, the former as a friend of France and the father of the daughts's wife and the latter as a friend of both Burgunds and Anjou. The duke of Burgundy showed himself

[Le Moyen Age, ner. 11, 12. 31 no.]
 Ordonnanon, 2. 407, 420 sq., Douet d Areq. 1. 390, St. Denys, vi. 14, 36.
 Monstr. iii. 204 sq., 207 sq.; Le Férre, i. 307, Léber, l. 276. [Cf. Le Moyen Age.]

The was apparently in November (Mossier in. c6.)

mer at Mr. 311 april 1 are Dodu, and apply the most second discussion of the

but I tile disposed towards peace, and Anjou retired to Angers. about Christmas!. The count of Holland, however, showed some independence, refused, not for the first time, to hand over the dauphin to the duke, and, with the latter's consent, took the dauphin and Jacqueline towards Paris². Great caution was observed by all parties. For many weeks the count's company lay at Complègne, whence they treated with Queen Isabel, who had come as far as Senlis. No progress, however, was made; and a visit of the count's to Paris in the hope of accelerating an agreement was abruptly terminated owing, as he said, to the discovery of a plot against his freedom. On his return to Complègne he found the dauphin grievously sick of a mysterio is ailment, and a few days later, on April 4, 44 t.73. he died. It was asserted and widely believed that he had been poisoned by the Armagnacs. The truth of the marter seems unattainable, what is certain is that the accusation exacerbated party feeling, already bitter enough. To make the prospects of peace still worse, if that was possible, the count of Holland died a few weeks later at Bouchain in consequence of a bite of a dog* The duke of Burgundy visited him on his death bed and was accused of having poisoned him.

The duke had already begun reprisals for the death of the dauphin. In most of the towns of northern France his partisans were getting the upper hand, for as the exactions of the Armagnacs increased the townsmen turned to him for relief. On April 25, 14176, he issued a manifesto to his supporters at Rouen, charging the Armagnacs with having poisoned the dauphin, likening them to Judas, and declaring that he would relieve the country of taxes and recover her liberty. Letters in the same strain were sent to Amiens, Auxerre, Chilons, Rheims, and Troyes?, while his followers roamed at will through Champagne, Burgundy, Picardy, and Brief. The duke pushed his

Se Denni, er 50

Monstr. 11i. 166; D. Sauvage, 247; Barante, id. 190; Moroumi 11. 120
 31 Denys, 11. 15; Monstr. 11. 168; Marest, 29; D. Sauvage, 248, Paradia, Bourgogne, 605, Leher, 273.

4 On May 10. Dynier, ili. 342; Monser, ili. 173; Impens, 358; Zantibet, 408, lita, 433; Monur iii. 203 sqq.; Cordeliers, 234.

Bi Denya, vi. 74, Jun 531, Monter til. 184 199. For fuel text, me D. Godefroy, Charles VI, 67 9.

St Denys, vi. 784 Jun. 533.
 St Denys, vi. 64.

preparations forward while negotiating a marriage between the widowed Jacquesine and his nephew the duke of Brabant. The Fiemish towns granted him 100,000 gold crowns¹, he hired 20,000 men from Savoya; and about the time when Henry landed at Touques he marched westward from Arras at the head of more than 30,000 aghang men?. At Arriens, Beauvais, and Senlist he was turnu tuously welcomed. Resistance was first encountered at the bridge over the Oise at Beaumont, but on Sept. 4 the place was reduced, owing partly to the treachery. of the lord of L'Isle Adam, and the duke thus secured one of the main approaches to Paris from the north. Six days later Portone feil. The army then crossed the Seine by the bridge at Meulan. The dake's purpose was to starve Paris into submustion, and he speedily captured Mantes, Versalies, and Monill drys. For some time the Armagnacs were content to remain behird the walls, and refused to make a sorite even when the Burgundians occupied St Cloud, Vaugirard, and Chitiston, and the dake set up his standard on the heights of Montrouge⁷. The many partisans of Burgundy in the city were kept under strict control and given no opportunity of siding the besiegers". Food, however, became very ucar, and the anxieties of the authorities must have been increased by a despairing appeal for help from Caen to which they could only reply by barren exhortations to courage. Nevertheless on Sept. 30 the Armagnaes plucked up heart and captured the bridge at Beaumont-size-Oise 4 an event which greatly dished the spirits of the Burgundians, already depressed by the delay before the capital. An attack of the Burgundians on the bridge over the Seine at St Cloud was foiled, and breaking up from there they tried to secure the bridge at Corbeil and thus to stop the transport of supplies to Paris from the east 11. But here again they failed and the duxe, fearing that his army would melt away. under the rigours of winter18, was contemplating retreat when he was offered an unexpected chance of retrieving his fortunes.

4 Roye, 1721 J. Meyer, 252. * Trahmon de France, 131.

Flancher, ill 472-475, 390-595 Monstr ill 194, 109, 21.; Le Fèvre, i. 298, 300, 309, 310; Cordellers, 235, St Denys, vs. de, 66, fort agg; Flammermont, 200; Thierry, ii. 70.

St Denys, vi. 114; fixe, agg. St Denys, vi. 1244 lon. 436.

3t Decime of 1144 final 434.

" St Deays, ste a ju-" 1516. 13.119 · Bird suf to Third 236 Constitute of 51 Cordeliers, 2424 Degrees, 496 II Mange, at. 216; Commot, 266; Roarlet, 160; Trebinous, 234.

The troubles of the time, which had driven the government to exact rumous taxes and forced loans and even to strip the shrine of St Louis of its gold and jewels1, had wrought no abatement in the unury and extravagance of the court, where the profligacy of Queen Isabel became more and more scandalous. She had long ceased to live with her husband, who had taken a violent dislace to her and comforted himself with Oud ne or Odette de Champdivers - a harmless and colourless creature very different from the romantic herome that moder i imagination has made of her. Though forty-seven years old, the queen became increasingly the slave of pleasure, till at length the long became for a momen realous of his honour, ordered the arrest of Louis Bostedon, master of the gueen's household and reputed to be one of her lovers, and a few days later had him fied up in a sack and thrown into the Seine. It was thought advisable to send the queen away, and about the end of May, 14172, she was removed first to the castle of Blois and then to that of Tours?, where she was cut off from all chance of interfering with the government, no letters being allowed to reach her, and lived, as she said, "in great misery and displeasure"." Vast sums of money which she had amassed and much of her jewellery and other property were seized by the government! Hitherto Isabel had cordially hated the duke of Burgundy, but desire for revenge now led he, to send him an offer of co-operation against a common enemy? The duke, who was then at Chartres medicating a withdrawal from before Paris, eagerly accepted the alliance, and a well laid scheme resulted in his rescuing Isabel from her guards at the abbey of Marmoutier, just outside Tours, as she was hearing Mass there on Al Souls' day. A secret understanding was at once signed, and the duke returned to Chartres, where the queen joined him? While the duke had been passing along the valley

* Bourgeois, 78. * Jun 513, 537; La Fèrre, l. 242; Monstr 10. 176

Monete: Bis 827 sqq.

* Ordonzancia, z. 447, Jur. 537; Vailet de Viriville, t. 74

Ium 4163 La Fèvre, 1. 327.

Ordennances, 7, 437; St Denys, vi. 224, 226, Jun 333, Bossiot, 11, 350. The monte of 5t Dens, moreover had to pain their reises and self-nor had their tiessure 15 ander to mise 3000 crowns destanded by the government; they also thought it wise to hide the great shame moloung the body of St Deam (St Denys, vi. 48).

<sup>Ordennances, z. 424, 417, Bouttot, li. 362, Cousinot, 164.
Ibid. 164, Pétegny, 130; Vallet de Viriville, Isab. 237
Si Denys, vi. 140; Belieforest, Chron. 122; Thibault, 426.</sup>

of the Loir, he had been on the very flank of the English force. that was operating against the fortresses of Maine, but he gave no aign of any desire to resist it; and while he was at Chartres af er his return, his ally the duke of Brittany was making terms with Flenry at Alençon, some sixty miles away.

The duke now appeared again before Paris, having reason to expect that the gates would be opened to him by his partisans in the town. The plot, however, had been discovered and stamped out1, and the bishop of Paris excommunicated the duke at Notre Dame on the very day when he had hoped to enter the city. It is true that the plight of Paris was bad, despite plundering raids in the neighbourhood by the Armaghats!; but the duke of Burgundy, despairing of speedy success, moved eastward in December, and, accompanied by the queen, entered Troyes two days before Christmas*.

At Chartres Isabel had issued a manifesto ar nouncing that the took upon herself the regency of France and that she would support the duke of Burgundy in his effort to save the country! She set up a high court at Amiens to take the place of the Parlement of Paris for the buildinges of Amiens, Vermandois, Senlis, and Tournay, and for Ponthieus, and as money began to come in, there seemed some hope of the establishment of a settled government. At Iroyes the queen continued her attempt to capture all political authority. She issued an ordinance discussing the Parlement of Paris, and created a substitute of her own, the officers of which were all to be appointed by herself. She made the duke of Burgundy governor of the kingdom, and bestowed the office of constable on Charles duke of Lorraine". She was visited by ambassadors from Hainau to and Bentany to and even from the kings of Castile 11 and Portugal 19. Her most notable triumphs, however,

Juv. 537 iq., Monate. iii. 237 aq., Le Fèvre, i. 328; Denfie, Chart. iv. 327. Douët. d'Areq. 1 193

Ordonnahoes, z. 4:8; St Denys, vi. 156; Benucourt, t. 27; Feltbien, iv. 574; Denifie, Chart. iv. 132 * St Denys. vi. 142, Hourgeois, Io. 21

Itin 437; Gechard, 238.

a seed with the queen's effigy. For the seal, see Pasquier, 59, Thierry, s. 77

⁷ Ordomnanos, x 436 442 Plancher in pp cecis alle, alle, Gachard, alle, Boutiot, ii 374, 379

¹⁰ Itin. 439-Iun 432 Gachard, 232.

¹⁴ On Jan. 18, 2418 (ibid. 438). 18 March 24, 1418 (ibid 439) were gained in southern France Languedoc, where the governor was John viscount of Lomagne, eldest son of the count of Armagnac, was seething with discontent on account of the heavy taxation1, and quite ready to listen to envoys from the queen advising refusal to pay. For the last year the governor had had his hands full with attempting to repel the English. who were making inroads on the western side of the province. Far down the Garoane he had been trying to expel them from La Réole. He had indeed succeeded in driving them out of the town by April 5, 1417, but they still held out in the castle, and as he was very short of both materials and men, he had to trust to the slow process of a blockade. On April 12 he wrote to A.b. for help2, and a month later, knowing that the English were looking for a rescue, he sent to Carcassonne asking for the loan of its big gun, at the same time issuing orders for the repair of the roads to let it pass? By July 7 the English had promised to submit if no help should reach them before the end of August*, and they eventually surrendered*. In the autumn, however, the new tactics of the duke of Burgundy began to brighten English prospects. From a letter written on Oct. 10, 1417, we know that a large English force was then at Puylagarde (Tarn-et-Garonne), and threatening Albi*, while another force pushed northwards across the Charente⁷, captured the castles of Montoron (Charente) and Aixe-sur-Vienne (Haute-Vienne), and plundered up to within two leagues of Limoges, where the fortincations had been allowed to fall into decay^b. It was while the governor was struggling with these dangers in the west that the emissaries of the queen entered his province from the east. They were soon followed by Louis de Chalon, eldest son of the prince of Orange, who was sent with too armed men to abolish taxation. He entered the province on April 2, 1418, and at once began a victorious progress. Very few places resisted him. He was received with joy at

¹ Vaimète, ix. 1015, 1017.

Compaynt, 263.

[&]quot; Vamete, at 1037, R. 1193; Mahul, + 356

⁴ Vamete, av 1038

⁴ Compayré, 264 Drouyn, Guienne, J. 138.

For payment to a messenger in 1437 for reporting that the English "passesent la Chareste a grant force and were coming to plant their a andards before the walls of St. Jean d Angely, see Aussy, Reg. id. 219.

Ordenzal cos I 44%

^{*} Ibid 411, 431, Compayet, 1641 Dognor, 448

Nimes, Aigues Mortes, Montpellier, and Narbonne¹ Carcassome tried to preserve neutrality2, and soon the only considerable town in the hands of the Armagnacs was Toulouse, where their position was precarious. Their last hopes vanished at the news of the slaughter of their leaders in Paris. John of Armagnac had already approached the authorities at Bordeaux, offering to do homage to the king of England in order to secure a respite on that side, and a truce between him and the lord of Albret on the one hand, and the English on the other, was concluded before Sept. 1, 14182.

For some time after the queen and the duke of Burgundy had set up their government at Troyes, it looked as if they would secure recognition throughout the country. The inevitable lack of money, however, soon made itself felt, and the ardour of the keenest Burgundians began to cool under the demands which the government at Troyes was driven to make. France again resounded with clamour for settlement and compromise. As a matter of fact, quite early in the winter negotiations had been opened between Armagnac envoys at Montereau and Burgundian envoys at Bray; but after two months' talk they could do no more than arrange that a meeting should take place at La Tombe after Easter4. In the interval an envoy of the duke of Burgundy had conferred with the earl of Warwick at Bayeux and on March 24, 1418, arranged a prolongation till Michaelmas of the truce between his master and Heary, while the duke himself left Troyes on Apr I 5 for Dijon^o, whence he moved on to Montbéliard in Franche-Comté, where towards the end of May he had a four days interview with the emperor Sigismund. Nothing is known of the political business discussed?, but it was not I kely to be to the advantage of France, seeing that Sigismund was preparing Monite 10. 146 sq., Belleforest, Chron. 323, Plancher, in. 484.

Rym. ix. 561 sqq. The true had previously been extended from Michaelman, 1417, to the following Easter (Rym. ix. 527 sq.; D.K.R. xliv. 595, 598) ltın 439; Gachard, 23$.

Dognon, 454, 477 Vamečie, ix 10.42.

Rym. 1x 597, 6153 Le Fèvre, 1 3183 Cordebers, 2604 Barante, 21 252.

Moraavillé, Entrains, 4314 St Denys, vs. 172, Le Fèvre, 1, 3243 Counnot, 1684

For documents of the dake dated at Montbéliard from May 5 to 29, and Planchar, iii 485, 492, Barante, iii 237 For documents of Sigismund dated at Mümpelgard, May as-zh, we Altmann, i. 229. It is known that many notable men were present, and that Signmund brought his heralds and his fools, one of whom tumbled and played the guster to arrive the duke (Iun. 614) Monete us. 249) to assert by force a claim to Dauphiné and other eastern provinces of France1 and intended to invade France with a large army and join Henry in Normandy2-a project which came to nothing owing to the Hussite rising in Bohemia and the hostility of some of the German princes.

Google

² On June 2, 1418, the estates of Dauphiné were ordered to assemble and to resist Signsmood (Ordonnances, x. 414).
² Rym. ex. 604, 605.
³ Lenz, 196, 200.

CHAPTER LIV

THE FATE OF OLDCASTLE

Is we judged merely from the documents printed by Rymer. in the Federa, we might suppose that on the departure of the king from Southampton the interest of Englishmen in the life of their own country was entirely suspended, for with the exception of some letters from the Council of Constance and records of the appointment of one or two bishops, what he has printed refers solely to affairs in Normandy. But a very different impression would probably have been given by a report from the duke of Bedford, who had been left behind as lieutenant, keeper, or protector of the kingdom³. Of his personal influence w we have few traces. The affairs of the nation were being smoothly. administered from Westminster Under the deputy-treasurer, William Kynwolmersh^a, money came in with complete regularity; receipts were large and domestic expenditure small, so that, notwithstanding the invasion of Normandy, the revenue for the year seems to have been sufficient to cover the out-ECINZ5³.

Nevertheless, there was an uneasy sense of danger in the? courtry. Wales, indeed, was quiet, the death of Owen Glendower having been followed by the surrender of his son Meredith; but Oldcastle was still at large and Scotland still aggressive. In spite of the violent preaching of several of the higher clergy⁴, it is clear that many priests continued to favour Olderstleb, and no person or community had ventured to lay hand on him despite the enormous rewards offered. For nearly chase, see Dict. Nat. Biogr Exxvs. sol.

For remons preached against him by Bishop Mascal in Herefortsburg and Sheop-

* John Prest, vicar of Chesteriou in Warmichilure actually harboured him early in August, 2415 (Cal. Pat. 2416-22, p. 3711 Claus. 9 Hen. V, m. 24d).

Fig. Lieutenant au Rol et gardrin d'Engleterre," Rot. Park ly 1781, custos," Rym. L. 600, 601; "gardanus," Cotton MS, Cleop. E. H. f. 312 d. He received an allowance.

on con, only "gardinam," Conton MS. Chop. E. H. L. 372 d. He received an allowance of foco marks a year (Iso Roll & Hen. V. Mich., Nov. 14, 1410 et passint)

* Ord Priv Co. is a 14, 1 g. He had been appointed by Henry Fridagh, July 8, 1417, and conformed in the office next day (Col. Pat. 2416-22, p. 209).

* [De their and Professor Newhall p. 144] both marked this conclusion, though the totals which they exceeded from the losse and Research Rolls differ. In any case such calculations have fittle value.]

four years he had hidden in the hills and solitudes of the west, though where he staved cannot be exactly ascertained. Some say that he went to Wales!, others that he haunted the neighbourhood of Oswestry and Shrewsbury³, while tradition still connects him with an ancient house in the Darval or Deerfold to the west of Wigmore in Herefordshire. But though Lollardy as typified in its hunted leader dared not show itself in the open, yet its fire was ever ready to burst into flame. When the king was leaving for Harfleur in 1415, Oldcastle was astir in the midlands, but the timely discovery of Scrope's plot at Southampton ruined all chance of a Lo (ard success^a) There were more alarms in the winter of $416-1417. When the king was at Kenilworth for Christmas it was discovered that one of Oldcastle's squires was plotting to kill him. On Dec. 26 seditions schedules were found fixed on the windows. of the principal houses in Reading, Northampton, and St Albansh, and no one could trace their origin, while at the same time many similar writings were dropped with implicity even in the streets of London. On Jan. 23, 1417, proclamations were issued renewing the offer of 1000 marks reward for Oldcastle's capture, together with perpetual exemption from taxation for any city or borough which should give him up, or a grant of $20 a year to any person doing so. The offers of pardon to repentant Lollards that had been made at the time. of Oldcastle's escape had already been repeated, with an intimation that the offer would hold good if submissions were made within a forthight after Michaelmas, 1417. Neither announcement, however, had as yet produced any result. The Lollards in fact, became bolder than they had been for some time. A member of a west-country family well known for their Lollard leanings, Henry Greindor! of Clowerwell in the Forest of Dean, approached the king with a petition that he would take all the Church's property into his own hand, merely it seems to assert his abstract right to it, for Greindor was willing

¹ Hardyng, 370; "in Powyne," Usk, 131 * Vol. i. 519 0qq

[·] Wale it 117.

Ibid ; Elmham, Lib. Metr. 147, 151. Onerb. 276; Elmham, Lib. Metr. 151.

^{*} Chus. 4 Hen V, 7 d; Cal. Pat. 1416-12, p. 82, Cotton MS. Cleop. E ii f. 319. The proclamations were published only in the midlands and the west.

On Nov. 16, 1416 (Claus. 4 Hen. V, 12 d).

Referred to by Elmham (Lib. Metr. 148) as Oldcastle's "precs."

that he should re-grant it to the Church. Henry had him sent to prison for the bare suggestion, saying that he might as well do the same with the property of every one of his subjects and that he would rather be cut to pieces than lay a hand on the Church's goods. Not long afterwards Oldcastle himself ventured within a few miles of London. At Barnet the tenants of the abbot of St Albans showed disaffection, which eventually came to rioting, and led to the appointment of a commission of enquiry. It was believed in the abbey that Oldcastie had been staying for some days in the house of a peasant near St Albans; and though he managed to escape when the secret leaked out, many of his sympathisers were caught and clapped into the abbot's prison. Compromising tracts were likewise? found, together with primers in which the nimbus round saints' heads had been scratched off and the names of the Virgin and saints rubbed out in many places. One of these books was sent to the king, who forwarded it to Archbishop Chichele with orders that the mutilated pictures should be publicly exposed during sermon time at Paul's Cross as a warning of the lengths to which Lollard frenzy could goa.

Meanwhile the Scots were making great preparations to recover lost ground on the border as soon as the king had left for France. In England it was believed that O deast e had had an interview with Wi liam Douglas at Pontefract⁴, and it was even said that he had entered into a written agreement with the duke of Albar y. It is certain that an understanding did exist, that the duke of Albany was beginning to tire of maintairing the pseudo-Richard at his own expenses, and that Lollard emissaries were passing busily about inciting the dalesmen of Yorkshire and Northumberland to be ready to acclaim King Richard as soon as he should appear amongst them. Prominent among these emissaries was a Yorkshire squire named Henry Talbot, from the Forest of Bowland¹. He had already got into trouble owing to intrigues in 14132, and in 1417 had almost succeeded in getting the duke of Albany's son Murdach out of the hands of the English as they were conducting h m to the bordera. On both of these occasions he had escaped soot free, but this time he fell into the hands of the king's officers. Enquiries held by the earl of Westmorland. and two judges4 at Newcastle and at Masham fully established his treason, and he was sent to London. On May 1, 1417, he was brought to Westminster, where he admitted as guilt, saying that he had acted at the instigation of some of the bishops and other churchmen in order to destroy sin in Ingland. Brought up again on May 4, he was personally questioned by the king, and then pleaded that at the last examination he had been frightened and did not know what he was saying. He then put himself on the country, but on June 13. he was sentenced to be drawn from the Tower to Tyburn and there to be beheaded. His head was exposed on London Bridge, and his quarters, wrapped in wax-cloth, were sent in sacks to be exposed on the gates of Chester, Lancaster, Newcastle, and York ...

* Dated Sept. 17, 1417 (Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 143). Cf. Monast ii. 198. * Wals ii. 326. * Ibid. 325.

^{*} Elmhans, loc cit; Cappr. De Illustr 121 [The story rests on wery slender authority)

Duerb 278, who states that the actual documents had been found; Stow, 355. A note appears in the Scottish Exchequer Rolls under date of July 12, 1417, showing hat the governor-i.e. the duke of Albany-had received no money at all for the custody of Richard king of England since the death of Robert III eleven years before, his claims now amounting to $733 for $d or one hundred marks per another (Exch. Rolls, Scot. 17. 289, Menterth, i. 229).

The government continued to be active against Lollardy. On July 23 Thomas Brook, the husband of Oldcastle's step-daughter, had to find security that he would not promote gatherings of his tenants in Somerset or communicate with Oldcastle within the next six months. And about the time that Henry sailed orders were issued to the sheriff of Hampshire for the arrest of two priests, Richard Wyche and William Brown, who were suspiciously connected with money belonging to Oldcastle?

Some time before the king sailed messengers^a had arrived with news that the Scots were threatening Roxburgh, and these were soon followed by John Bertram, one of the commanders

^{*} Goodwin, 161. * Vol. 1. 34. * Hod. 513 * Richard Norton and James Strangways, Brit Mus. Add. MS. 4601/103 (135)

^{*} These details are known from the record of the charges made by Robert Whitung ton and John Covenius, the shortfle of London, who carried out the arrangements for the execution (For Acces 52, C)

* Claim 5 Ben V, 18 d

⁷ Devon, 342, shows that they had been captured before Oct. 22, 1419. Wyche had aurady been in trouble for beensy and was destined to the arthr stake in 1440 (Wvie, 18, 46) seq.; Fassic. Ziz. 5014 Kingsford, Chron. 147, 253, 2111 Fabyan, 613, Mon. Fran. ii. 171, Stow, Chron. 378).

^{*} For payments to them, see Iss. Roll 5 Hen. V, Pasch., Aug. 3, 1417.

of the place, who came in person to bouthampton to press for the payment of the wages of his men! The warning came none? too soon, for in the middle of August two large bodies of Scots were in the field, one under the earl of Douglas prepared for an attack on Roxburgh, the other under the duke of Albany being directed against Berwick⁴. Despite timely warnings from the north², these movements appear to have taken the English Council by surprise, for as late as Sept. 5 the king was still under the belief that a truce was being arranged for the winter and that troops that would otherwise be needed in the north would thus be available to strengthen the army in Normandy4. The duke of Albany, however, found Berwick no easy task to handle. The place was defended with great determination by Robert Umfraville, and the alarm spread with exceptional speed throughout Lingland. No sooner was it known that the Scots were in motion than all England north of the Trent rushed to arms. The duke of Exeter had started a round of pagramages, with the intention of visiting York, Durham, and Bridlington^a, but on hearing of the danger he hastily collected a force and marched northward to the rescue. Archbishop Bowet was drawing near his end, his sight was failing and he was breaking up with age", but his old spirit of fight awoke at the crisis: putting himself at the head of some thousands of his tenantry, and accompanied by Stephen Scrope, archdesconof Richmond', he drove straight to the scene of danger.

I Comb ver

by their bring werten in the king's own name).

* This appears from a letter written from Caen to the chancellor, Briling Langley, in which be expected a with that the dute of Easter shall cross to Normandy and give help in the compaign there (Chane, Warr., Ser. J. 1364/37)

Tit Lev 30, Gesta, 111, Walt, it. 325

* Genu, 1213 Elmburn, Lib Metr. 1323 Holinsh, it. 360. Cf. "pro pure despektaltelen de argerto et de auraro, which has encrutore value at 201, Test. Elvor, in vo. Raise, Hist. York, iii, 3123 Wylie, ii. 352.

1 Eurham, Lib. Metr. 151. He was nephew of Archbahop Scrope and brother of Henry Scrope, execused for treatm in 1415. He was archdescon of Rickmond from March 18, 140a to his death on Sept. 3, 54x8 (Le Neve, 10. 539).

* Tit Lev 14; Stow, Caren 155.

I He remised £1000 at Bouthampton (Im. Roll 5 Hen. V. Pasch., June 21, 30, and Aug. 3, 1429). He and John Elton were appointed wardens of Rosburgh, with powers after bundantie Terry hale: on Jan. 19, 1416 (Rot. Scot. o. 210).

The July 31 the and of Northumberland, marden of the Fast March, wrote from Warkworth that the date of Aftany was purposing to attack florwick and in Aug. 3 Robert L infrastile, writing from florwick itself, and that Arbany's force numbered fourto men and that he steps would probably begin in twenty data. Fixed an 40%, 1003 the documents can belong to no other year than 2427, in spite of the difficulty raised by their being were ten in the king's own name.

1. This independent act on was well supported by the government. On Aug. 14 and 24 Bedford had called for troops to meet him. at Leicester and march thence against the Scots! The duke was at the rendezvous by Sept. 208. When the whole force mustered under the lead of the earls of Northumberland and Westmorland at Barmoor near Lowick, its numbers were very great?, and the duke of Exeter is reported to have said that a large proportion of the men were as good as any that were serving in Frances. In face of such esposition the Scots withdrew precipitately from Berwick, leaving their siege train behind. On the way back Albany set hire to Norhams, but this was all the satisfaction that the Scott could reap from what was long remembered as the Foul Ra do. At Roxburgh the earl of Douglas had already commenced mining" and wis confident that the place could not hold out for more than another fortnights, but he withdrew as soon as he heard of the failure at Berwicks. The Scots now sought for peace10, but the tables were turned, and Robert Umiraville not only harassed their retreat from Berwick, but for the rest two sears harned them at Hawick, Selkirk and Jedhurgh, while all Ettrickdale, Lauderdaie, and Teviotdale lay defenceless at his mercy¹¹.

To the Courcil at Westminster the news of the discompture of the Scots must indeed have been welcome, but even more so must have been the messenger who brought news from Wales that John Oldcastle was at last under lock and key. It happened that a parliament, summoned by writs of Oct 6,

FRYIN 13. 107: 110

¹ Im. Roll y Hen. V, Pinch., Sept. 20, 1419. cf. Cal. Pat. 1414-12, p. 118

Otterb, 278, who gives the number as 60,000, Wals in 325 (100,000), Elmham-Lib Meter (12 100,000), Et lur (6 1 0,000, Via 165 for ,500, Hardyng 385 Se w Chron net The number quiter are of clume abund, but I was endently he leved even where that the force was an exceptionally sarge one. Mr Kingdord thinks that Hardyng was present (E.H.R. 229, 463).

* Walt 1, 326. Waster than news that the dalte applied his remark to 40,000 men.

^{*} Hardyng, 380 sq | Otterb. 279

^{*} Scouchron. (Heurse), iv. 1186, Ridpath, 185; Douglas Book, 8, 185; Hume Sodicroft), 125

⁽Godicroft), 125

Otterio 279 The narrow escape of Bankurgh led the English government to strengthen the defences, provide large supplies of weapons, and pay arrears of wages to the garrison (Cal Pat 2416, 21, p. 1461 let Roll & Hen V. Mich., Dut. 7, 27, 1417, but a March a and a sand about 4 Hen V. Pasch., June 1, Sept. 28 July 11, 1428, Cal Doc Scot sv 176:

[•] Money was also spent on the arrengthening of Berwick (For. Accts. 52, B, Iss. Role 6 Hen. V. Pasch., April 4. May 9, 1418; ilid. Mich., Oct. 10, 1418).

¹⁴ Hardyng, 581 14 Ibed. 182; Goodwin, 169.

met at Westminster on Nov 161 Only one duke-Exeterand three earls-North, mberland, Westmorland, and Devonwere summoned, and only fourteen barons, none of whose names is new. For the commons there are returns for twenty-six counties and sixty-seven boroughs2, none of the individual members is specially notable. On the opening day Bishop Langley addressed the whole parliament in the Painted Chamber on the words "Take comfort, be men! and ye shall be glorious?." He sang the praises of the king, who had now added to his previous triumphs by conquering many walled towns and castles in Normandy, urging that it was for the country to support the expedition in France and check the matice of the Scots. Then the commons chose Roger Flower to be their speaker for the second time, and the sittings were continued from day to day till Dec. 17 when the members separated after granting two tenths and two fifteenths, one payable at Candlemas next and the other a year later. The southern convocation met at St Paul's on Nov. 26, and sat till Dec. 205, when it granted two tenths, to be levied at the same mervals as those of the commons. The northern convocation met at York on Jan. 20, 1418, granted a tenth, and broke up on Jan. 26th. No statute of any kind resulted from the meeting of this parliament, but the southern convocation made an attempt to remedy an acknowledged grievance. For some years complaints had been growing that graduates of the English universities found no preferment in the Church such as they claimed should be their reward after their long years of study?. To obviate this evil and check the decay from which the universities were suffering, an order, to hold good for ten years, was promulgated by Archbishop Chickete that every spiritual patron must henceforward select a graduate to fill the first and every third subsequent vacancy a t Sam 19.9-not r Cor avi 13, as the speech shows. Neither passage contains the words "er gloriosi erius"

Claus 3 Hen. V, 17 d; Rot. Part. iv. 106.

Cone, in 389; Walte, 353 Ret. Parl iv fe

Return Park : 189 sqq No returns have been found for Lancashire, Lescestershire, Limcoloubere, Rutland, Hampshire, Staffordshire, Suffock, Warwickshire, Westmorland, Worcenershire, or Yorkshire

Rot Parl iv. 1075 Usk, 230, 232; Roc. Roll 6 Hen. V, Pasch., April 40 24484 thed Mich., Feb. 14, 2419, Dep. Keep. Rept. 2, App. 21 p. 187.

Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 4502/145 (184); Cone. 20. 381; D.K.R. 2, App. 20. p. 181.

in each of his benefices, elaborate provisions being laid down to ensure that those of the most exalted academic rank should get the best positions. The proposal, however, encountered objections on the part of the graduates themselves, as it would have entailed certain drastic reforms in the conditions under which degrees were then conferred. Little if anything can have come of the measure, as further legislation was deemed advisable in 1421.

But if the legislative fruit was scanty, yet the sittings of both. parliament and convocation will ever be memorable for the tragedy which marked their close. The belief that Oldcastie was in collusion with the Scots had apparently led the government to redouble its efforts to capture him. When the duke of Bedford was passing through the midlands on his way back from the Border, he had many Lollards seized and thrown intoprison! About the middle of October he despatched to John Merbury in Wales a letter which doubtless had its bearing on su recournt events. Early in November the sheriff of Kent was ordered to seize Oldcastle's goods, which long ago had been declared forfeited-a task in which he was resisted by organised bands and required the support of an armed guards. About the same time fresh writs for Oldcastle's arrest were sent to al. the sheriffs?, while his wife Joan and one of her servants named Simon Clere were sent to the Tower® On Dec. I the news of his capture was known in London. The bonour of effecting it fell to tour Welshmen, two of whom are described as gentlemen and two as yeomen*. All were tenants of Edward Char, ton lord of Powys 10. The scene of the acrest is said. to have been in Powysland, and the on y precise statement from a contemporary places it at Welshpoo. 11 There is a tradition,

 Clause y Hen. V, y
 Jevan and Gruffuth sones of Gruffuth ap Jevan ap Madoc ap Gwennoys of Powys Lorde gent interior and Hoel ap Gruffuth ap David ap Madoc and Dero ap Jevan ap Josem ap Ada of the same Lond, Zemen (Orig Lett and Ser a. By The father of the two gentlemen is called Sir Griffith Vaughan, lord of Burgedin, in Arch. Cambressis. Ser 1, 1, 4.

Cambrensis, Ser. t, t. 47.

10 For a document of June 6, 1410, in which Charlton rewards them for their achievement, ser 1842.

1 ' In v.ka Walshpole," Streeche, 166 a, who however dates the capture in "Asmo IV."

^{*} Cone, ui, 383 sq. * Ibid, 383 sq. * Elmham, Lib. Metr. 242

* For payment to the memoryer, see Ist. Roll 5 Hen. V, Mich., Oct. 243, 4417.

* Devon, 251

however, that Oldcastle was taken at Broniarth in the parish of Guilsheld, where an enclosure is still known as Colsham's garden1. His arrest was not achieved without a violent struggle, for he was a man of great bodily strength2, but at length he was badly wounded, overpowered, and carried to the castle at Weishpool, a story soon being current that he was knocked down by a blow from a footstool aimed at his shiriby a woman* On Dec. 1 orders were issued to Charlton to bring his prisoner to London with all speed that his case might be taken in hand by the Council. Wounded and broken, Clacastle was placed in a horse-litter⁴, and, accompanied by a clerk who had been privy to all his secrets, was sent to the capital under a strong guard and indged in the Tower. On Dec. 147 he was brought before parl ament, where the Chief Justice, William Hankford, produced the record of the indictment under which he had been adjudged a traitor four years before. Then Archoishop Chichele read the pronouncement of his excommunication. He was asked if he had any reason to show why these sentences should not take effect. At the outset he appealed to the God of mercy, and cried out that all who would be like God must put mercy before justice, and leave vergeance to Him. At this those present grew impatient and the Chief Justice urged the regent not to tolerate such waste of time. Told to keep more to the point, Oldcastle, after a short silence, exclaimed, "With me it is a small thing that I should be judged of you or of man's day!," and then wandered off again into the same irrelevancies?. When the Chief Justice called for his final answer, he said defiantly that he recognised no judge there, for his proper judge, King Richard, was in Scotland10. No witnesses were called or needed; parhament at once declared that he should be drawn, hanged, and burnt, and the sentence was executed without delay11 Taken back to the Tower, he was tied down to the Arch. Carch, loc on , Moragomeryshire Collections, 240, Robinson Carties, 41 Tyler, 11, 331, who calls it Lord Cobsam's Field and refers to a tradition that it was granted to non-of-the amostom of the Ormoby-Gora family as a newted for the espture

Wale it for Capgr., De lliuste ran.

Le and, Coal ii 410 Chron Ric II Hen. VI 46

Capgr., loc. cit.; cf. Elmham, Lib. Metr. 158.

Cal Pat. 1416-12, p. 145, Brit Mus. Add. MS. 4601 142 (181), Tit Liv 216.

Esmham, Lib. Metr. 158; Chron. Ric. II-Hen. VI, 463 Brut, ii. 586; Gieg.,

¹ Wais, u. 325. Rot. Parl. iv 108. 6 g Cor. 19, 3. 16 Cf. Eimham, Lib. Meyr, 152, " Ibid. 159 | Otterb. 180.

hurdle, and drawn through the streets to 5t Giles' Field!, where a vast crowd had asserribled. The regent, who was present with many other notables, urged him to confess to some priest, but he answered that if the aposiles Peter and Paul themselves were there, he would not have them?, and he adjured Sir. Thomas Erpingham, who once had been a Loilard like himself, to say a word for his surviving fellows when he had risen again. on the third day! A gibbet had already been erected, and faggots piled below, an iron chain was passed about his body. the fire was kindled; and they hung him roasting slowly above it till the flames consumed his body and the gallows as well! No cry escaped him to as he awang in torture so intolerable to modern imagination that some writers have supposed the fire to have been lighted only after he had been hanged. In favour of this view is the evidence of a nearly contemporary authority, who asserts that Oldcastie was "first drawn and hanged, afterwards disembowelled, and cut into pieces, and lastly consumed in the fire" " But apart from the fact that no other writer makes any reference to disprembering or disembowe ling, it is certain. that fire and chain were meant to be two separate portions of a double punishment*. Oldcastle had often been spoken of by his friends as E. ijah 14, an extravagance which now drew the jeer that he had gone in a chariot of fire to hell 11. Remembering his oft-repeated saying that he would rise again on the third day, a crowd assembled two days after his punishment to see if this would come to pass. Finding that no resurrection had taken place, the martyr's friends gathered handfuls of the ashes to rub upon the rieres, which (according to a triumphant canon) only sent them stone blind12. Such pibes were but a reflex of the callous feeling of England as a whole. For it is clear that his fate roused little passion in the country, and there was none

Chrons 16; Canton, 229.

² Grey Fran Chron 166; Peter Chron 488 Kingslord, Chron 71, For Acrts. Ω₁ Λ.

^{*} Streeche, 266 a.

* Elmham, Leb. Mett. 159, Capgr., De librat. 122.

* Wals. if 328.

* Kingsford, Chron. 72, Lit. 328 Erut, ii. 326

* Usk, 132, Chron. Lond. 106; Kingsford, Chron. 126, Three Fifteenth Cent.

F Elmham, Lib. Metr. 159.

Galles de Rass was "pendu et brulé vif" in 2444 (Bossed, 329). In 1538, at Smithfield, Dr Farest was "hanged an chains by the middle and armholes al quicke and under the galower was made a fire," Hade. Tag Elmham, L. b. Metr. 15 t, 15k.

 Cappr., De ll. 10tr. 11 , F. 10tr. Sh. 14 j.
 Streeche, 166 a, cf. Kingsford, Lit. 41.

to fill his place. Six days after his death the mayor of London wrote to the king without mentioning his name, asserting that the capital stood in as great peace and tranquillity as ever did city in the absence of its sovereign lord1

The lady Joan was still a prisoner in the Tower when her husband was executed, but she was released a few days afterwards, three knights—John Pelham, Thomas hippingham, and Simon Felorigge—giving bonds of 200 marks each that she would come up before the Council within twenty-one days of bring summoned. As for the rewards to the capters, parliament had reported on Dec. 17 that the 2000 marks should be paid to Charlion, but the Welshmen who had personally effected the capture had also to be considered. Their claims were not settled till March, 14214, they were, however, more fortunate than Charlton, who died before receiving payment, and it was not until 1422 that even a portion of the money was paid to his widows.

To the modern mind it is doubtless disheartening to find that the seader of the inevitable struggle so nobly begun on behalf of the emancipation of the human mind should have ended by entangling himself with secular movements of rebellion. This feature of his career proved indeed so disconcerting to his admirers in the sixteenth century that for a long time it was denied that he was ever a robel or intrigued with his country's enemies. But the facts are now incontestably proved, and if extenuation is required, it must be looked for in the temper of the age. Both sides looked to force to further their opinions, and if it is true that the bishops' remedy was to burn the Loliards, it is no less true that the Lollards remedy was to kill the bishops. In the eyes of contemporaries, however, his heresy bulked far more largely than his treason, and farworse than his intrigue with the Scots and the puppet "Richard" was his denial of the efficacy of prayer to the Virgin and the saints, of the necessity or value of confession to a priest, and of the

¹ R.ley, Mem. 459.
2 Roi. Parl w 121.
3 Claus. 5 Hen. V, 7
4 Orig Lett., Ser. 11, 1 87

Desor 376 [Henry Oldcastle, the Ladard a only sare sing son, succeeded to part of his father a property in Herefordshire, and probably recovered he may still for the following and other possessions in 143 x; but it cost him much trouble to enablish his claim, and in 1438 some of his fathers and so the county was still in the long's hand (Cal. Pat. 14,122,234, pp. 546 aqq., that, 1429-36, pp. 177 aq.; ibid, 1436-41, p. 304; G.E.C. vi. 139). Henry Oldcastle became a man of some account, and represented Herefordshire in the parliaments of 1437, 1441, and 243 (Return Parl 1 329, 333, 347).]

change of the substantial bread into the body of God. It was such opinions that gave him a motive for open spiritual revolt, and if in the tumult he attempted to secure his end by insurrection and sedition, the whole course of his career proves that he was no mere ambitious demagogue, but a single-minded enthusiast whose conscience forced him to head the rising movement of religious discontent and whose downright earnestness compelled him to pursue his purpose by every means and at any cost against a persecuting dynasty whose claim to govern England rested upon no better ground than a recent and successful revolution.

r - Google

¹ [Dr Wylie evidently fell strongly on the subject of Oldeastle, and whenever possible I have retained the exact words of hose passages of his MS which treat of Sir John's death, character, and motives. With some of his conclusions and opinions, however, I cannot agree []

CHAPTER LV

ABORTIVE DIPLOMACY

The clash of arms had not altogether silenced the voice of diplorracy since Henry had landed at Touques. Communication had very soon been opened with the French court with a view to a possible compromise of the dispute. Henry had written to Charles on Aug. 13, 1417, and Charles had replied from Paris on Aug. 3t1, Formal debates as to the abstract legably of Henry's claim had actually been conducted by heraids on each side up to the eve of the day when Caen was carried by assaults; and while Henry was at Caen, letters had been received from the French king expressing a desire for peaces. On Sept. 24, 1417, the archoishop of Rheims, Gonier Col, Jean de Waili (President of the Parlement of Paris), and four other negotiators were granted safe-conducts to come to some piace between Honfleur and Touques*, and on Oct, 1 the earl of Warwick and five others were appointed to treat with them. The French envoys received their formal appointment in Paris on Oct. 24, their safe-conduct was renewed on Oct 227, and by Nov. 10 two of them were in Falaise commanding the garnson there and preparing for the expected English attack* On Nov. to safe-conducts were issued for the archaishop of Rheims and one of his fellow-envoys to approach the presence of Henry, together with the two who were organising the defence of Falaises, and yet another safe-conduct was assued for the archoisnop on Dec. 2310. These inconclusive arrangements show that negotiations were never allowed to drop, though we are almost wholly ignorant of what occurred. We know, on the authority of a French contemporary!, that the French envoys were courteously received by the English

```
 Coll of Arms, Arundal MS min f. 553 Black, 43.

 Ibid. 57, from Arundal MS, mevi.

 Rev. 10 497, 41*

 Rot. Norm (Hardy), 161, 170.

 Ibid. 597,

 Ibid. 597,

 Ibid. 597,

 Ibid. 597,

 Ibid. 587,
```

聖 2日

king, but that it was found that his conditions were impossible of acceptance. There is, however, a record of one of the meetings which shows that the feeling on both sides was too tritated to make a friendly arrangement at all probable. The parties met on Nov. 281 at the manor house of Barneville-le-Bertrand in the woods between Honfleur and Touques!. The party were seated on chairs, and the French case was stated by the archbishop of Rheims, who referred to the readness expressed on both sides to come to terms, but pointed out that he and his to leagues had been kept waiting for at least six weeks at Hontleyr, while heralds which they had sent to the English king had been arrested and detained. Against this disregard of the sanctity of safe-conducts he most earnestly protested and begged that the English envoys would do their best to see that the heralds were released. To this Master Philip Morgan politely replied, denying that his side was responsible for the failure of previous negotiations or that the present delay was due to any fault of theirs. On the contrary, he said, the blame rested altogether with the Freach, who had failed to usue propersafe-conducts. As for the arrest of the heraids, he had no instructions, but there must have been some good reason for their detestion. The archbishop replied that he did not want to irast on past grievances. For the future at Beauvais the year before, Signsmund was responsible. As a guarantee of good faith, the French exhibited their commissions. Here the document breaks off, and what follows is a commission of two years later. We are thus unable to say whether any serious business was transacted at this meeting, but from another source we learn that the Frenchmen left with an assurance that it would not be long before they returned and that the war would soon be at an end3. As a matter of fact, they were back. in Pans by Dec. 21, 14174, and soon afterwards visited King Henry during the siege of Falaise, though peace of course was quite beyond hope".

Just before the king sailed in 1417, Bishop Beaufort resigned the chance-lorsh p and received a safe-conduct to enable ² Rym or gas, from Cotton MS. Tiberras, E. w. f. 104. No year is specified in the document, but the menions of Walter Hangerford, Thomas Chauser, John Kemp, and Princy Morgan as the English negotiation mens to fix at as belonging to 14.17, as does the principle of the archbahop of Rheims and Gottner Coll among the French.

Year 146*

Titl: Liv. 45

Fit Liv 45, Veta, 116, Rot Norm (Hardy), 111. 4 St Denys, vi. 108

him to go abroad, asserting that he was about to visit the Holy Land'. He gave up the great seal to the king in the chapel over the perch of the priory church at Southwick. The king straightway handed it to Thomas Langley, bishop of Durham, who remained chancellor of England for the next seven years*. This change has semetimes been spoken of by modern writers as Beaufort's "fall," as though he had for some reason lost favour with Henry, but there seems no reason for any such supposition, for he had just lent the king $f(14.000^3)$, and the sequel shows that he had merely resigned the great scal to fly at higher game. On leaving England he made his way to the Council of Constance. At Ulm he was met by Bishop Caterick. with a special letter of welcome from Sigismund, who had sent two Italian noblemen to attend upon him*. When he reached Constance about the beginning of October he was received by the emperor and three of the cardinals. In the dispute then raging as to whether the election of a pope should precede reform, he threw his influence on the side of an immediate elections, and little more than a month after his arrival the conclave was held which resulted in the election of Martin V.

The rapidity with which this great step in the direction of official unity, hitherto opposed by Sigismund, followed upon Beaufort's arrival led to the suspection that there was an understanding between the two that the bishop himself should be the new pope, for Sigismund had made no secret of his determination to have either a German or an Englishman elected*. But the strength of the French element in the college precluded may chance of his election, and the English threw their weight on the side of Cardinal Colonna, who was eventually chosen. Beaufort was offered consolition by Martin V in the shape of a cardinal's hat with the office of legate in Wales and Ireland; but moved by Archbishop Chichele's remonstrances, the king forbad him to accept either offer; and he did not become a 1 Rym. in. 4724 D.K.R. 2lar. 1993 Waln. 2i. 339.

Ord. Prov. Co. S. 1963. Loufaux (trums.), St. 1473 [Finks, Acts, ii 147].
 (Fillutro's poursel shows that he arrived between Sept. 17 and Oct. 9, Finks, Acts, il. 199] Finke, Forsch 127, Acta, ii. 148, St Denys, vi. 38. 1 [Finke, Acta, it. 438]

Duck, Vita Cluck, 58 og ; Stevenson, Wars, 11. pt. 2, 442.

^{*} Lesfant is 4411 Otterbourse, 219, Walsingbars, 11 3191 Angl. Sacz. i. Ioo. [According to Filance: however, the English sepresentatives, acting under instructions from Henry, had inclined nowards this policy before Besufort's arrayal, Finhe, Acta-cardinal ill 1426. Beaufort himself refused a request that he would take over the custody of the deposed John XXIII1; and when winter drew towards its end he set out for Venice, astonishing many people who had thought his cilgrimage a mere prefext!. Accompanied by Abbot Spotford of St. Mary's, York, and sixty mounted attendants, he arrived in the city on March 18, 14183. He was honourably welcomed by the Dege and entertained with great respect, as was fitting in the case of a man with an income of 100,000 gold ducats. His journey to Jerusalem, however, was marked by no pomp, for his personal suite consisted of but eight persons when he set sail from Vehi e on April 10, accompanied by fifteen or sixteen pilgr ma, all of whose expenses he paid. He had given special orders that no word should be forwarded about his journey, so that he might be quite unexpected on his arrival; and in fact, but for the Venetian records, we should know virtually nothing about the pilgrimage and might have been tempted to regard the English sate-conduct as nothing but a blind. Five months later Beaufort returned in a Rhodes galley, landing at Venice on Sept. 104. On his way home he seems to have halted at Mantua for another interview with Pope Martin V. There he took up in his train one of the most notable Italians of the Renaissance, Gian Francesco Poggio Bracciol n., who accompanied Beaufort in the hope of bettering his prospects?

One of the first efforts of the new pope Martin V was directed towards the reconciliation of France and England. He despatched two of the leading cardinais—Ossini and In lastre—whose first instructions were issued at Constance on March 18, 1418. They did not, however, leave Constance till April 28; and in the meanwhile Sigismund had remonstrated so atrongly against his omission from the terms of pacification that supplementary instructions, dated April 3, were drawn upis. By April 24 the two cardinals had reached Troyes, then the head-quarters of the government of Queen Isabel and the duke of Burguncy. Here they prepared to take part in the negotiations

¹ Rym. ix 540.
2 Cal Pap. Lett. v i. 64 [Finke, Acta, is. 141].
3 Morositt, it. 138.
4 Ibid.

For a reference to his journey to Jerusalem, me Otterbourne, 279

Micouri, i. 16a, Sanuto, 911 Micouri, ii. 166 it.; Shepherd, 177 aq., Waher, 27.

Rym. in. 552 199 , Cal. Pap. Lett. vii. 7.

[Finke, Acta, ii. 168.] 10 Rym. in. 569.

with the Paris government that were proceeding at La Tombe, and at the same time they wrote to King Henry requesting that, owing to the insecurity of the roads, separate safe-conducts might be made out for one hundred attendants with each of them!. The safe-conduct for Cardinal Orsini was issued on May 141, ten days before Henry left Caen for his summer campaign. But before setting out for Normandy Orsini went to Paris, and it was not until the middle of June that he set out thence to visit Henry at Louviers, where he arrived on June 24, just as the siege was over3. He was honourably received and given a respectful hearing, though after what had lately happened in Paris Henry was more than ever convinced that he had been chosen by God to chastise the sinful French⁴. Orsini was soon joined by Fi lastre⁴, and negotiations were still proceeding on July 216. In the end, however, the cardinals found the task of peace making quite beyond their powers. They had to content themselves with minor successes—such as obtaining favour for Jean Langret, bishop of Barcux, who was then at Constance and had indicated his readiness to do homage to Henry, and for Nicolas de Clémanges, cantor of the cathedral, famous for his denunciations of the corruption of the Church⁸.

In the meantime there had been sensational happenings among the French. After several meetings at La Tombe the claims of each party were set forth in a couple of state papers dated April 2 5. 14189. These made it evident that there was no basis of agreement; and neither a de in its reply did anything to improve the situation. About this time there arrived cardinals Orsini and Fillastre, who conferred with the representatives of both parties10. Cardinal Fillastre then went forward to Paris with the archbishop. of Rheims to explain the purpose of his mission to the king! his exhortations being sympathetically heard by the Council, which

Emigr 19

5 Denys, vs. 201-116, Besteourt, i. 80-15.

² Rym. ic. 378. 3 Ibid. 581. 2 St Denys, vi. 250, Tit Liv 38, Goodwin, 178.

^{*} Vita, 170, St Denys, vi. 150. See below, pp. 102 sqq.

* Vita, 170, St Denys, vi. 150. See below, pp. 102 sqq.

* D K R. 111 693.

* Beipit, 222; Gesta, 123.

* Rym. 18. 567. The bushep seems never to have presented humself before Henry, but died at Parm in July, 1429 (Game, 507; Eubel, I 127)

* Rym. 28. 577, D.K.R. all. 692; Béziers, Hist. App. 17, Mem. I. 330, Pulicum, ²º Belleforest, Chron. 323 a, Monste, ili. 256, Juv. 540. 61 Cordenen, 252; Monne in. 256, Dovet d'Arcq. i. 197, [Bibl. Ec. Charten alie. 435, Valou, 17 431 30].

of course gave him to understand that the obstacle to peace was the duke of Burgundy. He soon rejoined his colleague at Montereau, and the two assiduously attended the discussions of the hostile factions. How it happened is not clear, but within a few days the two sides had entered into a peovisional agreement¹, which was duly signed by the envoys, who thereupon departed to secure its ratification by their respective chiefs. Naturally the duke of Burgundy was quite content² and the population of Par's received the king's envoys with great rejoicing. But the count of Armagnac refused to look at the ag eement, and when the bishop of Paris got a council called together by the dauphia, he refused to attends. Nevertheless a three weeks' truce was officially appounced to Paris on May 27th, and this, together with the fact that a cornpromise should have been seriously considered at ail, shows that a great rift had been made in the power of the count of Armagnac, who no onger had the city in his grasp. A few weeks before he had returned discredited from a vain attempt to reduce one of the smallest fortified towns in the neighbourhoods, which defed him even after a two months nege. Meanwhile, Paris was full of disease, food had risen to famine prices, robbery and violence were rife, and fiendish cruelties were perpetrated in the streets. Yet with all this misery and discontent prevailing, the constable relaxed nothing of his severity, forcing his will upon the Parisians as though they were slaves. He seized the stuff of the workmen's looms for tents and pavilions", and when the workmen clamoured for their pay, told them in his brutal Cascon that they ought to have a peany to buy a halter. Sooner than entertain the thought of peace with Burgundy he would sell Paris to the English?.

The announcement of a mere truce instead of the expected peace seems to have been the last straw. Nine desperate men, two of them priests, sent a secret message to the Burgundians, assuring them that once they could get a footbold in the city.

Cordeliers, x 53.

^{* &}quot;Tomberet en un apportement," Parad n. 6144 "tombent d'accord," Vandea-beneck, 133, St Denys, vi. 228, Jun. 540.

^{*} St Denys, ri. 228; Boulay, v. 33t. * Monite, 30. 257; Denife, Chart 39. 346

Félibien, il 756, 792, Juv. 540.
 Le. Seniu. Corécliere, 241-252; Flammermont, 206, 278; Sc Denys, vl. 291; Bourgeon, 65 og ; Paradin, 626; Félibien, 1v. 566 al, danger would be over, for all Paris would be with them and many of the Armagnacs were absent in the field against the English¹. Early in the morning of Sunday, May 29, 600 or 700 horsemen from Pontoise, under Jean de Villiers, lord of L'Isle Adam, were claudestinely admitted at the Porte St. Germaina. They were soon joined by 400 well-armed townsmen, who were in readiness. These raised the shout, "Our Lady and the peace!" the partisans of Burgundy poured from the houses, and the streets were soon thronged with thousands of men armed with any old weapon or tool that came to hand, wearing the 5t Andrew's cross of the duke of Burgundy, and shouting, "Long live the king, the dauphia and the peace!!" The houses of Armagnacs were plundered, and their occupants seized and murdered in the streets or flung into the prisons. I he constable escaped in disguise to the cottage of a bricklayer, who however gave him up, and he was taken to the Little Châteles? and afterwards lodged in the Round Tower of the Palaces. The king, who was sunk in inertia, was treated by the lord of I 'Isle Adam' and his associates with profound respect, for his part he received them graciously! and on the day after their entry suffered himself to be taken by them through the streets amid the cheers. of the populace10. When the alarm was given, Tanneguy du Chastel, the prevot of Paris, managed to rush the daughin to the Bastille of St Antoine¹¹, whence he was conveyed to a place of safety at Melun13.

Fifty Armagnaes in the Bastille kept up a lively fire on the Burgundians and held them at bay until, three days later, an Armagnac force, 1400 strong, entered the city from St Denis 18

11 Ferin, 169, Garnier, Documenta 48, Jur. 140, St Denys, vi. 1343 Monste in. 264.

34 Félibun, iv. 567; Longnou, 12; Garmer, 49; Buracourt, i. 91.

Longnon, 14; Bourgrou, 17:0. Norm Chron (Hellet), 57; Rasulet, 16c.
 Ff. thien, 1v 466, 468; Mart. Anec 31, 1950; Monster di 260 sq.; Juv 5405
 Lousinov, 169. St Denvi, vi 230, Norm Chron 1845; Vallet de Viewelle, lextruction. 1614 Denifie, Auctarium, m. 1443 Ameline, vo. 10, Longhon, 214 Beaucourt, 1. 86, 99.

^{*} Fritzen, tv. 567, Gabriel Daniel, id. 1912-1942.
* Bourgeon, 19. "Vive le roi et le dec de Bourgegne, que ceun qui veulent la pain se prignent à nous? (lit Denys, vi e.j.). Cf. Monste sai afia; Jun. 540.

* Re Denys, vi a.j.s.; Jun. 140.

^{*} Sc Denys, vi. 254, Jun. 140.

7 Feliosen, 19. 367, Bourgeon, 32, m. 1

8 On June 6, Barante, in. 156, 1461 Febburn 19. 666

8 Cordelnes, 2561 Bourser 455 boson Chrors (144 St Denys, vi. 252)

40 Orronnapore, 2. 427, Le Fever, 320, Feilbert, 17. 666, 568, Barante, 33. 257, 257. 11 Raruler, 1614 Corde uen, 1604 Monate in. 1614 Le Ferre i galle St Dengie ri. 2324 Pastoralet, fox, Barante, 11 233; Beaucourt, 1 99-and at first made some progress, slaughtering and plundering without mercy as they advanced with shouts of "Long live the king, the daigh n, and the king of England! Slay al. I Slay all¹]. But within the last days the Paris mobined been properly. armed, and now, headed by the new pretos Gur de Bar, the town troops met the intruders and drove them slowly back in bloody fighting? Seeing the failure of the entermise, the Armaganes three days later evacuated the Bastille¹, and henceforth the Burgandians had Paris firmly in their grasp

The populace, however, remained liable to paric—a state of mind which led to ghastly consequences. In the even no of Sur day, June 12, an alarm was raised that the Armagnacs were getting in, and crowds pathered at the gates shout no. ' Nous sommes trabes." Finding no trace of any enemy, they headed frantically for the Masson de Pille on the Place de Grève. Then arose a crs, "Sias, slay the Armagnac degis!" and there was a general rush for the prisons. The Armannecs detained at the Louvre escaped because the king was living there under direct Burgundian protection, but at all the other prisons they were merc lessly butchered, and their bodies fung into the streets to be mutilated and stripped. Among the victims were four bishops⁴, two presidents of the Parlement, and many doctors of medicine and theology from the university. But the it ost notable of those who perished was the count of Armagnac, whose naked corpse lay for three days in the court-yard of the Palace, subject to all manner of savage indignities. The number of persons killed in that terrible night was very variously. estimated, but one is not likely to be far wrong in accepting the figure of 1418 given by a chronicler who was present in the city and entered particulars of current events in a journal day. by day4.

Morm. Chron, 1854 St Denys, vi. 2364 Constnot, 2715 Garme, exist reliber.

iv. gér, gra, győ. Monstr III. 266

* Ordernances, 2, 4v8, Pinteralet, Sov. Sto., Norm. Chron. (Williams) v16, (Heliot. 38) G. Parir in 635. Lordelers, 259, Cagny, 123, Monite it: 2703 Le Réen, 1-332, Jur. 941; Raquiet, 162

* Bourgeon, 98

² Bourgeous, 90. Monter (Sii. 265) aubstitutes "le connestable d'Azmagnac" for the king of England, but on this point the "Bourgeois" is the better au h w re-

^{*} Conference de Cartiera, of Freuer Call Christ. 2. 602, Game. 1924 Fune. 4. 283), Jean d'Achery, of Senlis (Gall. Christ. 2. 1432; Game, 6282 Juv. 5422 Couninot, 170), Pierre Fresnel, of Lisieux (Norm. Chron. 286, Gall. Christ at 1931, Game, 566, Eubel, i. 317) and Jean de Marle, of Coutanons (Gall. Chron. 28 490, Eubel. 1937). Eubel, a. 213)

Then began a month of gloom and terror. All the city gates but two were barred, and trade was almost at a standstill. Everyone longed for the arrival of the duke of Burgundy, which alone could restore order and confidence. His counsel ors indeed had long been urging him to quit all other business and hasten to Parist; but he showed little concern at what was passing, returned from Montbeliard by casy stages, spending some time hunting and merry-making at Dijon2 and staying for nearly a fortnight at Troyes? At length, on July 14, he entered Paris with great pomp and ceremony, accompanied by the queen and the prince of Orange, amid the tumultuous Jubilation of the people4. The poor king received them kindly, as he did everybody, and even thanked the dake for the kindness he had shown to the queen. The duke for his part at once took steps to make the most of his precarious tenure of power, securing money for the payment of his troops and filling all offices, to the very humalest, with his nominees?. But he did nothing in restraint of the Paris mob; indeed his conduct in this relation lends colour to the charge that his delay in arriving had been prompted by the hope that the Paris ans would lighten his task by making short work of the Armagnaes while he could still deny responsibility for what happened? However, that may be, the duke's arrival was followed by the arrest of numerous alleged Armagnacs, and the prisons were again full when on Aug. 20 there occurred another terrible outburst of Parisian brutality, and for the whole of a night and part of a day the butchery went on till at least 3 (00 victims had penished. The murderers met with no opposition, except at the Châtelet, where the prisoners sold their lives dearly, and at the Bastille, where the duke of Burgundy himse f pleaded in vain for some resteamt*...

* Im 442.

Fenin, 94, 951 Longnon, 107.
Plancher, iii. 494, 495, coux.

¹ Garmer, 50; Chestellun, 81. 8 Itin. 440; Gachard, 239.

Itin 443; Bourgeon, 104, St Denys, v. 252; Le Fèvre, i. 232; Cordeliers, 260; Morste in 272 of Jun 542. A member of the duke's same wrote an account of the pageant two days same. It has been published on we than once—e.g. by A. Langnon in the Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire de Paris, 2. (1874), 204-109.

T Ordonnunces, u. 459, 463; Cordeliers, 262; Fenin, 94 19; St Denys, vi. 200; Norm. Chron. 186.

^{*} Courset, 177 * Félibien, ir. 169, 170; St Denys, vi. 248, 262; Bourgeois, 107 mqc.; Le Fèvre, i. 138; Juv. 543; Norm. Chron. 186, Denific, Auct. ii. 252; Commot, 172, 273.

It was perhaps this episode which determined the duke to make a serious effort to secure peace. The Armagnaca, in any case, were powerfu; they had recovered to some extent from the debacle of June; they held the person of the dauphia; Tanneguy du Chastel had assumed the leadership; and they had become aggressive and gained some minor successes in the Loure valley!. Here the duke of Britishy, acting in the interests. of the dukes of Aleagon and Anjou as well as his own, had been trying to mediate between the two factions'; and it was while he was engaged in these efforts that on Aug. 24 he received from Paris an invitation to go there and lend his services to the cause of a general reconciliation. Fearing to enter Paris itself because of the pestilence raging in the city, he took up his quarters at St Maur des-Fossés, where, after conferences between him and the duke of Burgundy, "a kind of treaty" was arranged on Sept. 16, whereby the past was to be forgotten, and Duke John and the dauphin were to join hands against the common enemy. The terms of the agreement were read in the Parlement, the king signified his assent, and the Pansians again lit bonfires. But when the schedule was presented to the dauphin for his ratification, it appeared that he had become intractable. The duke of Beritany, he said, had overstepped his powers, and he vowed that he would have no terms but the punishment of the marderer who had killed his uncle and multitudes of his loyal subjects. He followed this up on Sept. 21 by a violent manifesto, in which he denounced the duke of Burgundy for approving of the Par's massacres, and set up a Parlement of his own at Port ers?. Civil peace in France was more remote than ever.

1 Jun. 144, Delaville le Roulz, 179, 116, D. Sawage, 11, luxi | Belleforest, Chiota, 34 f.

* ibid. 181; Jur 544; Fenin, 173. * Ibid. 171 sq., Delaville ie Roule, 193; Cagny, 145.

* Ordonnances, n. 477; Féliben, il. 793; Countrot, 151, 171; Gabriel Duniel, nı 695, Neuville, 4, 6.

Delaville le Rouk, 170, 186-181

"Une paix telle quelle," Bourgeon, 114; "une espect de traité," Gabriel Daniel, iti 854; cf. Ordonnances, x. 473, 476; lun. 443; Phincher, it. 500; Juv. 544.
Bourgeon, 114, 6. 5; Félibien, w. 571. For the text see St Denys, vi. 278 eqq.

CHAPTER LVI

THE CONQUEST OF LOWER NORMANDY COMPLETED

District some activity on the part of a bastard son of the late. duke of Alencon, who recaptured Fresnay-le-Vicomte, Beaumont-le-Vacomte, and about a dozen other strongholds on the northern confines of Maine¹, only three fortresses held out in western Normandy when Henry left Caen for his summer campaign. These were Domfront, Cherbourg, and Mont-St-Michel. Though there was little hope of their being re leved, they could render great service to their country by detaining English forces before their walls. Mont-St-Michel, however, was never seriously attacked by Henry V, and need hardly be taken into account as a factor in the contest. Domfront, on the other hand, could not be ignored. The castle, perched high on a rock, defied mines, miss les, and ladders, and the earl of Warwick, who was entrusted with the operations, resolved to reduce it by hunger? The blockade began early in April, but the process was a tedious one, for the besiegers were kept on the alert by frequent attacks from the garrison, while their supplies were exposed to raids by bands of desperadoes who furked in the woods under the leadership of the Bastard of Alencon^a. I me, however, was on the side of the Erg ish. By June 29 the town had fallen into their hands, and on July to the castle agreed to surrender if no effective help should arrive within twelve days, and at the end of that time, the garrison marched out quietly with their arms and harness, leaving behind their cannon and bombards.

Meanwhile, another force, under the duke of Gloucester, had been occurred with the strong fortress of Cherbourg. The

* Vin, 1454 Jun. 540. Rym in don The Liv 314 Vin, 146.

¹ Jun 546. Frestray and Beaumost were taken between May 12 and Aug. 4 [D.K.R.

^{25 5103} Triger, Beaumont, 51, 11 t)
North Chron. (Williams) 183, 190, (Hellot) 35, 451 Caulebotte, 194 Tit. Liv 51, Viu., 144 199. On March 30, 1418, the earl of Warwick was ordered to sense all g1, Vitt, 144 199. On March 10, 1418, the eart of ventwich was ordered to the castles, etc., quae contra regressmant forti terminal. (Bréqu gr v, 1.2) For a nearly contemporary picture of the nege of Domfront by the east of Warwick, as firstly Mannary, 11. 146, Plate KLIII, Rangeford, 114.

4 Vitt, 1451 Jun. 540.

108 Conquest of Lower Normandy Completed |CH LYI

town of Cherbourg stands on a low sandy flat at the foot of steep hills, where the little river D vette empties i self into he sea. It had long been defended on its northern side by a castle. which breissart classed as among the strongest in the worlds. The castle, which lay altogether within the town walls, cortained accommodation for 1000 men and storage for surplies surficient for a long siege? The town walls, which had not been completed till the middle of the fourteenth century, were from five to six feet in thickness. At every tide the sea came up to the walls, and at high flouds the town was almost surrounded by water coving to the deep ditches, our in the underlying rock, which hemmed it in on the south. It is no worder that the place was thought impregnable!, and when after its capture a proposal was in do to strengthen it further, the English captain argued that nothing need be done, as it was stronger than Usen, Rober, or any other place captured by the English's

After sending forward some king hts to report on the prospects of success, the duke of Cooucester proceeded to plan his attack. The east side of the fown was maccessible, the bridge ac ows the harbour having been destroyed at the first warming of the approach of the English! The main portion of the arm y was therefore encamped on the flat land to the west. Here the thief difficulty arose from the constant shifting of the hummocks of cose sand. The suburbs had been burned, out every building that remained was eagerly turned into quarters for the leaders. The main hody of the force, however, was exposed to the full fury of the town guns as it lay on the wind-swept and

The castle was completely demolished by Vauban, who, however, at one time thought of necessary it and so had careful drawings made. These are multi-line west at the Marrie: I has show that it had a itering keep and four large towers and that it in upend be ground in grathers the Qua du First, the Place E. ques de, he has Q + 1u Bassin, the Rue du Château, and the Rue Notre Dame (Menant, 6, 16, 18) Gerville, ¹⁹⁷¹ Yessin la Hougue, 633 Amiot, 126, Vita, 162)

Fleury-Vallee, 23, 34, 62, 643 Ménant, 3, 133 Voisse la Hougue, 813 Gerville, 4, 4. The walls and ditches have disappeared, and the course of the river has been diverted, but the plan of the defences has been clearly made out by the industry of local antiquieres it 129 j.; Blendel, Reductio, 132, 236; Pontaumont, Documents, 361; Youns a Hougen for Gers ... a 4. Since the complete to of the walls the piace had been wire housest in a though it had been pledged to the ling ish by the king of Navarge in 1378 and held by them for fifteen years, it had never yet yielded to force (Voicin in Hougue, 66, Amiot, 265, Gerville, 205, Covilie-Lavine, 1v. i. 248, Blondel, 257, 438, 439; Ann Ric. II, 164; Wais. B. 214).

^{*} Tie. Liv gu, ga; Vica, 248; Fiest Lefe, 209; Minant, 19, 9 t.

ever shift ng sand1. The English, working by night in groups. of three, gathered stones and brushwood from the hillsides to the south, and each gang brought down its sledge-load and floated it to the front by cross-cuts dug among the watercourses, hoping thus to form a shelter against the hail of stones. But as fast as the waitle was erected, the besieged set it on fire with bails of flaming tow shot from their engines? or tore it up by means of barbed c aws flung out from the walls4. Despairing of a rapid success, the duke of Gloucester then resolved to starve the garrison into submission⁵. He therefore fortified his lines strongly with towers and ditches*, built huts for his men out of range of the guns, laid down great stores of provisions, and brought up a fleet of ships from Jersey and Guernsey to block the sea front and stop the entrance of supplies. He gathered delvers from the countrys de to turn the course of the river, but the spring-tides broke through at the new moon?, and all the labour was in vain. Spades, ploughs and harrows were pressed into service, and the soil was thrown up into enormous mounds which overtopped the walls, and up these the attackers swarmed only to find that their tortoises were no match for the stones rained on them from the engines on the battlements. In one place the English sows rooted underground and made a royal mine, which caused the defenders much alarm, bringing on a fight in which, according to the English account, they had the worse of it, but in the end the miners were paffled by the rock and unstable sands. A vulnerable part of the walls was found on the northern front, but it was not possible to bring the guns to bear upon it. The earl of March had pushed an engine close to the walls and covered it with a bulwark. On Midsummer Day the French made a determined sally, burnt the bulwark, and damaged the engine badly; but they failed to break through the b ockading line, and the harm they did was

¹ Tit. Liv ga.
2 Ibid. 53; Fant Life, 1224 Ducheme, Antiq. 11 406.
4 Vita, 136 * To Liv. 53. * Ibid 1515 Tit Liv 13. 4 Vita, 196.

[·] Ibid 53, 55

A Collins, viit. 107, Blondel, Reducto, 214.

^{*} Ibid, 2.32 eqq., Ducheire, Antiq. ii. 406. The later story (Vointa la Houghe, Ba) that the English dragged guns into position against the weak point when the tide ebbed and removed them when the sta returned is supported by no contemporary evidence. and a propably due to confusion of this stege with that of 1450, when the place was retakes by the French.

110 Conquest of Lower Normandy Completed [CH 191

speedily repaired. The besieged sent messages of ever increasing urgency to the court at Paris by means of runners who summ the estuary at its mouth?; but when no he p was sent and food began to fail, the garrison showed signs of disaffect on. Nevertheless, the first overtures for a capitulation proved fruitless, as the spirit of resistance was as yet by no means broken. One day, however, a fleet of thirty vessels was seen in the offing. For a moment the hopes of the French rose high with the thought that help had come at last, but when the ships drew nearer they discovered that they were really bringing strong reinforcements from Erg and to help in the reduction of the town. Then at length they melded to despair, and on Aug. 222 an appointment was drafted whereby the earl of March, John Lord Clifford, Walter Hungerford, Gerard Usflete, John Robsart, and William Beauchamn, acting on behalf of the duke of Cloucester, entered into an agreement with the garrison that they should have till Michaelmas to apply for help to the French king, but if no rehef arrived by that date, they should surrender4. The English used the interval to make preparations to beat off any reneving force that might appear. None, however, attempted a rescue, and so when Michaelmas came Cherbourg made an honograble surrender after five months of heroic isolation. It is usual to speak of this surrender as an act of treachery, and among the French it became a tradition that an officer of the garnson, Jean d'Angennes, accepted money from the English?. It is certain that when he left the place, he had a safe-conduct to go where he pleased and that he went to Rouge, where he was subsequently beheaded by order of King Henry* During the stege the English had lost heavily, but the loss was repaid. by the value of the exprure, which moreover released 3000 seasoned troops to help forward the attack on Rouen'.

Lake most other Norman towns Cherbourg did not take long to accommodate itself to the new situation. Within a few weeks of the surreader the great abbey of Our Lady of the Yow, built l A. Collim, viii, 203. Rym, 18. 638 ; Bréquigny, 54.

1 Vita, 157

Tit. Let. 56; Vitt, 162

Month: ii not eq., Wharm, ti had, Vomn in Roughe, 75. He is commonly styled the commander, but erronauty (Rym. ii 616)

Chérud, 66.
 Norm, Chron. (Williams) 191, (Hellot) 46.

by the Empress Matilda in fulfilment of a vow made by William the Conqueror, received back its possessions? Immigrants flocked in from all parts of England and Irelands; houses and tenements were freely granted to the new-comerss; the names of the streets were altered; the church of the Trinity, which still stands on the sea front, was completeds, the castle was repaired and garrisoned with 40 men-at-arms and 120 archers; and n 1419 Cherhourg was made the chief town of its vicous instead of Valognes?. It was one of the last places to be recovered by the French.

In the meantime great progress was being made with the main campaign to the east. At the end of February Clarence had been placed in command of the troops on the eastern confines of the territory in English occupations: the government of the weeman of Auge, Orbec, and Post Audemer had been entrusted to him, subject to the authority of the bails and the Norman Echiquier*: and, saving to Henry the homage and military service of the feudal tenants, the right of taxation, and the control of woods and forests, he had been granted the loruship of the royal demesne in these vicontes and that of Pont-Authou¹⁴. Early in March he consolidated the English hold of the valley of the Touques by the capture of Courtonnell, Chambrois13, and Faugnernon13, and by the surrender of La Rivière de Thibouville on March 14 he secured a passage across the Rislett. On April 9, after a fifteen days' siege, he reduced the strong castle of Harcourt, where he found an exceptionally rich treasure of money, jewels, and other valuables 18. But he met with an unusually defeat resistance at the great Benedictine abbey of Bec, which was held by a garrison of desperate Frenchmen. They had stripped the neighbouring region bare, so that great numbers of homeless people took refuge in the fortified enclosure of the abbey, bringing with them their cattle and whatever food they could carry. The

```
* Rym. ic. 633.

* Bréquigny, rol, 217, 126.

* e.g. Humphrey street, named from the duke of Gloucester in 1420 (ibid 150).

* The chore, the chapele, and the tower were finished about 1423.

* Luce, 1, 237.

* Detaile, Buillie, 9; Bréquegny, 91.

* Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 254.

* Third. 327 sqq.

* Third. 327 sqq.

* The Liv. 49.

* The piam is now called Broglie

* Thed 1 Van, 240.

* Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 292

* Bréquigny, 7 (where the capitalation is mid-ated); Poefe, ii. 176, Verneuil, 220.

* Bee Chron. $12, $7
```

112 Conquest of Lower Normandy Completed [CH. 191

abbey was enclosed by a strong wall, and the monks had to watch with dismay the demolition by the garrison of their outlying but dings, including the old chapel of their saintly founder Herlouin. The recently appointed abbot, Robert de Valée, rema ned at Paris or Pontoise during the siege!. The hope of the defenders lay in the dauphin, who as usual did nothing. They nevertheless held our manfully for some time; but after the fall of Harcourt, the duke of Clarence brought up the whole of his force and assailed them day and night?. About three weeks later they lost heart, and after setting fire to most of the abbey buildings, they opened negotiations which led to their surrender on May 4, the garrison being permitted to go away with nothing but the clothes they stood in. The wretched monks had been grievously pillaged by the defenders, they had nothing but the grist of their mills on which to support themselves and their servants, and even when they had sent to all their distant granges, they could not raise half enough to satisfy the English demands, the victors being particularly stern in their treatment of the monks, doubtless because the new abbot showed no sign of submission*. On June 19 custody of the abbey's temporalities was restored to them, but all the profits had still to go to the king, and the monastery was occupied by an English garrison of twenty men-at-arms and sixty archers7.

The fate of Bec apparently had its effect on the defenders of Evreux, the next place to be besieged, since it capitulated to the duke of Exeter on May 20, only four days after he had been commissioned to reduce it.

In consequence of the operations of the duke of Clarence, the first stages of the king's eastward progress were peaceful He was at Lisieux by May 27°, on June 2 and 3 he was at Bernayle, where he appointed the earl of March his heutenant

1 1bid $11 Porce, ii 174

471)

⁷ Rynz, iz. 598.

⁸ Ibid 789, Brequigny, zz., Otterbourne, 281, Wassin 329, North Chron. 191.

⁸ Ibid 789, Sep. 2, x 154/x6.

⇒ Ibid 57–59.

Bee Chron, $5, $6, 215 Poefe, 11, 176.
 Norm, Chron, (Williams) 282, (Helbt) 344 Bee Chron, 86.

⁴ Bec Chron. 26, 27 a16, Porte, ii. 177, 179; Monstier, 470; Brequigny, 19.

He did not take be outh of fealty till Feb. 10, 1419 (Galt. Chine Rt. 236; Monnter, and general warden for all Normandy! He then visited Becl and Le Neubourgl, and by June 6 had reached Louviers4.

On the same day the king issued orders that musters of all available forces were to be held as soon as possible. To what extent the numbers of his troops had increased since the landing at Touques can only be guessed. We know, indeed, that large reinforcements, numbering at least 500 men-at arms and 1500 archers, had been sent from England under the duke of Exerce⁴; but though many writs are extant? showing the names of the officials responsible for the inspection now ordered and the captains whose forces came under review, there is no record of the numbers returned.

Louviers had only recently been fortified, but the duke of Clarence described it as a very strong town*, and it justified his words by holding out for the better part of three weeks. During the siege the king had a narrow escape from a stone shot that passed close to him and smashed the pole of his tent as he was talking with the earl of Sal sbury at the door. It remains a dark biot on his fame that when the siege was over he hanged eight of the gunners, a ninth being spared only at the intercession of Cardinal Orsini, and even then being condemned to imprisonmeat for life10. Inc feeling of the townspeop e was strongly

T Rym ix. 595.

* In a letter dated July 5 (Delpit, 22). " Tit. Lev 38; Vice, 169, Stretche, 271, Kingsford, Lit. 42.

W ITE

¹ Rym in. 592 * Chane Ware, See 1, 1364, 19, 604 Brequigny, 19, 2131 Bec Chron Bys Poets, it. 1774 Gena, 124.

^{*} Brequigay, 29.

* Chanc. Warr., Ser. I, 1364/61.

* Rym ix. 595, Vita, 166.

* Tit. Liv. 56, Vita, 164, Walt it. 318. One estimate gives their numbers at 15,000, that the force was really a big one. We know that an absurd figure, but an indication that the force was really a big one. We know that great care had been taken to keep open communication between England and Normundy. Early in February a force of 16x men-at-arms and 6ya archers was told off to talkquard the ma under the date of Exerce or John Arunder his deputy (in Bul. 5 Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 14, 1418, March 1, 1418, March 5, 1418; Cal. Pat 1416-22 right, Design, 1-12, while liver was fence that another equation, committing of four targes and four balingers, was at sea for the same purpose, under Richard Lord Scrope of Bolton (ibid). About the middle of April the regent ordered that musters should be held of various contingents about to cross to France (Cal. Pat. 2416-22, p. 201). They belonged to Henry Lord Fitzhugh (So men at arms, 240 archers), Gilbert Unfrastile (to and Bo. Edward Houard, count of Mortain (40 and 120, the dake of Exerce (260 and 500), and the duste of Clarence (60 and 100). All were settaned for one year. The payment of a quarter s wages to them as recorded in its. Rolt 6 Hen. V. Parch, Jane 1, 1418. On May 9 the same to, records payment of wages for the thip-ment of the duce of Enterer and other hade going to Normandy with their resistant. T Rym itt. 393.

* Morito, i, 103, 116, 123

114 Conquest of Lower Normandy Completed [CH. LVI

Burgund and, and this doubtless curtailed resistance. By June 20 the English were in possession of the town, where the king stayed a few days, appointing officers to administer and defend it, and arranging for the payment of a fine of 8000 crowns, in return for which the inhabitants would be allowed to retain their possessions3.

Little time, however, was wasted, and by June 27th the army was before Pont de l'Arche, at the confluence of the Seine and the Eure. Here orders were given for further musters to be held by July 27th. The king took up his quarters at the Cistercian abbey of Borports, founded by Richard the Lion-Heart. The abbot at once made his submission, and was accorded the king's protection?.

The town of Pont de l'Arche, encircled with its wals and ditches, formed a strong fortress at the southern end of the famous bridge that had long been the only passage of the Seine for miles around. On a small island close to the bridgehead on the opposite bank stood a square fort built in very early days to protect the passage from attack from the north*. The task before the English was thus a new and formidable one. To their right was the fortified town of Pont de ."Arche, backed by the river Eure about half a mile away, and in front of them the wide deep Seine flowing swiftly amidst grassy. islands, while thousands of enemies, with perfect freedom of movement, awaited them on the further shore. Nothing, however, cau didaunt the resolution of the English, and during the first fortnight in July the town was subjected to a series of vigorous assaults. These all failed, and the besiegers now saw that if success was to be achieved, they would have to secure both banks of the river. The exploit of crossing the Seine seems for some reason to have made a great impression

4 Wah, ir. 329; Vita, 170; Gesta, 123

1 Rym 13: $950

Tit Liv 51, Yin, 171, Nigerel, 10 | Durmville, Port de l'Arche, i. 9. 24 Delpit, 222, Cochon, 279, Monstr. ili. 176.

20 North, Chron, 157

Norm Chron, 184 eg William Paillens was appointed boille of Louviers on July 12 (Bréquigny, 32, 17). Ibid 12

Brequigny, 31, Cochon, 229, Monste til. 275; Tit Liv 51, Vita, 172.
Brequigny, 203; Gall. Christ m. 663.
But in he thereesth or fourteenth century in place of the old one which dated from the time of Charles the Baid.

on the mind of the English, and soon gave rise to picturesque stones from which it is difficult to disentangle what really happened. According to one of these accounts, the besingers were pestered by shouting bands of Frenchmen, who apparently howered on the opposite bank of the river and caused constant night alarms. The king presently sent John Cornwall to Jean Malet, lord of Graville, who was conducting the defence", requesting him to put a check on these "noisy jabbering vokels9 " Malet replied that he had no power over them, whereupon Cornwall made him a bet that before next day he would be over the river himself to see what could be done. "If I succeed," he said, "you shall give me your best courser, with saddle, bridle, and gilt harness, but if I fail, I will give you 2000 crowns to buy a bonnet for your wife? " When Cornwall reported what had passed, the king at once called a council and ordered that boats should be got ready for an immediate crossing. The English had certainly brought with them pontoons and other apparatus for crossing rivers, and these were supplemented with boats made out of wicker and covered with hides. Very early on the following morning. coop mea put across in the darkness, while the attention of the French was diverted by a group of swimmers who splashed and shouted in the water some three miles down streams. Among the first to push off was Cornwall himself, who had with him sixty men in eight small boats and a horse carrying small guns and other necessaries for attack. He disembarked on a small is and, where he planted archers to cover the main landing. This statement is hard to accept, seeing that all the islands thereabouts are far nearer to the southern than to the northern bank. Such, however, is the story, and it is added that Cornwall knighted his son on the islands, though the boy was only thirteen years old. The important fact is that the English did get across the river by July 146, and we know on the authority of the duke of Clarence that the feat was accomplished without the loss of a man?. The French irregulars on the northern bank Cordeliert, 261; Fenta, 561. For an account of him, am Duranville, i. 26, ii. 42.

 Rausez gaeruli et clamosi, "Streeche, 272.

⁴ Road. Monstrelet (its. 275 sq.) has the story in a shorter form, with some imamportant differences in details.

^{*} Le Fèvre, 1, 343; * News of the crossing had reached Paris by July 13 (St Donys, vi. 260).

116 Gonquest of Lower Normandy Completed [cm. 191

at once melted away. The Finglish kept up communications by means of two bridges, which they constructed at Bonport and Les Damps, about a mile below and above the town respectively. Once on the other bank, Gilbert Umfraville built a strong bulwark close to the fort at the bridge-head and set up his banner as a challenge. Upon this a Scotsman shouted in defiance from the walls that the banner would be taken beforeingnt, and 5000 men streamed out to capture it. But Umfraville with eighty men drove them al. in again, and following them up before they had time to raise the drawbridge, slew crowds of them by shooting through the bars of the portculus? So, at any rate, it was believed in Kenilworth priory. What is certain is that the garrison soon recognised that resistance was hopeless?, and the town formally capitulated on July 20.

It may well have been a revelation to king Henry to find that the "jabbering yokels" who had plagued hit i on the north bank were under the command of the lord of Chaste lux?, who had just helped to seize Paris for the duke of Burgundy. He at once sent a herald to the duke to demand an explanation. The reply left Henry in no doubt as to the actual position. I he duke, he saw was preparing to give battle, and must henceforth be reckoned a "ful enemy"." For the two card nals had so far succeeded in their efforts that during their conferences at La Tombe the Armagnacs had agreed to co-operate with the Burguadians in resisting the expected attack on Rouen. To this end the Armagnac admiral Robert de Braquemont was empowered to negotiate with the Burgundian commander at Roben with a view to securing a united frontagan si the linglish. attack. An arrangement was accordingly signed on June 5. whereby up to next Michaelmas each side, while retaining its bacges, was to render help to the other against the common enemy. If the English should appear first before Pont del'Arche, where the garrison was Armagnac, the men of Rouen were to come to the rescue. If on the contrary Rouen were first assumed, the men of Pont de l'Arche would send heip. It was Streeche, 171.

There were to have been negotiations earlier (Delpit, 121).

Norm, Chron, 1873 St Denya, vi. ng84 Monetr iii. 1764 Cochon, 279.

Ibid 222, Tit Liv 60, Vita, 176, Getta, 123, Cochon, 279, 342 Bourgeon, 103.
 For safe-conducts much to the garrison on July 29, acc Rym. ix. 602; Bacquigny, 203.
 He was made captain-general of Normandy on June 24 (Chartellux, 83)
 See the attent of Heavy dated July 21 (Despit, 222). Cr. Cesta, 123

also stepulated that the Burgundians were to be recognised as the ruling power in Rouen, and that the peasants were to be unmolested in the fields; and provision was made against the possibility of defeat1. But the compact was too hollow to ast. Even before the siege of Pont de l'Arche the duke of Burgundy appointed a new admirala; and though Braquemont took part in the defence of Port de l'Arches, he withdrew from in litary activity after the surrender. The two parties were soon at each other's throats with envenomed bitterness, but the compact had served some purpose in stiffening the resolve of the garrison of Roven to resist to the death.

The English had already raided far afield to the north of the river, reaching the very outskirts of Rouen⁵; and as soon as Pont de l'Arche was in his hands, King Henry sent the duke of Exeter with heralds to summon the city to surrender. But the garrison sallied out upon them, and many of the English were slain, complete disaster being averted only by the coolness of the English leaders. When news of this insult reached the king, he swore that he would be at Rouen in three days', and he was as good as his word. The army moved forward from Pont de l'Arche on July 29, and that night the king arrived on the flat ground on the eastern side of Rouen⁸.

1 C. Beaute paire, Accord, 109 sqq.

* Anselme, viz. 826.

D.K.R. xli. 695.
Cochios, 279; Monstr iii 177.
L. Page, 2; Chron Ric II-Hen. VI, p. 46; Streeche, 271; Beut, u. 187, 394.

1 Streeche, 232.

Thu date is given by Stretche (271), who is confirmed by Page ("The Friday. before Lammas Day, the king remeryd in riche array, xii 6); cf Gesta, 121; Brut, ii 387, 39; Stretche says that on the following day the king a lotted stations to his various captains; so that the statement (Vita, 179, and many modern writers) that the siege began on July 29 is not strictly accurate.

CHAPTER LVII

THE SIEGE OF BOURN

In dealing with the topography of Rouse at the time of the stepe by Henry V, we are fortunate in nonsessing an accurate picture of the town as seen from the south back in 1623. Whatever may have happened in the meartime, the external appearance of the city had certainly altered but little. Next in waiter comes a minute description of the city in 1688 by a Franciscan, Nicholas Tallepied⁶. But above all we have detailed specifications as to the repairing and rebuilding of the eastern nortion of the wall between 1403 and 1403, these are preserved in the city archives and have been worked over with great thoroughness by a band of local antiquaries.

Thanks to these and other sources, we know that King Henry had before him the task of besieging a city eaclosed with a high wall some five miles in circumterence, rising from the tlats by the river to the vine clad* slopes that encircled it immediately to the west, north, and east, while on the fourth side the wall to lowed the line of the Scine, where several gates opened on to the quass*. On the land side the walls were pierced by five "Taille pied, e.g. His account of the fortifications, which had been little absertd since the time of them v.V. of participate v. inspecting. A global to remain of the time git of the defences that also be obtained from two journals kept during the seege of the cown by Henry IV of France in 1590: 2, one by a member of the defending force, and one by a captain of the English force that was aiding the lung (Farso, 2. 196, Coningaby, 72 Richard, 225-223).

See esp. Richard, 48, 35, 64, 277 et alibe. Cochet, Culture, 340; Grisel, 25, 89.

At this date Jacques le Lieur, one of the échronts, who was interested in a scheme for securing a better water supply for the town, drew up exact plans of the buildings abutting on the streets beneath which the new water-pipes were laid. These plans were written on parchiment and bound in a book, which is new among the municipal archives in the Hitel of Fills. It has justly been cailed "one of the most precious documents in the bistory of a town that it is possible to conceive." The whole has been published in reduced facismile (Adeine, Rouen au xvt siècle). The picture referred to appears in this work and has also been reproduced by Sarrazin (Rouen, 1955, Jeanne d'Arc, 145) and by Cook (310). Barrazin, Rouen, 51, reproduces a picture of Rouen dating from about 1450, but this is of much less value.

^{}Severa gares in his aide were by afterwards, till the exempter reached thirteen, he has more than some agent to have proved in he tags if Henry V.C. Readerparts, Innone Science, 18. For aux, Duct. 477, 484, Adelies, 2, Qyan, Place 51, Normanday Monumentale, 4) strong gates, each fortified with flanking towers and covered by outworks beyond the moat! The wall, except of course on the river front, was protected by a deep ditch. More than sixty towers stood at frequent intervals between the gates". each furnished with three guns, while smaller engines were mounted on the intervering spaces. The great excuste was built by Phi ip Augustus ir place of a much smaller one that had protected the town in Norman times. The same king built the strong castle on the slope of the hill of Bouvreuil at the north-west angle of the walls. It had a great donjon and a strongly fortified bailey, and could be held even though an enemy were in possession of the city that lay at its feetly. Of all this elaborate system of defences nothing now survives save the conjon of the castle and some stretches of wall on the northern and eastern sides, though the whole circuit can still be traced by following the line of the modern boulevards, the position of the five gares being marked by open spaces.

Viewed from without, the city seemed a forest of towers and spires, for within its walls, besides the renowned cathedra, were no fewer than thirty-five parish churches and thirty-four religious houses, representing every variety of regular life, chief among which were the abbeys of St Lo, St Amand, and St Ouen. Another of the wonders of the place was the great stone bridge built by the Empress Matilda. It spanned the Seine from the Porte du Pont, in the centre of the river front, to the suburb of Emendreville (now St Sever)4. Of its fifteen arches, the four nearest the northern bank were built of wood?, so that they might easily be destroyed in case of emergency. These had

¹ The names of the gates, from west to east, were the Porte Cauchout, the Porte Beurroutl, the Porte Beauvoisine, the Porte St Halaire, and the Porte Martanville. (Périaux, Dict. 484; Normandie Monumentale, 3; Putteux, 6; Richard, 301; C. Beaurepane, Invent Bouen, 30; J. Page, 5, Gosta, 124; Vita, 177).

^{*} J Page, 4; cf Puneux, g.

<sup>Itod. 3 eqq ; cf Vita, 177; Périaux, 16;
J. Page, 5; Monstr di. 28;
J. Ito castle replaced the old fortress of the dukes of Normandy, which stood sear.</sup> the water side on the ground now occupied by the market place. For n. Château, 34: It was mostly demonshed as 1990, but we fortunately have Jacques to Lieur's picture of it as it was in 1927. h. H. Langlon, Note, 103, Farin, 2, 99, Basin, 340. The picture in reproduced in Adeline, t. 11.).

I Johnson, I., Durany lie, 269, 170. For pictures of it in 1868, see Adeine. June, non-eg, 24, 26. Three archer had fallen before egas, and subsequent reprincipations meetly actions about it he rules. In $355 at may replaced by a suspection bridge, which rested parity on the old piers, and this in its turn made way for an iron bridge in 1888.

Chita sell, Dom. Ang. t. 4.

been badly damaged by floods in # 1821, and if as seems likely, they remained unrepaired, the value of the bridge was jargely destroyed for both sides in the coming struggle. When Henry began his siege, the southern end of the bridge terminated in a barbican known as the Bridge Castle, which was separately fortified on an islet communicating by a drawbridge with the river bank?, and it seems to have caused some apprehension to the besiegers, who stat oned a large section of their forces in front of it. In the suburb of Emendreville were several religious houses. No attempt was made to defend these, and the French abandoned and destroyed the famous Gailey Close³, an important dockyard on the southern bank, for long famous, though little used for some years past.

Three streams—the Renelle, the Robec, and the Aubelte flowed through the city, and sumplied water for its domestic and industrial needs. For Rough was a manufacturing town, with a lively external trade. By means of the Seine it had easy communication with Paris on the one hand and the English Channel on the other, and the dues paid to the Ficome de l'Eau. by ships leaving the port amounted to a vast sum every year. As at Caen, the importance of the gild of porters is a strong indication of the great volume of its trade. There were numerous other gilds, but by far the most powerful and masterful was that of the drapers, whose statutes, framed in 14246, yield a picture of the industry from which the wealth of the town was chiefly derived. The craft was divided roughly into three branches—weaving, fulling, and shearing—and every apprentice was to be instructed in each branch during his three years' term.

By 1175 the citizens had secured recognition of their rights as a commune under their own mayor?, and ever since they had struggled to maintain and extend their liberties in opposition to the claims of archbishops and kings. The Addine, Quan, no. 26; Pérsaux, Diet. 468.

Norm Chrest, sty

Cal. Doc. Franc. pp. 1331; 4.

^{*} Duranville, Rouce, 49, 167, 170; A. Ducheme, Scriptores, 1208; Farin, i. 100; Valdory, 20; Richard, 40; Pameun, 91; J. Page, 13.

⁴ In 1409 they amounted to 4666 lev. 23 unio IC. Beautopoine, bacomel, 21). For the text of the Coursisses de la Viccomté de l'Eus, see stud. 146, 129. Ene the teade of Roses with Para, Berrany, Spain, Portuga, England and Flunders, see Chirale, ii. 482; C. Beaurepaire, Notes, 10. 246-272. Of Octomosness, 12. 413
C. Beaurepaire, Victorité 276, 176
Octomosness, 12. 69; E. H. Langlou, 205-215

121 government of the city had been in the hands of a mayor, ichevist and a council of too burgesses known as peers! But the disputes of the townsfolk with the king culminated in 1 382, when they broke into the famous "Harelle," a rising which was only suppressed after fearful havor and slaughter, and which was followed by the suppression of the commune?. It was, however, a time when royal authority was weak; the city soon recovered its defiant spirit, and within a few years Rouen was again governed by its own étherans. Thus when Henry appeared before its walls, the place was virtually in possession of its old privileges. There was a de facto mayor, the citizens chose their own officials, and organised their own forces for the defence of the walls4.

1417

With such a record, it is small wonder that Rouen was hotly Burgundian. When in May, 1417, the duke of Burgundy's manifesto against the Armagnac government was posted on the thurch doors, wild noting broke out in the streets, and it was in vain that the bishop of Lisieux and Guillaume lord of Bacque-Vi le strove to bring the citizens to reason. I owards the end of July it became known that the dauphin was approaching at the head of a strong force?. Thereupon the citizens rose, murdered the basile, Raoul de Gaucourt, and flung his deputy over the bridge into the Seine! When the dauphin appeared before the town next day (July 2 (), he was refused admission*, but after a part of his forces had been admitted to the castle, which remained loyal, negotiations were opened, with the result that he pardoned the rebellious townsmen and was suffered to enterthe city as an assertion of his authority. though his foreign mercenaries, eager for plunder, had to remain outside!! The city paid a tallage of 16,000 livres and advanced a loan of 1200,

- Chârsel, Commune, a afg; C. Reassepare, Vicernal, 279, 322, 332. Chéruel, Commune, u. 43 raog , 551, pt. 12. 115; Périaux, Diet 660
- Chérue, Commune n 475
 C. Bentrepaire, Invent. Robert, 28, 20, 25, 39, 401
 Félix, 2 p. xv. Chéruel.

- Commune, ii. 496 App 48

 * Cagny, 108, Bouquet, Notice, 185.

 * Norm Chron 107 Maneytle, iv. 56; Hellot, Martel, 104.

 * Cochoo, 3413 Vallet de Viriville, i. 53.

 * Norm Chron. 1773 Cagny, 101, 54 Denys, vi 943 Chéruel, Commune, 11 513 Gaucourt had been appointed sands of Reuen in December. 1427 (Bave, at 150). He was lord of Argicouri and Missons-sur-Seine (Ameline, was 167, Chersel, Dom Arg. pt. 11-24, Faise, u. 151), and must not be confounded with the defender of Hardess.

* St Denys, vl. 92, 91; Norm. Chron. 178; Fenize 59 1; Le Fètre, L. 296. 14 For the agreement, see Chéruel, Dom. Ang. k 10, pt. st. 23 299.

21 Cochon, 14t.

and the eastle was put under the command of Jean d'Harcourt, count of Auma c, nephew of the archbishop3. But the dauphin had to hurry away to defend Paris from the duke of Burgundy, and no sooner had he gone than the townsfork again declared for the duke and no taxation^a. Before the end of the year they entered into communication with Guy le Bouteiller, commander of the Burgundian garrison at Dieppe. He brought over 1400 or 1500 men, drove out the Armagraes from the castle, and became captain of Roven, the citizens paying the wages of his troops2. The new-comers were at first regarded as "more English than French " but when Paris was in the power of the Borgundians and Henry's army was believed to be approsching, gatrison and townsfolk alike were for offering resistance. Early in the spring, indeed, some of the burgesses had presented themselves before the count of Charolais at Amiens asking for help against the English, who were hourly expected to begin the siege; but though the count promised aid, he sent noned. However, as soon as the revolution had been effected in the capital, urgent messages were sent thither, and promptly answered by the despatch of 600 fighting men, including 300 archers*.

It is usual nowadays to say that the position of Rouen, commanded as it is by a half-circle of hills, is such as to render defence honeless; and under modern conditions of warfare this is doubtless true. But in the Middle Ages the very converse was the fact. The hills, it is true, were very near; but the range of artillery was short, and so far from heing at the mercy of an attacker. Rouen might fairly claim to have been unconquered. In the eleventh century French attempts to take it had twice been repelled. It had indeed yielded to Philip Augustus in $204 after forty days' resistance; but the inhibit ants were disgusted at their abandonment by King John and had no zeal for his cause. During the rising of 1382 the royal troops had never been expelled from the castle, and the king therefore had no great difficulty in recovering the town. But with town and eastle in the same hands there is no doubt that Chéruel, Done. Ang i. 313 Beaucourt, 1. 733 of Jun. 539 Cousmon, 164. The dauphin left about Aug. 5 (Beaucourt, i. 72).

¹ St Denys, vi. 148; Norm Chron. 1834 Bourgeon, 144 Juv. 139; Cochon, 340 Chérnel, Dom Ang L 36, pt. 11, 22; Puneux, Dict. 62; Th. Souquet, 212

Monstr H., 250. Cochon, 278.

St Denys, ri. 290; Cordeliers, 262.

the English had before them a gigant c task. The dissensions of a year before were buried, and ail in the town were ready to obey the instructions of the duke of Burgundy. As chief civil officer they elected Jean Segneult, who regularly signed his proc amations as "having the justice and jurisdiction of the office of mayor1." The military defence was in the hands of Guy le Bouteiller, together with Gu lliume Houdetot¹, who was baille, Alain Blanchards, who had planned the rising of the previous year and was now captain of the crossbowmen, and Jean Jourdain, who commanued the gunners*. The clergy were as Burgundian in their sympathies as the townstok? The erchbishop, Louis d'Harcourts, who was identified with the Armagnaes, kept quite away, and the leadership of the clergy fell n'o the hands of Master Robert de Lavet one of the cathedral canons, who in spite of his sixty five years, threw himself heartily into the spirit of the defence and pronounced the excommunication of the hinglish king?. As soon as Rouen had been restored to Burgundian control in the previous winter, an order from Troves had commanded the destruction of all churches and other buildings in the suburbs that mught afford shelter to the English. These drastic measures were doubtless postponed till the last moment, but when the duke of Exeter arrived, he found all churches, houses, and hedges outside the walls levelled with the ground, the suburbs stripped "as bare as my hand," and their inhabitan's huddled within the

That the inhabitants did not anticipate a long siege is shown. by their admitting enormous numbers of outsiders just before the gates were finally closed. The figures given by English

¹ Sarrarm, Jeanne d'Art, 151, 165, Th. Brutturt, 192. It had been the official formula before the mayorally was abbluhed (Chérurt, Commune pr. n. 15, 11), and in the capitulation Segments is called mayor (ibid. App. 43, Rym. ix. 667).

^{*} Chéruei, Dom. Ang. i. 33, A. Martin, Fétamp, i. 224; Failut, u. 124.
* Chéruei, Dom. Ang. i. 22, pt. if 33 aqq. Moostrelet (iii 305) cash sum "capitaine du menu commun, and Waarin "le capitaine du menu peuple," il 202.

* Moostr lu 105

^{*} Third son of John, third count of Harcour (Postmerage, 140), been in 1384 (Gall. Christ. xi. $5), chosen archbohop by the chapter "propter natulity at aplendorern" to 1407 (Game, 6 141 Eubel, 1 448). Owing to disputes with the pope, he clid not make his entry tota Rouen till 14:16

Thereal, Dom Ang. L 22; Waterin, is. 262; Monter Le.; C. Beautopaus, Invent. ROME, 43, 45.

Dated Jan 30, 1418 (Périaux, 169, Chérnel, Dom Ang., pt. 11, 11 Paneux, 16). * J. Page, 31 Streeche, 192, Bruti it. 1951 Archaeologiu, trut 1855 Norm. Chron. 189; Sarramu, Jeanne d'Arc, 353.

writers are no doubt greatly exaggerated!, but they bear witness to the general impression among the besiegers that the town was terr hay overcrowded. As for its normal population a census of heads of households in thirty-three par shes, taken in 12742, affords reason for the belief that the population then was about 50 0003. There followed a period of prosperity, when the town certainly grew, but the Black Death inflicted frightful loss4 and the trouples of the Harelle had further reduced the number of inhabitants. We know from an official statement of 1409 that many houses had been demolished and the population had greatly diminished, while two years later the city was said to be in great part uninhabited and in danger of being anandoned by traders. Henry V, on the other hand, described it as I the most notable place in France save Paris?, I and though he had a motive for exaggerating its greatness, his words suggest that perhaps its decline had not ready been so disastrous as the reports just cited make out. Modern writers have been as free as contemporaries with estimates of the number of people in the city during the siege, but their figures are only guesswork. It is certain that the town was very full, and that at first alwere full of corb tence and so free from apprehensions of famine that bread was allowed to be sold in the market on every weekday, instead of on Fr days only, as was the rule in normal times.

Little 5 known of the siege of Rouen from the standpoint of the defenders, for the records of the deliberations of the town officials are missing from heb. 28, 2412 to April 18, 1447.

Chérnel, Commune, 1284.

So Paneus, 15, and C + ite. Recherches, 186. The estimate of Perious, however, in only 40,000 to 50,000 (Diet. p. xii)

* Pulseux, 15, though it is impossible to believe his statement that 100,000 puople perioded in four months

Ordonnance, iz. 413 C. Beaucepaue, Vicoraté, 715 Puineux, 24, E. Fréville, 1270.
Ordonnance, iz. 413, Chéruel, Dom. Ang., pt. 11. 23 Périaux, 165 sq.; cf. Puineux, 244 Coville, Recherches, 301

244 Corolie, Recherches, 398

2 In a letter, duted Aug. 10, 2418, to the mayor of London (Delput, 223); Chérnel, Dom. Aug., pt. 11-139.

Defended her given that all should lay in supplies for we more the (Monage in allay Waurin, 1 246), but doubtless this only affected the regular inhabitants.

* Casked * Lavres de Deliberations des Echevins," the extant volumes of which are * Casked * Layres de Deliberations des Echevins," the extant volumes of which are preserved in the Hötel de Velle (of La Quérière, and Leftvie-Pocitalis, lvii, 9). It has long been supposed that the missing broke were carried off by the English, but the la use begins moven reare before the English occupation and endlia wear or two before their departure. No tence of the missing books has been found in Fing and , there is move over another gap from 1396 to 1401 (C. Beaumpaire, Invent. Rosen, 46) Richard, 49).

Figure (14) gives a 0.000, including the garriern, which he enterates at about 30,000. Other houses with me figure is 270,000, is one of the most modest. p. all z

But from the standpoint of the besiegers we have information of quite exceptional interest. In the first place we have a description of the siege by Titus Livius, whose direct personal intercourse with the duke of Gloucester and other leaders who were present gave him excellent opportunity for compiling an accurate account. The elaborate academic dress of his narrative, however, not only fatigues the reader, but leaves the impression that the author thought more of his style than his facts. Very different is an account of the siege written in homely English by a plain soldier named John Page, who was in the English force throughout the operations against the town! Under his hand the story quickens into instant life, and plants us under the very walls of the beleaguered city. Who Page was nobody has been able to discover? But he was evidently a man with eyes to see and the wit to tell what he saw. He tells his tale plainly, and himself says that he wrote it down in a hurry, but meant to mend it after the war if he came through alive? But it instantly took the fancy of the Londoners, who read it greedaly, and a generation later a skinner named William Gregory of Aldermary, who became mayor of London in 14514, had every word of it copied in a commonplace book, which is now preserved in the British Museums. Contrary to what is usual in such cases of literacy good intentions. Page did live to amend his poem, and we are able to read it also in its more polished forms,

¹ J. Page, pp. xi₂ x₁ Archaeologia, 200: 44, 48.
² Apparently the only men of the name who figures in the Great Rell of says was an archer in the retinue of Philip Leche (Best. Man. Add. MS. a₄₁yo₄, f. 102).

"All in raff and not in rime

Bycause of space he hadde no tyme,

And when thys werre yout an bende."

And he have liffe he wylle hit a mende."

J Page, 46.

Greg., Chron. pp. 19, 197

Egerton MS 1995 The first version of the poem is printed in "Historical Collections of a Landon ratges" (Cam. 500), 2-42 to which reference is made.

* Parely printed by $\frac{1}{2}$ convbesce in the six in Archaeologia, it if 43 71, from Bodl MS 124, and completed by $\frac{1}{2}$ Midder in 1129 (and aim 161-314), from Harl MSS 753 and 2245 Melecence to the doke of Carence and to the king show that the first version must have been written before the battle of Bauge, and he would version between that even and flerily $\frac{1}{2}$ death $\left(if)$ Page, $25, and Archaeologia, and $\frac{1}{2}$ and proceedings and $\frac{1}{2}$ And templated with $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ for a London aske must, in at Ballial College, Onford (Balato MS 154-14), for any). The way is not element with that of Convbesce, as supposed by Cone, Bauson 112, and Bere, 72. The MS is described by $\frac{1}{2}$. Fluggl in Angua, 2001, (2903), 94. The manuscript was afterwards colleged with the others by $\text{Dr}$ R. Dyboold, who generously communicated the smalls.

but, as n ight have been expected, his first version is certainly the better?.

Like every Englishman of his time, Page believed that the French were keeping King Henry out of h a right!. He had a profound admiration for the king, whom he regarded as "the child of God" and "the royallest prince in Christendoms," and for his brothers the dukes of Clarence and Gioucester* From his frequent mention of Sir Gilbert Umfraville, it seems likely that he was stationed under him on the south bank of the river. He had a chivalrous respect for the valour of the ene mys. though he denounces their demolition of churches and religious houses as a ' cursed deed6 "

It seems impossible to ascertain the exact strength of the force under King Henry when he began his uphill task, but it was certainly smal, and without the reinforcements that afterwards arrived he would probably have failed. It was recognised from the outset that lives must not be wasted in assaults and that the city must be starved into surrender. Some days were apent in securing the ground before the walls, which had been set with caltrops and other entanglements", and many lives were lost before the blockade was complete. On Aug. 1, however, an order was issued that each captain should occupy his appointed grounds, and when all was ready, the king took up his quarters in the new Charterhouse, lately built at the foot of Mont Gargane about a mile away from the walls on the eastern side. Here he established his staff of non-combatants and transacted official business, but for fighting purposes he set up his pavilion close to the Porte St Hilaire opposite the north-eastern corner of the enceinte. The duke of Clarence lay

¹ Page's work was perhaps used by Otterbourse, who finished his chronicle in 1420 (of Otterbourne, 182, with J. Page, 18, Archaeologia, 220. 193). A long extract from the accord version is embedded in the Beut, it 404 422. The Agrace are balled printed in Norday, ends with fouriern lines from Page 5 poem (p. 77). His work was certainly used by Stretche (272), Gesta (227), Tat. Liv. (65), Yeta (195), Peter. Chron., Rous, and of course by several of the successivenesses chronicless. For a modern estimate

⁵ J. Page, 22, 26, 13. 6 Ibid 7, 12, 23. 6 Ibid 3 1 1bid 14

¹ Ibid. g ■ Third 6

P Norm Chron (Williams) 1915 (Hellot) 464 Monstr. ali, 2834 Le Fèrre, i. 3441 Waurin, 1., 219, Corbon, 285. The house was founded by Archbahep Ga linume de Lestrange in 1384 (Farm, pt. V. 127). The wall which surrounded it still remains, but not hing of the but dong is left save the four walls of the chape. The moranery had apparents them spared by the sownshock because of an distance from the fortifications.

at the ruined above of St Gervaix fronting the Porte Cauchaise, and covered all the ground on the west as far as the river bank! The castle and the Porte Houvreuil were watched by the Farl Marshal, the slopes outside the Porte Beauvoisine by the duke of Exeter!. Communication between these four great camps was maintained by deep shelter-trenches! The flat ground to the south of the Seine was held by a large force under the earl of Huntingdon's

The first task of the besiegers was to isolate the abbey of St Catherine's, which stood on the top of the steep hill to the east of the town. This hill was separated from the wall by about a mile of flat marshy land known as the Martainville hields, across which a causeway eight or ten feet high formed the only means of communications. To the north of the causeway the ground was intersected by the channels of the Aube te and the Rober, while to the south⁴ it was exposed to floods from the Seine. The great and famous abbey of St Catherine? had recently been enclosed by a strong wall, with towers and fort fied gates, and thenceforward it was commonly known as St Catherine's Castles. In later days it became a maxim that whoever held St Catherine's held Rouen in his hand!; but in the early fifteenth century this was not yet true. Still the capture of the place was vital to the English, for until this was effected they could not effectually blockade the eastern side of the town-the very quarter from which relief was expected to arrive. For some time after the other gates were blockaded, communications passed between the abbey and the town by the Martainville gate in spite of the vigilance of the earlot Salisbury,

* For a description of the ground and the cameway, see Richard, 77, 80, 83 et pages now the Champ de Mass (Richard, 185).

F Gall, Christ, 31 124

* Taulepied, $3-

¹ J. Page, 3, 6; Norm. Chron. (Williams) 18y, (Hellot) 4x; Streeche, 271; Paston Lett. i. 10; Refigugay, 73

Monete in allej le Pèvre, i. 344.

Dugdais, Barenage, i. 345, Le Fèvre, i. 344; Montte in alle, Brut, ii. 388. The lodgments of the different leaders, as described above, are all originally given in Page (7 23). Ther appear also in Lit. Liv. (6). Vita. 120). Strenche 2011 Peter Chron (448), Passon Lett. (6 20), Monste (10), 283 aq., with variations, Norm. Chron. (187, with variations). For various discrepancies, see Archieol. 1236.

[&]quot;Tit Liv. 60; Vita, 180; Genta, 124; Rym Ix. 619; Fériaux, 170; Dict. 600; Connegaby, 17, 29, 40. Fifurenth-tentury pertures of it are represented by Mantlauton, its 240, and Sarratin, 230. It was destroyed in 2397 (Langiota, Fortermen, 2012), and few traces of its are left.

who was posted with a strong force in a precarious position at the foot of the hild Resolved to stop this intercourse, the English chose a dark night and planted strong sheaters on the ground between the his and the city, and from these laun had a vigorous assault on the abbey. The approach over the precipitous ground was all against the artackers, the alarm was given in the abbey and the attack was beaten off? But the mere attempt was evidence to the garrison that a vital point had been lost, and finding his certifications with Rough severed, the captain resolved to capitulate while there was yet time. Accordingly on Aug. 312 a document was signed whereby the garrison were to evacuate the place, leaving their horses, armour, artillery, and other munitions of war, or the understanding that the abbey and its relics should be spared and its sance and other property remain in undisputed possession of the abbots. The Eng. sh marched in on hept. 1, and henceforth the earl of Sal abury's detectment was set free to strengthes the chain that was tightening round the city.

From the first it had been evident that the benegers must draw largely upon hagiand for their supplies, and the records contain plerty of evidence of the passage of heer, wine, victuals, utensils, and munitions of war. Most of these supplies were shipped to Harfleur, a fleet of vessels supplied by the friendly king of Portugal being stationed at the entrance of the Seine to keep the waterway open. From Harfleur they were forwar led to smaller craft under convox as far up the river as possible?, but at first they were exposed to great risk of capture at Caudebee, where their ver was dominated by the fortress on

I Magon, von Ausm Chron (Helichige, Suichury and airt fem Edward Helland count it Virtue Brequigns 1., Brat it 160 Hears and his high Rom in 619, and Philip Lethe of Chatsworth (Paneux, $35 Cook, 180)

¹ Tit. Lev. 62 ng., Norm. Chron. 189. 1 Kym. 18 Sig.; Pommeraye, 34, Monstr. 181. 284, Le Fèvre, i. 345, Waurin, 11. 249. him halford millions in Jean Nother In the that it received the determinant limited at the other captain of Robert, see D K.R. xit. 697. After the tiege of the town was over, the bulwarks of St Catherine's were demokshed, some of the material being given to the abbot to repair the meeple of the abbey church and the rest used for the various new works that the king trade in band to strengthen but had in the city. D.K.R. said. [1]

⁶ Guiliaume le Mesle (Bréquigny, 433 D. K.R. nli. 7053 Passeur, 1043 Gall. Christ.

⁶ Men. V. Mich., Oct. 27, 1418, Feb. 24, 1419 find y Hen. V. Patch., Aug. 2, 1418, 1814 On Sept. 8, 2418 the mayor of London desputched great plenty of victuals from Generard i gerber with the sais of over wise. It pipes of ale, and 1100 cops, for "your house to dealt of," Delpit, 225, Princip. 122.

Tit. Liv. 61.

Delpit, 225; Tyler, is 225, 226.

the northern bank and blocked by vesse's sent from Rouent. It therefore became imperative to reduce Caudebec, and with this object the earl of Warwick (who had just arrived from Domfront) was sent thither with Gilbert Talbot and a body of troops2. So pressing was the need that the king is said to have gone with the force to direct operations. Some modern writers have supposed that Caudebec made a heroic resistance, and indeed it would have rendered an inestimable service to Rouen by doing so. As a matter of fact, however, six days sufficed to bring the garrison to terms*, and on Sept. 9 t was agreed that the fate of Caudebee should be that of Rouen, and until this was decided it should abstain from any hostile action and, while retaining its English prisoners, should treat them we l⁴. As a guarantee for the execution of this singular treaty, the garrison gave hostages, who were kept in St Catherine's abbey*. The earl of Warwick transferred his men to strengthen the besieging force at Rouen.

Some time before, the English had gained an important success at Quillebeuf, on the south bank of the Seine by the dispersal of a band of 400 desperadoes who had been intercepting supplies coming up the river, eighty of them, including three prominent leaders, being captured on Aug. 161. Thus after the neutralisation of Caudebec the way was clear for the passage of a whole fleet of vessels, and ere long 100 ships were at anchor off Croisset and Quévilly*

Attempts were made to run the blockade from outside and in. Armed vessels for this purpose were equipped at Le Crotoy and Abbeville with the special object of getting food into Rouen. But the English stationed armed craft in mid-stream to pounce upon any French vessel that tried to approach or leave the town¹⁰. Above the bridge, about a gunshot from the town, chains were stretched from bank to bank, either buoyed on casks or fastened to piles11. To guard the upper reaches of the

* Inn. 614.

In The Liv 61

Norm. Chron (Williams) 189, 140, (Hellot) 42; Stiecche, 1733 J. Page, 104 Monate, ili. 254, Le Fèvre, i. 344.

W CH

^{*} Norm. Chron. (Walkarns) 190, (Hellot) 44.

* J. Page, 71 Norm. Chron. (Williams) 190, (Hellot) 45.

* Peter Chron. 489, but this is not mentioned by J. Page.

* Norm. Chron. (Williams) 190, (Hellot) 41, cf. J. Page. 10.

* D.K. R. xii. 707.

* D.K. R. xii. 707.

Rym 18, 610.

D.K. R. all. 707

Tit. Lev. 64, Vita, 190, Wals. ii. 129, Hypodig. 486.

Norm Chron Williams) 190, Heliot) 44, Strutt, Manners, 11 126, Plate MUIII;

Reset to the 206, 1 Page, 10; Peter Chron 419. Chron. Ric. II.-Hen. VI, 41; Brut, ti. 309, 396, J. Page, 10; Peter. Chron. 419.

1 Inn. 624.

Tat. Liv. 62

fiver the English dragged ships overland across the intervening flats on the south side and then hunched them again in the reaches beyond St Catherine's!. To secure his communications Henry threw a wooden bridge across the river from Lescure, where he could take advantage of certain islands, to a point between Softeville and St Etienne du Rouvray, the planks being laid on chains made fast to piles that were driven into the bed of the stream? Such measures offersteining evidence of Henry's determination to render complete the solution of the garrison.

One or two minor successes in other parts were gained by the English during August, 1418. On the 18th 400 Frenchmen entered the suburbs of Evreus, but were chased out by the small English garrison, who killed twelve of them, and captured four prisoners and forty horses. Two days later a French force 1000 strong appeared before the walls of Louviers. where they had established an understanding with some of the townsforks, but, according to an English writer, the English commander salked out with one hundred men and beat them off, taking 180 prisoners, all men of considerations. These su cesses, with that at Quilleneut, feil within the Octave of the Assumption, and were attributed to the special intervention of the Virgin, to whom Henry always paid special reverences. It is improbable, however, that the French forces engaged were much more than bands of marauders. The approach of an organised body of 1000 men must have drawn of some of the troops besteging Rouen

Meanwhile the inhabitants of Rouen were looking in vain for the expected relief. In September came a citer from the University of Paris, which told that their case had often been brought to the notice of the king and the duke of Burgundy, who had always returned a gracious reply in fact, a force had already been set on foot to help them and relieve Caudebec. For the present let them take heart and defend themselves, for the Tit Liv 6 and Streeche (ans) save that they dragged them for two make over the month with their sails set. Cf. Vitta, 182.

^{} Cochon, 2803 Tit. Liv. 6.3 Vita, 1823 J. Pape, 10; Beut, ii 388. John Janyn, who had made the hide pontroom (see above, p. 39, ii. 1), was employed both on the barrar of chains and on the bridge (For. Acets. 39, C). There is a record of his charge "ac secondare unam magnifications remaining reprise ultrasquam of costs downdom equam de bren. The chain was forged on the spet, though the order for it had been given at Westminster on Feb. 2, 1417. It was afterwards used at symmal other neges.

^{*} Wait a sq. Wilcongham says that the English force numbered eleven.

* D.K.R. z.i. y is * Wala. n. 129. * Und.

fell of Rouen would mean the irrevocable loss of all that region and would imperil the safety of the rest of the kingdom!. But nothing is known of the relieving force mentioned in the letter. unless it were the body of 2000 men which got within ten miles of the city before being cut up by John Cornwall, who had been sent with 600 mounted men to deal with them! The prospects of the defenders in fact grew steadily worse. After the siege of Caudebec the earl of Warwick was stationed at the Martamville gate, having under him John Neville and Edmund Lord Ferrers of Chart ev2 Not long afterwards the king's division was reinforced by the arrival of 1000 men from Cherbourg under the duke of Gloucester, who had with him Lord Abergavenny and the earl of Suffolk. Though the front lines of the besiegers were in general but a bow-shot from the remparts⁶. Glourester's force was posted nearer the walls than any other detachment and was much exposed to missales of all kinds from the town. Late in the autumn there a so arrived a force of some floor Irish kernes under the command of Thomas Butler, the fighting prior of the Knights Hospitallers at Kilmainham agar Dubling. There were already Irish troops in the king's army, but the arrival of Butler's men excited special interest, for they were dressed and equipped in Irish fashion's They were no breeches and went with one foot bare*. Their arms were a targe, a bundle of small darts, and a great knife carried at the wast. The few mounted men rode their little nags cleverly, us no pads instead of saddles "like a cornchandler? The French, whom they greatly astonished, over-

Denille Chart iv 150 Broker v 214. Fenie, 1051 Monter 11. 221 19

1 Page, 9, 10, 11, Streethe, 2711 Brot, 11, 289, 1661 Patton Letters, 1, 10, Rom (Heartel 197 Monter at 289

^{*} Norm Chem. Wishman) 1911, [Hellott 46] J. Page, 13, 16] I.H. Lav. 643 Villa, 1904.

* Norm Chem. Wishman) 1911, [Hellott 46] J. Page, 13, 16] I.H. Lav. 643 Villa, 1904.

* J. Page, 12, Brut in 319, 199. For distance Wishe, it 130, it 169 legg. He matemate between acquirited of the charges brought against him at the end of the rings of Berry III shall be, 3, Roy Parl, v. 1993, Cal. Bor. H. is 2, 111, 2713. The arrival of his troops had evidently here eagerly awared for in June, 1416, the king ordered that his p. 133 should be sent from Bristol to Waterford to transport the prior and his men. (There there, Ser. 1, 1964, 194, Except Hist. 1864, and soon afterwards certain markers and masses of Bristo, received minory for embarking the prior, not rises at arres, and 100 arches (Decon, 146, 149) a, 1418. There can hard y have been the Irish birnes, but in the automic the prior sere vid 2 into to bring them to Southampton (Em. Buill & Flen. V. Mich. Oct. 12, 1418, and on Oct. 13 an order was sessed to be more and his returns to Finance (C. M. Pat. 1416-22, p. 201).

^{*} J. Page, 12. * Moustr. fil. 284 mg. * Moustr. fil. 284 mg. * Ibod. 285; Le Fèvre, i. 345; Waurin, it. 249.

estimated their numbers? and under-estimated their military. value2. They were at any rate expert foragers, and swept to some purpose the country-side near Rouen, where men long remembered the speciacle they presented as they came back from their raids, with beds, baggage, and even babies in cradies tied to the backs of the cattle they were driving. They did not take kindly to Henry's discipline, and after a time the king had to send to prior Butier a sharp message that if they did not conform to orders they would be flogged and otherwise punished. They were at first posted on the north side of the town4.

As at Harfleur, the king exercised a close supervision over the minutest details. He issued a code of rules for the discipline of the army and saw to it that they were put into effect, He personally directed the despatch of armed detachments to convoy and protect provisions gathered from the adjacent country. Night and day, in storm and calm alike, he went the tound of the camps, contriving and correcting with sleepless. activity. If any tents were pitched too far afield, his eye detected what was wrong and he had them moved nearer to the lines. When his orders were disobeyed, he hanged the offenders*

Meanwhile the French rained showers of stones and quarrels among the English tents, the guns and engines on the walls sometimes discharging a hundred shots in an hour. Time after time the defenders broke out from all the gates at once. in solid masses of 1000 men, but in hand-to-hand fighting the English drove them back to the shelter of their walls and towers, though they often revenged themselves when the pursuers had been livred on to the treacherous ground, set with pittails and caltrops, near the gates. At every such repulse, however, the defence weakened, and King Henry rendered sorties sail more hopeiess by encycling the town with a trench fenced with sharp stakes and mounting on its ramparts guns to play on the

Monstrelet (iii. alla sq.) gives their numbers as tood, while Waumn (ii. 249) puts them as as accord

² DKR di 222, Geta iaj Monne on also Wantin, il ago. 4 J. Pages ta. 3 Tit Liv 53; Vita, 185.

For Thomas Crowsee and John Calf, lately hanged "pro offersu factis contra. Regern," see D.K.R. zli. 296.

Tit. Liv. 62, Vita, 184, 186, J. Pige, 25; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 42.

Tit. Liv. 62; Vita, 185; Monstr. al. 285; Le Fèvre, 1, 244, 145; William, il. 246; Ferin, (69, J. Page, 8, 15.

ground between it and the walls! As usual in mediaeval sieges, personal challenges passed from one side to the other, and operations were sometimes suspended while both sides watched a single-handed fight. Such an incident occurred at the very beginning of the siege, when John Blount, leutenant of the duke of Exeter at Harfeur, challenged the captain of the Porte Cauchoise to break three lances with him. The Frenchman accepted the challenge, came out to the 1sts with thirty comrades, unhorsed his enemy, and pierced him through the body. The corpse was then dragged within the walls and only given up for burial on payment of 400 nobles. As the siege went on, however, a growing exasperation manifested itself on both sides, and a spirit of brutality developed. The English tried to frighten the hesieged by hanging prisoners on the gibbet that stood in full view on the northern heights, while the French fastened dogs to the beards and necks of any Englishmen they could catch and hanged them on a gallows. which they fixed up in the ditch beneath the wal st, or tied them in sacks and flung them into the Seine*.

The townsmen soon began to suffer. The water supply was seriously reduced when the English effectually dammed the Renelle before it reached the rown. By the beginning of October the stock of food was giving out. All grain and meal had been consumed, and such bread as could be had was made of bran?. None was exposed in the market, and such sales as took place were made secretly, for if food was seen in the streets, the hungry mob fell on it and could not be beaten off. A slice of bread the size of one's hand could not be had for less than a franc, and young girls would salrifice their honour to get one. Leeks and turnips soid for a shilling each. Docks were eaten root and rind. Water tinged with vinegar had to serve for wine. For flesh meat the besieged ate not only their skinny horses, but also cats, rats, dogs, mice and any such 4 Moretr in 134 The Frenchman was the Bastard of Arry Bloom a dusth occurred before Aug. a (Rym. 18, 194).

³ J. Page, 17; Streeche, 173; Monstr. at. 214; Le Fèvre, 1. 344; Wanrin, ii. 248. It was perhaps to be p in digging and furbiving the trench that Henry brought from Harfleur the 200 labourers and carriengers who on Oct. 3, 2411, were oved £152-121-34, in wages (Im. Roll 6 Hen. V. Mich.)

euroed before Aug. 9 (Rym. 12. 595).

Norm. Chron. (Williams) (19, (Hellot) 43; La Quérière, Notice. 173

Otterbourne, 118.

La Quérière, Fontaines, 55

^{*} Monstr III 299. * 1 Page, 18 * Monstr III. 300. * La Fryie, 1 351

vermin as they could lay their hands on, all commanding a high price3.

As time went on, communication between the city and the outer world became more and more difficult. Towards the end of October, however, messengers got out, made their way to Paris, and on the 27th appeared before the Council, where with broken voices they implored the duke of Burgundy not to sharder them! In point of fact, the ben and errière-ben had already been proclaimed with a view to the relief of Rouen. and the University of Paris had exhorted the cities not to stand on their privileges, but to do whatever they could to aid the besieged city. The duke therefore declared (to the surprise of the envoys) hat if the men of Rouen would hold ou a little longer, he would certainly come to their help and take the king with him. This announcement was welcomed with great joy in Paris, the excommunication under which the Jake lay was annu led, and the king went solemnly to Notre Dame to pray for a blessing on the coming rescue! On Nov 17 he rook the uniflamme at St Denish, and on Nov. 24 went out with the queen and the duke to join a large force that had gathered at Pontoise4. As for the messengers from Rouen, they returned home and told that the duke was coming with 100,000 men to the rescue, that he was less than twenty miles away, and that next Friday would see him before the walls? The bells, which had been silent since the siege began, rang out wild peals of joy, the churches were througed with townstolk giving thanks, and the streets echoed with shouts of equitations. Ourside the walls the prospect of sharp fighting was hailed with delight. The king's heart leapt up, for he felt that a decisive battle might be coming at last. He called his captains together and said, "Fellows, be merry"!" The Irish troops were posted on 5 St Denvi, vi. 189. 304. The besieged had alread appealed to the dauphin, but his abover water have been a share, for he was all the time bargaining with he English (Juv. 545).

[&]quot; For xxx d, went a ratte, For is nobles went a catte," J. Page, 18. Cf. Paston Lett. i. 20; Tit. Liv 64, 66; Vita, 194 aq ; Gesta, 196; Otterbourne, 182, rending "mures" for "sues," where the prices given differ from those of Page; Streethe, 1744 Diction, App. 77, Hérin 78, Verneud, 120, Fenin, 184, Basse, 12, Bássar 21, 1993 Le Févre, 1-352

^{*} Ordonnancen z. 482, Deroffe, Chart iv 356. * Monstr. iit 2863 Vallet de Vierville, i. 141. * $t Denys, vi. 300.

the road to the east leading to the Forest of Lyons, so as to be the first in touch with any relieving force. Every man by in his harness through the night1. The king strengthened his position on the northern side of the city, where rumour said the attack would come, as the quarter presenting most difficulty to the besiegers? Where the approach to the trench was open, it was fortified with banks and wooden towers, on which were mounted guns and engines?. But the Burgundians never came Henry had letters forged and conveyed into the town by pretended messengers in order to fill the defenders with false hope. He also bade some of his men don the St Andrew's cross and rush out of a wood towards the English lines, his object being to entice the garrison to sally out to their assistance—a ruse which whoily failed. The truth was that the force at Pontoise was paralyzed by disaffection. Some held that the time of year was not fit for campa grange; others were secret y on the side of the dauptin, whose men were in possession of Soissons and Complegace and threatened to oppose the reheving force. In any case the army was much smaller than it should have been, many of the nobles having disobeyed the summons to appear?. Money was also short, despite the imposition of a new tax on wine and an attempt to raise a loan of 10,000 livres*; and it was to little purpose that on Dec. 12 the University of Paris, after hearing a piteous letter from Rouen, voted 2000 livres towards its reacf. After five weeks spent idly at Pontoise's, the army moved north to Beauvais in search of food, their own provisions having all been eaten, but they found that the Armagnaca had swept the ground bare and were barring the roads against any tracers that were ready to sell to them11. To Beauvais came

I St Denys, vi. 194.

* Cordeliers, 262, Monstr III. 279 sq., 292; Champion, 7.

Ordonnances, x 50c, Félibien, iv 575; Denifie, Chart. iv. 360, where the king states that Pirm has sent more men than all the other towns of France regether. It Was in vary the proclamations were mused threatening defaulture with the confurstion of their field. St Liettys vi. 2011

Ordonnances, x. 502; Bourgeois, 220; St Denys, vi. 292. As the royal domain to Morrisand's was offered as part security for the loan, it is not surprising, but the scheme aroused better much in Rosen (Norm. Chron. [Williams] 163, [Hellot] 41, Bloodul, i. 10, Nagerel, 172)

Dentile, Chart. w. 356.

M Nov. 24-Dec. 28 (Rin. 444, Dentile, Chart. iv. 357, Gachard, 240).

Monate. iii. nol | La Fèvre, i. 3515 lun. 444.

J. Page. 16
 T.I. Liv. 65, Vita. 194 9 Ded 12; Archaeol um gu; Potter, in Princip. 242 4 BARREL L. 21

Rouen's last cry for help, brought by four gentlemer and four bourgeous1.

Meanwhile death stalked in the streets of Rouen. No city could boast more burial-grounds, but they were too few, and the people died faster than they could be buried. Rather than face a lingering death the inhabitants stole out one by one to fail into the hands of the Inglish, who at first would not believe the tales they brought, so stout a show of resistance was still maintained? But this brave front had to be given up, and soon the weak and useless were thrust out by hundreds at a time2. Women with infants in their arms and old men came crying on their knees for pity. The English gave them food, but would not let them pass the lines. They would not, however, be gainsaid until the leisurely discharge of a few shots amongst. them sent them thronging back with curses on their own people, who would not let them into the town. For days their only shelter was the ditch, where they lay huddled in the pitiless rain. Many women were overtaken in labour, and their little babes were hoisted up the wall in baskets for their bapt sminid then sent back to die in nameless horrors. But Christmas was at hand, and Henry could not keep the feast with all this wretchedness before his eyes. He called a truce and sent into the city beraids offering food to all whose stores were dones, Any such who would come out should have meat enough for the high feast and safe conduct to come and go, but the captain would have none of it and barely granted the one day's truce. He d.d. however, grudgingly allow two English priests and three men with them to carry food to the poor wreiches in the ditch, and this gracious stroke of generous policy did much to smooth the way for the coming surrender. Hefore the end came, however, a last sortie was planned, and a large force provided with food for two days prepared for a desperate attempt to break out. At a given signal 2000 issued from the Porte St Hillaire and flung themselves vainly upon the king's camp. Another body was to attack through the Castle Gate, but the stanchions of the drawbridge had been secretly cut through, and as the mass of men emerged from the gate it gave way and many were precipitated into the moat. Those behind fell back in confusion and raised the cey that it was the capta n Guy le Boutenler who had sawn the stanchions, while the death of his popular colleague the Bastard of Arly compieted their discomfiture. The morale of the garrison was probably much lowered by this disaster, and ere the year was out hanger broke down the stone walls, and the townsmen had their way. On New Year's Eve a cry went up in the right from every gate in turn?. The English gave no answer save on the south, where young G Ibert Umfraville approached the Br dge. Gate³ to ascertain what it meant. "Send us a baron or a knight of our stock*," was the reply. "I am a knight," said Umfraville, and when they heard his name, the omen encouraged them, and they begged that twelve of them might come out and see the king. Then Unifraville sped in the darkness to the duke of Ularence and the other captains watching the gates. Everywhere his tidings were received with delight. When morning broke he sought the king, whom he found willing to receive the suppliants. The day was spent in conferences between "the states" and Umfraville at the Bridge Gate, and on the morrow at prime four knights, four clerks, and four burgesses, all dressed in black, came forth from the Porte St Hilaire. There they were met by Umfraville and a party of the long's squires and yeomen, who escorted them to the Charterhouse, Umfraville having warned them to make no shrewd speeches and to weigh well what they said, for one unguarded word might wreck all. When they reached the Charterhouse, the king was hearing Mass, and they waited till the service was done. The writer who describes the interview praises Herry for his clemency and grace, but when the Frenchmen fell on their knees before him, there was little graciousness in the scowl with which he haughtily regarded

I. Page, 20 • Ibid 355 Archaeol xxii 356; Cheon Ric. II-Hen. VI, 47 • V. Fréville, 99; J. Page, 21

Monser. ii. 296 29-3 Le l'étre; i. 3494 Waurin, ii. 254
 Brut, ii. 404.
 Norm. Chron. (Williams) 1911 (Hellot) 46.

I little ay Brut, ii. 404; Streeche, 274. The Umfravilles sprang from Amfreville near St Mère Église in the Countin.

Monstrelet (in. 104) and Le Fèvre (i. 136) say that there were two of each class and that they made straight for the lang's tent but were sent some to the quarters of Archbishop Chichele, some to those of the earl of Warwick.

J. Page, 28; Tit Liv. 6;
 "For one worde wrong and owte of warde Myght cause you alle to fare fulle harde." J. Page, 27 them!. Still kneeling, they held out to him a bill, which he handed to the duke of Exeter to read. When he found that they petitioned to be heard, he told them to say on. They prayed him for the love of Jesus and the Virgin to have pity on the poor people that lay dying in the ditch, but with unmoved countenance he replied, "Fe lows, who put them there? They a sode in the city while they might. Let them find that they have sought2." Then he rold them that they had kent from him his city and his inher tance, and they answered that they had been charged to keep the city by that king whose born liegersen they were, but that many among them were willing to become his lieges if he would give them leave to go and excuse themselves before the duke of Burgundy. Then Henry's pride broke out. Their French king and their duke of Burgundy. knew we'll enough that he means to have this city. He had had messages enough from them. No more were wanted, nor should any be sent3. In their despair4 the Frenchmen forgot Umfravi le's caution, and a knight ventured to say that Rouer with all its people would be a fair city to win. "It is mine," replied the king emphatically, "and I will have it. Let those within prepare themselves, for mon shall speak of me till the day of dooms." No more was to be said, and with the memory of Caen in their minds, the messengers could only offer up their city and pray that the conqueror would be merciful. At this Henry turned to confer with the duke of Clarence*; and, his anger having abated, he gave them time to treat, with a promise that if they did well they might have grace. When they again pleaded for the sufferers in the ditch, he said that upon this matter he would take advice. With that he bade adieu and left them. They walked back to the city with Umfraville, praising on the way the king's looks, demeanour, and wisdom.

What happened in the city is described in French sources, though the story is not contemporary and looks somewhat like an afterthought. The men of Rouen, it is said, would not listen to Henry's terms, but made preparations for setting her to the

Page, 31; Archaeol zzi. 76.
Norm Cheon (Williams) 191, (Hellot) 46

Archaeologia, axis. 366.
I. J. Page, 301 cf. Tit. Let. 671 Vita, 199.

Archaeol, and 264 cf. Tat. Liv. 62. Basin, t. 34.

F Page 312 Marsur 11, not so This account is based mainly on Page, who was of counte not present, but seems to be reporting the description of immeone who was.

city and making a desperate attempt to break out during the night, whereupon Heary made some concessions in order that he might get the city underraged! However this may be, it is certain that next day two terts were pitched in the duke of Gleucester a camp¹, and the nepotiations began. In the hinglish pavilion were seven commissioners -the earls of Salisbury and Warwick, Lord Fitzhugh, Waker Hargerford, John Robsart. Colhert Umbraville, and a Portuguese, João de Vasques of Almada⁸, whose presence is a singular evidence of the intimacy of the relationship between the two countries and a striking recognition of the belo rendered by the Portuguese ships in the Some. The French were represented by the abbot of S' George de Boscherville, three Jerks (one of them being Master Simon de Rondeman), three knights, three squires, and fourteen others, or tweety four in all4. The bargaining went on for days. The English demanded much, the French referred littles, and at length the terra were struck, and the French envoys went somewfully back to the town. Here they were met by an infunated crowd, who threatened to fire the gates and let the English in rather than face the horrors of the singe for another days. On this they mounted the Porte St. Hi age and raised a shout, and when John Robsart approached, they nepged him to tell the kinp that they were ready to give in. The duke of Cloucester and the king conferred, and Architishop Chichele came down from St Catherine's with an offer to mediate with the cierpy in the city. Iwo tents were again pitched, with a third for the archbishop between them. When

Norm. Chron. (Williams) 192, (Hellot) 46.
Rem 12 464 For their minimum, dated Jan. 3, 1419, and the safe-conducts of the French envoys, me Bréquigny, 45

Rym. ir. 664.

"], Page, 16.

^{*} Monetz III. 303; Le Fèrre, l. 356 Watris, il. 261. A curious tradition about the and of he negerater and among the English. In Boson, it was noth in accordance with the old Twelfin Night contain each bridgehold made its closer some bring. As the day down man, that ground have of the schools carrie and begged Henry to allow them to every our this process. The king maintaid and when the fermual came sent for the "kings" that he might see their array. A French knight who was present was zero ded of an old purphary that Bruse should now by was till two should come against it a king with thirty thegain he retries. Ther and the king, "At thy word I was see go two no "and the town surrendered next day (Brut, ii, yet, cf. Kingsford, First Life, are, xira, Lx. 126). If there is anything in the story, the spacele must have occurred. wher negociations had been opened.

^{*} J. Page. 16, 36, 191. I be people of flower crowded to the lower walls and the English stand about in knots warding the hurads in their blassery passing with forminges from beat to test (f. Page, 34).

daylight failed candles and torches were lit, and the talk went on far into the night. For four more days conversations continued, and on lan. 13 a settlement was at last reached. The city was to submit itself who ly to the king's mercy if not relieved by noon on Jan. 19. In case relief should be at empted, no help was to be extended to the rescuers from within the town. If it were not releved, the town would pay 300,000. crowns and surrender all horses, barness, armour, artifery, powder, and other material of war. Al. English prisoners would be released. All Normans in the garrison were to be held as prisoners, other soldiers in ght depart leaving all their possessions. The town should emoy the privileges granted to it before the reign of Philip VI, and those cirizens who were prepared to take the oath of allegiance to the English king might keep their property. Eighty substantial hostages were given, and messengers were despatched to bear the news to Charles VI and the duke of Burgundy³. The great supplies of food in the English camp were laid open for the needs of the famished city!. It had been shou ared that the people in the ditches before the town were to be taken back and fed. The streets were to be cleansed and all dead bodies buried before the haglish entered. The messenger who took the news to the French king did not take long to make up his mind as to the possibility of rescue. Before he could reach Beauvais, the duke of Burgundy had left with the king and queen, and he must have had his interview at Beaumont sur Oise, where the royal party stayed from Jan. 14 to 157. The duke expressed admiration for the heroism of Rouen, and biamed the daugh n for the fact that he was not strong enough to attempt a rescue, he advised the citizens to care mate on such terms as they could get!. Then, agnoring the protests of deputations from unprotected Paris, he moved further east, and on Jan. 22

² The Latin text is in Hymer, in 664 agg. The English text as an Geog., Chron. tan 1995 * Rym. 12: 666, Monue, III. 306.

^{1.} Page, 40 Nym 1x 666.

^{*} The Lorsbard known as Big Jacques (Chéruel, Dont. Ang. i. 351 "graunt Jaket" or "Jakya," J. Page, 14, 41; Archaeol. Ett. 59; cf. Kingsford, Lit. 318).

¹ lun. 445; Fenin, 570. 1 J. Page, 41, Monite at 3034 Le Pevre, 6, 353, Waurin in 260, cf. Ordonnancei, reached Provins, where the party stayed four months, most of the army having already been disbanded1.

<sup>2. 490.

1</sup> Denife, Chart iv 155 sq. Neve of the imprintation of Rouse did not much Paris till Jan 17 (Rourguon, 125, n 1)

The messenger did not return to Rober, but sent word that no relief could be expected, and on St Wulfstan's day, Jan. 19, the drama reached its end. The king was scated in great state in the Charterhouse, and Guy le Bouteiller, arrended by a group. of citizens, kneeled before him and delivered up the keys, which the king harded to the dake of Exeter, who had been appointed captain of the town3. The duke took the keys and rode to his camp at the Porte Beauvoisine. The gate was opened, and as the first party rode in, with horses neighing, banners fluttering, and pipes, clations, and trumpets blaring, they shouted, "St George," and, "Welcome, Rone, our king's own right!" and a crowd of emactated Frenchmen answered "Welcome*1" It had not been possible to remove all the corpses, and many lay in the streets among the living who cried feebly for bread. The new captain entered the castie and then went the round of the walls and towers, and having set the guard and hoisted the banners of St George, the Queen of Heaven, and the Trinity, he posted strong bodies of men about the town to prevent lootings, and made all ready for the king's entry on the following day.

On the morning of Jan 200 King Henry rode with great ceremony to the Porte Beauvoisine, where he was met by three bishops, seven abbots, and a great throng of lesser clergy bearing relics and crosses. Archbishop Chichele was there with holy water. The king kissed some of the crosses?, and then went forward. But as in his passage through London two years before he would have no ostentatious glorification of his own person. No pipe or clarion pealed his victory, and it is remarkable that the writer who describes the scene in greatest detail spends all his eloquence on the king's olack horse, with its gold breast-cloth and housings of brack damasks. Henry rode sadly through the crowded streets, armid the clangour of

Firm, 445, 446, Monstr ili 201, Le Fèvre, 1, 255, Waurin, il. 259. [Next day Charles VI wrote to Rheida apologiang for the withdrawal (Le Moyen Age, eer. 11, 22, 23) 1999.]

^{131 849)} Twieden, 2291, Paston Lett. L. 201 Jak, 132, 172, Chron. Load. 2071.

Beson, 781 Twieden, 2291, Paston Lett. L. 201 Jak, 132, 172, Chron. Load. 2071.

Lett. L. 201 Jak, 132, 172, Chron. Load. 2071. J. Stene, 19, Kingsfred, Chron 116, Greg , Chron 127, Three I steen the Chrons. 56; Bodi. MS. 496 (2159), fol. 224. On the same day Walter Saturchamp was not over the buildings of Rouen (D.R. all. 725).

 Tit. Liv 61  J. Page, 44; Cochon, 28-1; Bourgeois, 120; Verneull, 220.

⁴ Ibid. 45. * J. Page, 44:

bells1, bringing up the long procession of chanting clergy2, and followed by a page bearing a lance with a fox's brush fastened to the end, "whereby some wise men noted many things"," though they might have spared their conjectures had they known that it was merely one of the badges of his family4. He alighted at the west door of the cathedral, and the clerks of his chapel went before him up the nave chanting the antiphon "Who is so great a lord ?" He knelt in prayer at the high altar and offered thanks to God, and when Mass was done and the offering made, he rode to the castle, where he spent the night^a,

1 And, acrosching to Page (44), the cheers of the spectators.
1 Norm. China. 1913 Monstr iii 207, Worcester, Run. 25
2 Monstr iii 307, Le Fèvre, 1 359, Waarin, ii. 263.
3 For the fox's brush as one of Henry IV's badges, see Wylie, 1. 42, ii. 30 %. It appears also on the frame of the Cassiobury portrait (Macfarlane Thomson, 1. 702). Archaeot. 22t. 183

J. Page, 45; Mozaur. iii. 307; Norm Chron. 191.

Google

CHAPTER LVIII

ROUIN IN ENGLISH HANDS

THERE IS a general tendercy among modern French writers to represent the conquests of Henry V as having been made at the expense of an irreconc lable people, who merely submitted sullency to force majoure. This, however, is to ascribe wholly movern sentiments to the French of the fifteenth century, Eleroic as the defence of Rouen unquest onably was, its leading mot ve was not the patriotic zeal which arimates the French of to-day. Ever since the establishment of their commune, the life of the burgesses of Rouen had been a long struggle against the pretensions of their archbishops and kings, and now that they had been betrayed in their hour of need, they settled down without a murmur under the sway of a descendant of their ancient dukes. Even when Henry was dead and the national star t was beginning to awake, there were many Frenchmen who would not join in the denuncrations of the English king as a grasping tyrant, and we have the curious statement of a cautious opportunist who could not make up his mind whether he really was a tyrant or after all a just claimant to a title that was sound. No such doubts, nowever, agitated the citizens of Rouen when Henry entered their city. Knowing well what their fate might have been, they we comed him with gratifude and hailed him not only as duke but as king. Under the treaty of surrender, nine persons had been excluded from the king's mercy. One of them was an Italian, whose subsequent fate does not seem to be known. The others were French the basia (Guillaume Houdetor, the mayor (Jean Segneult), the archb shop's vicar-general (Robert de Livet), the captain of the crossbowmen (Alain Banchard), the basils of Valmont, and three unnamed persons, two of whom were fishinongers (percever), while the third is called "that person who spoke the foul words?," a reference apparently to some men t shouted

¹ Ou tyran pae crudelist de juste protecuteur de son bon et vray utae a Dieu j'en laure la dattaction. Changlage, a per laune is distinction. Chantellars, 2-157

1 Rym in 667, cf. Greg. Chron. 127. I racition added the name of Jean Jourdain, capture of the guitters, but his name does not appear to the official intifrom the walls, which it was justifiable, according to the anilitary efficience of that time, to wash out in blood. Whether the man of offensive tongue was ever given up we do not know, but of the rest, Houdetot, Segneult, and the fishmongers saved their necks by money sayments and soon fest in with the new regime! Robert de Livet was sent to England, where he was long supposed to have died in prison¹, but re ent research among the Chapter records at Reuen proves that by Oct. 11, 1424, he was again in possession of his canoney and that he spent his remaining years in the city. Alain Bianchard, however, who is charg d by English writers with having perpetrated acts of special savagery on such prisoners as fell into his hands, could look for no coemercy. Immediately after the king's entry he was brought out and execute it. Modern writers usually denounce Henry a action as an indel hie stain on his memory. But contemporary authoratics lend no countenance to the view that he was actuated Ly mere wanton vindictiveness-conduct quite inconsistent with his usual policy towards the defenders of a captured times: and it is probable that he really wished to mark his indignation at some pross breach of the laws of honourable warfare*

Many of the defenders of Norman strongholds fell under auspicton of treason, and this blot has besinirched the name of Guy le Bouteiller. It is at least certain that three days after the king a entry he received safe-conduct to go where he like 17.

Tu. Liv 64, 68; Vite, 191

* Chéruel, Dom Ang. l. 21, M. 48, 33; Puisson, 203 * Onesbourne, 282; V ta, 200.

 Behesched, according to Monstrelet (iii 307); but English weken my that he was hanged (Otterbourne, atzg Tit. Liv. 64, whose "cruci on affines" is Recamming affectation for "suspenses ett").

³ D.K.R. Rh. 207.

⁵ Le Frence, et. Wasten, is 264, Norm Chem (Brille, 21), Separab actually heid the office of King's Austrease at Rosen in 1444. Cherury Dom. Aug. is. 527.

Two centuries laser a Prench writer treated him as a martyr to be paterouses (Server, 1. 9945 Previa, 52). A story grew up that the English offered to let him off work a tree, but he assurand that he had nothing to have with and own if he had, so util rist give it to save an Enginhman from his dishonour (the story appears in Saint Forz, in. 190, written in 1759, and in many later works! In 1825 the story of Blanchard was framatised and self-med with its centum horh Rough and Park, they in Books size figuring to the high-born violating and two years later an effort was made to creek a monument to Bianchard at Rouen (Persin, 52). But the moment was unpropitions, for a learned loyalist had been looking into the authorities, and finding that a year helies he sarge Blanchard had murdered the large representative be denounced him as "the chief of a band of assassins," and stigmatted the whole legend at "pure ansention" and "a lying allegation." (Licquet, 169, 175, 177 m). Many writers have scape tried to rehabilitate the cult but with situe success-with n a few weeks he took the oath of allegiance; in March he received grants of confiscated lands2, and in April he was receiving the surrender of Normans loyal to Charles VI2. It is no wonder that he was "much blamed and reproached". A contemporary who wrote at the court of the dauplin says that very few of the Norman nobility ever submitted to the conqueror*, and though his statement is contradicted by official records, it is true that some publics suffered confiscation of their lands rather than recognise English rule! Still, the number of knights and squires who submitted was enough for Henry to deem it convenient to summon them to Rouen in two divisions when he wished to communicate to them certain newly eracted ordinances". The clergy were no less amenable. Within two months of the fail of Rouen the king had come to terms with most of the monasteries and other religious foundations of the diocese for the restitution of their property. By the day after the king's entry the incumbents of fifteen parishes. to the north had applied to be allowed to come with their parishioners and make their submission³⁰, and we know of 131 other clergy who submitted before two months were out, special facilities being offered to those who could not travel by reason of infirmity of poverty²¹. This general compliance met with its reward, for with it a year it was decreed! that the ciergy of the province of Rouen were to remain free from all dues on torn, wine, beer, and other beverages, were not to be required to help in keeping watch and ward or in cleaning and repairing public ditches.

ĖØ

Many Normans of humble birth accepted minor appointments under the English 12, and a considerable number donned

Monte in 301; Waunn, il afa

For grants to him dated March 16, 2419, mr Bedquigny, 61; D.K.R. 28. 7444 Chiract, Dom. Ang a 24; Leferre Panisha, va. 2

DK.R. xii. 771. * Monstr isi. 308; Fenin, 189. * Jav 145. * For subtrisions by many knights and squares, 116 24-March 26, 1419, tot

Beforigny, 56, 58, 60, 61 aq., 216, 217, 218, 219, 220; D.K.R. xll. 743, 759, 767, Cf. "year plusion Normans qui is rendirent Engles," Fenin, 106.

"On Feb. 9 a princlement it was much confinenting the mode of layers and occiessation who had not yet submitted (Bréquigny, 53, D.K.R. xla. 751).

"The first meeting, for those of the new bestlesser of 1, page Normandy, was summoned for Feb. 25, the second for those of Lower Normandy, for March 7 (Bréquigny, 21). "N. N. S. 200.

143 DKR ## 754)

10 Third 74 g.

II On Jan 20, 1420 (Rym ix IIgo, D K R zliz. 342)

44 For many of these, see Befquigny, 48 199, et pasting D K.R. Eli. 351 199. W 330

the St George's cross and joined the English forces in raiding the French! As for the citizens of Rouen there is no question of their readiness to accept the lessons of the siege. It was about fifteen days before the mortal ty began to abate, but in an incredibly short time Rouen had returned to its normal life. a vast multimide of citizens taking the oath without scruple?. The day after the king's entry such of the garrison as were not Normans and all who refused to swear allegance marched out on foot, leaving all their horses, arms, and equipment. They were conducted along the north bank of the river as far as St George's bridge, recently made by the English near Pont del'Arche. Here every man was searched and deprived of everything save his clothes, two stillings and a staff. They were then turned adritt. Most went home, but a few reported themselves to the duke of Burgundy at Provins4.

The king remained two months at Rouen and at once applied himself to organis ng the administration both of the town and of the duchy. There is a consensus of evidence that Henry's treatment of the town was concrutery and that the changed conditions were accepted with equanimity by the inhabitants. Their immediate concern was the payment of the town's enterricus canyons. As might have been expected, it proved impossible to collect, and stories issuing from the dauphin's entourage asserted that the citizens were prolessly polled and fleeced to meet the king's demands. But the evidence shows that he really exercised great moderation, postporing his claims. till the people and had a breathing space. During the negotiations he had insisted that in estimating the indemnity of 200,000 crowns, the crown should be valued at 25 sous or shillings. The French representatives urged that it should be reckoned at the customary rate of 20 mas, but "by smooth words and promises" they were induced to agree to the English.

nouve, lement venus de la garnison de Rouen," Itin 446

Jur. 545; St Denys, vi. 506.

F. Memtr itt. 309 * Tir. Liv. 693 Vita, next Monstr lif. 404

Thid, joy sq., Le Fèvre, 2. 157; Waurin, B. 262, 264; Jav. 645. J. Page, 44, 263; that Henry gave each of them a gown, but the truth seems to be that if at a had. a costly gown, it was taken from him and a poorer one provided in its place. Many of those at the year of the column dropped their belongings into the river when they bearned what was taking place. The valuables confected was attracted to be worth 12,000 crows: (Chéroel, Dom. Ang., App. 62) demand, on the understanding, as they vainly pleaded afterwards, that they should really pay at the lower rate. The agreement provided that half the amount should be paid when the English entered the town, and the rest a month later. But it at once became obvious that the conditions could not be fulfilled. Six months after the surrender, a large sum was still unpaid2, and on July 23 the earl of Warwick and others were commissioned to treat with the citizens for a composition², and subsequently it was agreed that they should pay an annual sum of 80,000 crowns4. It was obvious that many were removing from the town in order to escape their lability, and it was ordered that no one was to be allowed to leave Ropen without a billet for which four sous had to be paid. Additional hostages were required to guarantee the payment of the sum annually due, and these were kept in the castle, or a. Pont de l'Arche, or in other strong places?, though the rigour of their treatment was modified after a few months. Despite all the pressure applied, instainments came in very slowly, and after twelve years more than 40,000 crowns remained unpaid.

Morner, iri. 307; Le Pèvre, i 358; Waterin, ii 264 Fernin, 104 On Feb 2 the duke of Bargundy gave a disner to four capitains and many "gentilhorarmes et étrangers.

One valuable reform introduced at once into his new domains. by Henry was the imposition of a uniform standard of weights and measures for the whole of Normandy, instead of the perplexing diversity that had previously prevailed. By a proclamation dated Feb. 15, 1419, he established the Rouen standard for grain, the Arques standard for I quids, the Paris eil as the measure for cloth, and the Troyes mark as the standard of weight10.

It had been stipulated in the capitulation that the king might take a plot of land, within or without the walls, on which to

"Nous aurions le rabbais." Cherues, 2000, 2003, 1003, autred on the higher rate is clear from For Accts. 69, F.]

Bréquigny, 101. "Nous aurions le rabbais." Chérice, Dom. Ang. v. 65. [That the English an-Chéruel, Dom. Ang. n. 55 sq.

 Chron. Ric. II-Hen. VI, p. 48.

Becquigny, 98, Pomut, 211.

Monstr. of 309 sq.
Herquigny, 111, D.K R. ali. 1093 Puneux, 202, 214, 303. They numbered 33

Many of the bostages suffered in health owing to their strict confinement (Bréquigny, fix). Their deaths would of course have defeated the purpose for which they had been ar iprinoped, and on Nov. 29, 14-19, an order was moved that all emops those at Pont de . Arche should be allowed to return to Rouen, there to remain prisoners in their own homes during the lung's pleasure, other citizens going but for them (D. K. R.

* i.e. 40,817 on Nov. 7, 2430 (Fann, 1. 247) Chérud, Dom. Ang. il. 70, Pubeux, 189, 208, 213).

10 Rym. m. 692; Belquigny, 54

10-2

build a palace, provided that he should compensate the dispossessed owner. He accordingly purchased a site on the waterside, just within the walls at the south west corner of the city. Here he built a strong fortress. It was designed by Jeanson Salvart, the cathedral architects, and was to have been completed in eighteen months, a large number of carpenters, sawyers, and other workmen being brought from England to assist in the works. In 1444, however, it was still unfinished? and in 1447 balvart died. It had nevertheless a long history. Henry V had intended it to be a safe residence, which might defy any rising in the city, he constructed a covered way connecting it with the castles, and long after the latter was in rums, it was the strongest place in Rouen . In addition, Henry rebuilt the harbican at the southern end of the bridgett, transforming it into a rectangular fort flanked by four towers11, henceforth known as the Little Castle 14.

Owing to the excellent commissariat of the English, their losses during the siege were slight compared with those of the French. Nevertheless a number of important men perished. Among these were the prior of Ki main nami¹⁴, Gilbert Talbor¹⁵,

* Rym. in 663, 7143 Farin 1 200, 103.

* In Liv 68; Archaeol unit 378; Chéruel, i 67; [Fon Acets 69; 8]. On March 23. 1429, he paid 2630 news for it (Deville, Revue, at). The site is now occupied by the Place Henri IV, the rue St Jacques, the rue d'Harcourt, and the rue de la Seine (Normande Mossimerale g).

It was known at first as the Royal or New Palace (Masseylle, iv. 1834 Jolimont, 4). Paneux, 219, Lefèvre Portain, Is 1 (5, Vita 200) but after the present Palais de Jantice was built in 1499, it was called the Old Palace (C. Beaurepaire, Notes, 23, Zeiler, pt. viii. 22, Grisel, B. 65)

* Rym. it. 745, Deville, Rev. 30, Bréquigny, 169. He had been appointed manter-muser at the cathedra. in 1341, Deville, Rev. 36, and conducteur det transacii in 1406 activise riontain. Ivii 13, 47. He was atterwards. Maltre de Maçonsene of the made and the city (third 16; ef. Deville, Revue, 31)

Page, 40.

Lis. Roll y Hen. Y, Mich., Oct. 2, Nov. 13, 16, 20, 1419, Feb. 21, 1410.

* Farm, 1 101.

Deville, Revue, 333 Richard, 51.

Princip, 220 Holimshed, iii. 568; Stow, Chron. 357.

There is a picture of it in a charter of Rosen dated 1458 (Chéruel, App. 1. 1) and in a fifteenth century window is the church of St Jean (Revue de Rouen, 1813, i. 122), besides a number of later ones.

18 Viia, ang Norm. China. (Bellot), 483 Cochon, 1443 Chérnel, 693 Puneux, 2184

Farie, . 100; Duranville, 174

to futurate 3

It was demolished in 1779 (Duranville, Io; Johnsont, I)
 Four Massers, iv I41, O'Flanagan, t. So; Kingsford, Lit. 189.

Page, 7. The king ordered 2000 Masses to be said for his soul as well to for that of Edward Holland (Devon, 357, Oct. 22, 2413).

and Edward Holland, count of Mortain¹. Talbot's death caused a vacancy in the order of the Garter, in which there were at the time three other gaps—one occasioned by the death of the count of Holland in 1417, the second by that of Richard Lord Grey of Codnor on Aug. 1, 14182, and the third by that of John Blount², killed in single combat at Rouen as described above.

⁴ His death occurred between Oct. 6 and 22 (D.K.R. xli 717, Devon, 157). Cf.

J. Page, 3.

a (not post mort. iv. 33, G.E.C. (ed. Gibbs), vi. 129; Beltz, civin, Kingsford, Lit.

259.

He had succeeded to the stall of the earl of Oxford on Feb. 15, 1417 (Beitz, civin).

CHAPTER LIX

FURTHER BARGAINING

When the envoys from Rouen spoke of communicating with the duke of Burgundy before they could surrender, Henry replied that the duke already knew all that he needed to know, for messengers had often passed between them during the siegel. It wil be remembered, however, that before the siege began. Herry had been forced to recognise the duke as an enemy, and it was not long before the Armagnac party took advantage of the new position. On Sept. 18, 1418, Gu llaure de Haus, master of the household to the dauph a, had been sent from Niort to confer with the duke of Clarence before Rouen2, and on Oct. 3 he was granted a safe-conduct for an interview. with the kings. It leven days later further safe-conducts were made out for the archbishop of Tours (Jacques Gelu) and Jean de Norry, with other representatives of the dauphin, who were prepared to treat for peace and an alliance with England On Oct. 26 fourteen exalted personages were appointed to confer with them on the English sides.

An important document still extant shows that at this particular moment these overtures from the dauphin were very welcome to Henry. He saw that his hold on his conquests was insecure. No single lord of any consequence had come over to him, while the land was full of "brigands" who attacked such people as had submitted to the English. If no terms were made, he would have to go further and further on his career of conquest, while if he concentrated on the defence of Normandy—the soundest policy—he would have to pay his troops regularly, whereas he was depending upon plunder to keep

* Rym. m. 626; D.K.R. xli. 701 Their number was afterwards reduced to severa.

Ord. Prov. Co. 11, 170 aqq.

Go. gle

¹ J. Page, 31.
2 Rym. ix 614.

^{*} Bréquigny, 109; D.K.R. als. 701; Beaucourt, s. 187. A secretary of the duches of Anjou, Guiot de Pressy, was granted a safe conduct on the same day (River, for cit 5 D.K.R. als 699). He was again with Henry on Dec. 15, when he received a safe conduct to go back to the duches of Anjou and to return (River in 559; D.K.R. als. 704).

down their demands!. His envoys were therefore instructed* to treat for a marriage between himself and the French king's daughter Catherine, and to ascertain what dowry she would bring. It was to be understood that Normands must not be a subject of bargaining, any offer of territory on the part of the French must refer to ands not yet in Henry's possession. In effect he would be satisfied with nothing less than the terms of the treaty of Bretigny, together with the cession of Flanders and the coast between Gravelines and the Somme. Even if such an offer were made, it would be doubtful whether the dauphin was strong erough to give effect to it. A truce therefore would be more acceptable than a so-called peace; and seeing that during a truce Henry would suspend his claim to the French crown, the other side ought to give him something substantial in return. As to the duke of Burgundy (with whom he had no alliance), though his party seemed to be the strongest. power in France, yet with God's help Henry would shake his authority in one day, believing as he did that he was almost impotent in Paris. And lastly, if the dauphin should agree to Henry's demands, the hinglish envoys were to ask how and when the unconquered parts should be handed over. Moreover, should an alliance be formed and English troops be used to break the power of the Burgundians, would the English be allowed to have Flanders, Artois, and the Boulonnais (or at least St Omer) in full sovereignty for their pains? A separate truce had just been concluded with the young count of Armagnac^a and the lord of Albret⁴, who had given an undertaking that they would submit to King Henry even though these. negotiations should come to nothings; and it was expressly arranged that their representatives should not be allowed to take part, though they were to be honourably treated and induced if possible to further the king's views. Armed with these instructions seven English envoys proceeded to Alencon, where on Nov. to they were met by six representa-

Ryn in be bid icge

Cf. A. Colum, viti. 100, which shows that some of the captains who left England. in August, 1417, had received no pay on June 19 of the next year

For the form of homoge of the "tord of Labret," Sept. 13, 1415, see Harl. MS.

Tor the form of homoge of the "tord of Labret," Sept. 13, 1415, see Harl. MS.

⁴⁷⁶³ ff 192 152. Cotton MS Tiberies, Ban, f 119 b

Ont Prov Co. n. 152

The earl of Salubury, Lord Grey, Walter Hungerford, Philip Morgan, Roland Lenthall, William Alington, and Master John Stokes (Rym in 612)

tives of the dauph n¹, headed by Jean de Norry. Others of the deputation were Robert de Braquemont, ex-admira of France, and Louis de Chalon, who had just been dispossessed of his courty of Tonnerre by the duke of Burgundy². No special representatives of the duchess of Anjou seem to have been included.

An extremely cursous report of the proceedings his been preserved. For a white, it is stated, both sides sat perfectivelent. At length Master Philip Morgan introduced himself and his colleagues by name, and begged the French to be good enough to state what they had to propose. Thereupon they withdrew for a white, and when they came back much time was spent in discussing whether they should converse in Latin or another torgue. Then, credent als having been verified, the English withdrew to arrange what should be done next, and on their return Morgan said that he gathered that the dauphin was inclined for peace and he would be glad to hear his intentions. The French asked for time, and it was agreed to adjourn t.ll next morning.

When the proceedings were resumed, Morgan, after another long silence, urged that as the dauphin had been the first to open negotiations, it was only reasonable that his representatives should begin by making some definite proposal. Again the other side withdrew, and on their return Jean de Norry, speaking in French, disclaimed any special desire for peace on the part of the dauphin, who had merely sent to Henry on hearing that he was willing to treat. Surely then the first proposal should come from the English long. Next the English urged that all speeches should be in Latin, and after more deliberation apart, there to lowed a further a tercation as to who should begin. At length, however, the French produced a written statement, in which they offered to give up Saintonge, Agenais, Périgord, the Limousin, Angnumois, Rouergue, and Porou, but were spent as to Touraine, Maine, Anjou, and Lower Normandy, which was already in Henry's possession. The English envoys had no hesitation in replying that the offer was a together insufficient, much more had been offered when the French lords warted help against the duke of

^{1 &}quot;Une bien notable ambanade," J.w. 145 For their instructions dated at Chinos. Nov. 2, are Tillet, Recueu, 124 b, 115

Rym. in: 633, Beaucourt, Meurtre, 425.
Rym in: 632 oqq 1 cf. D.K.R. xlv. 319.

Burgundy in 1412. The French dilated upon the immense size of the territory they were willing to cede—a district as large as Aragon or Navarre—to which the English answered that it mattered not how large it was, what they looked to was its size compared with that of the rest of heaver, and if this were regarded it was insufficient and small. After this they separated for the night

Next day began with the usual scence, the rest of the morning being spent in arranging in what order the different parts of the question should be approached. That afternoon and the whole of the following day were wasted in trustices: tack. The morning session of the 24th opened with the usual sulky silence till at length Jean de Norry rose, apparently with something new to say. But first he wanted an assurance that Heary really wished to ally with the dauphin and help him to put down his enemies, to which the English circums joilly replied that they could not deal with that until they knew more about the "offer" The deadlock was again got over by the skill of Philip Morgan, Norry agreeing to proceed on receiving an assurance that what he was about to say would be kent a protound secret. He then added to the previous offer all Upper Normandy north of the Scine, except the city and bailings of Rouen, and promised that if the united forces should capture Arton and Flanders, the English should have a share of the winnings. After having the terms put down in writing the higgish party rejected them as one-sided and inadequate. Next day the French made another offer. If they might keep Po-tou and Saintonge, they would let Henry have an equivalent amount of land in Normandy. Norry had spoken in French and "somewhat diffusely," and the English, not being sure whether they had correctly understood him, asked if the offer was identical with the treaty of Brengny, and he said that it was. The proposal having been written down was debated till nightfall, but next day the English, having looked carefully into the terms, pointed out that they did not correspond at all to the treaty. Norry excused himself lamely on the ground that he had not been quite sure of the boundaries defined in the treaty, and suggested modifications. of his proposals to the accompaniment of running criticisms from the English. At length Morgan asked if by "holding"

² Rymains 6414 Wylin, iv. 69.

the lands, the French meant holding as a vassal or in full sovereighty. Next day, when an answer was to be given, Norry and that this question was so difficult that they had better deal with some of the other points first, he supposed, however, that the linglish king, being a just and conscientious man, did not wish to hold the provinces concerned differently from his forbears. Morgan pointed out that Henry was rightful king of brance—a title never claimed by the earlier cuces of Normandy. in France therefore he would recognise no overload but God. nor would be accept as part of a Largain what he had in his power already. The French could only say that on the question of variables they had no instructions; but no doubt if a personal meeting could be arranged between the dauphin and the English king, the matter could be settled. It was, however answered that such a meeting would be useless until preliminanes had been fully discussed, whereupon the French urged that the hinglish should say what sort of orter they were looking for Then followed more idle conversation, and proceedings were acrourned for several days, till Nov. 21. In the interval the English were approached by the two agents who had first opened negotiations at Rouen, these said that the French sockesmen really had further powers which they had not divisized. This statement did not trake for mutual confidence nor were prospects improved when Norry, on the resumption of discussion, Ekened the English envoys to the devil. Nevertheless, he now declared that he offered all the concessions of the treaty of Boetigey, after which the longlish suggested that to prevent subsequent inisunderstanding it would be well to discuss in detail what the terms of the "Great Peace" exactly unpited. The ensuing debate, however, only emphasised the fact that no agreement was possible unless the dauphin would hand over the ceded lands in full sovereignty. The French again said that they lacked trainingtions on this point the English reterated their king's claim to the thione, hinted that he might abate his demands if the negotiations went on but declared that in any case the French must give him complete. lordship over Touraine, Anjou, Maine, and Flinders, together with the lordships of Beaufort and Nogent!. The French begged that something more reasonable might be put forward; whereupon Morgan asserted that their master had offered at Il more some time ago, as he could prove it writing, and that after all the hirghish king was only asking for what his predecessors had. Thereupon all got out of their seam, and talked and talked till the English managed to put the question. Supposing the negotiations continued, would the brench try to induce their side to accept Henry's terms? The reply was that they could not go a step further than they had done. Fo lowing his instructions. Morgan put one more point. Supposing an agreement were after all arranged, what steps would the dauphin take to have it carried out? The answer was that the lands in question belonged to the dauphin, and he could go what he liked with them. But the English regimed that the dauphin was still under age, that he might revoke everything afterwards on the ground that his father was the real king, that most of the French nobility were against him, and that even if he really were regent, the king could cancel his appointment at any time. The French then spent some time trying to prove that the principal nobles, except of course the duke of Burgundy, were on the dauph n's side. Then, as though despaining of a successful issue. Morgan called Heaven and Earth to witness that the bloodshed that must follow would be on the dauphin's head, but ended feebly by asking if there were anything else or which the French were authorised to speak. They replied that they had instructions regarding the suggested marriage between King Herry and the process Catherine, but as the larger matter had broken down, they preferred now not to enter upon the smaller one. Moreover, the term specified on their safeconducts would expire in six days and they must depart, Nevertheless they met once again on the next day, when Morgan said that experience had now taught them what the French really meant. They might rest assured that such proposals as they had been putting forward would never lead to peace. Stil, the Frenchmen would not give up hope. Why should there not be a short truce to last (say' fill Candlemas? "Put your suggestions in writing, said Morgan; but unless they had something better to say than what he had just heard it was virtually certain that nothing would come of it. Thereupon the Frenchmen rose and abrupily took their leave.

 Non-temptantes Inselizatoria more, Rym. iz. 640

 On Beautiet son Mestimoropcy (Aubr), and Bogest, i.e. Nogest 'Artisid' Anne), on above, i. 440.

The curious report just summarised is signed by a notary,

Richard Cowdray, who afterwards became clerk to the king's Council. If t were not for the king's own statement that the English envoys had full powers!, we should be inclined to look upon the proceedings at Alençon as informal preliminar es rather than a serious attempt to conclude a definitive peace. At any rate the whole of the original fourteen envoys were still treated as if they were the only authorised spokesmen for England, and while the altercations at Alençon were in progress an additional paper of instructions, dated Nov. 14, was sent to them?

In all probability Henry did not regard these negotiations very seriously. For on Oct. 16 the very day when he gave his careful instructions to the Alençon envoys-he wrote to the duke of Burgundya offering to give a fair hearing to any reasonable terms he might propose. On Nov. 1 the duke returned a reply asking for safe-conducts for nine envoys who would discuss a settlement. The safe-conducts were issued on Nov. 34, and by Nov. 176 eight envoys were accredited to negotiate for peace with the king of England on behalf of the duke of Burgundy. The embassy was headed by Bernard de-Chevenon, bishop of Beauvais, who was authorised to speak in the name of the king of France, and was accompanied by Card nal Orsini, who was still trying to mediate. The English were represented by Archbishop Chiche e, Bishop Langley the chancellor, the earl of Warwick, and others, including Hungerford, Morgan, and Stokes, who had been at Alencon?. The conference opened at Pont de l'Arche at the beginning of December. From the outset the old trifling again appeared. The brench wanted to use their own tongue instead of Latin, and though Cardinal Orsini wrote to Henry bringing his personal influence to bear, the king took a serious view of the demand, and in a letter of Dec. 4 urged the cardinal to dissuade the French from pressing this "unwonted thing". Latin was the universal diplomatic language, while neither he, his council, nor his envoys could properly write, understand, or

^{1 &}quot;Ravonabiliter et plenarie instructor," Rym. ic. 6 çz.

¹ Ibid. 646 ig.

Ibid. 6311 Beaucourt, i. 293. Rym. in: 6321 D.K.R nit 702

^{*} Rym. iz. 648. Champollson Fageac, Lettres, 11 360

7 Rym. iz. 6544 Cordeliers, 2055 Monete. 22. 1955 445 Norm. Chron. (Williams)

159. (Hellot) 44

Rym. ix. 634.24. P Ibel 633.24

speak French^a. Days were consumed over this academical dispute, and on Dec. 9 the cardinal went in person to 5t Catherine's abbey, and had a four hours' conversation with Henry* They discussed the language question and the extension of the safe-conducts, which would soon expire; but the king would not agree to treat for peace until the New Year had opesed, hoping that by then Rouen would have fallen. On the anguage dispute, seeing the cardinal still inclined to support the French, he gave way so far as to agree that the French envoys might speak French, provided that his might speak English and that all proposa's when reduced to writing should be accompanied by a Latin translation. The cardian had prought with him a picture of the princess Catherine. It was painted from life, and Heary tiked it very much!. But he had asked for 1,000,000 gold crownsh as a cowry, together with Normandy, Aquitaine, Ponthieu and other fordships named in the treaty of Electiony, and with regard to this he was in no mood for discussion⁴. It was growing dark when the conversation drew to a close, and as Henry asked the carcina, not to leave that night, Orsini sent oft a message announcing what had occurred, and requesting the French envoye to let him have their decision by eleven c'clock next morning. The message was delivered at Port de I Arche at two in the morning of Dec. to. The envoys were called together at daybreak, and at once accepted the conditions as to language, with regard to the dowry, however, they asked for an extension of time, for the duke of Burgundy could not take the responsibility of agreeing to the demands respecting the king's inheritance?. I key withdrew to rientoise to explain the state of affairs to the king, the queen, and the dukel, while the cardinal, who seems to have been anatous to go home, returned at once to Italy to report his failure to the pope".

Henry has been credited with "an astute diplomacy which kept the French divided while Rosen perished14," and modern writers alternate between admiration of his skill and condemnation of his duplicity. But the truth apparently is that both

¹ lose $5% 65%. Moser is age, Le Perre, i. pal.

^{1 [}bed Waurin, a 2 ft 1 Ryrt fit. 6573 Monnte, ut. 296. • Mosser, itt 195 sq. * loid , Waurin, ta. agli. * Morace III. 296.

Pa Kingsford, 149.

Armagnacs and Burgundians were bidding strongly against each other for English help, and Henry was willing to grant it to whichever of them was the readier to accept his terms

The fall of Rouen caused a renewed eagerness for Henry's friendship. During the siege, indeed, a safe-conduct had been issued for the duke of Britting!, on Jan. 12, 14192, the truce with him was prolonged till Nov. 1, a further safe-conduct for him was issued on Feb. 123, and on March 5 he came to Rouen. with too horsemen, was received with special magnificences, and after much friendly converse arranged for the prolongation of the truce in an amended form till Christmast, with the understanding, it is said, that even after that date neither party should make war on the other except after six months' notice4. While he was at Rouen the duke dispatched messengers both to the dauph nat Montargis and to King Charles and the direct of Burguncy at Provins, so that there can be no doubt that all those interested were kept informed of what was occurring? The duke returned through Caen and Bayeux, and was at Dol by March 284. He left at Rouen Henri du Juch to act as intermed any in any further dealings, and probably intended to make another visit to Roben soon afterwards 18. The course of events, however, led him to change his purpose.

About the same time the duchess of Arjeu was likewise hargaining for an extension of the truce which protected her lands from attack. Envoys from her were at Rouen early in hebruary, and by the 15th had secured a prolongation of the agreement to the Octaves of Easter¹¹. The count of Armagnac and the lord of Albrei were also resolved to ening to English help. On heb 15 the truce with them was prolonged from haster to the ensuing midsummer, and safe-conducts were issued for these great Gascon lords to go where they would in "France or Normandy."

21 Rym in 66 r, 690, 695, DKR uli. 727.

Such dealings with the invader indicate the complete collapse of all Armagian resistance and the utter feebleness of the party.

```
Britquegny, a c., D.K.R. sk yoj, "Rvm in 663 Mener, i. 468, ii. 976

Rvm in 648 "Tit Liv 7, Via, a 6

Britquegny, agr "In Liv 7, Via, a 6

In Liv
```

Go gle

The failure of recent negotiations did not prevent the daughin from renewing his effort to reach an understanding with the English. The suggestion of a personal interview between him and Henry, put forward by his envoys at Alençon, had already been made by him in a letter to the English king written on Nov. 15, 14181, and received on Nov. 24. In his reply, dated Nov. 25, Henry said that no such meeting could be considered till Rouen was in his hands, and if it ever did take place, he would expect something different from the paltry offers that had just been made at Alenyon. By Christman, however, arrangements for a renewal of the negotiations were well advanced, and on Jan. 1, the day when Rouen began to treat for surrender, permits were issued for the dauphin's emissaries to come to Louviers3. On the 15th, however, they were granted safe-conducts for a visit to Rouen, and on Jan. 21, Archtishop Chichele, Bishops Ware and Beaufort, Walter Hungerford, John Kemp, and Richard Cowdray were commissioned to treat with them for a final peaces. Various interviews took place in the church of the Black Friars, and on Feb. 12" it was agreed that a personal meeting between Henry and the dauphin should take place on Mid-Lent Sunday, March 26; before then the Finglish envoys would be at Evreux and the French envoys at Dreux to make final arrangements for the interview at some place midway between the two?. In the meantime an armistice was arranged for the whole of the country between the Seine and the Loire. It was to last till April 23, and the necessary officers were appointed to deal with infractions of its terms. On March 9 Archbishop Chichele and

* Rym. 1x. 651

* Brequigny, 214; D K R. zli yoy.

Rym. iz. 670; 647, 704; cf. D.K.R. zli. 741. Braufort's name, however, does not

1 Ibid 686, 687, 701, 788; D K R. xli. 738, Orig Lett., Ser 1, 5, 77, Best Mus Add. MS, 24.062, f. 194, Beaucourt, , 294. [The English hishops were instructed by Chichele to have prayers offered for the success of the conterence. Reg. Bereford,

6] 19(4). }*
 Rym. in: 692; D.K.R. uli: 732, 732

¹ Rym 18, 647, Beaucouet, t. 291; Dehville Leroux, Domination Bourguignonne,

^{*} Brequigny, 211; D.K.R. alie 705. For the instructions of these envoys, dated Dec. 26, 1418, see Tillet, Retuell, 125 appear in the subsequent regolations.

On Jan 31 the safe conducts had been exceeded for a formight. The French envoys at that date were Jean de Narry, the count of Tonnaire, Custinume Seignet, knight, Jean de Va Jy, president of the Parlement of Tours, lean Tudest dean of Notre Dame, Parts, and Jean de Vi lebreme, and of the dauphin's secretaries (Rym. at 656)

Bishop Beaufort were authorised to issue passes for the dauphin's envoys, and King Henry arrived at Evreux on the 2 (th). But there was no dauphin at Dreux; in fact no meeting-place had been fixed, and all the plans for the interview melted away. In the first week of April the English court moved on to Vernon, where the king remained quietly in the castle till nearly the end of May4.

The English chrome ers cry out upon the faithlessness and treachery of the dauphing, and an interesting pravate letter, written by an English soldier at Evreux on April 36 takes the view that the king had been fooled, denounces "all the air bassadors that we dea, with" as "double and false," and gloomily opines that there is now no prospect of peace. Though Henry afterwards made much diplomatic use of the dauphin's breach of faith, he could afford to regard it with equanimity, for he was already deep in another intrigue with the duke of Burgundy.

Rym. 18, 714.

Ihid 748; Bet. Mus. Add. MS. 24,062; f. 194; Tit. Liv 71; Vita, 101.

¹ Rym. ix. 704, D.K.R. xla 740. They received instructions from the dauphin on March 6 (Tillet, Recucia, 125)

For documents dated at Vernon from April 5-May 26, too Rym. 12 727 19 ; DKR xli yoʻr 1994; Bréquigny, 61 1994

e.g Tit. Liv. 71, Vita, 209.
Orig Lett., Ser 15, 1. 76. The writer ages hamself "T. F.," but his identity is unkpowa

CHAPTER LX

THE CONFERENCE OF MEULAN

It st as the daubhin refused to accept the failure at Alencon. as final, so the duke of Burgunds aid not allow the fruitlessness of the conference at Pont de l'Arche to discourage him. Even before Roben fell envoys of his were on their way for an audience. at St Catherine's1. On Feb. 14 it was known that ambassadors were corning from the king of France², and on beb. 23 the earl of Warwick, John Grey, and Masters John Kemp and John Stafford were commissioned to confer with them?. The French envoys-the duke of Britany, Jean de Vergy, Regnier Pot, and six others—were appointed at Provins on Feb. 264, safe-conducts for them, except the dake, were issued on March 183, and after meetings at Mantes without the duke. the two parties held at Rouen several discussions in which he took part⁶. The details of the negotiations were kept a profound secret at the time?, but we know all about them now. The English pressed for the lands coded by the treaty of Brétigny, the duchy of Normandy, and whatever else they held in France, all in full sovereignty, and the French agreed to submit this demand to the duke. The result was that at Mantes, on March 30, three French commissioners offered to yield the lands in question, though they said nothing as to the terms on which they were to be held, and declared their willingness to treat further for a permanent peace and a marriage alliance, it being understood that Henry was prepared to modify his claim to the crown. On April 7 representatives of the two sides met again at Vernon, wheher Henry had transferred his quarters, and agreed that the English king should meet the king and queen of France and the duke of Burgundy on May it cat some place between Mantes and Pontoise, the princess Catherine being present. In the meanwhile a truce was to be observed

- DKR xll. 705
 lbid 696 agg
- 1 Ibid 709
- 5 St Denys, vp. 3 84.
- * Ibid. 723; Brignigny, 25e.
- 8 Rem m 619.
- * 19rd 72.2
- Nym. m. 723, 713.

W D.

F II

in all the region between the Seine and the Somme and up to the wails of Calais, as well as in that part of the country between the Seine and the Loire that was actually in the obedience of the duke of Burgundy. But the benefits of the truce were not to apply to places in Normandy which had not yet submitted, to other towns then being besieged, or to persons of the Armagnac party¹,

These prelim names—for they were no more—having been settled the earl of Warwick and other commissioners were despatched with an armed escort to interview the dake of burgundy at Provins^a. The Armagnaes were reaming with little check over the country north and east of Paris, and at Charmes the party was ambushed by Tanneguy du Chastel, the assairants, however, being beaten off with a loss of forty killed. On April to Warwick reached Provins4; next day he was entertained at suppor by the dukes, but he soon returned to Vernon, whence, with a further commission dated April 22, he went to Troyes, whither the king and queen had gone for Easter*. At Troyes on April 18 Charles had saued a document making arrangements for the truce agreed upon at Vernon? Warwick and his fellows were authorised to take sureties, to make final arrangements for the coming meeting, and to settle details as to dowry in view of a possible marriage of Henry and the princess Catherine. May 15 had been fixed as the date of the interview between the kirgs, but on May 6 three French envoys asked for a postponement on account of the sickness of Charles. Henry consented, and the date was altered to May 30%

On May 9 the commissioners decided that the meeting should take place in a large field! just outside the west gate of Meulan The spot is mirrately defined in the official document

Ibid. 721, 724.

* Tab law 73, Vita, 223. " Gerchard, age-

Rym. ix. 713 sqq. Guors, though not vet conquered, was to cayoy the advantages of the truce

^{*} Beut, il. 560 | Chron. Ric. 11-Hen. VI, 44, Monstr ili. 313, Wasrin, il. 166.

^{*} Rym. iz. 734, Monstr. ni. 3 :14; Wn.urin, ii. 266; Boutsot, ii 392

Filed 7341 DK.R 274, 780; Brequigny, 231; Tit. Lev 73; Vita, 226.

Rym 12: 746 eq., 749, 750, 752, DKR 774, 783; Félibien ii 297

Called "La Chat" in Rym 11: 751 Thu probably means L Achat, i.e comething

H. Rym in 753, 759. Tit. Liv. 73; Vita, 216, Monair iii. 318 sq.; Le Fèvre, i. 360; St Denya, vi. 326, Bent, u. 360, Chron. Rut. II.-Hen. VI. 49.

as lying opposite an island in the Scine!, with the river for its boundary on the south, a marsh on the north, a stream bisecting it from north to south, and the road that entered the town by the Porte de Meulan travers ng it from west to east?. The whole space was to be enclosed with wooden palisades. while sharp stakes were to be driven into the river bed from the ends of the paisade to the island. Across the enclosed area two trenches were to be dug, dividing it into three parts, of which the one nearest Meulan was to be for the French, the one farthest away for the English. Each nation was to keep to its own ground, which would be trenched and paled like a separate camp, the only difference between the two being that on the side facing the centre the English fence was only one foot high, while that of the French was much higher in order to serve as a protection in case of an attack by the English archers, a danger from which the English were free, as the French had no long bows3. Neither side was to bring more than 1500 armed ment. The middle space was reserved for the negotiators, and was entered by three fenced passages from either side, each guarded by fifty soldiers, and when on the opening day of the proceedings a foolhardy Englishman, wishing to show off, jumped into the forbidden area, he was promptly gibbeted by order of the marsha. It was also proclaimed that any man would be beheaded if he used offensive words, or tried to seize another for debt or breach of faith, or started wrestling or putting the stone, or doing anything that might tend to uproar. In the middle of the field there were two tents where the monarchs could confer apart with their counsellors, and at the very centre, thirty-six measured feet from each tent, draped with gold cloth and rich hangings. embroidered with likes and leopards, and enclosed within a further palisade, was the pavilion where the meeting was actually to take place.

It was probably on May 26 that Henry moved out from Vernon

Frym. 12. 7 52.3 Monster fil. 3.294 La Flivre, i. 1605 Waterin, il. 2675 Guitt, 236 2.3

ise the Inc Belle.

[&]quot; The sale is now covered by the soborb of Hardscourt, but the features mentioned may be readily identified and took up his quarters at Mantes1, which had long since submarted to the duke of Clarence, the leading townstren having come out to meet him and hand over the keys at the news of his approach2. On the same day the king of France, Queen Isabel, and the duke of Burgundy left Provins, reaching Pontoise on the evening of May 282. Meantime the held at Meulan was busy with preparations. The English portion was full of tents. bright with gold illes, leopards, and other gay devices, while at the other end the French had made their camp like a town, with streets and passages between the lines. On May 19 representatives of each side received from the principals an oath that there should be no underhand dealing at the meetings. Next day? Henry was early on the field accompanied by his two brothers, the duke of Exeter, the earl of Warwick, and many other notables. At two o'clock loud trumpeting and ministrelsy. announced the arrival of Queen Isabel in a rich litter, accompanied by her damsels and attended by the duke of Burgundy. charles VI could not appear, for he was suffering from one of his periodical fits of frenzys. When the queen had alighted, the earl of Warwick was sent to inform her of the order of the day's proceedings. From each side sixty lords and knights and sixteen councilors were to be admitted to the deliberations. When the r names had been called and verified, a signal was given, and Queen Isabe, and King Henry left their tents at the same moment, and preceded by their counsellors in process on two by two, walked slowly to a spot marked with a stake. Here Henry kissed the queen's hand, while the duke of Burgurdy howed his head and slightly crooked his knee as the king embraced him. Henry then led the queen into the central pavilion, where two thrones were set up about twelve feet apart. When both were seated, the earl of Warwi k, speaking in French, explained to the queen the purpose of the meeting. Little else was done that day, and though the proceedings lasted.

Jav 549. Other figures ste green by other writers.

Live 549. Tit Live 54; Vita, and St Denys, vi. 326; Kingsford, Lit 313, Tit Liv 734 Juv. 549 sq.; Mounte, iii.

^{*} For documents dated at Mantes, May 26-Aug. 5, 1419, no. D.K R. 28, 775 app. 716 sqq , Brequigny, 97 sqc ; Rym ix. 746 sqq. D K R xli. 713; Tit. Liv. 70; St Denys, vi 110

^{*} DKR 28. 743; Itt. Liv. 70; 50 tat. 174; Juv. 549

Plancher, 111. 512; Itin 447; Gockard, 241; Juv. 549

Tit. Liv. 73:40; Vim, 217:40.

^{*} Rym. iz. 7564 D K.R. uli. 775.

* Tit. Lar. 75 aq. 1 Vim, 217 sq.

* Rym. ax. 756, 7514 .3 K.R. uli. 783 vtv

* Rym. ax. 756, 7514 .3 K.R. uli. 783 vtv

* Rym. ax. 759.

* Ibid 761, Tit. Lav. 744 Vith, 220, Mönistr. as. 329, Juv. 5494 Norm. Chron.

^{194.} * Jun. (449) gives the names of those on the Preprint sade, the most notable being the archibhop of Sens, Henri de Savoisy.

till seven o'clock they seem to have consisted mostly of feasting and ceremonial. At the close Henry departed to Mantes and Isabel to Pontoise¹.

I wo days later all met again, and this time the princess Catherine was present¹. She was escorted by the duke of Burgundy's young nephew, the count of St Pol³, and very tharming she must have looked, for 3000 floring had been spent upon her dresses and other finery for the day, in spite of the aestitution of the country4. The English marked the sweetness of her marden blush as Henry kissed her and took her hand before following her into the tents. Catherine did not appear again at Meulan, but Henry was conquered at first sight, and three months later, when he heard of the murder at Montereau, his first cry was that now he would have the lady Catherine, for whom he had so greatly longeds. Other meetings followed on June 5 and 87, and each time there was dinner and great ceremony. At the first meeting it had been usuated that the conferences should be continued until some final decision was taken about the conclusion of peace, and that if nevertheless they should fail to attain this end, at least eight days' notice should be given before the resun ption of hostilities, In the actual negotiations the English king was to be represented by a committee consisting of Archbishop Chichele, Bishop Beaufort, and the dukes of Clarence, Gloucester, and Exeter, who were fully empowered to treat for a final peace and a marriage between Henry and Catherine*. But no sooner were vital questions approached than it appeared that in spite of all preliminary discussion, there was still a great difference of opinion on fundamentals. When Henry claimed that his hold on Normandy and all the territory covered by the treaty of Bretigny must be absolutely independent to, the French raised objections. When on the other hand they required that he should renounce all claims to Touraine, Airjou, Maine,

H. Mozarvi 36, 4 76.

Champullion Figure, Lettres, 1 v 37x.

¹ Tit Liv 74, Vita, 2221q.; Gesta, 130; Chron Rie H-Hen. VI, 49; Monstr. 18. 320, Le Fèvre, 1. 3613 Waurin, n. 268, Juv 350, Delpit, 227

* Waurin, ii 268

Tit. Liv. 74, Vita, 222; Kingsford, Lit. 333
 Wauran, i., 266.
 Inn. 448; Tit. Liv. 74; Vim, 223.

Their commissions were dated June 1 (Rym in 1911) D.K.R. ab. 181). IN Ryen, in. 779, 7841 Champolion F geac, Lettrei, ii. 364, 363, 6t Danys, vi. 346; Juw. 550 eq. J. Chartier (Vallet da Virsville), in. 447.

Brittany and Flanders, and that he should give up his claims in Ponthieu and Montervil in return for an equivalent in Acuture, he refused to listen. When they insisted that any final peace should apply to the alies of both parties, Henry would not hear of the inclusion of the Scots. When they arrued that from the 800,000 crowns promised as Catherine's dowry. there should be deducted 600,000 that should have been returned with Richard H's queen, Isabel of France, on that king's deposition, he said that this matter should be considered. in connection with the English claim for the aircrass of the ransom of King John, and on their demanding a further rebate. of 400,000 crowrs on account of Isabel's jewels, he said that they were not worth a quarter of that surr. The French afterwards biamed Henry for traking extraord nary demands1, but from the outset he knew that the duke of Burgundy was in thring towards an aliance with the dauphin, and quite early in the conference it was known that Earnegus du Chastel and other enveys from the caughin had arrived at Pentoise bent on wrecking the negotiations. I ach right as the principa's returned from Meulan to Pontoise, the arguments of the day were minutely scanned and the most was made of difficulties. The cuke seemed wavering, and sought the advice of two learned tlergs of his own party. One of them, Nicolas kaoling, urged that they must perforce conclusts the king of England if France was not to change her lord. He was too powerful, and his conquests must be accepted as arcomplished facts. Besides, everybody knew that the dauphin had been treating with him, and the best course therefore was to be beforehand. When the bargain was completed, the dauphin would certainly come into line, and Paris and other cities would follow Rouen and recognise the mevitable. The other clerk, Jean Rapiout, took up the opposite attitude. "The king of France," he said, "cannot give away rights inherited from his forbears," and even if he could, why should be give them up to the sor of a usurper4, whose contracts would all be annuled when the evenger overthrew his dynasty? Besides, how did they know that the vassals affected would be content to change their

* Jav. gct. Report was one of the prendents of the Pariment of Para (Fasquentlargue, a. 242 et passies)

Monste at 322; Watten, ii. 269.

Thid. He was one of the matter des requêrs of the duke of Burgundy (La Borre, 1194; Fauquembergue, i ato n.)

The control of the matter des requêrs of the duke of Burgundy (La Borre, 1194; Fauquembergue, i ato n.)

allegiance? The treaty of Bretigny had broken down before, and how could they expect to revive it now? This speech made the greater impression on the duke. It is clear that Heary's full terms had not previously been disclosed to the duke's supporters, and now that the facts were getting out, he began to see that his attitude towards Henry's claims was viewed with undisguised apprehension by many of his own party; and we have it on the author ty of Queen Isabel nerself that though Henry's terms were agreeable to her and the duke, they were warned that to accept them publicly would cause all the nobles and towns among their supporters to go over to the daughin? The duke at once began to withdraw from his difficult position When the time came to formulate in writing the promises that he had been willing to make by word of mouth?, he raised objections, and warted Henry to bind himself never to accept the crown of France, whether by purchase, cession, transfer, or in any other way whatsoever. Henry regarded this demand as prejudicial to his rights and derogatory to his honour. At a private interview with the duke at Meulan, he told him hotly that his actions showed that the conference was only talk. The dauphin's agents, he knew, were busy at Portoise, and he must have a final answer⁴. For h mself, he would gladly go forward with the bargain and the marriage scheme, "but if this is not to be, we will hustle the king out of his kingdom and you with him!" "Sire," retorted the duke, "you will be pretty tired ere you fling us out. Be very sure of that? !" The exact date of this meeting is not known*, but a note of discord was struck on June 10 when Henry ordered that no food should be sent out of Normandy, as merchants from Paris and elsewhere were coming to buy provisions presumably to victual French towns and strongholds. When the French arrived at the conference ground on June 13, they found the English drawn up with spears and banners at the very edge 1 See her letter to Henry V dated Troyer, Sept. 20, 1419 (Bezucourt, L 199).

Inv. 952.

The date has been given as June 5 (Plancher, 16, 522), but after each a stormy two versions, across negotiations would have been impossible for some time. The interview probably took place just before the final breach.

* Rym. in 76g

¹ Cf. "le traité accretement comenchié par Monseigneur (i.e. Charles VI) et vous (Henry)," Essucourt, 1 : 216 :qq of their encampment, rumours having been circulated that they might be attacked. Nevertheless the day passed pleasantly, with the usual dinner, and at the next conference, on June 16, King Henry made amends by feasting not only his own men but the French also, giving them specially good fare. Sust icion, however, continued to grow, and the air was ful, of disturbing rumours. The principals met again on June 22 and June 108, but this was the end of discussion. For when Henry came on the ground according to arrangement on July 3, neither the queen nor the duke appeared?. On the 5th Archbishop Chichele and the earl of Warwick were deputed to proceed to Pontoise to ascertain on what day it would be convenient to have another. personal interview about the marriage4. But the duke refused to see them, alleging that the English proposals were vague, unreasonable and obscure. Thus the conference ended, its on y result being that Henry's eagerness for the marriage was increaseds. In England the view was officially promulgated that a treaty of peace had been arranged before the meeting at Meulan presumably at Mantes and Vernon that in this Henry had agreed to accept less than his full rights, but that the French would not agree to any reasonable final arrangement[†].

^{*} Rym 12: 719; Brit. Mus. Add MS. 14,062, f. 194 b * Rym 12: 710. * Monstr m. 321.

The explanation of the duke's conduct lies partly in his relations with the daughin. In the latter part of the winter the Armagnac troops had been very aggressive. On Feb. 25 they captured Beaumont-sur-Oise⁸, on March 8 Soissons⁹. It was doubtess this activity that led the duke of Burgundy to send messengers to the daughin with proposals for a truce, which was concluded, though in somewhat vague terms, on May 14.19. In consequence, emissaties of the daughin, as we have seen, were able to make mischief at Pontoise during the conferences at Meulan. Meanwhile, a complete reconciliation was being promoted by Alan

* Tit lav 24 mg 3 Vkn, ung. P fein 446.

⁸ Kongofor J, La. 154, 145 Lžy, 753 Vita, 2254 Brit, Mino Add. MS, 2450623 f. 295.

* Bone in. 7764 D.K.B. ali. 789.

* Rum en. 789 sq 3 Rest. Miss. Add. 1685, 24062, E 294 b.

* Immediately after the end of the conference Henry cent Catherine presents of pewellery and to have been worth 100,000 mowns; they were, however, captured by theoremy before they reached her (St Denys, vi 3443 also Abrégé in) Charter (Vallet de Viriville), m. 272, 224)

7 Bot, Park ir eife 1 Vallet de Virivide, 1, 147

* St Denys, vi. 328.

 For 548. Justina des Ummi was at this time at Poiners and had excellent means of getting to know what was proceeding in the inner councils of the dauph is 5 party.

of Kerabret, bishop of St Pol de Léon, who had lately returned from the Council of Constance commissioned by the pope to compose the feuds of France by any possible means!. Under h's influence the duke on June 28 sent ervoys to the dauphin, then at Melun, to arrange a meeting? On July 7 he left Pontoises, next day he visited the daughin at the fortress of Poully near Melun4; and on the 9th they discussed peace in a but which had been erected for the purpose on a bridge over the Biherel about three miles north west of Melun! No agreement was reached, and a subsequent meeting was equally abortive. The attempt was on the point of being abandoned, but the principals were persuaded to make one more efforia, and this time their conversation led to an understanding?, which after further debate ripened into a formal treaty of peace, signed on July 116. The duke agreed that the past should be forgotten, that he would submit himself to the dauphin, behave as his true and loyal kinsman, help him to maintain his estate, and aid him agair at any who should make war upon him. The dauphin on his side consented to cherish his very dear cousin the Juke and defend him against any manliving. All past offences were to be blitted out and all heritages. restored. The faction names of Burgundian and Armagnac should cease. The two chiefs would heaceforth live in harmony, help jointly in all the Lusiness of the kingdom, make no treaty or all ance with the enemies of their king on pain of excommunication and would repudiate any such already made

On July 17 the duke of Bargundy was back at Ponto set, Two days later a reval ordinance was issued confirming a lithat had been deneld. All offences were to be pardoned, all confisca-

but , Manner in 322, Le Fèvre, 1, 264, Waurin, n. 271

Rvm iz 379, St Denys, m. 322, 342, 344; J. Chartier (Vallet de Viriville). n. 211, Waurin, ii. 2713 Félibien, ii. 797, Barante, iii. 179, Plancher, iii. 213, 314.

This mem to have here across pushed manner by the mediation of leanne, mother of Pierre de Gradione of the date services. She was one of the curen's latter. If nonote, had known the daughter from his chilchood, had great influence with the duke and was withal a "venerable and prederit ady" (Cordeness, allog St Desya, vi. 3514 Monite il., 3213 Le Fèvre, i. 3643 Waurin, ii. 272).

St Denys, vi. 332, Le Fevre, l. 364, Ordonnances, 26, 274; Champollion-Figere, Lettres, ii. 336; Rym. iz. 756, 778.

[|] Ordonnances, no. 468, 274, St. Denys, vs. 212, 136 | | Tomoto | 17, 220 | 16, 17, 100 | 44 K.

^{*} Ordonnances, mit. 263; Plancher, 38. 325, Reaucourt, Meurtre, 2304 Chastellam L. 14. The text is given in Rym. in. 776; St Denys, vi. 334.5qq., Monstr. iii. 324.9qq. 4 from 44.9

M Ordonneson, zii. 263, 275; Tillet, Record, 124 b.

tions annulled, all garrisons set free to operate against the English. The Parlement at Poitiers was recognised as the supreme court¹, and the queen, the duke and the dauphin were to share alike in advising and deliberating in the royal Council. Meanwhile news of the reconciliation had been trumpeted abroad, and Paris had abandoned itself to demonstrative rejoic ngº.

Google

¹ Ordonnances, xi. 15 ² J. Chartier (Vailet de Viriville), in: 121 (Abrégé) , Douét d'Arcq, L 403-

CHAPTER LXI

DIPLOMATIC FAILURE AND MILITARY SUCCESS

In must not be supposed that Henry's diplomatic activity was concerned solely with the French. It was a time when the relations between England and the papacy were somewhat critical. Martin V owed his election largely to the influence of Bishop Beaufort, and he seems to have thought that in Henry he had a willing roof. The king had been in communication with him in the early days of the siege of Robert, and early in 1419 Bishop Caterick had a private interview with him at Mantual. At this the pope was much moved; he declared himself convinced that Henry ready did love him, and said that mil the theologians in the world could not have touched him so much as the king's dryine eloquence. The purport of this eloquence can only be conjectured, but there is little doubt that Henry was seeking help of some kind against the French, for Martin promised that he would be Henry's "secretarius," and that his recent letter should not fall into French hards. On his side he had sent two letters to the king, enclosed in one to Chicaele, with injunctions that the contents should be kept strictly secret and that the letters should be burnt as soon as they had been read. What the pope offered is not known, but it is probable that part of the price at least was to be the repeal of the Statute of Provisors. It is likely that Henry had raised hopes that the statute might be annulled, but when in the summer of this year the pope formally pressed for this?, the king pointed out that neither he nor his father had been in any way concerned in the passing of the statute and that it could not be repealed without the consent of the "Three Estates4 **

The same months saw the promotion to the episcopate of two of the most faithful agen's of Henry's diplomacy. On March 2, 1419, Thomas Peverell, hishop of Worcester, died!

¹ Rym. at. 610.

[•] Ibid. * Ibid. Bcf.

172. Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [cm. 131

The king having granted the cougé d'éhrel, the monks of Worcester, on April 248, elected Philip Morgan, archdeacon of Norfo k, and chancelor of the duchy of Normandy Meanwhile, the see of Rochester having fallen vacant by the death, on Oct. 28, 1418, of Richard Yonges, the chapter had thosen John Kemp⁴, archdeacon of Durham and keeper of the privy seal. Martin V, requested to confirm both elections, followed the usual practice of the papacy at this time, and provided Morgan and Kemp to the sees in questions. On Dec. 3, 1419, both were consecrated in Rouen cathedral by the bishops of Arras and Hebron⁴.

Negotiations for papal support were of course in the usual order of things in the Middle Ages. Less conventional were some of Henry's other dealings, notably those with Naples, which have been strangely neglected by modern historians, perhaps because they led to nothing, though they afford evidence of the extraordinary boldness and range of the king's ambition. Naples was ruled by Queen Joan II, who had succeeded her brother Ladislas in 1414. She was then forty-four years old, a widow, and notorious for her licentious life. She was childless, and it seemed as though with her the Durazzo line of the house of An ou would come to an end. It was for a time doubtful whether she would choose an inglishman or a Frenchman as her second husband?, but in 1415 her choice fell on Jacques, count of La Marche. In 14 18, however, after violent quarrels, he escaped from the imprisorment to which Joan had consigned him, and after many vicissitudes returned to France. Joan had already begun to consider the adoption of some powerful personage as her heir, and had had some dealings with Henry's representatives at Constance. Eventually she offered to adopt John duke of Bedford. On Feb. 28, 1419, Herry signified his assent, and on March 12 Thomas Polton and Agostino de Lante of Pisa were formally appointed to con-

* Le Neire it 3654 Garrie 1965 Bubul it 4641 Cal. Pop. Lett. vii. 133-1 Le Nesc, fi 566, Eubel, 1 444. Bund, 390, Stubbs, Reg $6

Rym. iz. 761

At Evens, on March 25 (Rym. in. 7. 4; Bond, 404). Bund, 40 ;.

Albaza, a 267. It is, however, probably a mintake to suppose that the "orator principle Galilee" who was at Figrence in Oct 12414, in order to get the support. of the Signory for his master's sait for Joan's hand, had anything to do with the prince of Webs. at Faragita 44) assumes. The surfor was probably Heart de Lungnan, prince of Garier, son of James I, king of Cypros.

due, the consequent negotiations. Polton does not appear to have gone to Naples in person, but he drew up a schedule of instructions for his two colleagues, Agostino de Lante and John Fitton, who were to conduct the discussions with the queen. They were to ascertain the exact strength of the parties that respectively favoured her and her husband and the conditions under which Bedford might hope to succeed to the throne. They were to press for an allowance to him of not less than 60,000 ducats a year, while certain harbours were to be reserved to him.

After conversations between the English agents and those of the queen, it was agreed that nothing should be finally settled until the consent of the pope had been obtained. Subject to this, however, and in consideration of the likelihood that the French would resist the treaty by force, the English would pay the queen 30,000 ducats, which would be deposited at Caeta and must not be touched until Reggio and Brindin had actually been handed over to Bedford's representatives. Within eight months after that the duke would come to Naples, bringing 1000 men-at-arms and 2000 archers, whose wages he would himself pay for six months. The queen would make him duke of Calabria (a title bestowed only on the heir to the throne), with full power over that province, and place in his hands all the steongholds in her possession. Bedford, further more, should have as his own all that he could conquer from the queen's enemies, and should be declared her successor, not only in the kingdom of Nap es but also in the county of Provence^a, which was actually held by the duchess of Anjou, who belonged to the rival line.

Nothing seems to have come of this agreement. The queen had papal support and in Oct. 1419 was crowned at Napies? Perhaps she no longer felt the need of English aid. In 1420, indeed, she seems to have been inclined to reopen negotiations. with Bedford^a, but the result cannot have been encouraging, for in 1421 she adopted as her he r the young king of Aragon, Alforso V.

Meanwhile Henry was trying to find the duke of Bedford a Nym in, 705, D. K.R. ali 7415 lm. Roll 7 Hen. V, Pasch., April 20, 1419. Polton was at the court of Rome (Lenz, 186).

* Ame ligt v Vinyas, i 34, 4 a C talmone, is 104.

* Ame ligt v Vinyas, i 34, 4 a C talmone, is 104.

⁴ Ryan 18, $65 where she commissions Agostino de Laine to carry a message from her to the duke.

174 Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [OR IXI wife as well as a mother. He was now thirty, and after Henry's successes might look as high as he pleased. Four years before, indeed, a marriage with a princess of Aragon had been proposedl, and when in 1417 the young widow, Jacqueline of Hamaust, was in difficulties with her uncle the bishop of Liege, his name was put forward as that of a possible sharer of her country and fortunes. But when Jacqueline married the duke of Brabant, Bedford had to look e sewhere. On March 18, 1419. Henry despatched John Co-vile and Richard Levot. dean of St Asaph, to make a round of the suitable courts of Germany and see what could be done?. They were to visit the done of Lorraine, who had two ittle daughters, isabel and Catherine, though the envoys seem to have been so ill informed that they fancied there was only one3. They were to ask for the hand of Isabel, the elder, who was only eight years of age. They found, however, that the duke, though a strong Burgundian, had just arranged a marnage between her and René the third son of the duchess of Anjout Accordingly they went on to see what could be done with the margrave of Brandenburg, Frederick of Hohenzollern. As Vicar of the Empire in Signsmund's absence he had held a Diet at Nordlinger in Franconia. in Aprill. The envoys were to approach him as one of those included with Sigismund in the Canterbury treaty, and to ask for the hand of his only daughter; but nothing came of the suggestion, and it is not even known whether they had an interview with him. According to their commission they were rext to approach Sigismund himse f to see if he had any kinswoman available. But Sigismund was by this time back in Hungary⁶ and no one knows if he so much as received a message from the envoys. After all the duke of Bedford remained a bachelor four years longer, in the end marrying Anne. daughter of John duke of Burgundy.

In all these transactions there seems to be strong evidence of Henry's ambit on to ring France round with enemies by means of marriage alliances and other Napoleonic methods. He was alited with 5 gismund. He had in his pay the three ¹ Cf vol 1 97 1 Rym. nt. 7 to 10 4 Calmet, 111. 513.

^{*} Rym 12 1/10.

1 It was formally announced on May 10, 1419 (Calmet, 111. 433; Vallet de Vanville, 5. 151, Lecoy de 16. Marche, 1. 44)

Brandenburg, So., Reichstagsakten, vii. 113
 Akmann, 1. 261-272, Aschbach, ii. 412; Lest, 202

great elector archbishops of Cologne¹, Mainz, and Trier². Negotiations were pending to win over the Genoese. Their representatives had been approached at Constance as to a renewal of friendly relations, and on Feb. 26, 1419, William Bardolph and other commissioners were appointed to treat with them at Calais*, but, notwithstanding prolonged negotiations, no agreement was reached. At the same time, too, Henry was trying to secure for Humphrey of Gloucester the hand of Blanche, daughter of Charles III of Navarre and widow of Martin of Aragon, king of Sicily, which was governed in her name. The matter had long ago been broached, and in Navarre had received favourable consideration; but Henry had not been able to make up his mind. The king of Navarre demanded, as the price of his consent, some rectification of the boundary. between his kingdom and Guienne, and Henry could not bring. himself to part with any of his land. His interests were represerted at Olite by Charles Beaumonts, standard bearer of Navarre, a Frenchman by birth but devoted to the English cause. On April 28, 1419, he sent Henry a message expressing the hope that English envoys would soon arrive, as representatives of both Aragon and Castile were coming to ask the hand of Blanche, the estates of Navarre were pressing the king to come to a settlement, and it was all he could do to secure further de ay? Henry had on Apri 3 approved of Gloucester's appointment of Wilsiam Beauchamp and John Stokes to negotiate the match. It is doubtful, however, whether they even set out, and in any case the project was fruitless, for on Nov 5 Blanche was married to John, second son of Ferdinand king of Aragon.

Notwithstanding the negotiations in which he was engaged, Henry's first care after the fall of Rouen was to complete the conquest of Normandy. The dukes of Clarence and Exeter, the earl of Salisbury, and others?, were authorised to arrange for the capitulation of walled towns and castles, and fully occupied they were with the task. Caudebee, as we have seen, had undertaken to share the fate of Rouen, and on Jan 23

Cf. anto, p. 315 2 Nym 18, 7154 D.K.R. alli, 763.

^{*} Rym. iz. 414 1990 * Ibid 758, Ord Priv. Co. ii. 245 19 ; 235 1991; 266 191 * Cf Wy 12, 112, 72

^{*} thed 7:6 * D K R Rh 7:2, 7:4, 7:1 Tit Lav 70.

176 Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [cn. 131

Lewis Robsart and Roper Figures were commissioned to receive its submission, the former being appointed captain of the place. With it fell fourteen other places in the vicinity that were hound by a similar contract, and then "all the residue of Normandy yie deal." A French account says that thirty-five towns and castles surrendered shorrly after the fall of Royen, and the number is probably not exagnerated. The town of Mont vill ers, which for more than two years had held out as a standing menace to the English at Harfleur, yielded to High Luttere Ion Jan 23th. On Jan 31 Lillchonnet, on the next day I & amp and Etrepagny surrendered . Tancarville yielded about the same time", Vernon on Fels 14, Mantes, forestailing attack, on heb. (44. Dieppe submitted on heb. 818, Arques had miready cone sola. Gournay and Neufchatel en Bray gave in onthe 6th14. On lieb, 15 hu with several adjacent casiles, surrendered to the duke of Exeter13, the whole county being granted to William Bourchier, in whose family the title "count of Lu" remained for at least 250 years16. Honfleur had baffled the Linglish attack in 1417, but it capitulated on behild c after a short siege by the earl of balisbury. There and other surrenders of less note placed al. Normandy in English hands!". with the exception of the frontier fortresses of Mont-St-Michel, Château Gullard, Gisors, La Roche Guvon, and Ivry. Of these La Roche Gayon, though regarded as impregnable, was the first to tail. It was defended against the earl of Warwick for two

Monste 131, 309

* Rym. in. 674; Tit Liv 70; VIII, 205.

4 Ryna Dt. 677.

7 Ibid., Bréquigny, 47, 2141 Vita, 205-

* Ryen, ast, 6yd., Brequigny, 47.

D & R at my Dr the same day it was greated to John Grey of Heton (Brd quigny, 47; DKR ili +11)

Diesek and Gesse, 200; Newhall, 2700] Bourgeon, 2212 Norm Chron 193.
4 Rym 11 682, be quigney, 28, D.K.R. al., 742, 745, bira, 204. Deppe was placed. in the keeping of Waltim Bourchier (D.K.R. ali, 727, 730; Brequigny, 51)

12 D.K.R. ali, 727

13 D.K.R. ali, 727

Rym in 695, Bréquigny, 55, 71, 104; DKR nii. 721, 146, 765.
 Brequigny, 69, Yorks Arch. and Topog Journ in 4015qq.
 Rym. in 698; Bréquigny, 57; D.K.R. nii. 746; Blondel, Reductio, 154.

" Orig. Lett., Ser 11, 1, 76.

² Stow, Chron 157, Puneux, 106. D.K.R. w. 50%, Brequigny, 44. 2 Peier Chron. 489. Cf. Gests, 119; Norm. Chron. 192, Wairin, it. 165, Monite. u. 309, St Denys, vl. 326, Fenin, 106 months by the lady of the place, Perette de la Rivière, who best off many assaults. But, on the advice of Guy le Boutes ler, the fermer capta n of Rouen, Warwick enlarged the caves in the coff on which the castle stood, and with its foundations thus undermired, it surrendered by May 1, the indy being allowed to leave with her sors after refusing an offer of marriage with le Bouter lee, to whom the place was subsequently granted. Ivry was besieged by the duke of Gloucester towards the end of March*. After much fighting the town was stormed, but the castle, which was very strong, held out for some time longer. On May 10, however, the worn out garrison capitulated, and four days later the fortress passed into the hands of the English^a, who were now able to raid far and wide in the Chartrain^a. As for Château Gailiard, though the duke of Exeter was ordered to attack it in April", it was not reduced tall the following autumn, while for the present Gisors was left alone.

^{*} Richt et fine Brig sany av. At Vermon a temporary from had been arranged on the previous a furner in order that the vistige might be garbered. Hercuigns, a mi DKR nit 692, frechard, 563.3, Writing Forcer was made capitain (Kym. in 692, D.K.R. Mi. 711).

The resistance of these places cid not deter Henry from pressing his invasion far beyond the limits of Normandy. Though the repotiations at Meulan had done little to promote the cause of peace, they had given him and the duke of Burgundy an opportunity of arranging a truce which should last tili July 297. The interval was used by Henry to attempt the renewal of the discussions. Though the English at Mantes knew all about the meeting of the dake and the dauphin! Henry on July 19 sent representatives to the duke, who was again at Peniolise, to ask that negotiations might proceed, and on the 21nd safe-conducts were issued for four envoys to come to Mantes 4, two of them being Armaphacs who had been with the dauphin at Pourly. The I rench seem to have met English commissioners, and to have advised delay until the duke and

I Beequigny, 93, 233; D.K.R. ali, 800; Tit. Liv. 72; Vita, 224; Champellion-Frgure, Lettres, in 1414 Monate all 1377; Feath, 169; St Denys, vi. 313, July 144. The lady has been much praised for returning to been her present on at the price of her patrick are the total worthly of semant that within the trees from he she received, at her own request, a safe-conduct for an interview with Heary (Rym. ix. 773)

The Chron. 193.

This is a factor of the conduct for an interview with Heary (Rym. ix. 773).

This is a factor of the conduct for an interview with Heary (Rym. ix. 773).

Norm Chron. 193. * Ibid : Tit. Liv. 72; D K R. xbii 214. * Beequagny, 20 mg., Tit. Liv. 72; St Denya, 31, 315. The series of the capitalanea, were incorred to entered to the Norman rol. of 6 Hep. V.

Norm shrow in ... They got as far nou h an Januale, Newhall, 131, count Brit. Mus Add Ch. 35

^{*} Rot. Norm. 7 Hen. Y, p. 2, m. 22. T Rym ix: 781
* I his appears feern a et er written at Marnes on July 24 by a certain R. Prior et whose position we know nothing (Rym. in. 775)

⁴ Ind 982.

^{*} Ibid 785; Smucourt. Mearin, 221, 226

178 Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [cn. 131

the dauphin had met again, they explained that though Henry's proposals were very welcome, it would be difficult to get the nobles and the towns to accept them unless the dauphin had done so. But it at once became a parent that the duke had no serious intention in resuming relations with Henry, for on July 2.1 he and the royal party left Pontoise for St Denis?

If the duke thought that he was making Herry his dupe, he was grievous y mistaken. The truce expired on July 292. Next day4 the king ordered the gates of Mantes to be kept shut, and suffered no civilians to pass out. At mid-day a strong body of his personal guard left the town, none knew whither. Another force provided with scaling ladders, left at nightfall, and it now became clear that a dash was to be made for Pontoise. The attackers, numbering in all 3000 ment, were divided into two sections, one under Gaston de Feix, who had just been made count of Longueville, the other under the earl of Huntingdon. The suburos of Pontoise had all been burnt in anticipation of an attack by the Armagnacs, and the he of the ground was known to many Englishmen who had visited the place during the recent negotiations?. It was gurrisoned by a force of 1000 men-at-arms and 2000 crossbowmen" under the lord of I "Isle. Adam, and owing to the presence of the court had recently been provisioned for about two years. A I went well with the force under Gaston de Forx, who left their horses at a little distance from the town, grept up under cover of darkness, and lay concealed in the trenches of some vinerands near the western wall. Here they waited for a signal from the earl of Huntingdon, whose force had made a wide detour to the east to har the road to Paris. But the earl had lost his way and got entangled in a marsh, so as sunrise approached the count's

I Besucourt, s. 186, where is quoted in full a letter of Queen Isabet to Henry written, at Troyes on Sept. 20, 1419.

I harange, at 246.

A proclamation was much on the joth stating that it had ended (Tit. Liv. 75).

Vita, 227; Gesti, 130)

* Krigsford, Lk. 334; Sharpe, London, Ili. 164; Delpit, 227; Monter, 10, 134; Wastin, it. 271; Le Fèvre, 1, 364

Monstra of 3324 St Der volve 314

^{*}On June 11 (Rom in 266, 271) DKR all 789). He was be second on of Archardoud de Grat ly count of Frix, who had abandoned he linglish connection (Wyar, 11-316), and heather of Jean, count of Frix at this time. He had the family lands in Garcony and the title of Capital de Bach (ibid 315) Asserme, in 371, 3813. Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 166, 161).

¹ Le Fèvre 1, 366

¹ St Denys, vi 1124 Monstr III 120, 213

party determined to run the risk alone. About four in the morning! some of them sprang from their hiding and planted their adders* against the wall, which they found almost anguarded, the watch having come down to attend their early Mass and take their morning drink^a. The storming party flung open one of the gates through which the rest streamed rapidly, shouting "St George I Ville gagnée I" The garrison, recovering from their surprise, made a dangerous rally, but the gate was so smashed that it could not be closed. For a short time both sides fought savagely in the streets; but the attackers gained in numbers, the sound of Huntingdon's trumpets was heard approaching, the townsfolk busied themselves with hiding their effects, and when the captain shouled "Sauve qui peut I" from the wall, the garrison, aiready much demoralised, flung away their crossbows, opened all the gates, and beat a hasty retreat, those who fled across the bridge falling into the hands of the earl's party, while those who took the Beauvais road were robbed by Burgundian plunderers. All looting was forbidden at the great abbeys of St Martin and Maubuisson in the suburbs6, but the town itself was given up to pulage, the inhabitants lost almost all that they possessed, and vast stores were captured, valued according to one account at 2,000,000 crowns8 Henry was delighted at the success of this tout de main; he had a Te Deum sung and on Aug. (wrote to the mayor of London saying that for charm and wealth and commanding position he had as yet made no conquest that could equal Pontoise. It was the most notable capture which he had made in "France" as distinguished from Normandy, and in subsequent negotiations he absolutely refused to consider its surrender.

Douët d'Areq, 1, 4044 Worcester, Itin. 3514 Martial de Paris, 1, 33.

Largely made of rope (St Denys, vs. 346)
 Le Férre : 166, cf Mozatr at 331, Doubt d'Arm, i 404

St Denys, vi 151.

7 Rym. z. 55.

1 Jun. 552, of Le Fèvre, i. 367; Wadrin, ii. 274; Monste iii. 233; Worcester, Itin zet, where it is said that thurty-two knights were captured

Monnte fit 333. Tie Liv 21 ogg : Viti, 226 ogg : St Denys, vi. 350 og : Monste. di. 313: Frou, ^{351,} where it is said that thurty-two knights were captured.

 Deipit, 227; cf. Wals, ii, 310. For a similar letter to the mayor from the duke of Clarence, see Sharpe, ii. 364. L'lisle Adam was very naturally accused of treachery, it being said that he gave up the fight as soon as his money and valuables had been safety removed. St Denvs, vi. 352. On the other hand, Jean Juvénal (552) praises the valour he showed in the defence of the town.

180 Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [. 18, 121

On Aug. 6 Henry moved from Mantes and transferred his headquarters to his new possession, where he stayed in the castle for a week or two1. Strategically, indeed, he had scored a signal success. He had the whole of the Vexin in his hands; he had vastly replenished his stores; and by seizing the bridge. of Portoise he had removed the last obstacle that parred his way to Pansa. Nevertheless, his position was beset with dangers. Peace, which but a few weeks ago seemed to be standing at the door3, had now vanished into the remote distance, and with it the hopes of a marriage with the princess Catherine. There was no choice but to go further and further with the war, which was every day growing more inksome and distasteful to Henry's people. What was worse, a arriving reports kept pouring in showing that the more he advanced towards the east, the weaker became his hold on his earlier conquests. In June there was a formidable invasion of the Corentin[®], Avranches and Pontorson being captured by the French^a. Sa isbury, who was lieutenant of Normandy south of the being, came to repel the raiders, the feudal levy of the Coteniin was called out to and on July 14. Avranches was recovered, though Pontorson probably remained in French hands for some months. There were, too, disquieting signs of disaffection nearer Henry's headquarters. At Bezumont-le-Roger the haille was unable to exercise his jurisdiction owing to the prevalence of brigandage, and arrangements had to be made for him to hold his court in the castle of La Rivière de Thibouville¹⁰. Formidable conspirac es were being hatched at Rouen¹¹ and Dieppel¹². On Aug. 16 the king assued orders to captains of fortified towns to see that althe soldiers of their garrisons lived and slept within the walls [3]. The eastern frontier of the dachy was the scene of much fighting. In August 5t Martin-ie-Gaillard was recovered by

Rym. 1X. 7.9.

Briquigny, 104; D K.R xli 798. Delpit. 217, Rym. ix 790. 1 lbd 719. Briguigny, 100

Mont-St Michel, t. az j Juv. 351. 7 Brequigny, 100.

^{4 [}bid 33 The earl of Sofiolk, appointed captain of Pontorson on June 12 (Brequigny, 59) did not draw any money in that expecity up to the following May a (Exch. Acets

^{714). 30} Brequigny, 103
Tit. Liv. 75; Vita, 226. On Sept. 6 orders were insued defining more clearly the datast of the captain in supporting the could freen in maintaining order (Brequigny)

ac6) tibid, where directions, dated Sept. 8, are given for crushing a conspiracy at Dieppe.

 Ibid 104.

the French and relieved by the lord of Gamaches from Comprègne when the English tried to recenture it. The approach of superior forces, however, compelled the French to withdraw, and immediately afterwards the ear of Huntingdon led a raid far into enemy country and burned Breteuil!. On the Maine front et fortune was still more capricious. Ambroise de Loré, who was making a name for himself among patriotic Frenchmen, inflicted a sharp reverse on a force commanded by the ear of March, and even took Sées, though he did not try to hold it. Not long afterwards, however, he was defeated and captured by Gilbert Halsall, beille of Evreux, who was raiding in Maine. To counterbalance this, the English were in August worsted in a fight near Mortain, many prisoners and banners being sent to Paris in consequence.

Much more serious than the vicissitudes of frontier warfare were the diplomatic successes of the dauphin's party. Towards the end of 1418 both he and the duke of Burguidy had been in negotiation with the Scots*; there were already a few Scottish. troops serving under the daubhin⁸ and possibly some in the army. of the dukes. Before the end of March, 1419, further he p had been promised to the dauphin by a Scottish embassy, more Scots had arrived, and a French mission had gone to Cistile to try to secure transport for a big force?. In May Sir William Douglas was retained by the daughtn with I to men-at-aims and 300 archers, and there were more than 300 other Scots in his services. The Scottish envoys had gone to Spain, and, adding their arguments to those of the French, they prevailed on the king of Castile to sign a convention, dated at Segovia on June 28, whereby he undertook to provide for the transport of troops from Scotland 40 armed ships and 20 galleys, with 200 menat-arms and 4000 mariners and crossbowmen. They were to go at once to Beile Isle, whence, under Admiral Braquemont, they should proceed to Scotlancas. A fresh embassy from the dauphia was sent thither to make the most of the Scottish Worm Chron 19449 Monte et 11519 , Jun 146 1 Jun 446 [The chromology of these everts a quite abscure, though Professor New-has given reason for behaving that Lore was captured in May, x419 [P. 177.]

^{*} St Denys, vi. 162; Jun. 152.

* Forbes Leith. 1 152; Bezucourt, 1 429

* Ibid. 101; Dauriet Alaince, 7529 (Newball, 136)

* Forbes Leith. 1 153

* Ibid. 314; Daumet, Aliance, 74; Circourt, 136, 164; 364 upq.; Ryst. ix. 78յ ոգ.

182 Diplomatic Failure and Military Success [CH. LIU offer, and by the beginning of September the number of Scots in the daughte's army had considerably increased, though the main expedition had not yet sailed. Meanwhile, a Casti ian force had crossed the Pyrenees, overrun the county of Labourd, and prundered to the walls of Bayonne³.

There can be Ittle doubt that these proceedings were all carried out with the confirmance of the duke of Burgundy. In March he had sent three escures to Scotland⁴, and in April the bishop of Orkrey and two Scottish lords visited him at Proving, where they stayed several weeks and were treated with special horour. Nor can the duke have made any effort to corcea, his relations with them, for Fig ish envoys were in the town at the same time". Henry, indeed, seems to have been fully alive to the canger that threatened him. A large fleet was assembled. at Southampton under Hugh Courtenay, son of the earl of Devon, who had collected a force of 380 men-at-arms and 760 archers. He had under him two krights. Thomas Carew and John Arundel, together with John Hawley of Dartmouth and Henry Fortescue, all experienced and dashing sailors. He received £1760 to pay the wages of his men for three months. from May 17, during which he was to bear the title of "Captain of our Navy" and to exercise large powers "according to maritime laws," provided that he did not encroach on the jurisdiction of the admiral, the duke of Exeter. The fleet included tour carracks, tive waves, and eight balingers (all king's ships, manned altogether by 1103 seamen and 50 pagets, with four constables and four carpenters, their wages amounting altogether to more than 1797 for the three months. About the end of July, however, Henry got to know of the plans of the Castilian fleet from documents captured by a baliager of Bayonne, observing no doubt with interest that it was instructed to do no irrury to the duke of Burgundy"; and on Aug. 12 and 2414 Bedford issued orders to collect more ships to intercept the enemy fleet on its way to Scotland. At the • Beaucourt, 1, 309 sq.

• hey fired with the dube on April 12 (Gachard, 240, Ibn. 447), and did not have Provins fill May 8 (ibul. 446). Cf. Beaucourt, J. 310

* Cf. ante, p. 162. 7 Int. Roll 7 Hen. V. Panch., May 20, 1419. Cal. Pat. 1416-22, pp. 182 29 7 Rym. 12. 783 29

30 Ibid. 191, 792.

^{*} Beaucourt, 2, 120.
* Ryst, ix 794 sq. The letter in which the tababitants announce this news and beg. Benry for help is dated Sept. 5 same time the forces of the northern counties were called out to guard against a possible landing by the foreigners! Despite these precautions, however, the Castilian fleet, reinforced by ships of La Rochelle, reached Scotland in September, embarked 6000 men under the earls of Buchan and Wigtown, and landed them safely2. On Oct. 29 the two commanders were at the dauphin's court at Bourges³. Their troops were stationed in Touraine4. Reinforcements under the earl of Mar were expected, and a ficet was already being prepared to bring them⁶.

* Rym. ix. 793 (It may have been the concern caused by the projected expedition from Scotland that led Henry, in August, 1419, to write twice to Lewis, Count Palatine of the Rhine, orging him to supply multary are to the English in the spring of 1420. Henry had evidently given up all hope of an early peace, and was at pains to convince Lewis that he was not to blame for the rupture of the recent negotiations

(Finke, Acta, iv 489 sqq.)

Forbes-Leith, i. 98. Beaucourt, i. 120 sq. Scouchron (Hearne), it 1210; Pluscard 353 sq. Monstr in 357. John Stewart, second son of the duke of Albany, was created ear, of Buchan in 1406 (Exch. Rolls of Scotland, iv p. cixxxii). Archibald Douglas, eldest son of the fourth earl of Douglas, was Buthan's brother in-law, his title of earl of Wigitown seems to have been held by courtesy and not to have been used until he was on the point of leaving for France (Fraier, Dauglas Book, 1. 199, 40 t, 404) ii 407 sq., 4x3). Forbes Leich, ii 298

Spotishron (Hearing), iv taros Pluscard 354

Forbes-Lei h, in 199, Beaucourt, J. 331

CHAPTER LXII

THE DUKE OF BURGUNDY'S SKULL

THE di ke of Burgundy, with the king and queen of France, arrived at St Denis on July 23, 14191. On the morning of the Tist a crowd of fugitives brought the news that Pontoise had fallen², and the duke at once rushed the king and queen away³, arriving that same night at Lagny, where he remained for a week! Here he must have received Henry's reply to a message, sent off as soon as the capture of Pontoise was known, asking him once more to consider an offer of peace. Henry's answer took the form of a long despatchs, in which he summarised the previous course of the nepotiations, and expressed his willingness to proceed, provided that his first conditions were accepted, with the addition that Pontoise, and consequently the whele Vexis, should remain in his hands. Apparently such a demand was too much for the duke, who left Lagry on Aug. 7, and hastening eastward reached Troves on the 11th[®], so that no use seems to have been made of safe-conducts issued on the 6th? for two envoys from the duke to approach Henry. The duke's flight from St Deris was well-advised, for on Aug. 2 the dake of Clarence presented himself with a large English force before the gates of Parish, where the citizens were in the wildest alarm. It was of course only a demonstration, and after two or three days he returned to Pontones. Paris, however, remained in evil plight for the loss of Postone meant the stoppage of the daily supply of many necessaries 10, prices went up to five times the normal, and the writer of the chronicle of St Denis declared that he had never known such frightful dearth in all the seventy years of his life11.

```
1 Itin. 4494 Monste iff. 3304 Gachard, 248
                                             2 St Donys, vi. 3543 Monster 36, 334.
1 St. Jenne, vi. gyng La Phron, i. 167.
C. Planeter, 11, 417
                                            FRem in otoigs.
FRem in oth PKR ich ogs.
Plancher, 11 3174 Routint is 344
```

14 St Denys, vi. 350. 14 Phid. 166.

Longson, and The Liv yes Vita, 2313 Gesta. 130. It is said that the dole mixed to be allowed to pay a visit of devotion to the shrine of St Denis, and when after leting refused he went away, he can aimed, "What you refuse to-day I shall get some other day whether you was or no "(Juy 552)

The chief hope of Paris and the French lay in the execution of the treaty between the daugh n and the duke, according to which they were to meet again within a month to agree upon a plan for pacitying local feuds and dr. ing back the English. Hitherto neither side had displayed much interest in the arrangement or much zeal for disbanding its garrisons. On reaching Troves, however, the duke of Burgundy wrote to the dauphin urging that the meeting should be held as soon as possible. Meanwhile the citizens of Paris, angry at being deserted by the duke, had sent a deputation to the dauphin at Tours, offering to welcome him as their lord?. Recognising what might be gained by a conciliatory attitude to popular desires, the dauphin issued a manifesto in which he declared himself ready to fu fi all the terms of the recent reconc liation, and wrote to the cuke of Burgondy suggesting that the meeting should take place on Aug. 26 at Montereau³, at the junction of the Seine and the Yonne. The dauphin was there on the day named4; but the dake of Burgundy had objected to the place of meetings, and it was only three days, after that he arrived at Bray on the Scine, which he made his headquarters during the negotiations that ensued. After several days' discussion it was arranged that the interview should take place on the bridge at Montereau on Sept. 107 Both sides, however, still had misgivings"; and it was only the urgent need for peace", the pressure of some of his leading supporters 10, and the offer of the dauphin to hand over the eastle of Montereaull, that led the duke to carry out his part of the undertaking.

On the day fixed, the duke, with a number of his principal followers and 700 fighting men, arrived at Montereau and was admitted to the castle¹². Inen, with the ten attendants allowed by the agreement, he passed through the elahorate harrier erected at the end of the bridge and entered the fenced en closure where the interview was to be held. Precisely what

```
Monstr m. 152, Juv. 552; Beaucourt, i. 786, Meurtre, 226.

The dauphin received them on Aug. 8 (St. Denys, vi. 370).

Jav. 557 Beaucourt, 1 550, 250.

Beaucourt, Meurtre, 217.

Plancher, iii. 522.

Juv. 553

Reaucourt, Meurtre, 227, 233; Douët d'Arcq, i. 405; Chamellain, i. 15.

Douët d'Arcq, i. 405; La Marche, i. 17, 205.

Monstr m. 340 aq

Juv. 552 aq., Barance, isi 232; Beaucourt, Meurtre, 216

Monstr m. 341; Trahmons, 144.
```

followed will never be known. Many stories are extant, ranging from the Armagnac version which states that the duke was only attacked after offering violence to the dauphint, to the official Burgundian account, according to which the duke was cut down from behind as he knelt before the dauphin on entering his presence. But, however the deed was done, it is certain that the duke's head was eleft with an axe, that Armagnac troops which had been ready for emergencies in houses near at hand rushed on to the bridge", captured the duke's attendants, save one4, and attacked the Burgundians drawn up before the cast ex. Most of these fied in paric4, and a few who took refuge in the castle found it devoid of artiflery or provisions and saved their lives by surrendering at the first threat of bombardment?. The duke's body was rescued from insult by the priest of Montereau, who next day had it buried in the parish churchs,

There has been endless debate about the murder. Most modern French writers, jealous of the good name of the prince who delivered his courtry from the English, have ried to exor leave him or at least to balliate the crime. Some credences, indeed, has been attached to the contention of the dauphin's council. that if there was any premeditated plot it was formed by the duke, who meant to kidnap the dauphin and owed his death to his own folls 10. But this viewnever obtained general credit with contemporaries, who called what was done a vile and treatherous murder¹¹. Six years had not passed when Janneguy du Chastel. who probably struck the first aloust, showed himself ashamed of his connection with the deed19, and in after years the daugh in himself, while always protesting his personal innocence, d.d.not

l Besucourt, i. 181 1994 Meurtre, 223, 227. l Chastellam, i. 32, La Marche, i. 1984 Besucourt, i. 188, Meurtre, 231 [One of the most vivid accounts a that of the Relation inchite de la most de Jean ians Pene, printed from a leader MS by Kersyn de Lattenburk florepte residuide a commission royale d'histoire de Beigique, Sér tit, imm via, (166, pp. 92-96). It is violently Burgundian in tose]

F Rei, med 94; La Barre, i. eto, 124, 259, 182, 261, Sc Foix, ili. 231.

Monste in 344, La Barre, 1 217. libid.

¹ Monstr Sit. 345 29 . 348 499. 1 Ib 1 ags, Itilit agra Gachard, aga. 1 La Barre, 1 224. Sec.e.g Beaucourt, 1 171. 10 La Barre, 1 29$

⁴ Ibid, 282, 283, 2813 Wauein, it. 281, Chanellain, t. 223 Tezhuoni, 244, Denille, Chart. v. 37: 200; Bourgeon, 219, Wah. B. 130; Vita, 225; Kingsford, Chron v3; Chron Lond. 107; Pol. Songs, ii 116.

in biomics in 143, Rel inch 94

In 1425, when he protested his innocence and his statement was accepted by Duke Philip (Juv. 555, St Felz, ili. 137).

scruple to call it a detestable crime¹. Whatever view is taken, however, discussion of the dauphin's personal responsibility is beside the mark. The poy was only severn years of age and too young to withstand the machinations of those around him. He doubtless fell in with the scheme of vengeance that others had planned, and when the plot had succeeded was powerless to repudiate it even had he been minded to do so.

As for the victim, men forgot his crimes in the affection born of pity. They called him the 'good dukes,' the 'g onous martyrs,' the 'only hope for peaces.' But when they cried for God's mercy on his soul because he had renounced his alliance with the Englishs, they forgot the infarry of his ever having made it.

It is at least certain that not a single Englishman had a hand in the devilry that so opportunely removed the ever shifty duke of Burgundy from King Henry's path. One of the last recorded utterances of the duke was a boast that the world would now soon know which was the stronger man—' Hennatin of Flanders' (himself) or Harry of Lancasters; and when he heard what had happened to Hennatin, Harry at once grasped what the crune meant to himself. He nicu ned the death of a good and loval knight and honourable prince?," but he saw that thad put him at the top of his desire, and that now by the Feip of God and St George he would have the lady Catherine, though every Frenchman should say him nays. The prior of the Charterhouse at Dijon was right when he said more than a huntred years later that through the hole in the duke's skall the English entered into Frances.

News of the duke's fate was speedily carried to the court at Troyes, his widow at Dijon, his son Philip at Chent, and the précét and écheums of Paris and other Burgundian towns. At Troyes the guiding spirit was unquestionably Queen leabel, who on Sept. 20 wrote to King Henry urging him to avenge the death of the duke and asking him to receive representatives who should resume the negotiations broken off at Meulanis.

At the years of Arras in 1435 (J. Charmer (Vallet de Viewelle), 1-194).

Bourgeon, 119, 131, 131, Trabuora, 144, Lercan de Lire y. Charti Hist. 19.

Chamethon, 1-22, 15, Pastoralet, 135.

" Beneroors, a 166-18 p. Minure, and app | Box 101, it 104-

Cordelars, at r.

Cordelars, at r.

Wrarin, ii 216.

Deplie, Chare W. 371

Lov. 553, 555; Barante, n., 292.

Thed.; Chartellain, i 72.

The farmous remark is said to have been made when an a 52.2 Francis I was shown the doke's shall while on a what to Dijon (Courtepée, if: 253).

On Oct. 23 she was treating with Duke Philip on matters so confidential that they could not be put in writing. The duchess of Burgundy gave orders that the king and queen should be protected at Troyes, sent ambassadors to put her case against the dauphin before the pope, the cardinals, King Signsmund, and many other potentares in both France and the Empire, took measures for the defence of the duchy of Burgundy against the dauphinists, wrote repeatedly to the University of Paris to stir it to avenge its benefactor, and in an interview with her son Philip in the following spring urged him to press her demand for justice without remission. Otherwise she accurs to have had little share in shaping the course of events.

As for the new duke, Philip, later known as "the Good," when his first transports of grief? were over, he settled down into a fixed determination to exact vengeance for his father's death. He soon became confident that he could count on the support of the principal towns of Flanders and Artois The most important members of his family-his cousin the duke of Braliant, his uncle John, ex-bishop of Lifge, and his aunt Margaret, countess of Hamault all advised alliance with the English^a. From Paris came a deputation, headed by Phuippe de Morvi liers, First President of the Parlement, begging his protection and setting forth the plight of the country. After conversation with them, he promised to take measures to hold his supporters together and to send an embassy to Henry to secure a trucc16. An assembly of leading men and towns of the Burgundian party was summoned to meet at Arras on Oct. 1711_

For Henry, as we have seen, the whole outlook was completely changed by the crime of Montereau, and as soon as Queen Isabel's friendly overtures had been received, the way was open for patching up old quarrels and striving for a lasting agreement. On Sept. 24, Henry, then at Gisors, nominated envoys with full authority to meet the representatives of the king of

There seem to have been violent and growner (Chartellain, 1. 49 teq.).
 Ibid. 64, 67, 61; La Barre, 230.
 Bod.; Barante, iv. 3

³⁰ Chanclain, Jr., Mointe in 359 19. 31 Ibid. 360, Chanclain, a. 70, 77

France and arrange conditions of peace! The English commissioners were Bishop Kemp, Gilbert Umfraville, and Richard Cowdray, and with them were associated four Frenchmen— Guy le Bouteil er (described as "dominus de la Roche Guy on "), Jean Seigner, Jean Alespe, and Roger Mustel junior, the two first having been concerned in the defence of Rouen. Before they could do much, Diske Philip, on Oct. 1, appointed six expresentatives to negotiate an alliance with the English.

I heir safe-conducts were dated Oct. 91, and, in company with the count of 5t Pol, governor of Pans, they were received by Henry at Marites on Oct. 264. They stated that they had come to open discussion as to an alliance. The king asteried in whence to what they had to say, and then, without rising from his seat, addressed them in his old haughty styles. He expressed his sorrow at the murder and commended Philip's resolve to take vengeance, but if I'hil p thought to play on him as his father had cone, he must at once distingsion himself, for, come what would, the English would go on with their conquests. There were, he said, at Portcise envoys from the case hin waiting for his answer to similar overtures, the people of Paris, as he understood, were ready to call him in the would give the duke until Martinnial to come into line with them, and it Paris should tall into his hands in the meantime, he would hold himself free to act as he saw fit?. On the next day (Oct. 17) the envoys had another interview, in which Henry explained that if he mained the princess Catherine, no cost should had on her relatives?, and that he was willing that King Charles should keep his title of king of France and Queen habel her estate, provided that immediately on the death of the former, the crown of France should fall to him and his heirs, and that, as Charles was 11, he himself should govern the country in the meanwhile. If the duke of Burgunds would agree to these conditions. Henry would take steps to secure the purishment of the murderers, and would make arrangements for the

* Chast. t. 72.

* Chast. i. 72 sq., Vita, 238

* Chast. i. 72 sq.,

* "Sans charge de ses parents."

I find that The commentation was Martin Posts bulkep of Assis. John took of Theological Cilbert to Lancou stantant of Sure, Supera de Forms on who had often have employed before in diplomatic honors with Fry and Henry to the alour, a member of the duken council, and George of Oriend, the duke's accretary.

² Rym iz 1014 Cheet. (v) 4 Ibid 72 214 Norm. Cheen. (Williams) 296, (Hellot) 314 Kingsford, Lzt. 134 marriage of one of his brothers to a sister of the duke. The hishop of Arras urged that these were big questions, and the count of St Pol said that they had no power to deal with them. Henry answered that the duke and King Charles had only to say "Yes" or "No," adding that he was willing to continue negotiations, but that if the duke had any designs on the crown for himself, he would make war upon him to the death, and that he would far rather see the duke of Orléans on the throne than the dake of Burgundy. The histop of Arras, who drew up a report from which these details are derived, says that Henry's words atterly discordanted the envoys. Some of them who knew him personally spoke with him aport and begged for more friendly treatment or at least another interview. The only concess on they obtained, however, was that while some went back to report, the rest might remain at Mantes, provided that the duke did not delay his reply too.

Meanwhile, on Oct. 17, there had met at Areas an assembly of nulles, captains, elergy, and burghers, who had consented to support the duke in an enterprise which he was about to undertake for the good of the realm, no secret, it seems, being made of his plan of allying with the English?. When, however, the envoys returned from Mantes with their report of Henry's demands, it was thought advisable to take further counselwith a number of lords, spiritual and tempora, who were invited to state their views freely4. On behalf of Philip's policy, it was urged that Henry in alliance with him would be ab a to unite all Frenchmen into a single body, not as his subjects but as his good neighbours; it was also pointed out that the cause of the murdered duke had not yet been taken upby the pone, with whom Henry had great influence, and his friendship would be of much value to the Burgundian interest at the curish. It was contended, on the other hand, that if they did secure him as an ally, there was a risk of his driving out the king, the queen and all the French people, and bringing over harons, knights and clerks from England to take their place.

But these forebodings were disregarded by the "saner parta"

Monstr 16, 360 sq 1 Chast 1 76. 6 Bod 8 c.

the libid $4 n

Now in the Bibliothèque nazionale (Chantellina, i. 7a, where no exact reference is given)

^{*} Ibid 75 * Monstr vii. 362; Chast 1 45 * Ibid 8; Cf Monstr 10 26242 of the meeting, who also rejected a middle course of temporisation and the aegotiation of a short truce¹,

Events now moved quickly. On Nov. 7 King Charles gave authority to the duke to conclude in his name a truce or arm stice with the English, with whom he purposed to treat for peace. Envoys from the dake went back to Martes bearing an offer to negotiate or the basis of Henry's terms. They were graciously received, and told that Henry would forthwith send an embassy to Arras to Jiscuss an alliance. Some of them were ready to leave on Nov. 194, but others remained to conclude an armistice, dated the following day, which created a neutral zone round Paris and practically ended hostilities between English and Burgundians. On Nov. 11. the earl of Warwick, Bishop Kemp, and five others were comnussioned to arrange a general truce with the French kings. They were received with great distinction by the cure at Arras, and seven days were spent in busy depate7, until on Dec. 2 Philip solemnly accepted the terms on which Henry was willing to make peace—namely, that he should marry Catherine, be regent until Charles VI's death, and then become king. On Dec - the duke commissioned the bishop of Arras, Phiappe de Morvilhers, and others to negotiate a tru e with Henry on behalf of Charles VI and a treaty for himself. The envoys went to Rouen, where on Dec. 24 they concluded a truce between the two kings which was to last till March, the dauphinists not being covered by it10, and on Christmas Day Henry formally signed a treaty of alliance between himself and Philip. The text stated that the duke had asked for an aliance. in order that peace between the realms might be promoted, and that it was understood not only that Henry should marry Catherine but also that one of his brothers should marry a sister of the duke's. The treaty established a mutual defensive alliance. Henry, moreover, would try to secure the punish-

This was arged by Gilbert de Lamoy (Chart, i. 84 m)
 Rym. sz. 21030
 Monte. iii. 1634 Chart, i. 84 nq.

Chym in Sec.

^{*} that fire of Originally daugend to last till For 4, is was afterwards extended to Dec 42 (that 4:6). The plenty-originates on the English side were Bishop Morgan, Henry Estaugh and Walser Hungerford, and in the French side the bishop of Azras, the land of Courtieron, and Master Jean Boole (that, 8:2, cf. 506, 8:0).

Ibid at driving

Moratz at 163; Chaetellain, i. Igaq 1 Tillet, Recoed, 1234 Rym. in $16, $18

¹ lbst. $21, $21.84.

ment of the dauphin and his accomplices for the Montereau murger and the grant to the duke by Charles VI of lands worth 20,000 are part a vere—a gift which he would make himself as soon as he became king if Charles had not a ready clone sol. The signing of the treaty was followed by a great Christmas feast, at which Henry was extremely merry?, as well he might be. On Jan. 5 the agreement was rathed by the duke at Arras?.

In looking for a scape-goat on which to av the blame for the policy which led to this result, French writers have generally been dissessed to be specially severe on Queen Isabel, whose German birth has told heavily against her during the last hundred years. Next to her in order of blame comes Duke Philip, who is denounced for sacrificing his country to his unbridled passion for revenge. But, however culpable the queen and the duke may have been, an equal share of the responsibility must be with the Parlement, the University, and the citizens of Paris. When news of the murder reached the carital, it was received with the utmost consternation and alarms. The populace would probably have massacred every Armagnac but that orders were issued forbidding any man to carry sword or knife. The whole city again donned the badge of the St Andrew's cross*—a practice discontinuou since the reconciliation of the previous July. Solemn services for the dead duke were held in every church'. Many Armagnacs were seized and executed, and the rest were closely watched. A concrustory manifesto from the dauphin, in which he gave his version of the episode and emphasised the need for peace, was disregarded!*, and at a large meeting those present bound themselves to resist the designs of such as wished to destroy the peace and unity of France—in other words, the daugh n and his party⁴¹

Felibsen, it (80; Monter ni. 355; Waven, ii. 287 (277)
 St Denys, vi. 374; Longnon, 267.

Féilbien, 31. 798, iv 580.
 Monter di. 156; ef Ordonnances, xii. 18.
 J. Chartier (Vallet de Varivalle av. 114, Ordonnances, xii. 272.

 Fébben, is 797, iv 380; Monse in 3523qq ; Jov 554; Denife, Chart. iv 368, Beaucourt, is 194

¹⁵ Monstr in 355 sq. Similar meetings were held at Auzerre, Langret, Milcon, Troyes, and other towns (Plancher, III 510).

^{*} Norm. Chron 198.

* Rym. iz: 143 199.

* Rym. iz: 242. [The chronology of the negotiations which led to the Anglo-Burgundan alliance is most perplexing. Dr Wylie had not given much thought to it, and for the order of events in the text I alone am responsible.]

1

As we have seen, a deputation headed by the First President of the Parlement, soon set out to take counsel with the new dukel News of these doings must speed,ly have been communicated to Henry, for before the end of September, 1419, he despatched the earl of Warwick to Paris with an assurance of his readiness to treat², and the city promptly replied by sending an embassy to the English king³. In the next three months there was much going and coming between king, duke, and city⁴, and Henry afterwards specially recognised the great efforts the Parisians had made to bring about peace*.

While diplomacy had been achieving these momentous results, arms, though less effectual, had not been idle. After the fall of Pontoise, Henry had stayed there from Aug. 6 to Aug. 186. He then sent troops northward to clear the country between Pontoise and Gisors. He himse f was with them before both Lavilletertre and the neighbouring fortress of Bouconvillers?. These places, which are close to Chars, had surrendered before the end of the month. The king's army then moved on for the reduction of G sors. He arrived before the town on Aug 314, taking up his quarters at the castle of Tries. On Sept. 11 the town garnson undertook to surrender if not relieved before Sept. 1710 and, though deemed impregnable, the cast e yielded on the 23rd11 From Gisors Henry removed to Mantes, where he remained till ate in November 12. Thence he sent out three separate detachments to reduce Meulan, Montjoie, and St Germain. To each of these sieges he paid personal visits, and one after the other the strongholds yielded very soon after operations seriously began. At Meulan, where the castle was situated on an island. in the Seine, he began to build timber towers on flat-bottomed. boats, the bridge being protected from a boat attack by stakes driven into the bed of the stream. The place, however, surrendered tamely to the earl of March and the Earl Marshal

```
* Chas. i. $1.

* D K R. 2li 799.

* Rym. ix $02, $03 69., $10, $11, $21; Chast. I. $1 6.

* Rym. ix $35.

* Rot. Norm. 7 Hen V, p. 1, mm. 14, 21.

* Tit Liv 77; Vita, 231, 133

* Bréquigny, 105 sq.; Delpix 219 D K.R. 2ll 799, xlii. 323

* Bréquigny, 205 sq.; Delpix 219 D K.R. 2ll 799, xlii. 323

* [Newhall, 141 n., citing Bibl. nat., MS. franç. 26,043, 20. 3419.]

* Vita, 234; Gesta, 131.

* D.K. R. 2li 800, 803, 8074 alii. 328-331, Bréquigny, 107-111.

* W III
```

by Oct. 101. Montjoie and St Germain likewise made little resistance, though on his way to attack the former the duke of Gioucester was held up at the bridge of Poissy and spent sever days reducing the places. From Mantes the king, towards the end of November, went to the castle at Vernon, where he stayed till the middle of December! While he was at Vernon there occurred the fall of Château Gaillard, which had held out since the previous spring, defying assaults and mines. The dauphinist garrison had made many spirited sorties, and, according to a Burgundian authority, only yie ded when their ropes were worn out and they could no longer draw water from the well. The English took possession on Dec. 8, Lord Roos being appointed captains. After leaving Version the king made a solenn entry into Rouen, being met at St Paul's church, at the foot of Mont St Catherine, by the clergy of the city, after which he rode through the streets in solemn procession. At the cathedral, where the canons and chaptains met him with their most precious relics, he heard Mass, and then took up his quarters in the castle.

[Henry remained at Rouen for three months. The administration seems to have been working fairly smoothly. The Council and Ecitionies of Normandy had been established at Rouen, the chambre des comptes and the treasury remained at Caen?. New heillis had been appointed for Caux!, G sors!, and Mantes 18 on Henry's conquests extended, and during 1419 the central government had been strengthened by the appointment of a seneschal and a treasurer-general¹¹. The collection of revenue was being accomplished as easily as could be expected. In the fiscal year beginning May 1, 1419, 723900 fittee courson. were received under the head of demesse, 26,500 from the sait-

Tit. Lev 1993 Genta, 132 Vita, 239 1 D.K R ali. tor Pointy surrendered between Nov. y and 20 (Vallet de Viriville, 1, 189) During the stern the hang value if the princey, where he was received by the fixench $k \circ q$ is long that Marte, the prioress, and presented rich gifts to the house (Norte: Chron. [Wassams] 94, [[]Hellot] 13).

4 D.K.R. all 80°, 108, 110, 131

First Living Vita, againg, Monter in 116 ag a Norm Chron 1911 D.K.R. xis-buy. Two nutbers so— Norm Chron (191 and Wain 11, 110 - daw the fall in September, The former subsequently contradicts itself, the latter is almost certainly confoung Chineau Gaulard with Guors.

afoung Chinesu Canada with Call, Cochon, 283.

4 Tig, Liv. kt; Vice, 244; Gena, 131; Cochon, 283.

5 D K R sk 727

[•] Ibid. 754: 10 [bid 76 p.

¹¹ Sac below, p. 245.

tax, and 37,800 from the quartage on beverages and the salestax, or imposition for aime, of one sou on the pound of other commedities. The total receipts in money of the Norman treasury exceeded the expenditure-155, 300 hv. tourn. -by more than (100 lev. tourn, most of the money disbursed going to the maintenance of the English garrisons1 All things considered, the financial situation was satisfactory, though it was regrettable that the coins issued by Henry from the mints at Rouen and St I ô were of very poor standard2. Still, as long as Charles VI, the dauphin, and the duke of Burgundy continued to strike base coins, it would have been idle for Henry to make good ones³ [

By this time all hope of successful resistance seems to have died out in Normandy, and as the king's stay at Rouen neared its close, an enormous number of persons received back ands and possessions which had been forfeited since the day when the English landed at Touques. On April 15, 1420, fresh powers were given to the treasurer of Normandy, William Alington, to issue safe-conducts to al. who were prepared to come n; and the Norman Rolls record 700 such submissions about this time, and 791 more before the end of the year. At Easter, as a thank-offering for his wonderful success, the king released all prisoners confined in the archbishop's gaol'.

LN 1-8

¹ Exch. Accts. 187: 14.

On the counage struck in Normandy by Henry V, see Hewlett, 18 (acq., Hoffmann, Plate XXIX. The St Lo mint was not re-opened till April, 1410 (Hewlett, 191; Bailhache, 66 sq).

² On the general condation of the French comage at this time, see Disudonne in Bibl Ér. des Charses, John 486 seq. Cf. "fere infanti," Rym. iz. 867.

¹ D.K.R. alii 360, 365, 370. ¹ Rym. iz. 8825 D.K.R. alii 173.

Ibid. 375-404, passan.

CHAPTER LXIII

THE TREATY OF TROYES

I hough the alliance between hingland and Burgundy was now formally signed, the first attempts at co-operation were farfrom promising. I wen before agreement was reached the two parties had tried to work together. A composite force had attacked the tower of Trembiay, whence the Armagnac garrison escaped by night, and then a quarrel arose as to which part of the attacking force had shown the more bravery. The two contingents consequently separated; but such a breach could not be countenanced by Henry, and when a Burguncian force was about to undertake the re-capture of Rove, surprised by the Armagnacs from Complègne on Dec. to2, the earl of Hunt ngdon was ordered to put himself at the disposal of the duke of Burgundy for the purpose of asting the enterprise. Pressed by the Burgundians, the Armagracs at Roye surrendered in the night of Jan. 148 to John of Lanenburg, who guaranteed them their lives and granted their a sate conduct to return to Complègne. Before they had been an hour on the road, there arrived a force of 2000 English, under the earl of Huntingdon and John Cornwall, intending to take part in the siege. Innding how the case stood, they turned and followed in pursuit, came up with the Armagnacs, who were stragg, ng careless v. scattered them with great slaughter, and then retired with their prisoners to the village of Amy. between Rove and Lassig 15th. There John of Luxemourg soor arrived, protesting vehemently against the violation of his safeconduct. High words followed between the English and Burgundian leaders, John Cornwall even striking Hector de haveuse on the arm with his mailed fist. In the end the Burgundians had to give way in face of superior numbers, the affront was sugared with good cheer, though it was never really ³ Abetgé des grandes Chroniques, in F. Chartier (Vallet de Viriville), ils. 234 sq.

Monstr. 15i. 36 guq.; Pentr, 12 t.
 Monstr. 15i. 368; Abrégé, in J. Chartier (Vallet de Vienville), 15i. 233.
 Monstr. 15i. 368 aq.; Chast. I. 97; Trahmons de France, 147; Penin, 123.

forgotten2. Two of the Armagnac prisoners were actually sent to England and kept there till they had paid a heavy гальоті^в.

After this incident the English commanders went westward, captured the castle of La Fontaine-la-Vaganne near Grandvaluers and laid it in ruins after a three weeks' siege³, and having made an ineffectual attempt on the strong castle of Clermonten-Beauvaisis4, returned to Normandy As for John of Luxemburg, after placing garrisons at La Fère and Nouvionle-Comte he went back to his castle of Beaurevoir near St Quentin³ If these operations brought I tile giory to the English, still worse was their fortune at sea, for in January a Castilian fleet appeared before La Roche le, where it engaged and defeated an English naval force, destroying or capturing many ships, killing 700 men, and taking many prisoners, some of whom were landed at the town and slaughtered by the Bastard of Alencon*.

That the high-handed insolence of the English at Roye did not cause a rupture of their alliance with the Burgundians is a measure of the value of their support to Duke Philip. It would be folly to let a single regrettable incident prevent the fulfilment of the purpose of all his doings a nee his father's death. Both Henry and the duke now began to exploit the aliance according to their respective aims. Thus, on Jan. 17 a proclamation was issued at Troves in which King Charles directly charged the dauphin with the murder at Montereau, called upon Frenchmen to pay no heed to his commands nor to regard him as lord of any ands in France, and declared him unworthy to be heir to the French crown, adding that the king's troops would now sweep the country and render life and property secure? On Jan. 24 King Henry, in response to a petition from the citizens of Paris, assured them that there should be no interference with their rights after he succeeded to the throne of France. The truce with Charles VI was prolonged from time to time, until on Apr I 24 it was announced that it should

Chang to 97, 99, 2013 Trabinous, 1463 Februs, 124-

^{*} Monste 111. 171; Chast 1. 97, 201 * Monste 111. 371; Waurin, ii 295; Chast 6, 103.

¹ Ibid. 105. * [bid 102; Money bi 171. * Juv 596; St Denys, vl. 368, Clecouer, 363, 373; Beaucourt, i 3 2.

Ordonna poet, xii 276 sq. * Rym. m. $ 54 ; D.K.R. xin. 3 38 .

last until eight days after denunciation by either party. In February the duke officially announced his negotiations with the English, and then moved southwards, being joined near Bapaume by several thousand fighting ment and at St Quentin by the earl of Warwick, the Earl Marshal, Lord Roos, Gilbert Umfravule, and Lewis Robsart, who came as representatives of the English king, with an excert of 200 lances and 300 archers. Nearly a fortnight was spent near Laon while the Burguadians reduced the castle of Crépy en Laonaus, whence a garrison of 600 Armagnacs had been harrying the districts. Then, encountering but little opposition, the force passed through Laon, Rheims, and Chalons, and, amid boisterous shou's of welcome, entered Troves on March 23t. Next day Duke Phil p was received with great ceremony by the king and queen, who had hitherto been unable to leave the city for fear of the Armagnae bands in the neighbourhood?, There to lowed several conferences, attended not only by the Emplish envoys. but also by seven masters from the University of Paris! The issue was already cut and dried, no difficulty was apprehended, and there were only points of detail to settle. On April 9, 1420, the fateful document was drawn up! It was agreed that Henry should marry Catheriae without imposing any hurden on her parents or the French and that she should receive the usual dowry of an English queen 40,000 crowns a year. He would suffer Charles and Isabel to retain the state and cignity of king and queen of France, for the rest of Charles's life, he would never style nimseif king of France, and in places subject to the French crown all writs and grants of privileges, parcons, others, or benefices should be drawn in Charles's name. Immediately after Charles's death, however, the crown of France should belong to Henry, to pass to his heirs for ever; and in the meanwhile, seeing that Charles's health was bad, the ^{*} Manete III 174, 377; Waurin, 3i. 298 (287).

 $^{^{-1}}$ Ryss. at Hyr sq., 164, 174, 169. It had been extended to cover the an from Figurders to Caes (ibid. 852 sq.)

* Reen is, 290, Wortester, his. 352; Le Fèvre, i. 383; Wauris, ii. 296 (286).

Ribart had been sent in January on a mission to the dowager duckets of Burgundy

⁴ Monste in 374 and , Wenner is 1993 Chart. Lung, 2215 St. Dunya, vi. 3943. Abolge, in 1. Chartier (Vallet de Vireville), 10. 236.

⁴ Memore in 1774 Chart 1 115

^{*} Bourne is alaj Wanesi, is light (187); Le Fèrre, 1. 383

^{*} Benryenn, 134. A Deniffe, Chart is 379 36 Rym. 12 Вуу вер 9 Chast 1 red.

regency should be exercised by Henry, with the counsel of the nobles and wise men of France. He would strive to reduce to obedience all France then subject to the dauphin, especially those parts to the right of the Loire; all his conquests over the dauphinists outside Normandy should be to the advantage of the French crown, and on his becoming king, Normandy and all his other conquests in France should be subject to it. Persons in territory conquered by Henry, if obedient to Charles and willing to swear to the Treaty, should be restored to their possessions, unless Henry had already granted them to others. Henry would appoint good and fit officers to govern the kingdom, rule it according to existing laws and customs, maintain the Pariement in its authority and all churches, colleges, and universities in their privileges.

These conditions were to be sworn to by all the nobles, lords (both lay and spiritual), universities, colleges, cities, and towns of France. It was further agreed that a personal meeting for the formal interchange of letters patent confirming these terms should take place between King Henry and King Charles, with the queen and the duke of Burgundy, at some place between Nagent-sur-Scane and Troyes and not more than eighteen in les from the latter. Each side in ght bring 2,000 armed men, the English being allowed to occupy Provins, Nogent, and either Lagny-sur-Marne or Charenton before the meeting, on the understanding that they would depart as soon as the treaty was signed. The French king agreed to remain at Troyes till

July 1 to give time for everything to be carried out.

On April 17 seven envoys? were despatched to communicate further with King Henry. Taking Paris on their way, they addressed a large meeting in the Parlement chamber in the Palace on April 29. The room was packed with representatives of the Parlement, the administrative departments, the University, the chapter of Notre Dame, and the civic authorities of Paris, besides many private citizens; and when the spokesman, Jean le Clerc, explained to them the terms that had been provisionally drawn up and asked if they agreed, the whole assembly

 The causes about the status of Henry's conquests are regut and indeed ambiguous, and suggest that it was no possible to much agreement about the similar of the area over which. Henry was at once to exercise appropriate authors with the control of the area over the control of th which Henry was at once to exercise screenigh authority.

1 They were Lourder lord of Savigny, Hue de Lannoy Jean lord of Messal, Massess Jean le Cierc and Pierre de Marigny, with Jean de Rinel and Jean Milet, two of the long's ascretanes (Rym. in: $15; Boutiot, ii. 413, 423).

shouted "Yes1," Fortified with this demonstration of ananimity, and accompanied by the chancellor of France (Eustache) de l'Aitre), the First President of the Parlement (Philippe de Morvilliers), and Guillaume le Ciere, they passed on next day to interview Henry at Pontoise2. Back again in Paris, they were asked to describe this conquering Fing ishman, and they expanated on his handsome face, his medium height, and his haughty hearing at his first entry, which changed to kindness and affability as the talk proceeded. They found him frank and open, but sparing of words, with his mind fully made up on certain points. What struck them greatly was the strict discipline he enforced on his men, he would have no prostitutes about his camp as the brench did. If reverses came he kept an even mind, for the only way to command fortune is to keep. a steady heart through all. Very notable was the favour he showed to churchmen, especially to those who conducted his daily services. With such a prince they might at least be sure that if he promised he'p he meant to give it3. And it was indeed help that Paris then needed. For on the northern and western sides the city was beset by the English, whose savagery was outdone by the Armagnacs who ravaged the country on the south4. Food and fuel could only be got into the city at night and under escort. The price of corn had risen to famine height", and at Easter no fresh meat was to be had?. Thus the populace was daily becoming more eager for their rulers to come to terms with the English

Henry, having left Rouen towards the end of March, spent some time at Mantes, and in the last week of April moved on to Pontoise¹, where he received the envoys from I roves. Meanwhile, however, the I ngl sh representatives at Troyes, with the exception of Lewis Robsart, had returned to the king to report 40, and on Apr 128 a new commission, consisting of the earl of Warwick, Bishop Kemp, Lord Roos, Gilbert Umfraville, and William 799 Rym. in. 191, Fauquembergue, a. 162. 3 St Denys, va. 180.

* Bourgeois, 136, 136 aqq 4 55 Denys, 14, 190, 196, Jur. 356.

* Bourgeois, 136, 143, St Denys, 14, 196.

* Jur. 356; Fél.bien, il. 798.

* Bourgeois, 138.

* Chair. Chart, L. Lr * D.K K mlif. 367 sqq

¹ Fauquembergue, i. 168 sqq. i Den fie, Chart. 1v. 1781; Comoro, 2011 Fél.bien, it.

They left Troyes on April Chast J. 117 n ; Le Fèvre, i. 184, Waurm, ii 300 (188). They left Troyes on April 17. Roboart stayed to attend upon the princess Catherine.

Porter, together with Dr Thomas Brons and Richard Cowdray. king's secretary, was sent back to Troyes to witness the taking of the oath to observe the agreement by the king, the queen, and the duke of Burgundy, and to make final arrangements for the conference¹. Then, on May 8^t, accompanied by a large forces, Henry set out on his memorable journey to Troyes. Avoiding towns, the English camped at night⁴, and moved in fighting order through the day, for the Armagnacs were on the watch and boasted that they meant to fight. Both then and atterwards it struck observers as stranges that Henry should have agreed to trave so far into the heart of France instead of traisting that his bride should be brought to him. Some said that it was because of Charles VI's readness; but this had not prevented the meeting at Meulan in the previous year. Others explained that it was not safe for Charles and his queen and daughter to journey out for fear of the daugh nists, of which there were said to be 14,000 within a short distance of Troves. Others again believed that there was a plot to entrap the English. king, but if so, it altogether faned. On the first night the English force halted at St Denis, and Henry made a visit of devotion to the abbey?. Next day (May 9) they marched in fighting order close under the walls of Faris, where the citizens on the battlements watched them file proudly past the Porte S' Martin, the king's tilting helm being borne before him with the fox's brush embroidered on his device. The sight gave them great delight, and in spite of the dearth in the city, the Parisians managed to send him out four carts loaded with their very best wine, but Henry received the present with his usual lefty indifference. Marching on he reached Charenton, where he spert the aight. He now proceeded to Provins, leaving at Charenton a small force under Wil iam Gascoigne to keep open the passage of the Marnell. He met with some Rym ix 890. Tit. lav. Bar Vita, 240; Gesta, 135; Fenin, 134.

Contemporary estimates of the countries stary greatly. Waster gives 16,000, mostly archers in 17 af in D others put the currier of archers at 2000 (Sourgeon, 139). Monitoriet mys that there were 16,000 fighting men with Henry (in. 184).

St. Denyr, vi. 408.

Bourgeon, 140.

St Denyr, vt. 408.

* Hourgeon, 140.

* The explanations are discussed in Vita, 248, the writer adding that he does not altogether believe any of them.

Water D. Jan

Wate to 114
 Tate Law St., Chapt. i. 250, Bourgeon, 139.
 Bourgeon, 139, Félicien, c. 799. * Wast II 334 II Monste III. 3884 Cordelien, 1854 Wali, II. 334.

resistance as he passed through Brie, but he beat it down by a vigorous assault on one of the opposing casties, hanged some of the defenders, and carried others with him as captives?, and so he arrived at Provins on May 14". He notified his willingness to attend at the renderyous within the stipulated three days; but by the 19th it was arranged that the meeting should take place at Troyes reself, and thither the army moved on. They crossed the Seine by the bridge at Nogerts, and as they neared the walls of Troyes, the duke of Burgundy, attended by many hishops and a throng of citizens, came out to meet them. The duke saluted respectfully without dismounting, and amid shouts of welcome the two rode on chatting together to the hoster appointed for Henry in the city.

Attangements had been made for the English troops to be quartered in a portion of the city by themselves in view of the possibility of collisions with the French, but the part alloyted to there proved to be not nearly large enough, and many had to be billeted in the villages round about?. A ways on the alert against the demoralisation of his men. Henry issued an order that none were to drink the strong and heady wine for which Champagne had long been famous without mixing it with water, and the fact that the order was obeyed by so drunken a set as the English troops is ste king testimony to the strength of his personal control over the army.

After escorting Henry to his hostel, the duke of Burgundy tode on to announce the arrival to Charles VI at the palace of the Counts on the river bank. Henry himself followed soon atterwards. The poor invalid was seated on the dais of the great hall, which was thronged with lords and courtiers. As soon as he set foot with a the door Henry doffed his cap, but Charges showed no sign of recognition. Henry then walked firmly up the floor, and the tension became extreme as Charles remained apathetic. When, however, the English king reached the edge of the dais, Charles raised himself a very little, while Henry bent his knee and uttered some gracious and humble words. His demeanour was a most favourable surprise to the bystanders; but the king paid little heed and merely said, Tit. Liv. Say Vita, 230. * Krm. in 801. * Ibid 896. • Chan, i. 1304 Monter liž. 388 sq. 4 Vita, 250 † T t Lev 44 Trebuten, 155-* Kingsford, Lit. 335; Vita, 150 Tr Liv. By, Van, 140.

 Tr Lav. By, Van, 240.

"Oh, it's you? You're very welcome since it is so ! Greet the ladies! " Fvery one was relieved that a distressing contretemps had thus been everted, for Charles was at the time "in his maladya," and Henry himself must have been glad to obey the king and turn to the queen and her daughter. The queen raised him when he knelt before her, and kissed him. Then, turning to Catherine, he bowed low and kissed her with "great joy," and the three talked pleasantly together for a short time". after which Henry returned to his hostel for the night.

Next day, May 21 the councils of the two kings and the duke del berated together, and the treaty was finally scaled its the cathedral⁴. Substantially it corresponded to the terms agreed upon in April^a. The marriage of Henry and Catherine, however, is treated as settled, and Henry promises that he will try to secure for her the sum of 40,000 crowns a year from England during her widowhood, should she survive him, while the French undertake to provide 20,000 in that contingency It was agreed that Burgued ans whose property had been confiscated and given away by Henry should be compensated from territory thereafter to be conquered from the dauphinists? In an entirely new clause it is laid down that Henry shall strive to secure from the "Three Estates" of both England and France an ordinance that from the time when he shall become king, the crowns shall be united in the same person, each realm, however, retaining its own laws and neither being subject to the other. There is to be perpetual peace, defensive alliance, and freedom of trade (subject to customs duties) between the two kingdoms. Allies of either side who shall give their assent to the treaty within eight months may enjoy such of its benefits. as affect them. Neither Charles, Henry, nor the duke of Burgundy shall enter into any negotiations for peace with the ibid ; Norm Cheon (Williams) 196, (Hellot) ef ; La Marche, . I c.

Chart 1 213

4 Ayre IR 404-R eg. 30 DKR iln 194 In Live figt Vitag eges Wale it 1141

1 Ibid. por 10 11 9 19. * 1bid 901, 9 910

^{1. &}quot;Or ra ross! Soyer is tree been some, puseque army set! Salors les dames, " Clauf. 1. 111. Bouttot, it 416.

dauphin, save with the consent of all and also of the Three Estates of both France and England¹,

Charles was not personally present, and the queen and the duke were authorised to act on his behalf. The treaty was sworn to, not only by them and Henry, but also by a number of prolates, lords, and other notable Frenchmen? It was at once proclaimed in both French and Linglishs, and published throughout the city and in the English army. An order was put forth in the name of the French king requiring all his subjects to subject to it. On the following day. May 22) the hirst President of the Parlement of Paris, the bishop and the built of Troyes, the abbots of Montier la Celle, St Loup, and St Martin Es-Aures, the deans of the churches of St Paul, M Stephen, and St Urhan at Troves, the archdescon of Sézanze, eleven priests, forty-seven lawyers, and about 1,000 of the leading ribabitants met in St Paul's church, and swore on the gospels to observe it. Henry wrote on the same day to Duke Humphrey and the Council in England, enclosing a copy of the treats, announcing that it had been signed and would bring "pernetual peace," and requiring that the terms of it should be proclaimed throughout the country?, with his new title of "king of England, heir and regent of France, and lord of Ire and," which was also to be engraved "on the scripture of our seals " with the exception of the word "regent" for which there was probably not sufficient room. On May 24 Herry despatched Ralph Cremwell and William Swinburne, topether with a secretary, Richard Cowdray, to announce the terms of the peace in Paris, where it was proclaimed on May 27°. Next day there were processions and a solemn tranksgiving, and on May 30 the trenty was publicly read and registered in the Paraement of Paris, where the officers of the Parlement, of the University, and of the City came up one by one and had the earh administered to them by the First President¹⁰. Al. hands were appaised to Heaven in transports of joyle; but by way of extra caution the English envoys, being

Rem. ix. 903, 910.

Ibid. 194, 906, Philipp. ii. 199, iv. 184; Kingsford, Lit. 115.
 Leibnitz, Codex, J. 132 199, Rym. ix. 904. Ordonnances, zii alla. Rym. in. 90 feq. Eine Generaum, i. agl.

uncertain of their brench¹, asked the First President to translate what was being said. Further official publications took place at the Châtelet on June 1, in the church of St Mathurn before the university faculties of theology, law, and medicine on June 3, and before the Rector of the University and the proctors of the four nations on June 4⁴. In London it was proclaimed on June 14, when there was a scientific procession to St Paul's and a sermon at Paul's Cross³.

Meanwhile, another step had been taken towards Henry's complete triumph. On the day on which the treaty was signed. he was solemnly betrothed to the princess Catherine in the cathedral of Troves*, and thenceforth he spoke of Charles VI as "our father" and Catherine as "our witel," though the actual marriage did not take place for another twelve days. The interval was occupied by festivities, hanquet following banquet and gitt being answered with gift. On Trinity Sunday, June 27, the marriage ceremony was performed with great pomp. To reconstruct the scene is difficult; for the great market-place, which Henry had to cross from his hostel on the western side to the parish church of St Jean opposite, has since been covered with narrow streets. The church, too, has been much altered, the east end having been rebuilt after a great fire early in the sixteenth century and the west end partly concealed by a porch in the most debased Renaissance style Only the ill proportioned have, dating from the fourteenth century, remains substantially as it was when Henry passed up t to the high altar. It was agreed that the ceremony should be "according to the French's istomic "The coach of the bride and her mother was drawn by e.g. it snow-white English hobbies,

1 Félibien, la 799, lv. 584.

1 Ordonnances, Mi. 90; Coencau, 113; Deniffe, Churt. iv. 180.

Wals. ii. 135. The treaty was accepted by Sigismund at Prague on July 31, and he desired to be included in it as an alty of England (Rym. x. x4). Lewis Count Palating of the Rhine accepted it on the same date as "adigates at confederates" (Ibd. x5).
 Rym. ix. 3071 Filibson, iv. 5841 Bourior, ii. 4263 Fenire, 2361 Norm. Curon.

4 Ryrn. iz. 2071 Föliben, iv. 5843 Bourior, ii. 4263 Fenir, 2363 Norm. Curon (Heliot) 393 Wale ii 3343 Vita, 2323 Chron Lond. 2623 Greg , Chron, 2283 Kingsford, Chron. 2273 Short Chron. 36

Rym. ix. 906; Gests, 137
 St Denys, vi. 410.

Ryen ax. 910, Bourgeois, 140; Norm. Chron (Heliot) 59, Jur. 557, Commu, 103; Chast. i. 133; Kragiford, Chron. 73, Lat. 219; Capgr., De Illustr. 123.

* Chast. It it is not 113

* The marriage test place here became Henry's heatel lay in the parch of St Jean (Moontry it 1892 Waters, 1, 201, 301; Le Fevre, 1, 1. Chast 1, 114, Vita, 267; Fol. Songs, it. 137). For an account of the charch, see Grosley, Ephém. it. 1375 a gift of the br degroom, and preceded by numerous minstre.s1. The numbers of those admitted to the church were restricted2; but to left and right were ranged tokens of the vast wealth of England and Flanders3, the only sombre touch being afforded by the duke of Burgundy, who was clad in black from head to foot4. The ceremony was performed by Henri de Savoisy, archbishop of Sens5; the royal couple offered three nobles each with the candles, and instead of the customary thirteen pence, the bridegroom put thirteen nobies on the book, and gave 200 more to the church. The day ended with the wine-cup and the blessing of the bed?.

" Jur. 1574 Monate 479, Le Fèvre, il. 1; Chart t. 153

- Chast, i. 234 m. Trahmons, 196.
- Monstrelet (iii 389 sq.) gives a list of the notable Bargundians present.
- 4 Chaet i 134 4 Jun. 557; Stone, 19
- * Jun 559. I "Les souppes au vin et la liet beni." Jun 557; Trébuchet, 99; Grosley, Éphém. 11. 240, Mem. L 303.

CHAPTER LXIV

THE DAUPHINIST RESISTANCE

By one of the clauses of the treaty of Troyes King Henry had undertaken to reduce all cities and other places in France that were disobedient to his "father," "beying...of that Partye comore y called Dalphin or Ermynak^{1,11} At Troyes the streets had resounded with merriment since the day of his betrothal, and on the day after the weddings he gave a "royal and passing solemn feast" to the great londs, with plenty of entertainment for the populace3. The general expectation of more jousts and festivities was, however, disappointed, for Henry announced that such things must now cease, and that he would start early next day for real warfare, where those eager for tourneys might display their hardshood as they would, seeing that there was no prowess in the world equal to doing justice on malefactors and helping the poor to live! Catherine was to go with him; perhaps because he had married her "without charge to her parents," he appointed the officers of her household, not one of whom was a Frenchman, though she was allowed three French ladies and two French maids to wait upon her. The king and queen were to go too, and many English and French ladres.

Early on June 4° the army accordingly left Troyes. The two kings rode together, with the duke of Burgundy at their side?. The operations of Burgundian columns had already to a great extent cleared the country near Troyes, and little opposition was to be apprehended as the force crossed the forest of Othe. A body of troops was left to reduce Vi leneuve I Archevêque, which was still in Armagnac hands, and the main army Rym in 919 Though previously the party opposed to the Burgundians had been generally known as "Arrangence," headeforth the fishion set in to call them "Dan phinists," either with or without the old title as an alternative.

| Brut, ii 425; Boutiot, ii 425. | Fenin, 3" | Waln 10, 13 C. | Waln 10, 13 C. | Chart 13 C. |

* Details of their operations are given in Closet 1 117 n. 118, 124, 124, 126, Monate

the place was reduced by the lord of L like Adam on June 7, the garrison, it is used, being in terror of a combrated gun called Passe volunt, which wrought great destruction with its first and only shot (Trabinous, 157, 158) marched to Sens! Here they found the bridges cut and the suburbs destroyed. The siege began on June 51, and in a letter written next day? by an Englishman in the camp, Sens is described as "a great town and a notable, holden strong with great number of Ermynaks." But the townsmen were in no mood for resistances; the garrison made little stands, and after about a week! an unkempt, unshaven man came out to parley, John Cornwall, who had been commissioned to treat with the detenders, would not see him at first, saying that he must have his beard trimmed before he could be heard?. Nevertheless Sens surrendered on June 114, and as Henry rode into the city with his queen, he turned gaily to the archbishop saying, "You have given me my bride, I now give you yours." The garrison were forced to don the St Andrew's cross and to swear not to serve in future against the duke of Burgundy; but many of them, as soon as they were out of danger, made straight for Montereau to join the dauphinists there10.

Henry's army moved northward without delay. At Bray, where the English arrived by Jure 16, King Charles and the ladies were left behind11, as rough work was expected at Montereau, A force of Burgued ans was detached to effect the conquest of several places in Brie, between Bray and Melun, a task which was accomplished without much trouble, the garrisons surrendering readily to the lord of Lisle Adam, who was in command, because he was their "ne ghbour" and more to be trusted than hinglish, Picards, or Burgund ansia. On the 16th the main force arrived at Montereau¹³. The sight of the scene of the murder of Duke John inflamed them to a fury. Mor tereauwas reputed to be so strong that a handful of men might hold.

28 Gesta, 143 j Vita, 271

For documents dated at Sens on June 4, 6, 9, 22, 100 Rym in 913; D.R.R. this.

Ibid. 910. The writer was John Ofort, of whom nothing more is known. It is comble that he is to be identified with John Officed, a click of the long a righet weder Henry IV (Car. Pat. Hen. IV, ii. 264, ii. 20, 214) and cleak of the privy seas it. Normardy it 1420 (Chian II Hen. V, 18, May 3, 2420

St Denys, vi. 44x, Jun. grv sq
 Tit. Liv. 49, through in Vita, 269, hard and repeated amoults are mentioned.

⁴ Vga, 269. 1 Fenin, 138 1 Juy 338 Juv. 538, Bourgesis, 145. 16 Monstr ill. 403; Chast L. 141

II Rym. is. 920, 921 Le Fevre, is 13 Waurus, is. 322 (307), Norm. Chron (Walliams) 201, (Hellot) 60 11 Tubesora, 138, it against the world; but on June 24 a small scaling party got across the most and rushed the walls. The town was then carried by assault and the garrison driven helter-skelter across the bridge to the castle on the tongue of and at the confluence of the Yonne and the Seine! The victors made their way to the parish church, where Duke John had been buried. At his son's command, some knights and squires lifted the coffin from the earth, and not one of those present could restrain his tears as he gazed on the face of the dead man, looking, as he did, but little altered. The body was laid in another coffin packed. with salt and spices for removal to a more honourable home in the Charterhouse at Dijon*.

Henry and Duke Philip transferred their headquarters to the right bank of the Yonne, and planted their big guns4 to beset the cast e, strengthening their communications by throwing a temporary bridge across the Seine^b. In the rush that followed the serzure of the town eleven gentlemen had been captured, and Henry threatened to hang them all it they did not bring about the surrender of the castles. Kneeing on the edge of the datch, they implored the defenders to capitulate as they knew that their case was hopeless, while their own lives would be forfeit if the garrison held out. But the captain, Guil aume de Chaumont, lord of Guitry", told them that if a man is taken in war he is under sentence, and they must take their chances. Then they prayed that they might see their wives, children, and kinsfolk before they died, and firing crased as these mounted to the battlements to wave a farewell. On the morrow a globet was set up and all were hanged in full view of the castic walls. It is notable that no one blamed Henry, indeed, what most struck contemporaries was his strict justice in hanging on the same gibbet a favourite groom, who usually held his horse's rem, for killing an English knight. It is the captain of the castle who in contemporary opinion was calbable for holding out when he knew his situation was hopeless 10; and

Monste in 4043 Chair L 144

¹ Monste id 403 tq : Waven, ii 118 (104); Le Physe, ii 105 Fesin, 140 Chut: i.

^{*} Ibid ; Monstr iii. 404, Fening 141, Trahmons, 158.

* "Force et multitudes d'engins," Chast. 1. 146.

* Fenan, 140, 1412 of Monstr iii. 4041 Le Fèvre, ii. 121 Chast. 1. 146.

* Ibid. 141, 146, Bourgeois, 1413 Juv. 561.

^{*} Es fa is de gwerre ne gut qu'un husart, qui est pris, il est attant; Chast i e46.
* Back; Fenin, 242; Monstr. iii. 406. W IN indeed it soon appeared that the lives of the prisoners had been need easily thrown away for on July 12 the castle surrendered, and the garrison of 500 men³, including a number of Scots³, were suffered to depart in safety, a hamiliating anti-climan tor which they received no praise from friend or foet.

After a short stay at Montereau, during which measures were taken for victualling and garrisoning the place. King Herry moved down the Seine for the reduction of Melun. At Sens and Montereau the garrisons had used brave words which had no backing from the townsmen. But at Melan Henry's calculations were attogether at fault, for the place made a heroic stand for over four months. The town may be regarded as divided into three parts by the 5e ne. The most populous portion the quarter of St Aspais-was on the north bank, and was enclosed by strong waits. On the opposite shore was the extensive suburb of 5t Ambroise, containing the citadel, while between the two in mid-stream lay the long island of St Ettenne, on the north shore of which stood the castle. Each of these three parts was enclosed with a wall, and the three were connected by a long bridge, which stretched from bank to bank and one ted the island. The siege began on July 11th and probably for reasons of policy the English and the Burgundians. were kept almost entirely apart, the English being for the most part encamped on the hat ground or the south bank towards the Garina's, and the Burgundians on the north towards Brie?, though the earls of Warwick and Huntingdon were stationed on this side to assist, and perhaps in reality to control, the duke of Burgundy. For the Burgundians the stepe opened hercely. One of their capta his in dehance planted his pariner in front of a bulwark built agar the abbox of St Père, and or the very first day the parrison salled out and captured it. Soon afterwards, however, a party of English, supported by Savoyards, Picards, and Burgundians, made a desperate rush and took a strong outpost constructed by the defenders on the outer side of the most 10 and held it tenaciously throughout the siege, though it cost them many lives both to capture and to retain it. Among the Englishmen who to lat this point was Philip Leche, who

^{*} Bourgeon, 141 %. * St Denys, vi 438 * Vita, 270. * Jun 558

Monstr iii. 406; Waurm, ii 222.
 Vita, 277, Gesta, 14g.
 Norm. Chron. (Holet) 613 Tit. Liv 89; Vita, 277

^{*} Ibid. ayli * Perin, 1433 Trabitons, 159.

* Monite ill. 410 1021 Waterman, 2273 Le Fèvre, 1-164 Chait a 154 Trabitons, 159.

had earned the high opinion of the duke of Burgundy for his soldierly qualities¹.

After this incident both sides settled down to the orthodox routine of a siege. Each section of the attacking force was entrenched within a strongly fortified enclosure? surrounded with a ditch and paisade and approached through four entrances, which were heavily barricaded and guarded right and day3, communication between the several camps was kept up by means of a temporary bridge across the Seine4. The defence was in the hands of a Gascon, Arnaud Guillaume, lord of Barbazana, with a force of only 600 or 700 men, including many townsfolk! Outside the place great efforts had been made to collect a relieving force, and some 16,000 men were actually assembled in the neighbourhood of Châteaurenard, near Montargis, about thirty miles away; but spies who penetrated to the English lines reported them to be so strong that an attack would have no chance of success?; and the Armagnacs therefore resolved to play a waiting game and to avoid a bartle. in the open^a, though harassing attacks on the besieging army. were constantly kept up, both from the south-west and from the Armagnac garrisons at Meaux and other places in Brie and Champagne,

At the beginning of the siege the English were reinforced by 800 men at-arms and 2000 archers under the duke of Bedford, who had crossed from England to Normandy in April and May". About the same time Heary's brother-in-

1 Monstr. 211. 4 21; Fenis, 143.

1 Juv. 5584 Monste 21. 41. 1 Waumn it 127 Pen a. 14 .

^{*} Vita, 278, Monter sit 411, Chair 2, 155, who says that it was "passable a pied et a cheval

^{*} St Denys, vi. 446, Juv. 558, Waisem, st. 301 (189), Le Fèvre, t. 385, Fenin, 1453 Trahisons, 159; Fit. Liv. 89 Monstr in 410. Among the defenders was Louis Juvésal des Units, brother of the chemicler, from whom probably tame the story of the Alsun fract who picked off sixty lances with his crossbow, not to mention lesier game (100, 55%, 559 sq.)

* Ordonances, xl. 1034 Jav. 55%, of Y to, 182.

^{*} Ordonnances, zi. 2034 Juv. 558, of V ta, 282.
* Ectio, 139.

* Monte a 4 7, Wastis, is 323 (301), Chart i 149; Ordon ances, as 285

Bedford acrived at Route on April 18 (Cochon, 183). His own retinue consumed of 140 men-at-arms and 360 archers. With him, or a little later, invived other contangents, which brought the force up to a strength of age and key (Int. Roll & Han. V., Paich. May 9, 1427). The remainder of the troups which he brought to Melon seem to have sailed about the ordine of May (we the d. ke of fuln resters letter to blever). Printed in Kings, 51, from H. James, Facsimiles of the National MSS, pt. 6, no accord). There is still entant a pointer roll disted May 6, of $2 men a arms and 961 archers. about to sail to France (Newhall, 104, n. 7, citing Exch. Acets. 49/26). Professor Newhall's investigations have led him to conclude that the reinforcements sent from England in 1420 nurabered attogether some 2200 men.]

law, Lewis Count Palatine of the Rhine¹, came from Germany with 700 men, whose wages were paid by Henry². James king of Scots was also present²; he was brought from his English prison, not to add to Henry's prestige in French eyes, but for a purpose which only became evident at the end of the siege. Charles VI and the ladies remained at Corbeil⁴, about six m les away, while the duke of Bi rgundy withdrew at intervals to divert Finiself at the castle of Biandy, six miles or so to the east⁴. Henry often went over to Corbeil⁴; but when the siege had been in progress for some time he had a house built and furnished near his tent, and there Catherine stayed for a month². Every day at suarise and sunset eight or ten English ministrels, with home and other instruments, entertained her with sweet music for about an hour⁶.

It must not be supposed, however, that Henry allowed his attention to be diverted from his military obligations. Throughout he took a very active share in the direction of the sieges. The Anglo-Burgundian force was provided with guns of exceptional size, which played upon the walls night and day10; but the nesieged showed extraordinary energy in making up the gaps with barrels faled with earth, timber, or refuse 11. The besiegers also mined beneath the most, but the defenders heard them and countermined. When the two sides met with only a preastwork of soil between them, the trumpets rang out, the church bells pealed, and champion after champion rode down into the galleries to break a lance with the enemy by the light of lamps or torches 11. Even King Henry, the duke of Burgundy, and the English dukes performed subterranean feats of arms against Barbazan and other leaders of the garrisor 18. Nevertheless, the siege began to drag. Although the army was said to be the

¹ D K R alv 1201 Jun. 258, Monstr. fil 4 to , Waunn, 11 326 (310); Le Fèvre, 11 131. Chist 1 154. Bourgeon, 1442 Fenns, 127. Cf. One Lett. Iff 1 67 100

Chast t 164, Bourgeon, 1444 Fenin, 135. Cf. Orig Left. III 1. 67 100

1 Devine, 361, 3621 Cal. Doc Scot. 1813 Gesta, 143.

4 Monstr ii 416; Wasers, 11 144 (124), Le Fevie, ii 414 Vila, 2714 Norm. Chaor. (Heliot) 614 Chast L 154

Fenon, 1421 Trahmons, 138. Chast 1, 238

^{*} Monstr ill. 472; Fersin, 144; Chast i. 160; Vita, 18; * Monstr ill. 412 sq. Fer [R 23], 44, paid for harps for the king and queen, not Devon, 163; Oct. 2, 1410.

* Monstr ii 413.

*

With a region of the state of t largest with which Henry ever conducted a siegel, yet week after week passed in le surely blockade. Quite early in the siege the unfortunate Charles was brought over in order to appeal to the loyalty of the garrison; but in reply to his demand. for admittance, the besieged declared that though they would gladly receive him as their French liege lord, no English king should ever have their obedience-an answer which greatly nettled Henry, who sent word that the time was coming when they would have to obey an English king whether they wished or not. It was much worse, however, that disaffection should appear in the Burgundian camp. Many now scrupled to accept the English king as the real ruler of France, though they had sworn to the treaty of Troyes because at the moment no other tourse seemed open4. At one time it even seemed as though the alliance was in danger, and it became hard to keep the Burgundian captains at their posts. The count of Conversendeparted for his castle of Brienne beyond Troves, though he was captured by the Armagnacs on the ways; and when sickness was raging in the camp, the prince of Orange, with many other leaders, departed abruptly, and neither Henry nor the duke of Burgundy was able to prevent them?. Even before the stege, too, disturbances had occurred between the English and the quarrelsome Picards, and it was necessary to keep the two continuents aparts. Disease of course was causing heavy casualties, as it always did in long mediaeval sieges. Nevertheless time was on the whole on the side of the besiegers, and the duke of Burgundy himself remained staunch. It was with his consent that Henry, alarmed at symptoms of disaffection among the Paristars, placed English garrisons in the Bastille, the Louvre, the Hôtel de Nesie, and the castle of Bois de Vincennes, Clarence being appointed captain of Paris in place of the count of St Pol^a. And in order to repair the losses suffered

There is not enough extant evidence for even an approximate estimate of its sum; but numerous captains, both French and English, were present (Coll. of Arms, MS. M 9, if 40 mg, Haile 101), and while we are sold nothing about the arreng hind their several retinuous it is plain that the force must have been very formulable.]

verst retinum, it is plain that the force must have been very formataone.

* e.g. on July 18 and 23 (Ordonaneou, 2i, 95). Of Choic i. 159, Mosser iii. 422.

* Choic i. 158.

* Fenin, 137.

* Wita, alle

* Monetr iii. 413; Wanein, ii. 330 (313).

* Chart i. 180; Monetr iv. 20; Waurin, ii. 3793 Le Fèvre, ii. 182 Juv. 560; Vita, 282.

The Freshih afterwards accused the duke of cowardoc (ibid. 281).

* Fenin, 139.

The English afterwards accused the duke of cowardice (ibid ali). * Money re- and. The Bartille was in the hands of the English by Sept. - 1D K.R. ally 190 sq.). If the author of the Vita is to be beseved, her insect it by secans of a trick carefully planned by Henry, who expected anothrics on the part of the Burgundson garrmon (Vita, 182).

by the besiegers of Melun, Duke Philip ordered John of Luxemburg, who was at his castle of Beaurevoir, to bring up what forces he could from Picardy. John cohected a force at Péronne, hurried with them across the Oise at Pont St Maxence, and pushed on with all speed towards Melun. When on Oct. 18 the besieged saw them approach in battle order across the highground to the north, they took them for the long-expected relieving force. The bells rang, the walk were manned, and the English and Burgundians were derinively exhorted to saddle up, as they would soon be shifted. But as the new-comers drew near, the defenders saw the truth, and with drooping heads they left the ramparts. This disappointment must have had a grave moral effect, especially as the town was beginning to suffer termbly from tamine. Bread gave out about this time, and for the next month the people in the town are borses, dogs, cats, rats, mice, and anything, however repulsive, that could be used for food!. Even now, however, Henry never risked an assault on the breaches that were made. Appeals to the daughin for a dabrought a final answer. that he lacked sufficient men to attempt the relief of the town. with the advice that the deferders had better make what terms they could. So at length hunger and pestilence prevailed, the inevitable parley began on Nov. 17 Wa ter Hungerford, with two notable Burguna ans, Jean de Roubara, ford of Herzelles, and lean de Courcelles, was commissioned to conclude final terms⁶; and the actual surrender took place next day? All those in the town, whether members of the garrison or civilians, were to leave their arms undamaged in the castle, and were to be held as prisoners till their ransoms had been paid, their lives were to be spared, but before their release they would have to give security that they would never serve again under the enemies of the French king. Two groups, however, were excepted from these terms, Englishmen or Scotsmen who had taken part in the defence were to be at Henry's mercy, and those who were in any way implicated in the murder at Montereau were to be put to trial. The occasion, too, served to it ustrate. Henry's stern zeal for discipline. A favounte captair of his, Bertrand de Chaumont, who had ands in Guierne and had fought on the Frg ish side at Agincourt, was charged ^{*} Chart i. 18 t; Monstr. tv. 10 nq.; Wharin, ii. 340 (32 t).

* Fenin, 145; Waurin, ii. 340; Monstr iv. es. Chart i. 177.

* Monstr iv. 11 nq.; Le Fèvre, ii. 19.

* Rym x. 14 nq. Ibid go. Monetr iv. 11 sq ; Le Fèvre, is 19. Ryra x.
The terms of surrender are given in Monetr 19. 12 sq.

with having been bribed to consider at the escape of some of the suspects. When Henry heard the report he was much disturbed, and said that he would rather have given colocolnobles than that such disloyalty should have occurred. The duke of Burgundy pleaded and the duke of Carence went down on his unces in behalf of the culout, but Henry only answered, "By St George, fair brother, had it been yourself we should have done the same." He gave the offender time for shrift and their had his head struck off saying that he would have go traitors about him if he arewith.

In strict accordance with the ferms of the capitulation, coolor 600 emaciated prisoners, including many citizens of the town, were sent under escort in boat loads to Paris, where they were incarcerated in the Palais, the Châtelet, the Temple, the Bastille, the Hôtel de Nesle and other places, where many who could not find a ransom died?. Far you 1421 those who were accused of being concerned in the murder of John the Fearless were tried by the Parlement, and three were hanged. Barbaran was at first. amprisoned in Parist, but was afterwards removed to Chiteau Gairland, where he remained till the breach recaptured the castle. in tago). He was accused of complicity in the crime of Montereau, but was acquitted. The conditions of the surrender, as reported by Burgundian cheon clers, fully justify Henry's action but they were mis inderstood, wilfully or not, by writers. on the other side, who accuse Henry of a breach of faith such as wen d have dispraced the veriest tyran. One may well regret that the terms were not more generous, but they savour more of Philip's lust for vengeance than of Henry's soldierly magnamenty, which had constrained him during the siege to express. his admiration for the courage of the garns in While, newever, the usual charges against Herry in this connection are beside the mark, he may in one respect be justly blamed in the bitterest terms. Among the detenders of Meijin were twenty by the heralds (p. 170)].

The latter says that the terms would have been been known.

harder if the seas awaits of the defenders had been known.

* Jun; 564; J. Chartser (Vallet de Vistville), ill. 247. " Ture effe-

[&]quot; Momer ir. 14 ng.; Le l'erre, fi. 24 Wanein, fi. 343 (324). Fenin, 146; Chan & 1 St Denys, vi. 441, Jur 56

Fauquembergue, il 3, 12, 13, 14, 16, Fé ibien, iv 585.
Norm Chron (Williams) 203, (Hollot) 61. Ferim, 1455 La Barre, 195. · For his trial in case on the charge of being concerned in the murder of Duke John, one Colbert MS. 962 t, 5, fol 125, quoted in Raoulet, 169. [The story in the "First Life," green on the authority of the rard of Ormonde, is that Henry would have had Barbatan executed, but that he appealed "to the Judgement of the officers of across." on the ground that, having fought in single combat, he and the king were brothersat arms and therefore the one might one put the relies to death—a contestion upheld

Scottish mercenaries with their captain. No suspicion of being implicated in the Montereau tragedy could possibly artach to them, but just as the dimmy king of France had been brought forward to put I renchmen in the wrong, so the captive king of Scorland was used to work the ruin of the Scots. On his arrival King lames had summoned them to surrender on their alleg ance. They refused, and when the siege was over, Heary had them all hanged for disobedience to their long¹.

[A part from the sieges of Sens, Montereau, and Me'un, the English had done little fighting in 1420. Parly in the year they had begun an offensive in Maine, under the direction of the earl of Salisbury Beaumort-le-Vicomte was soon recovered. Ballon fell on Leb. 28. On March 3 the castle and town of Montfort-le-Rotrou were taken and burned. On the same day a force of French and Scots, which had left Le Mans with the object of relieving Fresnay-ie-Vicomte, was ambushed by an English detachment under the earl of Hurtingdon, and cut to pieces, the murchal de Rieux and the war-chest of the Scots being eaptureds. Freshay fell soon afterwards. On the other hand, the dauphinist garmson of Dreux, raiding rorthward, took Croisy on the Eure, linerating Ambroise de Loré, who was impresented in the cast et. Lure's release perhaps explains the check which the English soon afterwards suffered in Maine, where on May to the garrison of Le Mans killed sixty-three and took fifty-eight prisoners?. After this the in litary situation in Maine seems to have changed but little till the following year 1

Meanwhile civil strife had broken out in Brittany. After the marder at Montereau, the duxe of Brittany had hes tated for while, but in December, 1419, he signed a treaty which I Inger, Beaumone, 3 z, m. 3. * F. Michel, t. tall, n. , citing Bodt. MS., Digby, 202, f. 282 29, Rym. ac. 8824 wais. il. 321, Vith, 244 20; cf. Juv. 646.

* Charles (Invasion, 24) gives the date as April 9, Triger (Une foresesse du Maine, Bourgeon, 137; Jun. 556. It was probably at the time that an abortive attack was made on Mances (Grave, Archives, 17 sq.)

Scottchron (Hearne), or carry Watern, ii. 342. James mems to have less humself to. their proceedings at long 5 (A. ugo. 41). A few of the defended may have been treated in a way contrary to the terms of the currender. Two monks were executed. One WIREL SUPPORES that this was because they nevel sportage or guidy of string day conduct ff. Litt. 1, 184. Another towever says that they had shown great are, in the defence of the town one having abot at least staty Englishmen. Norm. Chron. (Besot, 6a).

Trigger, Beaumont, 3 z. m. 3.

Charles, Invasion, 24, n. 3.

¹⁷⁾ as April 195 but a pardon recorded in the Norman rolls (8 Hen. V, pt. 3, m. 18). shows that Prestucy was in English hands before Easter Sunday, April 7 definitely ranged him on the side of Burguady³. Thereupon the dauphin's advisers entered into an intrigue with Ohvier de Biois, count of Penthièvre, head of the family which had long disputed with the ruling Moniforts the right to the ducal title. The outcome was that on heb 13, 1420, the duke and his brother Richard were treacherously kidnapped by the count, who, after inflicting many indignities upon them, placed them in close confinement at his castle of Champtoceaux¹. It is likely that if the Bretons had shown general approval of the stroke, the duke and his brother would soon have died. It was not long, however, before the futility of the plot became manifest. The duke's Courcil took vigorous action, proclaiming the ban and arriere-ban4. The duchess made a spirited appeal to the Breton Estates, who were fully sympathetic with her"; and empassies were sent to King Henry, asking for the release on parole of the duke's brother Arthur of Richemonts, and to the dauphin, begging him to use his good officer on behalf of the duke himself? Henry's reply was friendly but vagues. the dauphin temporised, but privately exhorted the count to keep a firm hold of his captive. Meanwhile, however, the troups of the Montfort purty were vigorously reducing such strongholds as achered to Olivier de Bio s10, and before long the dake and his brother were removed from Champtoceaux and taken from place to place in Poitou, the Limousin, and Saintonge 44. But Champtoceaux was vigorously besieged, and in the hope of securing lement terms for himself, the count, about the beginning of July, brought the duke back to Brittany and linerated him, though he did not thereby avert condemnation of himse f as a traitor or the confiscation of his property!

^{*} Cooles, horason, again a. The affair to probably to be identified with the fight on the Sarthe noticed by Jean Juvenal (p. 546).

The duke's release removed the principal reason for permitting his brother Arthur to return to brance. Negotiations

I Rem v. 24 Cuence, Connétable, 194 M Branchard, 101 1700 Lang, 1442, 1449; Morion, Prouves, 16, 2003; Bonard, 20. 3) Blanchard, Introd p curv, no. 1449; Morter, Hut. 1 4774 Bomard, 195 Ryth.

B. E. Manuel 19, 37.

M. M. Ster, Hatt. E. 478, 479. Blanchard, 800, 1446. 1446. Gruel, .r., Comessa. Conntiabir, 57, Trévécy, 14

Blanchard, no. 13 ft; Beaucourt, i. 202. Cosaeau, Connétable, 53. * Cagny, 117; Luce, Mont St. Michel, 1 21; Monce, Presides, in 1000 sq a toro sqq ; Blanchard, 20. 1456

Morios, Preuves, ii. 948, 1000, Manchard, no. 14*5.
 Morios, Hist. I. 475, Preuves, ii. 1002; Trévédy, 25; Corneae, Connétable, 94.
 The envoys were the lishop of Nature, the lord of Montautum, Henry du Jack, and Rosel le Sage (Morier, Hat 1 472, Princes, 16 2037 og 4 Deren, 182, Ord. Prin. Co. 4 1772 1794 Rym in. 1762 Gruel, 20 10.). T. Rym in. a. 1762 Morrow, Hat. i. 4713 Processes, is, 20263 Trivédy, 24 on the matter had, however, gone some way1, and Henry adowed them to proceed, perhaps thinking that Arthur's presence might be useful in case the duke should waver in his loyalty to the Burgundian cause. When he gave his word to Henry not to escape and promised to go back to England at Michaelmas, 1422, if his ransom had not been paid, he was escorted across the Channel and taken to the king, who was then before Melun, where he arrived on Oct. 28, 14204.

With Brittany in confusion, there was little danger to Normandy from the west. In January, 1425, the English seem to have expected a raid, but nothing came of it, probably because of the kidrapping of the duke. For their part, the English were closing in on Mont-St-Michel, constructing a fort at Ardevon and placing a garrison on the rock of Tombelaine. The abbot had already had dealings with the English? and he was now replaced as captain of the Mount by the count of Aumale, who took over the command on May 14. He soon, however, went away, taking with him many valuables, which the English be leved him to have divided among his menregardless of the claims of the daughin. On June 14 John Ashton, built of the Cotentin, reported to Henry that the garrison of Mont-St-Miche numbered no more than one hundred men, that their water-distern was broken, and that the place might speedsly be reduced. The frontier, he said, was quiet, and he ninted that a raid on Anjou might be made with every prospect of success, for the inhabitants of the country were shenated from the dauphin by the dependations of his troops and the Scots?. Henry, however, encouraged no such pretentious enterprises, and the frontier of Lower Normandy remained astonishingly peaceful for the rest of the vestill

Bym. 16, 334, 2, 2, 9 sq. (Ord. Prev. Co. 16, 277) Euch. Accts. 49/17, Mosson. Hist.

1.4°E. The claim showed no eagerness to accept the treaty of Troves, though he was in2. The claim showed no eagerness to accept the treaty of Troves, though he was inwhen to come is thems. Here it is easy, and he was some in negociated with the early of Buchan, who visited him in October (Blanchard, not. 1433, 1464).

Rym. z. 12, Gruel, 20 199, 27.

Mineice, Hist. i. 481, Conneau, Counétable, 58, Deven, 367, Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 278. There are many interesting details of the journey in Fee. Acres. 54. C.

6 [Newhall, 270, n. 6] * D.K.R. ali 7751 of Luce Mont St Michel, I. 94 m.

Orig Letters, is it yaung. Ashton's report is also pristed by Benguigny, aga-Ellis meribes a incorrectly so race, Benguigny to save. The internal evidence is deenterly in favour of 1420.

28 Pontorson seems not to have been recovered by the English on May 31, 1420. (Luce 1, 100), where there is no mention of it in the list of Suffully adign ties, though, his was tirular captain of the place), but it was promiting taken before the end of the year (For Acets (1, B)

CHAPTER LXV

THREE YEARS IN ENGLAND

AFTER the capture of Oldcastle the demestic history of England was very uneventful for nearly two years. Bedford remained warden or leutenant till the end of 1419, when he was succeeded by his brother Humphrey! No parliament was summoned till the autumn of 1419, when the lords and commons assembled at Westmanster on Oct. 162. No new temporal lords were summoned, and of those who had received wests for the previous parliament, Gilbert Talbot was dead. Of the lords spiritual Archbishop Chichele, who was abroad with the king, received no summons. Thirty-seven counties and seventynine boroughs returned representatives, none of whom call for special notice⁴. Among the judges Wi liam Babington appears for the first time!

When the members assembled, five weeks had clapsed since the murder of John the bearless, but the full significance of that event was not yet manifest, and the chief fact before the estates was that the failure of the Meulan conference had forced Heary to go on with the war. The chancellor accordingly addressed them on the text, "Let us not be weary in welldoings." The king had been doing well, his enemies were keeping his inheritance from him, but he wanted peace and had gone in person to secure it; nevertheless he had failed, money was wanted to safeguard the sea, to defend Cala's, and to carry on the war, unless it was forthcoming the war would have to be stopped, which God forbid®! Next day Roger Flower was chosen Speaker for the third time. Parl'ament continued to I Nov. 132, when it voted a tenth and a fifteenth Humphrey was appraised on Dec. 10, 1419 (Rym. v. $10, $11).

Rot. Parl av. 126.

Return Parl is 291 aqu., App. p. 206.

Bahington, who came from East Bridgeford, Notts, had been made king's at oney in 1414 and a serjeant-at-law in 1415 (Rot. Parl. iv. 107). He was appointed Chief Baron of the Earliequer on Nov 4 1419, and became a Justice of the Common Pleas on June 10, 1420 (Poss, iv. 284, Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 295, Ord. Priv. Co in. 70).

He died in 1455 (Cal. Inq post mort iv 263, 298).

* Gal vi g Rot. Park iv 116.

to be paid at Candlemas next and a further third of a tenth and fifteenth payable at the succeeding Martinmas. The king, it had been announced, was specially anxious to know how the country had been faring and what amendments (if any) were needed in the laws. But parliament made little use of the opportunity thus offered. It was resolved that, as large quantities of English coins were passing out of the country and the supply for ordinary purposes was running short, there should be a firsh issue of comage, that when the money voted in taxes should come in, it should be spent in England on corn, cloth, and other necessaries for the army in France; and that as many sacks of wool as the king should desire should also be bought in the country and shipped direct to Normandy¹ instead of being sent through Calais, as required by the Statute of the Staple. Otherwise, parliament's main achievement was to confirm a statute of 1 180 limiting the right to keep sporting dogs to landowners and well-to-do clergymen⁸.

The southern convocation met on Oct. 30*. Like parliament, its chief business was the grant of money. But the clergy, like everybody exe, were beginning to be tired of the war*, and it took much debate for them to make up their minds, for in many cases the contributions due for the envoys to Constance were still unpaid. On Nov. 20, however, they agreed to a tax of a twen leth on benefices and 61, 8d. from chantry chaplains*. They then adjourned. The northern convocation met at York from Jan. 13-18, 1420*. Those present pleaded that there was great poverty in the north of England owing to drought, murrain, and invasion, but they also ultimately granted a twent eth of their incomes, from whatever ecclesiastical source, to be payable on May 11.

About this time there were numerous rumours of attempts on the king's life by witchcraft. During a recent visit to

^{*} Cone, iii. 396

* Now it $40. The chapter of York was o be excosed payment of half the impoint the from them, in order that they might not be hindered in reliabling the choiced the militer. Several reagious houses claimed a similar remission, among them being Meaux, which was an usual suffering from floods, and 5e by, which was accepted down by debt and was accusally raided by robbers while Corrocation was sitting. Many other houses, such as Orac Massers, Felicy Rushord, Watton, Esterion, Eggleston, and Kirkham, and every charely in Northumbersaud, Camberland, and Weitmorsaud pleaded total intability to pay.

England, Archbishop Chichele had issued a circular to the bishops, dated Sept. 25, 1419, stating that the king had ordered that prayers should be offered for his protection against necromancers, and he according y announced forty days' remission of penance to all who should attend the masses and bi-weekly. processions instituted when the king went abroad in 1417, seeing that these solemnit es had lost their advelty. The bishops were to publish the announcement before All San's' Day! At the meeting of convocation in the same autumn, the archbishop announced that the reform of abuses among the clergy must be considered, but attention seems to have been diverted from this subject to the dangers arising from the black art and Lollardy. On Nov. 9 the assembly had before it a chap ain named Richard Walker, who had been charged with practising witchcraft in the diocese of Worcester and convicted at a visitation held by the peior in Worcester cathedral. In proof of the charges there were produced two books containing written spells and pictures savouring of magica, a box containing a beryl cunningly suspended in black leathers, three little schedules. and two little figures in yellow wax. Walker pleaded guilty and declared himself willing to recant; and an impressive penance was arranged for him. On Nov. 16, at Paul's Cross in presence of the architishop, several bishops, and a large crowd, the bishop of Linadatt* preached a sermon at Walker, who stood there with the books, the box, and the wax images. When the bishop had finished, the penitent declared his magic to be faise and accursed in deed and word. Then the books were fastened round his neck, one in front and one behind, with the pages open for everyone to see the bad pictures, and he was marched bare-headed all down the Cheap and back to the south side of the churchyard, where the books and other exhibits were burned. After this Walker was allowed to go.

The heresy hunt was not yet over. On Nov. 10, three more chaplains came up for judgment—Ralph Outrede, William Brown, and Richard Wyene⁸. All had been in prison for some years charged with heresy, and they were now called upon publicly to recart. After canonical punishment had been fully k Cone lik 390. 4 Hod. 373

^{* &}quot;Artem magicam mpientes."

* "Lapie de berdio artificalitar in como nigro suspinous."

Ishn Zovehe, 2401 1421 (Stubbe, Rog. Ig. 239).

expia ned to them, so that they might know what to expect an the event of relapse, Outrede and Brown were set tree on giving security for their good behaviour in future. Wythe, however, whose touching story remains in his own words, was reminded of his trial at Bishop Auckland eighteen years before. After long imprisonment in the north he had retained and been sent to the Chancery at Westminster, where he was required to give the customary caution and then set free. He was however, rearrested with William Brown when the king sailed for France in 1417², and imprisoned in the Fleet, where he had since remained. His case was now reserved for further consideration. Flow long he confirmed in prison we do not know; but he certainly made a full submission and secured his release only to fab again into hereav and to perish at the stake in 1440².

But the most notable figure affected by this outbreak of religious panic was the king's stepmother Queen Joan, from whem he had parted on perfect v triendly terms. Though she had been resident in England for over sixteen years, neither she nor her chikiren seem ever to have been popular with the English people, and as English traders were continually suffering from the attacks of the Breton pirates, she and the members of her howsehold were exposed to periodical outbursts. of national resentment. Such a time was the present, and the first result was that a l foreigners about her were exhelled from fingland on the ground that they were carrying treasure out of the country and giving information to the enemy! On Sept. 27, 1419, an order was issued that all her dowry and other belongings should be taken into the hand of the Treasurer of England, except a portion for the reasonable expenses of her maintenances; and on Oct. 1 she was put under arrest and detained in the manor-house of Rotherhithe until her case should be turther considered. The suddenness of the event has given rise to various speculations as to its cause. Some have supposed? that it was due to a desire for additional security for the good behaviour of Joan's son, the duke of Brittany, but there seems to have been little friendliness at the time between

Of Wyle, in. 463.
Greg., Chron. 1833 Three Fifteenth Cent. Chrons. 63. In 1434 he became rector of Leaveland, near Favenham (Cal. Pat. Hen. VI, n. 342), which be exchanged in 1426 for the vicarage of Harmondsworth, near Wen Dravton in Middlerex, 1814 in. 18, 4164.

Stow, Annals, 378).

8 Rot. Parl. iv. 306.

^{*} Ibid. rift.

* Tiebuchet, pf.

the two. On the whole the most convincing explanation is the contemporary one, that she was believed to have practised magic against the king. Implicated in the same charge were her confessor, John Randolf a Franciscan friar from Shrewsbury1, Roger Colles, another Shrewsbury man, and Pernel Brocart, both members of her household? Randolf was captured in Guernsey3, taken to Normandy and imprisoned in Château Gaillard, and afterwards sent back to England and lodged in the Tower. As for Queen Joan herself, we have evidence that some of her possessions were seized by the sheriffs in whose counties they lays, and that others were farmed by various persons soon after her arrest*. The royal Council appointed Thomas Lilbourne to act as clerk of her household and his account for the first ten weeks of her captivity is extant'. During most of this time she was at the king's manor of Rotherhithe. It was intended that she should spend Christmas at Leeds, and with this intention she journeyed thither, arriving on Dec. 7. She stayed there only three days, however, and then returned to Rothermithe. On Dec. 15 she was handed over to the custody of John Pelhama, who acted as her gover for till Mar. 8, 1420, during which time she was no doubt at Pevensey. In addition to the confiscation of her lands she had to submit to the removal of all the members of her household. But a sufficient number of attendants were selected to replace them, and the king's Portuguese physician, Pedro de Alcobaça, was appointed to attend on her, the rare and costly medicines he prescribed being all bought for her. In fact, Li bourne's account shows that Joan must have lived in great comfort during her detention,

* Cotton, Abridg. 557, Brut, il. 412 sq., 444 492, Rot. Parl. iv Et5, Devon, 365 * Rot. Parl. iv. 114. * Brut, il. 422 Rot Park 17, 114.

e.g Rec. Roll y Hea. V, Mich., Jan. 19, 1410.

[As this point Dr Wylie's contribution to the sext cease..-W. T. W.]

^{*} Devon, 365, Brut, 8. 423
* e.g. Rec. Roll 7 Hea. V, Mich., Jan. 18, 1420 (Wills.), Iso. Roll 8 Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 18, 1422 (Hereford), Rec. Roll 8 Hen. V, Pasch., July 7, 2420 (Comwad); thid. June 25, 1420 (Deron); thid. Mich., Feb. 17, 2421 (Esset).

¹ Exch Accts 406/30. Ibid.; Wale ii. 13 1. * Ibid ; Stow, Chron 151 10 Wal. ii 111; Stow, Chron 338.

[For the form and content of Chapters LXII-LXXV I am solely responsible.—W. T. W.]

CHAPTER LXVI

HENRY IN PARIS

WHEN Me un had fallen, Henry and Duke Philip granted leave to many of their troops, who had been severely tried during the siege. They then joined Charles VI at Corbeil, whence the three, at the head of a large force, went to Paris. Henry, there can be little doubt, had been to Paris before, but this was to be his formal entry into his prospective capital, and the Parisians prepared an imposing welcome. On Dec. 1 the magistrates and the leading burgesses (all clad in red), the Parlement, the University, and almost the whole body of clergy were to meet the august visitors outside the city, though the chapter of Notre Dame, whose relations with Henry were strained, refused to go farther than the Hôtel Dieu, which almost adjoined the cathedral. The streets along which the procession was to pass were as bravely decorated as the poverty. of the citizens permitted. Unfortunately the kings arrived ear ier than was expected and before those who were to greet them outside the walls had set forth! Nevertheless, they made an impressive entry, welcomed by the en husiastic crowds which aned the Rue St Denist. In front rode the two kings side by side in royal apparel, Henry, who was on Charles's left", regarding the people with calm and impassive mient. On the left side of the street rode the duke of Burgundy by himself; but while he thus emphasised his independence, he symbolised his levalty by allowing the kings to keep a horse a length in ndvance of h ma. He was followed by the knights and squires

* Bourgeren, 144; Momer iv. 16; Chart, i. 162; Jev. 262; Funquembergne, loc. tie.

Monstr iv 16; Chast. 1, 187; Cordeliers, 288.

* Tenan ion resecued, et apero, chevaucha a wrester come de la cur, un peu mont avant que un rieux roys, environ le long de leurs chevauts," Chait II, 237. Chaitellam's tenimony to Burgandy a piace in the procession is very weighty, for it must have gung against his grain to just the duke in the second rank.

Google

Monter Iv. 134 Fents, 1494 Chart L. 187 19.4 Enequembergue, 3. 319. Granorelle, 224, 7. 3, 224 7. 1.

A "Most in content i forement et regardori le pe ap e d'ung extrange tral " Chart à affy. Chartellars, i must be remembered wrote long after the dake of Marguado had abandones the English allanor, and he personnics represents Henry in a langity torant.

of his household, who carefully held themselves apart from the English and other Frenchmen. Most of them, like the duke. wore black. On the other side of the street, immediately behind the kings, roue the dukes of Clarence and Bedford, and then came a great array of English nobles and knights, conspicuous among them being the duke of Exeter and the earis of Warwick, Huntingdon, and Sansbury¹. At the cross-rougs which the cavalcade passed, it was met by processions of clergy. singing Te Deum and Benedictus qui venu and offering relics for the kings to kiss, this welcome deriving added solemnity from the fact that it was Advent Sanday. Each time that relics were presented to Char es he signed to Henry to kiss first, but Henry, raising his cap and bowing, motioned to Charles to precede him, a pantomime repeated several times as they made their way to Notre Dame, where they dismounted and praved before the high altars. It was now nearly dark. Burgundy escorted Utaries to the Hôtel St Pol, whence he himself went to his own Hôtel d'Actois; Henry and his brothers were lodged in the Louvre, and the rest of the English found quarters where they could, some of the soldiers being billeted in villages near Paries.

Next day there arrived the two queens, accompanied by many noble ladies, mostly Englishs. They were met by Duke Philip, Henry's brothers and other English lords, and the notables of Paris. They entered by the Porte St Antoine, and were received by the populace with an enthusiasm little less than that shown the day before. Namerous gifts were offered to the kings and queens, especially to Henry and Catherine. All day and night fountains of wine and rose-water played in the streets, and the citizens of Paris, after their volatile fashion, abandoned themselves to rejoidings. There is no reason to doubt that they were genuinely glad to welcome Heary as a saviour from disorder and famine. It was only a later generation ^{*} Monste iv 25 sq., Chast. i. 25 v.c., Cordeliers, 250 sq.  Bourgeons, 244, Monste iv 25; Chast. i. 187, 258, Gramoreille, 225, 26. 27. In the Rue de la Unazidre, between the Palace and the lathedral, on platforms one hundred pacet stug, was a paguant of the Panison, as represented on the walk of the chir of Notre Dame. It was a pinous spectacle, and als who now it were touched to the heart (Bourgeon, 144).

¹ loid. Monstr iv. 16

Bosegoon, 145, Monste iv 17, Jun. 561; Fraquembergue, i. 1893q.

Mountr. iv 174 Chast is typing a Bourgeous, 144 aq.; Granoreille, 115, n z.

The kings were "moult joyestement at homorublement recess" (Fauquezabergue, 1 369). The author of the "Journal d'un Bourgeois" (loc. cit.) is still more emphatic.

of Frenchmen that felt constrained to make excuses for their jubilation and to hint that they would have been no less joyful it the duke of Borgondy had come alone. But it cannot have been long before their optimism began to cool. No sooner had the royal visitors arrived than the price of bread, already vers high, rose sharply; and a loaf weighing twenty nunces and consisting mairly of bran cost twenty four deniers parisis, Before Christmas bread doubled in price, and could not be had uniess one went to the bakers' shops before daybreak and stood drinks to masters and men. The poor lived mainly on caplages and turrips, for after standing long in a queue at a baker's women often had to go away with nothing. The dunghills of Paris were covered with children dying of hurger and cold!.

Meanwhile Henry was showing his customary activity. As long as his triumph was incomplete he could take no rest. The machinery of government was kept working as usual. Immediately after the entry of the two kings, the count of St Polwas sent to Picardy and other parts of the north to receive from these under obligation to take it the oath to observe the treaty of Iroyes! The efficiency of the army was, as ever, one of the king a prime concerns, and on Dec. 5 he assued a number of commissions for holding musters of linglish troops, including reinforcements larely come from Wales! He instituted an enquiry into the munitions of war then available in Paris and into the possibility of producing more? At the same time Henry was, as usual, supplementing force by diplomacy, he was negotiating with the famous dauphinist leader Pierron de Luopé, captain of Montaigut, while Hue de Lannoy was despatched at the head of an embassy to treat for an agreement with Cast let,

At this time, however, most of Henry's thoughts were cia med by the States-General, which, summoned some weeks previously, met on Dec. 6 in the lower hall of the Hôtel at Popt.

^{*} Bourgeoit, 145. * Ited. 146, 4 Chapt i. 188. The Parlement for instance held a me I attended sensor on Dec. v. hough it was a date of government only for the armial of the quies in Changuing engage [30]. 4 D.K.H. xlift, 1914 4 Cordeners, 189.

T Chast, i. 183 sq., no. 195 sq., no where two long contemporary documents are partied by the ed tor, Kervyn de Lettenhove. They reveal Henry somerest in artillery and also the urshakable confidence of the French in the crowbow

[&]quot; Rym x 21 The subject of discussion is not known

D.K & xlii. 300

^{*} Rym x 30, Jun 461. The summons was originally for Nov 12 and had evidently been sent at very short notice (G. Durand, Inv. somm. des Arch. comm. d'Annens, il 14; Flammennopt, 276)

There were of course no representatives of the dauphinist party or the regions under its control, but there is no reason to doubt that Charles VI and Henry, intended the assembly to be a ful meeting of the Three Estates! The French king was present at the opening session, when the chancellor Jean le Cler, speaking from the somewhat depressing text, "Audita est vox lamentation's et planetus Syon," expounded the causes of the summons? He recounted recent events, emphasised the necessity of confirming and executing the treaty of Trayes, and asked for the advice of his audience as to the best means of restoring public order, reforming the currency, and providing money for the war and other burdens on the state. Good laws, he added, were to be enacted by the government, and all concerned in the marder of the dake of Burguncy to be punished. When the chance for had read the treaty to the Estates, Charles declared that he had sworn to observe it, stace it and been made for the good of the realm, and that all his subjects must do the hise and promote its enforcement. After further speeches addressed to the Estates, they were told to depart, discuss the matters which had been submitted to them, and return on the toth with their answers. On the appointed day, in the presence of the two kings and their counsellors, a single spokesman declared on behalf of all the Estates that they approved of the treaty as beneficial to France and al. Christendom and promised that they and their he is would uphold it for ever. They begged that all Charles's subjects should be called upon to swear lovalty to it, that those who refused should be treated as rebeis. and that it should be deemed part of the law of France* Their spokesman, further, laid before the kizgs the principal exils from which brance was suffering, and asked for remedies". As for the coinage, they would accept whatever the king and his Council should ordern? They offered suggestions as to the best ways of raising revenue, urging in particular that the burden of taxation should be equally distributed.

* Juy 162. * Ordennence, xi- 2 10-

¹ Ordonamen, at 152; Doubt d Arcq, 1. 4.7; Rym. E. 30. The towns sometimes used to avoid sending as many department they were called up in to ricc. I has, American four it stead of eight. G. Lurand, is 154, and became three transition four harm mermont; loc. cit.). Abbeville elected only one departy, but was almost certainly called upon for more (A. Ledieu, Inv. somen. des Arch. municip. d'Abbeville, p. 3).

The outcome of these proceedings was the issue of several ordinances, of course in the name of Charles VI, though everyone knew that Henry was their real author¹. One of these enautments gave effect to the requests of the Estates respecting the treaty while all Frenchmen were bound to take the oath to observe it, if required, it was always to be exacted from those entering upon ecclesiastical benefices or public office and those doing homage for their lands². The members of the States-General themse was took the oath, even those who had done so before³.

Another ord nance, lated Dec. 10, was designed to inform the public of the intentions of the authorities and to prepare their ninds for the taxation to which the Estates had agreed. In all districts bordering on foreign or daublinist territory, there was to be appointed a knight who, backed by an armed escort and assisted by the faulti and other local notables, would inspect all the foriresses of the region, garrison these belonging to the crown with troops who should be properly paid, and cause all others to be demolished unless they were of military value and the king or their owner was willing to provide garrisons for them. Smal, churches and monastenes were to be treated on the same principles. To carry out these measures, however, and to enable the king to accompash his purpose of coming good money, the assistance of the people was necessary, for the revenue of the domain was insufficient to meet the expense and the new money would be so good that the crewn would make nothing on it. So, for a year as from Feb. 1, in accordance with the advice of the Estates, the anartage on wine should be levied, as in former times, and the gabelie should be coacted throughout the kingdom. Moreover, a sales-tax of twelve degrees in the drove was to be levied on all merchandise save food. The money raised by these means was to be expended exclusively in the interests of the crown. It would be necessary, if the situation of public affairs was to be improved, to appoint numerous officials and employ a large force of wellpaid troops, while it was essential that all Frenchmen should do their part in preventing the imminent rule of the country. The taxes just authorised would not cover the cost of the proposed remedial measures, but Henry and the duke of Bulgundy had promised to aid with all their resources of men and goods.

⁵ Vita, 191

Rym. x. 3x xq., 100.

^{*} Fenin, 149.

The new taxes were to be farmed at auction whenever possible. It is strange that this ordinance, which was evidently meant to recoac le public opinion to the government's demands, was not proclaimed till Jan. 18, 1421.

On Dec. 19 orders were also given for the coinage of the new money. The royal mints were to strike gold crowns which should circulate at 221. 64. tearners, and silver coins worth respectively twenty, ten, and five deniers. Copper coins were to be made at the discretion of the masters of the mints. The standard of the new coins was to be extremely good. The price of the mark of gold was fixed at seventy-two times marked, that of the mark of silver at seven?

In order to provide the mints with the necessary bullion the Estates agreed to a general levy of silver. Everyone except the very poor was to be assessed, according to his wealth, at so many silver marks or fractions of a mark. Payment might be made in coin, plate, ornaments, or in any form convenient to the individual. This exaction affected clergy as well as laity. The University of Paris, according to the dauphin st, Jean Juvénal, begged Henry for exemption, but being anubbed thought it well to hold their peace, since anyone who resisted or criticised the authorities was lable to be regarded as an Armagnac⁴. The chapter of Notre Dame had already decided to bear its share of the burden of taxations.

The Estates were not suffered to depart until they had taken part in the formal proceedings which were now at length initiated against those involved in the murder of Montereau Duke Philip, it is said, would have brought his case forward at Iroyes, but that Charles had not been attended by a fitting number of councillors. Henry, too, may have hoped that some of the dauphinist leaders might be led to surrender on the tacit understanding that nothing more was heard of their share in the crime. It was now evident, however, that Armagnac resistance would have to be broken down by force, and the solemn condemnation of their leaders for murder might perhaps

¹ Ordonnances, el. 109-112 " Ibid. 107 sq.
2 Ibid. 103, Doset d'Areq 1 424 sqq

^{*} Jean Javénal (p. 561) states that the government paid for the alver collected at the rate of 7 f the mark, has there is no almost to this in extant offices records bearing on the matter, which include the accounts of two of the collectors in Pana (Doubt of Arcq., see cit

Granorende, 216, m. q.

⁴ Chart 1 194

influence public opinion against them. Moreover, while the king was at Pans, accompanied by Henry and his brothers, with the Purlement at hand and the Estates assembled, the proceedings could be invested with a lithe gravity and dignity that their importance required.

The trial took place on Dec. 232 in the hall of the HMel St Poi. Charles VI sat on the judge's beach, with Henry beside him! Just below were Jean le Clerc, chancel or of France, Philippe de Morvilliers, First President of the Pariemeer, and other notable men of the king a Council. Near the middle of the hall sat Duke Ph lip, on the same bench as Henry's two brothers, but above them. He was clad in black, and accompanied by several hishops and others of his Council. There were also in attendance a number of members of the States-General, which was deemed to be officially present⁴. The proceedings were opened by Nicolas Raolin, advocate in Parlement and maine des requétes in the dake a household, who on behaif of the duke, his mother, and his sisters, charged with he murder of Duke John the dauphin and several of his leading supporters, among them being the lord of Barbazan, Tanneguy du Chastel, Gar laume le Boute Ber, and Jean Louvet, presider t of Provence. He asked that these oflenders might be carried in tumbrils, on three Saturdays or holidays, to all the crossroads of Paris, where each, bare-headed and with a lighted canale in his hand, should confess with a loud voice that he and the others had hasely murdered Duke John without provocation. Later they should repeat their confession on the scene of the crime, where they should be required to erect a co-legiate church, the clergy of which should pray perpetually for the duke's soul. Smilar churches should be built by the murderers at Paris, Dijon, Ghent, Rome, Santiago de Compostella, and Jerusalem⁴.

This was but the fermal opening of the case. Rao it was followed by Fierre de Marigny, acvocate of the long in Parlement, and Jean Apuenin, Charles's procurear-général, who urged that all the accused should be executed when caught, that meanwhile they should be outlined and sentenced to total forfeiture of lands and goods, and that the dauphin should be Monter iv. ,#4 Rem x 331 la Barre, if 194.

* Monsur Iv. (Big., of Tit Liv 90.

Juv. 562.
 Monetr. 19. 27; Chest. i. 194.
 Monetr. 19. 27; Chest. i. 194.
 Rym. 2. 34.

declared neapable of succeeding to the crown. Next came a speech by John Larcher, doctor of theology, who had been chosen by the University to support the plea of the duke. Spokesmen of the authorities and people of Paris and of the Estates were also heard!. The chancellor replied that Charles, by the grace of God and with the advice of Henry, would do what justice required

The same day letters patent were drawn up announcing that having heard the demands for justice against those guilty of the murder. Charles had consulted his Council, and had dosely examined the terms of the agreement concluded between Duke John and the dauphin in the summer of 1419. In view of this and of the sequel at Montereau, and on the advice of his "Grant Conseid" the presidents and by members of the Parks ment, and others of his counsellors, he now declared those guilty. of the crime to have committed treason and to be incapable of holding or inheriting any dignities, honours, prerogatives, or property3. They had incurred, moreover, the penalties prescrined in the agreement of July, 1419, and their subjects and vassals were consequently freed from all obligations towards them. All this was without prejudice to charges which Birgundy had brought against certain individuals by name and to proceedings which might thereafter be initiated against others concerned in the crime. The king's counciliors, the Parlement, and all his judges and officers, were ordered to render. justice to the complanants and the king's procured. This document, stern though it sounds, was not of much practical consequence; it laid down how the guilty were to be nin shed, but expressed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of those named by Burgundy's counsels.

Morate iv 19 sq.

* "Inhabiles et Indignes de toutes Successions, directes et allacesula; et de toutes Digantes (ac), et Horneurs, et Prerogatives quelconques."

It is not past to make out the precise order of the printedling. The account given in based on a comparison if the affice a statement (Ran in pa, with the interest tamages in Mointrelet (iv 19), Jean Juvelnal (562), and Tit. Liv (90 sq.). Margny, though apparent the appears of a the column was one of the Juke a chamberland (La Barra, at 640). Agriculta had been appearated faccood President of the Parismond on Dec. 11, but presumably continued to act as presumer-girdent pending the appearament of a execution (European bergue, 5, 167, 189). Raolin and Larcher got fifty france such from the dube for their speeches (La Barra, ii. 181, n. r).

It was doubtien this announcement which caused the downger-duches of Burgundy and her daughters, on Jan. 14 and 16, 14 ar, to appoint a number of precureurs, among them Radus and Margoy, to act against the daupher and others (La Barre, L. 144 299.).

All the notable visitors celebrated Christmas in Par s. The occasion seems to have cost Henry some of his popularity. For Charles and Isabel, at the Hôtel St Pol, were attended by only a few old servitors and other folk of humble estate, so that some of the leading citizens of Paris, who came to pay their respects, went away much grieved. Henry and Catherine, on the other hand, feasted in great magnificence at the Louvre, surrounded by English fords and ladies and visited by many Frenchmen, eager to parade their devotion. There is no reason. to doubt the substantial truth of this celebrated description, though it is necessary to be on one's guard against the statements of historians like Chastellain, who wrote after the English had been expelled, and who gives accounts of their tyransica, and overbearing behaviour at this time which are supported by no contemporary evidence. It was soon be leved that Herry had removed numerous others appointed by Charles VI and by Dukes John and Philip substituting for them creatures of his own?. We have not sufficient evidence to subject this assertion to a thorough test, but such appointments as are noted in contemporary authorities are all in favour of Frenchmen, except for two or three military commanus. No doubt the favoured Frenchmen could be trusted to uphold English interests; but it can no longer be believed that Henry serzed the first opportunity to place the civil auministration of brance in the hands of Englishmen. Haughly and overbearing he may have been, but to the end he retained enough prodence to restrain him from the grosser forms of tyranny.

Nevertheless, Hienry's relations with the January were not comfortable. Even in England it was re-ognised that he was not loved in the French capital and that its populace must be kept in awe by a display of force. Just at this time, too. Henry with officials appointed by Dake Philip.

Memor as along, Ferrinary Ferrinary on that Henry was puricularly authors.

6. Walas sa, 336.

¹ Mornete iv. 22. Cf. Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 62 sq., which gives a less gloomy impression of the plight of the Freigh king Chase to 198 aqq experienced a rehalf from the chapter of Notre Dame. The bishop of Paris, Gerard de Montaigu, a firm Armagnac, who since 14.18 had dwelt, ex led from his see, at Bons-Ma esherces, died in September, 1420. The few canors who had remained in residence shared the political views of their bishop, and the new ones nominated by the dake of Burgundy racely came to Pine. On Montagu's death the duke wished to secure the election of Philibert de Montjeu, a member of his Counci, who had been provided to the hishopric of Amiens, though the resistance of the chapter had prevented him from gaining possess on of that see. Agents of Charles VI, Henry, and the dake at once began to put pressure on the canons of Notre Dame, who sought to gain time by tas sting that their absent fellows must be summoned to take part in the election. When, however, the bishops of Beauvais and Worcester renewed the attempt to coerce the chapter, they were plainly fold that bishops ought not to be auminated by kings, that the canons intended to take St Ambrase as their example, and that the decrees of the Council of Constance must be obeyed and the election Canonically conducted. It says much for Herry's farmess that he overrode the Burgundian officials who refused safe-conducts to the messengers sent to surrinon the absent canons, though it must be aun it ed that none of them was able to accomplish the purpose of their mission. It is asserted, on the other hand, that the chapter was privately warned that flit did not choose Paribert, Henry would make things unpleasant for the new bishop and his church. Whether this report was true or not, the canons refused to be moved, and or Dec. 27, twe ve of them, with the succentor, elected Jean Courtecuisse, king's almoner, and a strong supporter of the concillar movement -a man, so far as can be ascertained, very worthy of the honours.

^{*} e.g. on Der. 16, 1410. Hagues in U. q. was appointed privile of the merchants of Paris (Bourgeon, 147). As few dark earlier, Jean do Mein. Fact been award as private of Paris (Bourgeon, 147). Pauguest tergor, 1. pp. 17 than here wells or Christians, first new backs, were appointed—for Mittan, we mandon, Amicin, Meaux, and Chartres And were Treathness, or at least and French manner (Found in 2001, 2003, it is a firew continuous retained to see a Change VI on Jam 9, 1441; west all Fresch (stad. 41 by). For the multimer appointments, see below, p. 381.

Henry was beginning to feel the full weight of the barden he had imposed on himself. It was obviously undesirable for him to leave Paris at the moment, but affairs in Normandy demanded his attention, and he had a ready arranged a visit to long and, where he had not been for three and a half years and where his subjects were clamouring for his presence. He evidently concluded that he ringht safely carry out his plana, and the event on the whole just had his forecast, for whatever disaffection might exist it was not from the regions which accepted the treaty of Troyes, but from the dauphinists, that scrious trouble arose in his absence. Clarence was left in command of the English troops and others of Henry's subjects in the territories of Charles VII, and Exercit was made military governor of Paris, with charge of the king's person*. A few days after Henry's departure, the cauphin was solemnly summoned to the Marble Table. Of course he failed to appear. He was consequently pronounced contumacious, sertenced to banishment, and declared incapable of succeeding to the crown or his personal estates. The judgment was pronounced by the royal Council and the Parlement, and even Chastellain admits that it was just's, though by that epithet he perhaps means what we should call "legal" Many of the Parisians were highly pleased, for they feared the dauphin greatly.

Gramoreille, annogen und opply nad opply name Bourgeon, nay und nous, near me no B. Vita, apply Ren. Park 19, 1135, 1255.

Queen Catherine left Paris on Dec. 27, after a piteous leavetaking, especially from her father at least so it was popularly believed. If Henry did not accompany her he probably followed very shortly afterwards, for the two entered Reuen together on Tuesday, Dec. 317. The duke of Burgundy, who was anxious to visit his own, ands, remained in Paris or ly a few days longer, and on Jan. to left for Artois and Flanders.

Beequigny, 253 Vita, 293

Fasquembergue, 11. 9; Monete iv. 35; Vita, 293.

Godefroy, Charles VI, Annotations, 203; Plancher, iv. p. elv; Monete iv. 34. Chast. 1, 218 aq. , Fenin, 149, Tit. Lav. 92; Vita, 292. Attempts of modern writers to prove that no such sentence was ever passed are due to a pervene patriotum and do violence to the evidence. Even if the authenticity of the record quoted by Godefroy be challenged, the curious treatise printed by Planchez would be decisive.

Juste déffinitive sentence, 1, 224.

Monate 1v 37, Chast 1 219.

* Bourgeon, 148

Cochen, als

 Plancher, or a 6, of abid, p. mr. The chromoters give the impression that #organdy left Para before Henry, but the documents cited by Plancher show that he must have Mayed here some days longer (Moustry to any Chart, 1, 2043 Fenin, 1504 Cordelient, ap1, It Lw 91) According to Monstrelet the duke travelled out Beauvas, where he attended the celebrations occasioned by the entry into his see of the new bishop, Pierre Cauchon. He then made his way to Ghent, stopping at Amient, Doullers, and Lide. He was at Arras on Jan. 16 (Bibl. 1981, MS. franc. 26,043, no. 1581).

CHAPTER LXVII

NORMANDY, 1410-1412

HENRY's stay in Normandy lasted nearly three weeks. It was his first visit to the duchy since the treaty of Troves had made provision for its fature. It is true, hat the treaty evaded express approval of Herry's occupation of Normardy, and while by implication it accepted his sovereignty over it, there was a stipulation that on the death of Charles VI the duchy should be re-united to the French crown, the English supremacy over it being thus umited to a term of incides able dura ion?. Nevertheless, Herry now knew that for the present he was not to govern Normardy in the capacity of lung of France, or as sovere en lord of a great tract of brench terr tory definitively ceded to him. On the other hard, though he would have been within his rights in treating it as part of his linglish. lurgdom, he knew that he might not do so permanenty. He could thus overhaul the machinery of government with a clearer. idea of its future functions and burdens than he had hitherto possessed.

It must not be forgotten that the French terr tory over which Henry exercised severeign power from May, 1410, to his death, comprised more than Normandy proper. It was officially described by virious phrases- Normandy and our conquest," Our ducty of Normandy and other parts of France subject to us," or words to like effect?. What was covered by such descriptions seems nowhere to have been authoritatively de-Henry's right to sovereignty over regions ourside

Ments a towerign y over Normandy may be inferred from clauses tan 8 of the treaty Num it 193 sq. It was a palace is clause in hat other Perry is his her became king of Feature, "ducatus Normann as, nection ominia et singula Loca per ipsom in Region Franciae conquisita, erunt sub Disson, Obedientia, et Monarchia Circuite Franciae" (third 900). Even after the treaty, Henry seems still to have based his claim to Normandy on the right of divinely-aided conquest. "Come, par la grace the Dian, par acotte Conqueste, Nous scious Palaiblement en Pomessions et vestes Satumes du Duchie de Normendie et de nouve Conquest. " (ng Jan. 1422), ibid m 36)

See previous nate. Cf. also "In Decay nouve Normanuse et alia loca Conquesta nouve (bid 166); "La duchie de normendie Et ailieurs du pays conquest" (bid 166); "La duchie de normendie Et ailieurs du pays conquest" (fuch Aceta 187 f. 16). Nervande et agues pa 18 fe neutre conquest (firm); it ve réo), "Conquestus de Ducatu nostro Normanniae et al.is partibus nobis aubjectis (Kym. x. 142; of third 103, 224); "Senescallum ducatus mestri Normannie et aliarum partum Francie nobis subjecturum" (Briquigny, 159)

Normandy was even more vaguely dealt with in the treaty of Troyes than his claim to the duchy itself, later, indeed, Philip. the Good denied that it had ever been admitted at all?. Apparently. Henry demanded absolute control over everything which he had won by the sword before the treaty was signed; but it seems never to have been explained whether he meant merely the territory of which the English were in effective occupation on May 21, 1420, or whether, besides this, he claimed areas which they had once overrun and afterwards lost. Further, while it was laid down in the treaty that Henry's subsequent conquests from the dauphinists should be restored to the obedience of the crown of France, the town of Dreux, first captured by the English in August, 14214, was placed under the captaincy of Gi bert Halsa I, hailli of Evreux, and treated as part of Henry's "conquest" Evidently the frontier of Normandy and the Conquest" was both uncertain and variable. It is thus impossible to give more than a rough indication of it.

It was in the direction of the French capital that English junisdiction had been carried farthest beyond the imits of Normandy proper. The Linglish bailly of Mantes exercised authority over the viguene of Mantes and the présélés of Meulan, Poissy, St Germain-en-Lave, and Mortjoie, his sway extending to places within a dozen miles of the heart of Paris. From St Germain the frontier of the bailagre ran west to the Fure, which it struck not far south of Anet!. North of the So no, the builli of Gisors had jurisdiction over Pontoise Beaumont-sur-O se, and Chaumont⁶. In other quarters, however,

1 La Barre, 1. 342 Chuse 14, Ryen, 12, 199

* C. Besterepaire, Etati, 8, D.R.R. slift, 197, 411, 448, Exch. Accis. 128/7, ff 5 v., D.K.R. alii 435

² Clause 14 might be taken at accepting Henry's claim to Normandy, but other regions already conquered are not dealt with at all (Rym. in. 899). Clause 17 admits that their are parts of France outside Normandy, where his rule is de fix is established. Clause 18 is too ambiguous to prove anything (bid. 900).

See below, p. 327.
 D.K.R. ahii 432, 437 ; For Aces. 62, C, Bibl. nat., MS. franç. 25,044, no. 3677.
 D.K.R. ahii 432, 437 ; For Aces. 62, C, Bibl. nat., MS. franç. 25,044, no. 3677. Dreut was nevertheless to be regarded as belonging to the haveney of Chartres. Mariene and Durand, Anec. i. 1757 sq.). This is the more remarkable since in the said die of the fourteenth century Dreux had belonged to the beillings of Mantes (Premout, ii. 30).

^{*} Rym. x. 160 sq.; Bréquigny, 184, 195; D.K.R. xls. 197, 408. Nominally he had suthorsty over the basilings of Senlis (Ret. Norm. 9 Hen. V_p in. xy | D.K.R. xls. 197, 408, 4xy) to which Chaumont properly belonged (Rot. Norm. 9 Hen. V_p pt. x_p m 6 d). But the city of Sersie was never netually captured by the English, and was always writer a French boots (Fauquembergros, t. 173 of Flaramarmont, 219 eqq., 276).

English power was not firmly established for any great distance beyond the limits of the duchy. To the north of Courney it reached hardly, if at all, beyond the eastern frontier?. South of Alencon, it is true, I'ng ish arms had on various occasions penetrated far into Maine, and at the beginning of 1421. Henry's authority extended some way south of Besumont. le-Viconte⁴. But the English possessions in Maine were insecurely held, as events were soon to show,

Henry's man purpose in visiting Rouen was apparently to recet the Three Estates of Normandy and the other conquered territories, which of course had not been concerned in the recent doirge of the States-General at Paris. It is not known how many representatives were summoned or attended, or how those present has been chosen. The proceedings began towards the middle of January and were very like those of the States-General. Henry urged the members of each Listate to observe the treaty of Troyes, pointed out the evils arising from the bidness of the currency, and asked for advice on this toric and on the general welfare of the duchy. The Estates retired to deaberate. According to Henry, it was on their advice that, some days later, he ordained that all his subjects- especially ecclesiastics receiving preferment and office-holders on appointment to their posts-should swear loyalty to the treaty He also announced a reform of the coinage, the necessary metal for which, it was agreed, should be obtained by a levy of silver from all save the very poor, at the rate of one mark for every one hundred let. name, of income, the government promising to pay for every mark thus contributed seven here; of the new money within a month of its manufacture. The Estates, it seems, gramb ed about the disturbed state of the country, and this gave Henry a good opening for requesting a grant of money. The dergy agreed to pay two tenths, and the towns consented to a titule sufficient to bring the total grant to 400,000 let. mare. Nobles, those bearing arms, and the destitute were to be exempt. The Estates admitted that the task of maintaining good government in Normandy and providing for its defence would require twice the amount voted, but pleaded their poverty in justification of not offering more. Henry at once made arrangements for collecting the money. The clerical grant was to be paid in two instairments, at dates to be announced later. The lay tax would be collected in three instalments, 100,000 lev. there, being due before March I The basis of the assessment was to be a charge of twenty rear on each hearth, "the strong aiding the weak." Wisham Alington, the treasurer-general, was charged to take the necessary steps for carrying out these arrangements1.

^{1.} An entry in the Calendar of Normali Rolls (D.K. R. xb., 448) gives the impression that in April, 1422, these were English garrisons in Picardy. The original test, however, fefers only to garran run routes at the state of summer translation ? arche enteretes' (Rot. Norm, to Hen V, m. 25 d). In April, 1442, land at Tulky in Vinceu was included the firmer of Henry's conquests, it cannot be inferred that Tully we under English rule (Bečouigny, 199). * D.K.P., niše 1873 Rešopilgny, 236.

At this assembly the earl of Salisbury did formal homage for the county of Perche and Arthur of Richemont for the county of Ivry?. There were also present in Rouen at this time envoys from Charles lord of Albret and the lord of St Bazenle and from the count of Forx^a. The nature and outcome of their business may be more conveniently considered elsewhere. To Henry it must have seemed highly important, it certainly involved careful consideration of intricate details and it is another instance of the king's untiring energy that he was able to attend to these complicated negotiations at a moment when he was not only confronting the Norman Estates but also making a careful enquiry into the administration of his territory.

The Norman Rolls abound with appointments of new officials made during this visit of Henry's. Few positions of high rank were affected, however, until near the end of his stay, when he had heard the activice and complaints of the Estates and knew what financial support they were prepared to give him. On Jan 14, John Keigh ev was appointed to the builtiage of Rouen, terr Walter Beauchamp4, and on the 18th Richard Walkstede was made baills of Caux, John Burgh baills of Gisors, and William Lirwhit baile of Mantes. Their respective predecessors were Roger Figures[®], Richard Woodville[®], and Mithel Guernier*, Frennes and Guernier may perhaps have been removed for misconduct, but Beauchamp and Woodville were transferred to higher posts, the former becoming keeper of the wardrobe and treasurer of war1, the latter seneschal of Normandy! This office had been held by Hugh Lutterell, who had been suffering from ill-hea th*. On the same day the duke of Clarence was given authority to call up not only all English. subjects in I rance but a so all inhabitants of the parts conquered by Henry and to employ them in military operations anywhere in Charles VI's or Henry's territories. In the commission sestewing these powers no title is given to Clarence, he was not, an fact, appointed to an office, but simply invested with the military authority of the king of England during the latter a absence4. Over the French in the territory where Henry was merely regent he still had no control whatever.

Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 44. * [bid. 197 * [bid xl: $06 4 D.K R xhi 340 • Ibid xli 707, xlu, 374. • Ibid xli 769, 791; Brequigny, 130.

None of these appointments, with the doubtful exception of Wordvile's changed the system of government already established. Henry had decided-wisely, it would seem-to govern his conquered terr tory as a separate state, to fry to make it pay for itself, and to make use of the existing political institutions. The arrangements which he sanctioned during his visit remained unaltered for the rest of his life, and may thus be conveniently surveyed at this point.

No attempt was made to introduce English institutions intothe regions under Henry's sovereignty. The system of local government remained essentially as it had been before the

In. Rod I Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 17, 1411, 9 Hen. V, Patch., July 17, 1411, Mich., Oct. 20, 1411, For Accu. 69, I

. Berquigner, 159 sq. I be case of his appointment was Jan. 18, not 8 as in Newhall,

* Britquigny, 1034 For. Norm. It Hen. V, p. 23 m. 23 d. D.K.R. atii. 3794 Orig. Lett., Ser. 11, 5. 85 iq. From the summary of a document of Jan. 16, 1422 (D.K.R. atii. 401), it would appear that on that date John Tiptoft was senerched of Normandy. "Normandy," however, is evidently a slip for "Aquation" of which Tiptoft mally was senerched and where he was at the time (For. Accts. 56, F. v., Rym. is 914, 915; Jumde, 438, 443, 455, 467, 505, 507; Chane. Ware, See. 1, File 667/933, 938; Cal. Pat. 2426-44, pp. 238, 319, 320, 324)

* Ryen. z. 49 sq. Clarence's position peoplessed the chronicless. The author of the Fee says that Honey appropriate C. general his monopolism the residual Fees on and sing-Where it gary, an atmost is currier description. For the title depositions, used in this are the the surgigene acts has a male arms grath ance of the mapp, having . Earlies makes timregent" or "cormands, a ., and ship ager bes to him coul author to, for which their is no good evidence. In Brut, it, 225, he is lieutenant of Normandy and the sest of the conquered territory, in Monter iv 14, captain-general of Normandy-both deerrors in understating his real powers.

* This is evident from the terms of the commission, and also from the document giving the duke of Exeter authority over all Henry's subjects from oversess within the territory of Charles VI when Clarence was absent (Bréquigny, 251)

* The authority bestowed on Woodville (Bréquigny, 159 sq.) was much wider than that grained to Luxurell in a writ of April 17, 1410 (Rot. Norm & Hen. V. p. 1, m. 28 d) If Luttered possessed further powers, the record of them seems to have been lost English invasion. There were eight builtages—Cotentin, Caen, Alençan, Evreux, Rouen, Caux, Gisors, and Mantes! After Jan. 18, 1421, all the builts were Englishmen?. But the civil others of lower rank, including the lieutenants of the builts?, were a most all brench. Of the trainings were divided, none, to judge from the names in the records, was administered by an linglishman. And scarcely an ling ish name appears in the numerous extant documents appointing receivers, sergearts, guaranness, precureurs, money-changers, officers of the mirts, surveyors of weights and measures, keepers of seals, to mention to others! Lew Neemans, it is evident, would ever encounter an English civil official.

On the other hand, the military administration remained almost if not quite, exclusively in English hands. It may be estimated that at the beginning of 1421 the troops serving in royal castles or the horisg lands of royal officials in the conquered territoly numbered altogether about 4700 men. On or near the route connecting Cherbourg, Caen, and Evreux, there were approximately 950. On the southern frontier, between Avranches and Verneux, there might be 1600. The protection of the Seine valley absorbed $1000 the eastern boundary, from Penroise to Eu, $50 or thereshouts. In

* DKR xli. 744, xlin. 354, 388, 397, 407; For. Atett. 41, C.

* Each, Acres 188 v. t. joing , Biblinet , N.S. frang 16,044, son 1618, 1640, 1644,

1 he names and boundaries of the viconcit and previous mem to have varied somewhat in the last years of Henry's rule (of a mandate of Aug. 20, 1421, in D.K.R. 1811, 412, and Alington's fourth account, Exch. Accts. 183,7).

* DKR xlit, passimi

I hack Acres 188, 14 For A can be, 7 vig OKR all sposons. Cheppe, which bringer, to the ar history of Rourt and exposed raws be now leger and in man see, had a so-called battle of mo own, who was existently exempt from the authority of the battle of Caux and deak carefuly with the central government of the duchy (Rot. Normally Hent V, p. 1; m. 77 d, 65; Exch. Acets. 188/7; ff. 2 vi, 13; Briquigny, 145; missing of the OKR, 188 and 185 and 185

I be remained of the strengthal and the treaturer general new below, p. 141) must often have been on the move from one part of the duchy to another. A number of royal garmons might be reinforced, when need arose, by the men of lords and soldiers on whom Fleury had bestowed Norman lands. Thus, when the government gave the word, sixty landowners, at their own expense, had so sally with all their tennots and dependents to the defence of Boson, sorty to that of Carn, and forty-three to that of Cherbourg.

addition, there were the garrisons of about sixty enfected castles. As a rule it was for the tenant to decide how large a garrison to maintain; but, though most of these enfected castles were small, few of them could have safely been left without a guard of at least ten men. It is known, furthermore, that enopiests of Norman land from Herry were bound to furnish, at their own subcase, mounted contingents totalling some 1400 men, who might be used anywhere and at any time. It seems usfe to estimate, therefore, that heades those haid by the using, there were in Normandy 2000 soutiers, nearly at of whom must have been linguish. The old feudal levy, though Herry asserted the right to employ it, was but little used?, and it seems impossible to calculate the numbers it could yield.

The captains of the garrisons, reval or other, were almost all English. So were their neutenants, an important consideration, for it of an happened that a garrier explain was naminous to serve with the field army without being required to relinquish his command, and in that case the heutenart became responsible for the defence of the town or eastle concerned.

The conclamon just put forward are boned on a number of authoriton, the most important of which are the Norman Polls, passing For. Acets, 36, Evb. 39, 16, 61, 18 mpg. Each. Acets, 40 ms. 10 m, and belts not, 545 from a 3,000, at 445, 16,44, acets, 40 ms. 10 ms. 10 m, and belts not, 545 from a 3,000, at 445, 16,44, acets, 40 ms. Newton that my calculations differ somewhat from those of Professor Newtoni (op. est. a 16 eq.). Having analysis differ somewhat from those of Professor Newtoni to a Apr. 6.11 m to 19 provided by the decision in the chart of Havind I memory of Havind I memory. He was a 19 ms. I should that the terminal treatment of the provided by the surface of Newtonian of the surface of the 140 memory of the surface of the 140 memory of the from the property. Newtonian course of error is the part distable original treatment the argument. Newtonian I begins and also make the format I begins and a surface of furnish treatment are from the property of the 140 memory of the 140 mem

I was cases up in the buildings of Case on Mar h 16, 1411 (Morball, 110 crieg Bell no., 513 Isano, object case throughout the concentration with my in February and probably in April, 14 y Newball, 210, citing Bibl. nat., MS. frame adjoes/33654 Rot. Norm. 7 Hem. V, p. 2, m. 65 d.), in the Countin in June, 1419 (Beilguigny, 120), throughout the conquered territory in August and Normaber, 1422 (Ret. Norm. 9 Hen. V, m. 26 d.) Beilguigny, 183) and puckage in May, 1421, and Jacobary and April 1422 (Rot. Norm. 9 Hen. V, mm. 12 d., 36 d., Rym. n. 202 sq.). The write do not always make a choice of the market of the three burstle while him was concurred.

to an in part.

If K I is also passes Forh Acres of the last see For Arcts for Birthope a fee. U. G. W. W. In the possible exception of a his Learner. For Acres for C. W. En h. Acres (W. C. 15), user Corner. D.C. C. Sc. 15), astan of Lancarde is a second for contains of mail partitions persons have been harpare, but one or two himschiefly day of Bosteller, whose feeling tentum or that is L. E. K. H. 1677,

W3E I

242

About the central government of Heavy's conquests informs son is scan'y, and insufficient to supply answers to many questions that suggest themse yes. The whole area was at least nominally under civil rule and the military, though their services were in frequent demand, were supposed to obey the civil authorities. The chief administrative official was the chancelor, John Kerrp, hishop of Rochester, who, before Herry's death, was translated successively to Chichester and London^a. The Norman Chancery was established at Rough^a. Kerne was assisted by a clerk, John Stopyndon, who had charge of the Norman Rolls', and there was a keeper of the hanaper of the Norman Chancery⁸, but contemporary records themse nofurther light on the personnel of its staff. The chancelor was of course responsible for the great scal of Normandy⁴, but he is seldom mentioned in contemporary records, and it is impossible to estimate how much influence he actually exerted on the course of administration.

In organising the central government of his French possessions, He iry could not make much use of existing ar stitutions. He did not, however, look to larg and for inspiration. If he conscious y imitated anything at a l, which is not certain, it was the administration of Normandy in the days of the Plantagenets. Under Henry II, the most powerful official in Normandy had been the senescha? His office was suppressed

Boo). The lieutenants were presumably chosen by their respective expenses, for these approximant do not appear in the Norman Bota. We consequently do not present a complete list of them. It is a farther disadvantage that the achievery only specify of the Norman Chapters and Treatment other disadvantage that the achievery only specify of the Norman Chapters and Treatment of Chapters likely, however, that the following were French John Jaquemyn, finitenant of Chapters III May and September, 24 to N. R. alia 425, 4135 of Xli 772, Klii. 425), and Thomas Gazgante, lieutenant of Chapters Gardied it May 1422 (Fight Arcts 1811), then I surmed to have been a Frenchman in my paper. "The Administration of Normandy, 1420-12" (Finite in Medical History presented to Thomas Farderick Fig. 152, 6 present a farther investigation to have been Reter de Legh, an Englishman (Ench. Accts. 50,20, 15, Stowe MS. 440, f. 45, five Accts. 69, G. v.; Cal. Pat. 1436-22, pp. 168, 249).

* Rum w 107

* Bott 145, 155, For. Accu. 61, C.v., Cal. Pap. Lesten, vii. 161, 191, Le News

I. 144.
By m. n. 145, For Accts. 69, F. Apart from specific allusions the attesting clause of boost also deleters in the Norman Rolls is enough to establish the fact.

D.K. R. nlin. 437, For Aces. 69, F. Rym. in 686. In December, 2421, and in 1422 this office also was held by Stopyn-after the ducky had been seized by the French crown¹. But even before the conquest of Normandy was complete Henry revived it, at least in name². What authority was attached to it at first we do not know; but after January, 1421, at all events, ats importance was great, for Woodville's commission conferred on him the supervision of ail officers, civil and military, in the parts subject to Henry. He was empowered to hold musters of garrisons whenever he saw hi, reporting thereon to the treasurer-general; to enquire into the adequacy of the food and manitions in fortified places; to investigate abuses of power by captains, punishing them himself unless they were serious, when he was to refer them to the Council. The seneschal, who might not delegate his functions, was to have a retinue of twenty men-at-arms and sixty mounted archers, and was to receive the substantial remuneration of 130, 44, a day. Until November, 1421, Woodvide was also captain of Gisors and Chaumont, and he apparently took an active part in the openwarfare of the year, even as far afield as Maine!

The seneschal, though a great man, did not enjoy that preeminence which had distinguished his office in the tweltth century. In particular, he was excluded from all concern with finance. The Norman Treasury remained at Caent, despite the establishment of the Chancery at Rouen. The posts of treasurergeneral and receiver general continued for some time to be held. by William A ingrent. Alington had four trores tourness a day, with a bonus of /100 sterling a year, and was provided with an excert of eight mounted men at arms and twenty four mounted archers?. He was responsible for the collection and receipt of most of the revenue of Henry's conquests. He also Viollet, Institutions, in. 258.

At any rate before July 14, 1419 (Bréquigny, 33). The écoument, though in the roll for 6 Hen V, belongs to the following year, so the test stidl shows (Rot. Yorm 6 Hen V, p. 2, ro. .) Unfortunately the MS is much damaged, and while a men and of the greechal of Normanity is leg ble, his name has disappeared. We only know that in the following Ajric the affice was held by Hugh Lu levell (Rote Norm & Hen. Y.

p. 1, 16, 18 d). Bregungny, 194 sq.; For Accts. 59, K. Woodville a pay seems afterwards to have been reduced to 103 a day [For. Accis. 61, B ve].

⁴ For Accts. 59, K, Brequigny, 177-

Rym. z. 40, 2033 Euch. Acen. 148/7, f. 15 vo.

For Accis 61, Bvv, Exch. Accis 18/7, f. s. Alington's appointment, originally dating from May 1 1, 24 (Bréquigny 14, Los Norm 2 Ikn V, p. 1, m. 17 6, Esch. Accis, 18/7, 4), had been renewed on Nov. 23, 1420 (Briquigny, 151).

7 Exch. Accis, 111/7, ff. 21 v°, 25 v°, For. Accis, 61, C v°

^{*} Rach, Acets. 111/7; For Acets. 47, Byweg ; Beiquigny, 160; D.K.R. alii. 429.

paid out money in accordance with royal writs, mostly under the privy sear, but it is evident that he was allowed some discretion in the disposar of the sums due from viconter and other collectors of revenue, much of which was applied to the needs of the locality where it was raised, without being sent to Caen at ail. A few items of Norman revenue escaped Alington's cognisance, and were paid direct to Henry's treasurer of war³; they were not, however, of great significance. Alington was assisted by several tellers and a number of circle, and by the summer of 1422 he had been relieved of the office of receiver-general, which was held by one John Dalton³.

The Treasury was subject to the control of the chambre des comptes, also located at Caen⁴, the distinction between the two corresponding roughly to that between the Exchequer of Receipt and the Exchequer of Account in England. There was a permanent president of the chambre des comptes⁵, and it is noteworthy that this office had long been filled by a Norman knight, Louis Burgeys, who, after being taken prisoner at the capture of Caen, had soon given his allegiance to Henry⁶. Alington's accounts for 1421 and 1422 mention Raoul le Sage, a knight with lands in Normandy and Picardy⁷, and Roger

For. Accu 69, F. F va.

Exch. Acets. 188/7, ff 24 w, 15, 27 vs, 18 vs, 32.

nos. 1639, 1649.

* Rym. z. 12, 19. The office had exceed as fac back to Nov. 18, 1418 (Rot. Norm. 6 Hen. V, p. 1, m. 7 4)

* Britquigny, 191, Exch. Acets, 148/7, f. 284 For. Acets, 61, C v*. He received his thank in factor the faces year beginning blavist, 419 Exch. Acets, 115 144, though he was not set appointed to the production on May 3. But May Ado. Ch. 114411) For the triation of Burgey to Learn in the early caps of the reason, we Rot. Sortin (Hardy), 195, 9753 D.K.R. 281, 760. In 1421-12 his satisty was sood 6. a year.

* For Acets, 61, C v*. Cf. Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 191, 1443 D.K.R. 281, 371, 181;

For Accus 61, C vs. Cf Rot Norm. (Hardy), 191, 142; D.K.R. xiz. 371, 111; Briquigny, 119, 150. Le Sage was hereditary marshal of Porthieu and lord of St Pierro Eglin (dep. Manche, art Cherbourg) and Laviertie-Grand (dep. Somme, ter. Abbeville).—Luon, Chron de Mont-St-Michel, 2 xiz n., 314 m. 21 Dunay, Inventage, ii., no It 41. In 1409 he was maker des regulies de l'hétel to Charles VI (Luce, opeit, i aix n.). For some years prior to June, 1420, if not later, he was a counciller of the duke of Brittany (Blanchard, not. 1311, 1348, 1464, 1401, 1403, 2663), and he had been engaged on the Breton side in the negotiations with Henry for the release of Arthur of Richemont (Rym. x. 2, 4 sq., 1 sqq.). He did not belong to the chambre des complex until after May 1, 1420; rideed, he seems not to have made his peace with Henry til, the summer of that year (D.K.R. 210, 374). He received a feet of 100 Lr. a year and a "reward" of 100 (For. Accus 62, C 19)

Erch. Accts. 181/7, passins, Bréquigny, 1842 Bibl. mat., MS. franc. 26,044, nos. 1677-9, 5733.

Ryen, 2, 40 Ench. Acets: $7/24, 285, 7, f 20 vo Babl. mat., MS. franc. 25,044, nos. c624, c644.

Waltham¹, described as seigneurs de la chambre des comptes, Yves de Bordenast and Benedict Couteiller, called gentes de comera in 1421-1422, and John Brinkeley, auditor of accounts². To this body Alington had to account from time to time⁴. It evidently had a good concet of itself, and on at least one occasion refused to accept a royal writ, presumably issued by the Chancery at Rouen⁵. After Henry's Jeath, however, it was abolished, and the fiscal officers of Normandy once more came under the supervision of the chambre des comptes of Paris.

The most dignified in litary officer in the conquered lands was the king's lies tenant, Thomas Montagu, earl of Salisbury, whose authority, at first limited to regions south of the Seine, was extended over the whole area in November, 1420°. His powers are not very clearly indicated in the documents appointing him to his office, but it was his duty to defend Henry's territory against invasion, and he was apparently permitted to make counter-attacks on enemy country?. As heutenant he seems to have had at his command a mobile force of some strength. He was, too, captain of five castles near the

* Exch. Acets. 188:7, f. 24 v*. When first appointed, on April 7, 1419, Waltham was styled magniter of the comera computerion (Not Notice 7 Hen. V, in 5). In 1422 he had the same remunication as Raoul le Sage (Exch. Acris. 188/7, f. 24 v*)

For Accu. 62, C vs. Yves de Bordenast is no doubt identical with the live "da Bois de Vanst," who was confituerest in the comera composition as early to March 11, 2421 (Rot: Norm., Hardy, 175). He and Counciller each had you't a year. Cf. D.K.R. niii. 336. When first appointed, on Jan. 19, 1420, Counciller was like Waltham, styled magnetic of the country (Rot: Norm., p Hen. V. p. 2, 10, 42). Counciller was a Norman (D K R. nii. 738)

* For Accts, 61, Cv*; Exch. Accus, 185/7, f 24 v*. He had an annual "reward of mod. t. Cf D K R. als. 765 Beinkeley was appointed on April 12, 1419 (Exch. Accts, 187,14).

* It Allegton's communious of May , , asy, and far as, pain it is faid down hat an tensing general he is to account every year to the Laguet Exchaquer Briquiph, 10, 10) It each of the transland, take and take, however he reward a special matriate to present his accounts to be damber decrement. She form 5 Hea V, p. t. in. t.g.d., 9 Flen V, in. 4 d., Brequigny, 243, Exch. Accis. 189/14, 188/7, £ s). Has beginn h. 3 to the long an Exchaquer was severthesis maintained, and in it is last account was presented (For Accis. 62, B v).

account was presented (For. Accts, 62, 5.44).

* Bits not, MS frame 10,744, no 9511. It was alleged by the chamber she couples that who, the wast ordered was coupled to Norman content.

* Rym. in 739 sq., n. 29, Bréquigny, 39, 177. He was often styled lieutenant of Normandy, ever in office records, actor his conven new extended over the waste ducky (cf. e.g. Rym. in 698; Befquigny, 13, 57).

2 Ryin, R. 172.
8 "for gene daemon et archiers de un Reterious Schön, de lay en son dit office animant comme sur la navvegarde desdrier charteniz et villes," Exch. Accus. 181/7, f. ns. The large amounts which be received from the Popular. Transury indicate that he must have had to pay many men besters those of the garrier as under his consthaind (stad.; cf. For Accts. 61, B v*).

southern frontier. But neither the men of other garrisons nor the contingents due from feudal lords were under his orders, and if he wanted to draw upon them, he had to secure the intervention of the civil authority2. His title of ' lieutenant," indeed, is somewhat misleading, for Salisbury, even in strictly military affairs, was a great deal less than the locum tenent of the ling. In fact, his authority over the English troops in Normandy and the annexed regions was ordinarily not so great as that of the seneschal

Of the admiral of Normandy, the earl of Suffolk, there is httle to say. He was invested with all the powers which the adm ral of France had possessed within the duchy, though the government was not quite sure what they were, and in January, 1421, had to commission Aington to enquire. He was responsible for the safeguard of the coast^a, but apparently performed his nautical functions by deputy, for he was also captain of the very important and exposed garrisons of Avranches and Pontorson⁴, and in September, 1421, became in addition governor of the marches of Lower Normandy?. As we shall see, he discharged his military duties in person and was also prominent in diplomatic work.

All officials alike were subject to Henry's Council at Rouer, sometimes called the Grant Consent. In the king's absence it directed the administration and defence of his French territory. The chancellor was its president; the seneschal and the lieutenant doubtless belonged to st, though their attendance must have been irregular; the treasurer general, however, seems not to have been a member¹⁰, and the only councillors whose names. appear in the records of the last two years of the reign are Atengon, Essay, Exmes, Bonsmoulins, and Verneuil (Exch. Acets. £13/7, f. 214) For Acets. 61, B v°). The total strength of the garmons was 432 men (Bert. Mus. Acet. Ch. 2.1, Bibl. nat., MS. frang. 25,765, no. 797)

Rym. 1 99, 201 sq., Brequigny, 177, 101, D.K.R. alii 457
Rym. 21 751 On the admira of France and Viollet, Institutions, ii. 444 seq.
Bibl nat. MS. franc. 26,044, no 5594.

D.K.R. zln joj, 407

^{*} He was appointed to Pontorson on June 11, 1419 (D.K.R. 161, 788) and to Ar-Three on Aug. 27, 1419 (ibid 794)
There Accus 61, Hv4, D.K.R. 201 414.

Rym. z. 62, 142, 137; Biequigny, 175, 179, 1841 Exch. Accu. 183/7, f. 26, Bibl. het., MS. franc. 26,044, no. 5740.

Rym. 2 .42; Exch. Acets. 50/9. 10 15 Canculario et Consiliario nostri Migni Concilii et Scuccarii in Ducatu Normanaus, oc atum gentibus compotorum nostrorum et Themurano M. 343).

Rioul le Sage¹, a ready nonced as a member of the chambre des compass, and Master (or Doctor) Thomas Brons¹. The councillers permanently retained in Elenry's service were apparently few, but, if occasion required, they might of course be reinforced by any of his subjects whom he chose to summor.

A matter of some mystery is the fate of the Norman E.Arguser, an institution highly prized by the Normans as the most notable survival of the organs of ducal government. Though maintained by Philip Augustus and his successors, the Echiever had in course of time changed greatly in both character and functions. Originally the cargo dury, with a close resemblance to the contemporary carra vegu of long and, it had become a court of the king of France, subordinate, first to the Parlement of Paris, and afterwards partly to that order and partly to the king a chambre des complet. For by the end of the fourteenth century, if not earner, it was divided rate two branches -the Echiquier des causes of Echiquier ordinaire, the functions of which were or marily judicial, and the Echiquier. der compter. Both were held twice a year, the former by delegates of the Parlement of Paris, the lat et by members of the rayal chambre der compte, who received and audited the accounts of the frical officials of Normandy Now for the years 1417-1422 records of the Norman Ectionier are who ly lacking, and it has been interred that in the days of Henry V it ceased to exist. though the Edigater ordinates was revived by the duke of Bedford in the first year of his regency.

This view seemed to be confirmed when the Calendar of the Norman Rolls from 1416 to 1422 was published. There the word Exchequer is of frequent occurrence, and, except when the Explish Fackequer is meant, it plainly reters to the financial authority set up by Henry at Caer. New if this irritation, a very different thing from either branch of the Extiguer normand, was officially termed Exchequer, one would naturally suppose that the Extiguer normand had ceased to exist. The truth is, however, that in the Calendar the word

* For Accin. 61. C. 49. He successed 61 ftd a day for his agresses at councillor. Cf.

For Aces: 61, B vs; Exch Acets: 182/7, f a6; Beiquigny 179, 180. He had a removing for of 1900/ 12 year. He was apparently made a controller during Henry's right to Normandy in January, 1411 (Exch. Acets: 188/7, E 26)

Exchequer, when applied to a Norman institution, is a ways a depiorable translation of common components or its French equivalent. In the Norman Role of 5 Herry V, there is indeed one passage where the word seaccariam is used with apparent reference to a financial institution. But the document belongs to a date very early in the English conquest, the word is never used again in a parallel context³, a few weeks previously it had figured in a most important commission with quite a different meaning4, and in all probability its use with reference to a fiscal organ was due to the nadvertence of an English clerk, fam list with the significance of icaccarium in England.

The financial authority at Caes, then, was officially called the camera compoterum of chamera are comples, not the scaccarium or Echiquer. But there still was something in Normandy called the seas arrain, though allusions to it are rare. On Nov. 1. 1417, John Tiptist was appointed president of the Norman scaccarram and other judic a tribunals in the duchy, and also treasurer-general in the same duchy and other places subject to Henry! Now here the caccarram is a judicial institution, and it appears that the functions of its president are specifically distinct from those of the treasurer-general. Hour months later, on Jieb, 27, 1418, the scaccariam appears in the documents granting Clarence jurisdiction and lands in four though of Lower Normandy; its functions are again regarded. as pudic a 4. It Somes, also as a judicial institution, in the grant of pravileges to Dienpe dated Ian 2, 2420, and the consequent mardate of the following July 247. And on July 14, 1421, 2

m. 13 d, 9 Hen. V, m. 4 d, Bréquigny, 253).

Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 220. Grant of the wardship of certain lands at an annual. sent of four levers sources to be paid "ad accountion nostrom Cademi." The date is Dec. 58, 5447.

³ This is the essent D.R.R. all, 483, 683, 683, 783, 783, 785, 719, 721, 748, 792, 2016. 2/9. 320, 323, 336, 355, 372, 382, 392, 393, 437, 439, 448. In Alington's account for $419.27, his rhequires' in England is expressly contrasted with he "chairbire feacomplex" in Normandy (Each. Acets. 117/14. Cf. also Ret. Norm. 8 Hen. V, p. 1, Scans good his de pribitité. Johanna Terroft pleum felucium optimités. enventairmin medinasorron er prefectioni annum punctionism motorism tant in it areaste firsten. Normaftene guam all si per terbumi abun inch nur sud eu, abun garbuncumque et Which arregion is fee districted to retricte proof, must receive themselve notes another generalism. mira e norm duratum er a u lezu rotten norme schiertus (Roc. Norm., Harty, 20(1) Professor Newhal has resolved h multimerous perpectite and continues (p. 488, m. 182, p. 169, m. 118) by his fallace to monce that Tiptoft was appointed transmegeneral as well as president of the scaccornum.

^{*} Of e.g. Rot. Noren (Hardy), 260, Rym. in 623. * See the following puragraph

* Rot. Norm. (Hardy), 259, 318.

* Rym. 22. $132 Beiquigny, 245.

writ was addressed to the chancellor and counsellors of the great council and caccamain in the duchy of Normandy and likewise the genies components and treasurers. In this case again there is an express distinction drawn between the scaccarrium and the financial authorities. Here, however, it is closely associated with the Council, indeed, it is implied that the personnel of the two is the same. Now the Council directed. the administration, and issued ordinances in the king's name. What functions were left for the scace price save unit tall ones? In this relation, furthermore, it is worth noting that on June 8, 1422, Jacques de Caiez was appointed king a counsel in finotre. court souveraire "at Robers", for the "sovere guty" of their E. Auguler, carneally asserted by the Normans in 1 11 c, had been conceded in their famous charters, and a manuscript of 1470. mentions "la court souveraine de l'Eschiquier de Norman die 4." Slight though the evidence is, it warrants. I think, the conclusion that the a accurring of the records just cited was the o'd F highier des raines from conflucted by Henry's council ors and presumably presided over by the chance for. Henry, of course, could not continue the practice of having its proceedings conducted by delegates of the Parlement of Paris, and, tor that matter, the subordiration of the Echiquier to the Parlement, though well established at the beginning of the fifteenth century, was contrary to the Norman charter of 1315. That the bus ness of the Economie was conducted by the king's Council might have been commended to the Normans as an approximation to the state of affairs under the dukes of the twelfth century, but there is no reason to suppose that Henry ever thought of it in that light. As for the Echiquier des comptes, its functions were exercised by the comera composerum and the Treasury⁸, here routtempt was made to preserve the institution. existing at the time of Fienry's invasion, but the Echiquier des complex was a comparatively new organ of administrations, and it cannot be supposed that its suspension caused any widespread. discontent. It is significant that the conciliatory Beaford, while he bestowed on the Echiquier are cause, an independence which

1 Viollet, op. cit. ii. 179.

^{1 *} Cancellario et Consiliariis nustri Magni Concilii et Scarcarii in Ducare Normon-

⁴ Viollet, op., est at $45, %, 2

^{*} Exch. Accu. (Bl. 7) For. Accu. 61, B vang

it had not envire force the thirteenth, entury, made no attempt to revive the Echiqueer des compuest.

What part Henry meant to alice to he hazates of the energy-error territory at a conformalise to any for certain. He surremented them on a once. I say it would have seen idle to gall followers are a governorm first best the follower of common was bold by coop-remioners of the king, not by delegates of the Parlement of Paris.

the species of the ego to the term to a real time to retain a mean of the second country against to an in the first are part on the principality of the flower life angles of the late. green to green the terror to the first terror to the terro of Name and Administration arming decided frame and Administration for the second of Manager Asserts acticle, "Les Finances Angianes en France à la Fin de la Guerre de Cent Ana" (Le Moyen Age, ser. II, 2221 265, 299.), adds nothing of consequence to Profesior Newhall's researches on Henry V's finances, and is marred by much state uracy. What happened entirot; I fear, he precisely incertained; but it may be useful to being together the soliest facts an record, even though most of them have already been mentioned. Perhaps such a summary will suggest to others conclusions which I have been unable to deduce

On Nov. 1, 1417, John Tiptoft was appearated president of the sencontrion and other indicial tribunals of Normandy and also treasurer-general of the ducky (Not. Norma-Hardy, any). On March 12, 1418, there is the first extant reference to the comme comprovide the Name of the state o months (Rymer, panim) On April 5 came the appointment of Philip Morgan as PROF. Who are for the forces of a month of the first of the company of the compan mention that I have found of the president of the chambre desembles (Rot. North 6 Hen. V, p. 1, m. 7 d-write to "presidents et gent-bus de camera noutra composocum"). Though in the next few months more than one document a addressed to the same official. he same is never gives (ibid. in 3 d, p 2, mm 18 d, 46 d). That he was John Tiptoft, who was still sometimes called "president of Normandy," is, however, shown by a second of the following May (Brit. Miss. Add. Ch. 22,4522 cf. Exch. Access 187/14). On the 3rd of that month Tiptoft, though "president of Normansiy," The State of the Conreceiver of Normandy on May a Briquigny, 864 Rot. Norman Hen. V, p. 2, may 7 d). I would reconside the second s wouble (Rot. Norm. y Hen V. p. 2, m yyd; of Mirot, loe erc.), but on June 22 handed at Name or time a grant was no particle represented to a serior of go Brasiliano de la ligra di Arrage de la propie de la companya anna designado de la companya provided to a dark to oversited between but high they we would be to person the offices of treasurer- and receiver-general for a long time, there was in .422 a granter area or grant to the set of histories to have been only a reduced target offered (Euch. Acen. 188, 7, ff 25 10, 27 10)

I got the first that a first school of age I per $5 mag $1 forms $400 age. The grature. England . The arms has make a make a facility has again a special of the same bill to character the owner. A is not a conserve the appeal on the time process but the contract of the state of the Home de la company and the company of the company o present filter in the good filter grate by the grate given young the single to body filter and the state to some for growing the property to be seen as the agent of the growing group. The burdens of the hande on this is to fine upon it be grown as it has described them together either before or after the occasion on which they actually met, and it is to be remarked that Henry did assemble them at the first opportunity after the treaty of Troyes. The business transacted on this occasion was, as we have seen, of the highest moment, and the Estates seem to have been courteously and considerately treated by Henry. It is to be noted that he did not attempt to levy direct taxes on his French subjects except with the consent of the Estates. The indirect taxation imposed by previous French kings he nevertheless considered himse f free to exact without any abow of consent on the part of the pavers, and since $419 he had been collecting the gazette, the quartages, and impericion formines. Probably he preferred to raise money and to shape policy with the countenance of his subjects, to whom, as long as they were amenable, he was ready to give opportunities of expressing their views on the needs of the region under his sovereignty. but it would be foolish to suppose that he would ever have suffered any abatement of his authority out of regard for socalled popular rights.

ales complete said of the teninemia-guinoral wave placed to impurate hundo-

Whatever may be thought of Henry's arrangements for the government of Normandy, he cannot be justly accused of wantonly disregarding the susceptibilities of the inhabitants. Not only were the lower administrative posts filed almost entirely by Frenchmen—mainly, no doubt, Normant—hut there were Frenchmen at the Treasury², in the chambre descomptes, and on the Council. There was no attempt to make Normandy an English colony. Many officers and men of at Harfleur, Honfeur, Caen, and Cherbourg a number of houses were granted to English settlers³, but the Erg ish element thus introduced was very small in relation to the total population. Nor did Herry it to establish a spiritual garrison of English clergy. Among the very numerous appointments to teclesiastical offices or benefices which are recorded in the Norman Rolls for 1421 and 1422, there are only twenty in

Henry's army received, ands forfeited by defaut Normans, and favour of men with what seem to be English names, and but three of these concern parish churches. It need hardly Brécuigny, Long. 116, 242. On these impositions, are pp. 74, 154 248.

Exch. Accts. 188 7, ff. 28 v⁶, 72.

D. K. R. R. Ett. passive.

Ibid. 410, 414, 422. One of the benefices in question, was the chaplainey of a garmon, which consisted of English roops. Ibid. 349). Two governors up of hospitals, the treasurers up of Rosen cathedral, the archdescenty of Le Neuboung, and eight cathedral or conegute presents were fixed by Logishmen (ibid. 190, 198, 414, 414, 415, 410, 417, 422).

be added that no attempt was made to alter existing law and custom^t.

After Henry's departure for England, the energies of the Norman government were largely devoted to maintaining order in the conquered territory and providing for its defence against organised attack. If it was to succeed in either task, however, the money voted by the Estates must be collected and the promised reform of the currency accomplished. Henry had decided that the first instalment of the taille, amounting to 100,000/ t, was to be paid by March 1. The treasurergeneral informed each troower of the sum expected from his sphere of jurisdiction. He in his turn, consulting the king's procureur, the sergents of the excense, and perhaps a few others, apportioned the required sun an ong the sergements and then among the parishes. The burden was distributed among ndividuals by assessors, generally, if not always, men of the parish concerned, who were appointed by the promise or his representative. Their ast was given to two collectors, also men of the parish, who were responsible to the vicemie. The basis of the levy was a tax of 2011 r. on every hearth. "Hearth" meant in practice a head of a family, but it is evident that there was much guess work in the apportionment of the total among the vicimies, sergenteries, and parishes, or else that a conventional scheme was followed, for it was only after the contribution of a parish had been fixed that it was ascertained how many of its inhabitants were liable to be taxed. Ther, if 10%, were to be found, ten "hearths" were assessed at various sums, averaging 1/. 1., to make up the total?. Other heads of families were classed as poor or mendicarts* and escaped contributton. It is plain that the incidence of taxation must have varied greatly from place to place. Further, it is evident that many Normans contributed to one or two instalments of the seide and not to the rest. Thus, since the second levy of 60,000/14, like the first of 100,000, was assessed

C Beurferung, Etalis 220 in ant ige 4 Bibl rat , MS frang 15,907, papiers, adjudgettion good day buth Accor 182 ref. 1. whosey. The assessors and losectors were sometimes elected by the paraskiceners with whom they were to be concerned at the rate of 1/t. a hearth, 40,000 families who had paid the first escaped the second. And a very large number were never required to pay anything at all. For instance, in the parishes of Boundes and Mousseaux twenty-eight were exempt from paying the second instalment, while three contributed, so that even when Henry demanded 120,000/t. all at once, those who escaped outnumbered those who paid by twenty five to six. This was no doubt an exceptional case, but other examples indicate that the number of exempt was very high?

3 C. Braurepaire, Etati, 179, 181, Bibl. 241, MS. frang. 25.907, no. 1268 et painin.

Buéquigny, illi iq.

¹ This is well illustrated by a perition of the executors of William Bouechier, count of Eu, in which it is assumed that the government will follow Norman custom as to the hentability of wardships if only it can alcertain what the custom is (Bibl. nat., M$. franc 26,044, 20. 5611).

Considering the haste with which the collection was made, the government were probably lucky to get 85,000% to of the first instalment by Aug. 20%. They were, however, disappointed when the first levy of the clerical tenths, which was made in May, yielded on y 12,000% to, and next month the bishops and vicars-general called in the aid of the secular arm, ecclesiastical censures having failed of their effect. At the same time a second levy of the lay grant, designed to produce 60,000% to, was made; before Aug. 20 it brought in $5,000% to $50,000% to be noticed, however that in April the value of the coin called the grant had been officially reduced from 20% to $50.6%, so that the sums raised in May were really very much greater than those collected as the first instalment. Nevertheless, the inhabitants were still under the obligation of finding nearly 250,000% to In August, Henry, recognising that to ruse this

* Ibid no. 1160

Brequigity, if i sq. Americal the first instalment continued to be collected during the following winter (Bibl. ant., MS. franç. nr, 907, not. 1206, 1206, 1263 et al.).

Exch. Accus 125/y, f 17 va; Brequigny, 181, 153; Bibl. nat., MS. franç. 153907;

⁵ Bibl. 132., MS. frung. 25,407, nos. 1014, 12 10, et al.

Thus, even when the heavy first instalment was being collected, the paints of Epégard has nine enterprévaus against sen which poor, while in the case of the adjacent parish of Marbeilt the figures were ten and eightees. "A fleasing ang. Etits, 174 aqq.). Profittion Piewhall up cut 100 section to have underestimated the number of even pt, and to have overheabled the fact that while in January, and literary demanded no stood. I in August he decisioned 12 soon. I do not the hotal the exact the number petrang to the fact are of thus happened to an attempt to estimate the total population of Normandy at this time.

^{*} Refquigity, 1813 Ench. Accin. 188/7, f. 27 ; Bibl. nat., MS. franc., 26,044, no. 5534. In Briquigny, 183, March is named so the month in which the first instalment of the clorical tenths was levied; but the other authorities cited show this to be a slip for May.

^{*} Belquigny, through Bibl. nat., MS frame, a groot, no. 1024 et pamint, Rym. n. 201. Professor Newhall is mistaken (p. 275, n. 250) in supposing that the 12,000/...t. from the cargy was included an the 55,000/ t. Had this been so, 260,000/ t would at:// have been payable.

at one stroke would be excessively harsh, announced that the lasty should discharge their dues in two further instalments. The first of these, which was to produce 120,000/1, was to be raised at once. How much it yielded cannot be precisely computed, but a comparison of the various records relating to the subject suggests that about 70,000%, came in . Included in the final instaiment was to be the second half of the clerical tenths and the arrears of the first, which were considerable, the secular officials having been slack in coercing the dilatory*. But before any of this was collected, the government reduced the value of the gree from (d t to 21d. t.4, and thus made still more formidable the task of paving what remained due. On Dec. 14 the bishops were ordered to raise the second instalment. of the ciercal tenths, and the attempt began in January, 14225 It encountered great opposition, and even when the civil power once more intervened in support of the ecclesiastical authorsties, the results were decisory. By May I less than 1000) I had been collected, and though in the following four months over (000) to were paid in, the total was of course far less than had been looked for?. It is also worth noting that of this (2004), 1, 1400/ L came from the diocese of Rouga alone, and that in the same period nothing whatever was received from the dioceses of Evreux, Sees, Bayeux, and Avranches*. Still more disheartening was an attempt made in April, 1422, to collect in the diocese of Bayeux arrears of the tenth which the Norman clergy had voted to Charles 31 shortly after the English landed at Touques , for there is no record in Alington's accounts of any receipts from this source. It is evident that the favour with which Henry had at first been regarded by the clergy wore thin as soon as material sacrifices were demanded of them.

I Bedgungny, alla Bibl. nat , MS. franç. 26,044, nos. 56 cl. da.

Brequigny, 1814 Rot Norm 9 Hen. Y, m 9 d. 1 Brequigny, the. D. K.R. 1811, 414, Exch. Acets. 84/71 L 17 vs. Rot. Norm 9 Hen. V m 9 d

For Acets 61, B v*; Exch. Acets 1817), if 17 v*, 18, Bréquigny, 182.
Exch. Acets 183, 7, ff. 17 v*, 18. In the diocetes of Evient, See, and Avranchia. he one was willing to collect the money (Chron. Rouennaise, 143, 71-1).

P Rym. E. nor

From May 1, 1421, to Aug 31, 1422, Alington received 16 Local 1. from the saile on the latty (Exch. Accts. 6, B 19). Of this, we are teld, 55,000/. 1. was ressed as the second systalment (Brequigny 112). From May 2 to Aug 32, 1422, the tottle brought in 50,000/. (Exch. Accts. 128/7, f. 19). Some of this doubters represented arrears of the hard instalment, the field of which would shus appear to be appear making 1 VOCOT

The indifferent success of the attempt to collect the third instalment of the lay grant apparently convinced Henry that what remained due had best be ruised in two further stages. Thus, an instalment, designed to yield 60,000/. t., was demanded in May, 1421; and from the beginning of that month to the end of August Alington received 50,800% to from the collectors, part of this amount no doubt representing arrears of instalments levied on easier terms. That the collection of this sum was attended by serious difficulties is shown by the fact that in July, 1422, the Council at Rouen granted a respite until Christmas to the inhabitants of the courty of Ivry, who had protested their inability to pay owing to dauphinist raids². Yet another instalment was raised after Henry's death, but how much it produced is not known⁴. So far as can be ascertained, Henry obtained about 170,000/. It out of the promised 400,000 the In the circumstances, the result does credit to the seal and efficiency of the offic als concerned with the collection of the money.

The problem of the currency, to judge by Herry's proclamations, was approached with great confidence by the government. The coinage in circulation, mostly from French mints, was extremely bad, and prices were exorb tant. Henry promised to issue good money, and, as we have seen, the Estates consented to a levy of silver, which was to be made before Feb. 15°. For some time, at all events, the baillis took little notice of the ordinance enjoining the payment of the impost, and there seems to be no means of judging how far it was obeyed. Before new coinage could be issued, it was of course necessary to regulate the value of the money actually in circulation. In April, therefore, the common silver coin called the grost or royal, the exchange value of which had of late been is 8d in was officially proclaimed to be worth only 5d i. The gold nobie was to be equivalent to 40s. i., the gold crown to 30s. i., ^{*} D.K.R. zlii. 449; Exch. Accu. 180/7, f. 10 vo. It was due at Michaelman, 1412 (Bibl. rate, MS. franç 27,907 no 1308). Assesss were nill coming in during February, 1413 (ibid. no. 1331).

Exch. Acets. 11/7 ff 10 v4, 17

^{*} Bibl. nat., 5tS. franc. x6,044, no. 5740.

Newhall, 176

Bréquigny, 181 sq., For. Accu. 61, B v*; Exch. Accu. 181/7, ff. 17, 18.

Chron. Rosennase, 141.

Bréquigny, 161.

Chescun piece de menove presentement appelle et ayant cours pour gros ou ryal seus peur a es baille pour un peut blanc val dant v denient cumoys soulement. Bréquigny, 251. Cl. Exch. Acon. 181/7 f. t.

and the coin popularly styled means d'ar to 2011. All commod ties were to be priced in terms of the petis blanch, a cost worth 3d e, to which the gree in circulation was now deemed.

equivalent,

On May 6, 1421, the keepers of the mints of Rouen and St Lo were ordered to set to work on the new coinage. This was to consist of a gold coin worth 121, 6d. t., and a silver gree and dense gros, the former worth is 8d. t. The quality of the coins was to be good2. The production of the new money, however, was delayed by many hindrances. The hereditary guild of corners in Normandy was not able to furnish erough workmen, and it was decided in July that new corners should be appointed. with only a life interest in the craft? More serious still were the doings of the dauphinist mints, which were producing vist quantities of base coins, similar in appearance to the gree being made in Normandy, with a face value of it ld 1, though intrinsically they were worth far less4. It soon became certain that they would drive the new money our of the country. Meanwhile, despite the government's regulations, the gold noble was being accepted as equivalent to 20%, and the gold crown as worth 10% t. The continued budness of the money circulating together with the attempts of the authorities to a ter its eachange value, gave rise to much confusion and caused catastrophic fluctuations in the wealth of individuals. On Nov. 30 therefore the government admitted the failure of its plans and had recourse to new measures. The current grot were now to be valued at only 21d t. The good crowns last struck in France were to circulate at 22) 6d t, the mentous at 1 gr. t., English gold robles at 4 (1.16. A compa ison of these regulations with those of the previous April enables one to form in ides of the confusion that must have respaced in the tende of Normandy Simultaneously it was armounced that, instead of ^{4. &}quot;Trotte denreu, « la lier, et autres morchandess sours: ramanes audat pris du petit blanc qui se vendoit un gros dessadat," Bréquigny, 253.

Sixty-four gold come were to be given for the mark of gold and the alver come were to be "rar is per de monnoye xxxxxx" (Bréquigny, 17524). It is not known whether any of the gold come were ever made. The gras ordered is known to human at all arthr grasma.  It was never circulated and a very care. I Bashaine, "La Monnaie de St Lô," Revue Nummenatique, 1925, pp. 7x sq., Dieudonné, Bibl. de l'Éc des Chartes, bxxii. 498). For pictures of it, see Hoffmann, Pl. XXIX, 51 Hewiett, Fl XII, 7. The latter wrongly attribus the order for its more to 1410. No examples of the sleav gran have been found.

Fréquigny, 244.
Chron. Rosenname, 343.

⁴ lbid. 119. 4 Bréquigny, 132 sq

the money that had been promised, there would be issued gold salutt, worth 25t. i., and half-salutt, and coins called doubles tourness, made of a silver-coated piloy and worth 2d 1, together with demi-doubles or petiti devieri. The small coms were put into circularion early in 1422, but, though their current value was made to correspond with their intrinsic value, were not regarded with much favour. The reduction in the value of the growth lowed by the demand of the government that all taxes should be read in "forte monnaye"—that is to say, according to the value o情oully attributed to the various coins—caused great indigration³.

It cannot be claimed that Henry's attempt to reform the Norman currency met with much success. Parallel efforts at Paris, as we shall see, were no more fruitful. Indeed, until the authorities at Rouen and Paris were able to com sufficient good. money for the needs of the areas under their jurisdiction, to make it the sole legal tender, and to exclude counterfest money, the best-taid schemes of monetary reform, however terr fung the sanctions whereby they were supported foould not but its I Mear while, the abortive attempts greatly irritated public opinion. It must be recognised, however, that Henry's measures were a step in the right direction, and he deserves praise for having checked the reckless debasement of the comage to which France had long resorted when in financial trouble.

Netwishstanding difficulties in collecting the taille and improving the currency, the finances of Normandy, as revealed by the treasurer-general's account for the last sixteen months of the reigns, were less unsatisfactory than might have been expected. Despite restorations and gifts of landed property, the income from the royal domain and from regalian rights over churches and abbeys remained large, amounting to ² Bedquegay, 219, Dieudonné, laziii 263, Bailtache, ep. cit. 73 sq. There are pictures of the same 20 race leve comp. deable, and pert denser in Hoffmana, Pl XXIX, 4, 21, 22, and in Hewlett, Pl. XII, 4, 10, 21, where the usue is mindated.

Norm, Chion., Levery, 64. Chron. Rosennaue, 343. The number value of one of the new ream was more than live times as great as that of a cost of the same dezo matation belonging to the old currency (Rym. ax. 92c; Ranbacke, op. cst. 69, 7; eq.)

Those who contravened the ordinances on currency or did anything calculated to frontrate them were liable to very severe penalties (Sofquigny, 189, 253).

* For Actis 6., B v*sqq. We have also a dealt account of Alington's incomplete but entering into greater detail for the test four morths of the reign. It is rawly use to use this as the basis of exact calculations, but it affords stuck information of very high value (Exch. Accis. : $1/7). Alongton's account for 1410-21 somehow got to the chambre des comples in Pare, where it still exuted in the eighteenth century (Miret, Dom Revy, 357) It was probably burned at the Revolution 19,95 (1/1) and the revenue under this head for the twelve months. beginning May 1, 1421, was greater by 3000/ 1, than that for the corresponding period of 1419-14201. From May 1421, to August, 1422, the salt garners yielded 64,045/ / The quartages and the emposicious foreines produced 47.556/ i. The taile brought in 168,0027 F, the ecclesiastical tenths 18,0077 F. Altogether in these sixteen months Alington accounted for 188,3427 % under the next of receipts2. Nor must it be forgotten that many towns received. Hears's permission to levy "aides" on their inhabitants. These were generally taxes on sales, especially of beverages; and from the proceeds the towns to k were as a rule. required to keep the fortifications of the place in repair4, often to defray the cost of municipal governments, and sometimes to gay the wages of the captain of the garrison. Frequently these imposts were farmed at auction, but sometimes, at any rate, account had to be rendered to a royal official? It is not possible to compute the amount raised by such local taxes, but it is evident. that a considerable part of the sum they produced was devoted. to purposes which would otherwise have made demands on the Norman treasury.

WAL

During the period May, 1421, to August, 1412, the total expenditure of Alington was returned as 196,915/ 18 There was thus an adverse halance of nearly flood r. This, however, was rather apparent than real. In the total expenditure were included 24,000/7 lost to the treasury owing to the depreciation of the current coinages, while $2,000% it were spert on the purchase of oxen and sheep for Henry's household.", and 724 a on the safe-keeping of prisoners from Meaux¹⁴. Further, sums amounting to 19,400% to were paid direct from Norman sources to Wilsam Philip, Henry's treasurer of war after Oct 1, 1421, without coming within Alington's cognisance.

 For. Acets. 64, B of , Exch. Acets. 387/14, 283/7, f. g.
 For. Acets. 63, B of The total to that given by Alangton, but the account has been carrierally extend on the real and the uneral stress of added together yield a different

⁽From a cr. Falance, but the D.K.R. and agri. Dieppe, Galliefontaine, Monticellant, Carrotan From a crim a Refought, 194 acr., Naukhhild, Vin Rym. a. 4 aq. . Cinoru (Porquighty 197 aq.), Arpentan that 16. 194, Leiston hill 194 aq.), Carrothild, 294, Rouen (ibid. 197 aq.), Bayesiz (ibid. 194), Mannes (D.K.R. alii, 438), Loseuz (Newhall, 172, B. 134).

^{*} Severa Rom t. t. 14 . cc. Befquigne, 194 14 . 100 14 D K.R. 1 is 498. 447. For Aces, 61, D

See e.g. Brequigny, 195, 198. That Blett, Cv4. 38 [bed. 69, F. 11 Ibid.

It is thus evident that Normandy easily supported itself. This, it is true, was due to the taille, but even without the taille, the revenue had increased since 14191.

On the other hand, the accounts of Alington and Philip lend no colour to the belief that in Henry's last years the barden of paying for his military operations was mainly burne by Normandy2. Alington's accounts are concerned with all the important sources of Norman revenue, and Pacip could not have drawn directly on any of these without throwing the financial administration of the conquered territory into hopeless confusion. Of the money which Alington expended, all save 12,000/c/, was devoted to the administration and defence of Normandy. As for Philip, he acknowledges the receipt from the issues of the great scal of Normandy, from the Rouen indemnity4, and from profits of the Rouen mint, of the t 9,900s, it already noticed, and he also states that part of a sumof a 5200 sterling came from Norman officials. There is no reason to suppose that the Norman contribution to the latter was large. The remainder of Philip's receipts were drawn almost entirely from the English Exchequers, and what little was not derived thence came in all probability from the revenues of the brench crown? All things considered, it is unlikely that the contribution of Normandy and "the Conquest" to the cost of Henry's cam sugns and sieges after his return to France in June, 1421, came to more than 70,000/. L. or between £10,000 and £11,000. And on the other side of the account is to be set a contribution, probably amounting to more than £1000, made by Ph hp to the cost of building Henry's new palace at Rouen, and repairing and equipping the castle there

^{*} From May 2, 1421, to April 30, 1422, Afington's receipts, exclusive of the taille and closeral moths, carm to 191 5131 f. For the corresponding period of 1419-20, they totalled 160,4371 f. (For Acets 62, B =; Excl. Acets 157/14, 153/7, ff 1209) totalled 160,437/-1 (For Acets 62, B ve; Erch. Acets 187/14, 183/7, ff 1899)

1 "From 1418 on, the real burden of the war was being gradually shifted to Normandy!" Newhall, 251; cf. ibid. 143. For a somewhat similar view, see Mowat, 160.

2 It is true that the 59,000/1 received by the earl of Salabury and the 23,000/1 received by Rulph Buller, For Acets 61, B ve, C) were probably speat in part on mantary operations outside Normandy but here were targety detentive in purpose part besow, pp. 1113q , 154 mg.)

* For. Acets. 69, F

See below, pp. 190 aq.
 Dre would naturally have assumed that Henry used these for his own purposes, even if he duke of Burguady had not afterwards made it a greenance (La Barre, 1, 341, 4 For. Accts. 69, 1.

No doubt it was disappointing to Henry that Normandy was unable to give him more help. And, for that matter, when Alington's accounts are analysed closely, they suggest that there was much amiss in Henry's conquered territories. In the first place, it was of vious vidificult to raise revenue in the frontier baidings. Of the 74, 2007 t derived from the "domair "in stateen months, over 40,000 came from the buildinges. ct Rouen and Caen. These two turnished 49,000/ it of the fu one tielded by the salt-garners, and $1,000 of the 47,000. produced by the quartages and impossions forwards. Their share of the tailly was not so notable, yet they contributed 71,000% to of the 156,000 raised from the eight bailinger. Under these four heads, the total yielded by Rouen was 10 0,000% In by Caen. 90 000. In striking contrast are G sors, which produced in all 13.000/. 1, Evreux, which yielded 8300/. 1., Alenjon, wheree came 12,600/ s, of which 28,700 were accounted for by the table, and Manres, which contributed cicol, i. Caux and the Corentin, two critiparatively we l-protected bandrages produced.

respectively 40,400/, 1, and 46,800/, 1,1

Rouer and Caen mucht be expected to yield more revenue than any of the other suillinger, but their natural advantages. cannot explain so great a distanty between them and their neighbours. And the impression left by the figures just cited is confirmed when one turns to the details of expenditure. By for the greater part of the mency raised in Normandy was, as we have seen, spent there. That so arrie could be spared for Henry's needs e sewhere was due to the military establishment in the conquered territory, which cost upwards of 291,000/ /. during the last sixteen months of the reign. That the earl of Salisbury should have required (9,000/ / is not surprising, nor was 15,500/ t an excessive wages bill for the earl of Suffolk, in command on the exposed Breton frontiers, at It less was 13,2007 a for Rulph Burler, who, as will be seen, was entrusted with ardious duties on the borders of Vimeus. But it is somewhat astonishing to find that the garrison of Reuen cost 15,800/ / from May, 1421, to Henry's death, and that an 1432 it numbered 240 men, that the garrisons of Cherbourg and Regney lle required jointly $1,702/1; that Caes, the

For Acres 61, C vo. D.

* Ibid Bys

For. Acuts, 61, B v⁰. The pre-emmence of Rosen and Carn was not so muritud in 1419-30 (Ench. Accts. 187/1) defence of which cost 10,500/. t., needed in the summer of 1421 a garrison of 121 men, and that at the same time Harfleur was held by 1601. It is evident that the force which was maintained in Normandy at the beginning of 1421 cannot have been much reduced before the end of the reign and that the English telt proceure even in districts remote from the frontier.

The difficulties of the authorines in the conquered territory arose not merely from attacks by external enemies—which indeed were frequent and formidable but also from internal disorder. How ubiquitous and continual this was appears from testimony of very various cines. When Henry was at Rouen. in January, 1421, it was unsufe for an official of the duke of Exercit to journey thence to Thury Harcourt*. This same personage, the stramte and received of La Carneille in Exerter's county of Harcourt, found it next to impossible to collect his lord's dues during the following years. Into many parts of his sphere of jurisduction he dated not go. The whole area was terrorised by "brigands"; agriculture was gravely hindered, minor official posts could not be filled, and when rems were collected, it was only with the support of English soldiers from the garrison of halaise. The region in eucstion is hilly and offered many advantages to fugitive rebe s, but it was some way from the frontier, was never reached by dauphinist raiding parties, and had within it Falaise, one of the most notable strongholds of Normandy. The acts of the Rouen government, furthermore, betray the extent of open disaffection. Immediately after Henry's departure for England the export of grain from Normandy was forbicden because Normans had been selling it to Complègne, Dreux, Meaux, and other dauphinist garzisons4. On June 4, 1421, all holding land of the crown were ordered to appear before the chancellor or the treasurer-general by midsummer! Some three weeks later, enquiry was to be made concerning Normans who had broken their oath of allegiance to Herry and joined the enemy or turned brigands. In August it was decreed that all the goods of rebels in the conquered lands arould be sold for the advantage

¹ For Accu. 51, C₁ Each. Accu. 50, 3, 6, 9.

Chatel Laventine des Aucheres odpartmentales. Calvados. E. 1, p. 169.

Ibid. pp. 167 sq
 Bibl. nac., MS franç 16,044, no. 5595

D.K.R. nli 429. · Beeguigny, 176.

of the king?. Apparently the dauphinist successes of the early summer had emboldened many Normans to reveal their true feelings towards Henry. Sometimes they left their wives in charge of their estates, and on Dec. 2 the government proclaimed that all women whose husbands refused the oath must join them within eight days, and that their possessions were to be seized2. This was followed by an ordinance, dated Dec. 8, that all anhabitants of the conquered lands should swear allegiance by Feb. 1, 1412, on pain of being declared incapable of holding property with in the area concerned, a measure which indicates that the number of repels had of late increased and that the authorities were loth to proceed to extremities?. In February an inquisition was ordered into the property of absentees4. But the measures taken seem not to have nad much effect. On Jan 1, 1421, the keeper of the seals of recognisances in the vicinité of Auge was given permission to reside at Lisieux because of the prevalence of brigandages. Between May 1, 1421, and the end of the reign, rewards were paid for 386 br gands captured and convicted, n nety-nine being paid during the last four months of Henry's life?.

The country lying immediately to the south-west of Rouen seems to have been more infested than other regions, and in the summer of 1422 some of the inhabitants of the crowns of Pont-Audemer, Auge, and Order petitioned that a special police force. might be maintained there at the expense of the portulation. In July, therefore, the Rouen authorities allotted to the area in question forces totalling forty mounted and seventy unmounted men, whose duty would be the hunting of brigands. Each treamee concerned was to consult the nobles and other important men in his sphere of jurisdiction; if they were favourable, the inhabitants were to be assessed to provide the wages of both officers and men't otherwise, it seems, the vicome would have to forgo their services. Evidently those who defied the English authorities were not always popular with their fellow-

Befguigner, 210. * DKR 338 411 * Rym. 2 1 ch. 4 D K R Roll 417

^{* [}bid 4,4 For Acets 41, Cv4. D. The person responsible for the capture of a brigand subarquently executed recrived for #

² Each Acces, $15/7, ff. jo sq. The victims came from al. parts of the ducky. Only 1 35 "brigands" had been executed in 1429-40 (that 187/14). The increase, however, may have been due to greater efficiency on the part of officials rather than greater lawlessame.

^{*} Ribl. nat , Portofenilles de Fontames, en 1-res, ff. a fo 1949.

countrymen, and indeed Normans often helped to capture disturbers of the peaces.

The difficulty of collecting the elerical tenths, noticed above, revealed a temper among the clergy which comes to light in various author ties. At the beginning of 1421, only the bishops of Sées, Coutances, and Ayranches had accepted Henry⁴. None of the obdurate hishops ever gave way, but Martin V had just provided Nicolas Habart to Bayeux, and he took the earh of fealty, receiving a most all his temporalities after some delay. The shortage of hishops made it difficult to remedy the shortage of lower ciergs. In March, 1421, the government renewed its attempt to constrain to residence those ecclesiastics who remained in dauphinist territory and refused the oath to the treaty of Troves⁸, and in the summer the bishop of Bayeax was rebuked for his remissions in dealing with such. On May 1, 1422, the government asserted that many Norman clergy, pretending that they had sworn to the treaty, passed freely to and from dauphinist regions, their revenues, when they were absent, being kept for them by sympathisers, and it was laid down that all benefice-holders were to farmsh the ecclesiastical authorities with written evidence of their having taken the oath, while none were to leave their dioceses without letters testimonial of their bishops or to visit dauphinis, regions without the special licence of the king? In the following August, however, it was officially admitted that many of the clergy in the diocese of Bayeux had not yet sworn loyalty to Henry or to the treaty".

The extent of the disaffection and disorder must not be exaggerated. After, as before, January, 1441, the rolls contain hundreds of names of Normans who have sworn the required oath and received back their possessions. There are still, too, numerous records of the submission of religious houses, with life (Euher, 1, 244) Rym. E. 243, 147).

2 Rym. x. 54.04

Will, nat., Mf. franç. af,644, no. 1702; Euch. Acets. 1837; ff. 10 sq.

^{*} Ibid. 647, 150 66, 153, 173, Game, 507. Eubel, 1-127. Paul de Capranies, whom in 1427. Marin V had provident to Exercis, never appeared in Normandy during Henry's.

* Denifie, 3 not 1030, 2031. It should be remembered that histops in all parts of France used the troubles of the time as a pietest for absenting themselves from their nees (that it, 569).

F Ryrn, x. $4 sq.3 of Brown, Fase. Rev. Expetend. 11, vii: 5q

Ryrn, x. 247.

F Ibid, 235 sq.

D K R. alu, passim. The dating of the lists is not sufficiently precise to admit of consequent restoration of their property and confirmation of their charters; and scores of Norman clergy were willing to comply with the conditions attached to preferment by Henry! Nor does it appear that the English authorities provoked insubordination by tyrannous conduct. On the contrary, they did what they could to prevent the excesses which are perhaps inevitable when a large body of soldiery is quartered in a toreign land. A few days after Henry left Rouen, a proclamstion was assed admitt no that some of the English had been guilty of extort on and for rideing the acceptance of gratuities. by the porters of towns or castles, the levy of horses or merchandise save with the consent of the owner, or the aib trary exaction of passage money by the captains of fortified posts?. Inese arricles were afterwards repeated and supplemented^a, and there can be no doubt that the authorities at Rouen were seriously concerned, if only for reasons of policy, to keep the troops well in hand. Nor do contemporary writers complain of the behaviour of the English soldiers or officials. They disliked the heavy taxation, grumbled at the attempted reforms of the currency, and lamented the scarcity of victuals in 1421; but it is admitted that next year, despite a terrible drought, conditions were better4. Nevertheless, it cannot be pretended that the Europsh brought order and prosperity to the regions they had conquered. In the autumn of 1421, the abbot of Becasserted that the neighbourhood had been largely depopulated and agriculture suspended, though it must be recognised that it was to his interest to exaggerate. It was officially stated in 1422 that welves had greatly increased in Normandy since its conquest by Henry -striking testimony to the dislocation that had befallen rural life. Yet it would be rash to suppose that conditions in Normandy were more anarchical than elsewhere in France. Disorder was endemic in all mediaeval countries: and civil strife intensified it as quickly and surely as foreign invasion. There is at all everts no evidence that the prevalence of "brigandage" was caused by outraged nationalism.

an exact computation of the multibury concerned, but there were considerable more than a mousand. Most of them were of humble ranks. A number of esquires appear, but few of higher status, Rym. x., panier, DKR zii , panier

Rym n grug.

Rym Rosenzaine, 344 193 4 Norm Chron (Hellot), 63

Rym R. 224

CHAPTER LXVIII

HENRY 5 LAST VISIT TO ENGLAND

In the previous autumn it had apparently been expected in England that the king would return before Christman, a hope that was not altogether abandened when parliament met on Dec. 24, 1420. In his opening speech the charcellor recognised the general desire for Henry's presence; and when they became convinced that he would not arrive in time to meet them, the commons peritioned Giculester to urge him and Catherine to come as soon as they could? The temporal lords present were identical with those who had attended the parliament of 14.9%; there were returns for thirty-seven counties and eighty-three boroughs, and in the absence of writs de expensis, we are not tempted to speculate as to the number of members who were actually present. The Speaker was Roger Hint, escuire, one of the members for Bedforeshire. There seems to have been a feeling that in the circumstances it was vain to attempt much business, and the parhament must have been one of the dulest on record. There was no request for money. The charcellor said that the English people had special cause to thank God because of the favour which He had shown to their king, who desiring above everything the prosperity of the realm and convidering the distress and poverty into which his subjects had of late fallen, main y through the scarcity of money in the land, wished the commons, with the advice of the other estates, to apply their minds to the provision of remedies. It cannot be clumed that these deliberations were very truitful. Several of the common petitions aimed at securing a supply of the precious metals for the min's, two of them were empodied in the short statute of the year7, but cannot have produced much effect

¹ Fadiament was summoned on Oct. 24 (Rept. Dign. Fuer, iv. 145); the first common persons (Rot. Far. iv. 24) contemporates the possibility of the bing's arrival during the sensor.

¹ Ibid. rag (nu. ti). 2 Rept. Dign. Poor, iv. 243, 246

^{*} Return Park is approp.

* Rote Park iv 127; Return Park is upp. He had been returned for Humo. in November, 2417, and in 1419 (that. 289, 294)

CRO: Parl v 123. Co. 181, 187, 182, 183, Segringe, 10 203.

Among the other petitions was one which asked for the revival of a treats whereby the counts of Flanders were supposed of have forb dden their subjects to import any save English wool. another which, adeging that the king and his proper itom had been ords of the sea and pointing out that he now ruled both coasts of the Channel, proposed that all foreigners using it should be required to contribute towards its detence², and a third which asked for further protection for English ships in northern waters in view of the deprecations of the Scots, who had been taking troops to France and wool to Flanders in captured English sessels2. All these were answered evasively, that is to say, refused. More interesting and creditable are three pet tions in which the commons show concern, est the king's new status in France should prove derogatory to the interests of England. It was ordained in response to one that neither this parliament nor any summoned in future by a regent should be dissolved by the arrival of the lung in England. during its proceedings. The commons further begged for the re-enactment of the statute of 1740 which declared that the realm of England should never be in subjection to the crown of France, the reply being that the statute should be mainra ned*. Some of the ords had asserted that the pentions presented by the commons to Gloucester were to be sent oversess to be dealt with by the king, and the regent was asked to ordain that allsuch petitions should be disposed of within the return during par sament, any left unanswered at the dissolution to be treated as word, a rule which was to hold good in all future parauments. This suggestion was pointely refused, but it was a sound instinct. that prompted the commons to make it.

It was perhaps on Jan. 19 that Henry left Rouen on his journey to hingland?. The staff of his chaper had left ten days. before and were a ready across the Channell, and the equipment of the king's chamber was sent by sea to Southamptor . It is therefore not likely that Henry's choice of route was due

Rot Parl IV. 125 (no. V).

^{*} Ibid 116 (no. VI).

⁴ Ibed. 124; Statutes, il. 203. 3 lbi4. 127 (no. 27)

Fig. 127 (no. 219). The statute in question is recorrectly exted at the printed Rode of Parliament, at in Statute int. of 14 Edw III (Stansies, 1. 291). Ibid cat (80. XVI).

The number of important appointments dated Rough, Jan 18, suggests, though it does not prove, that Henry was still there on that day (Rym. z. 49 sq ; D. K.R. zlit. 197, 191), and he can hardly have reached Amiens in less than two days.

* Proc. Prov. Co. ii. 326.

* In. Roll & Hen. V. Mich., 17 Feb. 1411.

to the insecurity of the Channel; probably he wished to see for himself the state of affairs at Calais and to gauge the feeling of the populace in the region between that town and Normandy. Accompanied by Catherine, the king of Scots, the duke of Bedford, the Earl Marshal, the earls of March and Warwick, and a substantial force of highling men, he passed rapidly through Caux, and on Jan. 21 arrived at Amiers. Here he met with an honourable welcome, rich gifts being offered to Catherine and himself, and was lodged in the house of the newly-appointed buille Robert le Jeune, a strong part san of the Erg ish, in whom Henry was believed to have much confidence. Thence he made his way through Doullens, St Pol, and Thérouanne, being politely received everywhere? When he approached Calais, the merchants of the Staple and the clergy came forth at the head of the townstolk in festal array, bearing precious g fix for the queen? After some days Herry set sail with a favouring wind and on Feb. 1 landed at Dover, where he was well-omed turnu tuously by vast crowds from the adjacent country and by many nobles from remoter parts. Some of the barons of the Canque Ports, indeed, were so carried away by enthus, as me that they rushed into the sea and bore Henry and Catherine to land on their shoulders. The rovaparty at once we it forward to Canterbury, to be received there too by exultant crowds with rich presents. Devotional exercises and sight-seeing coubtless occupied the next few days, and then Henry, who regarded time as a precious g ft of God (as one of his biographers apologetically explains,", went on to London without Catherine. He was probably at Westmirster. by Feb. 88. He was welcomed, we are fold, with great ceren only Wale, ii. 336; Brut, ii. 423; Northern Chron (Kingsford, Lit.); 289.

Mornez iv 244 Fenin, 151, 190 sq 4 Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 644 Vata, 295; Walnut. 336, Darae va 1 5. Le Jeune had taken the oath as built on Dec 30, 2420 (Fauquembergue, î. 39t).

rgue, î. 391).

Monser ev 24, Penin, 1513 Vita, 295.

Monser ev 24, Penin, 1513 Vita, 295.

Ench. Acets 106,25, Cal. Pat. 1416-13, p. 318, Will. il. 316, Vita, 195 aq.;

Vita, 196. Monter 14, 14; Brut, il. 423.

^{*} Vitta 1.96 feveral London chroniclers, whose information on the point doubtless corner ultimately from a common source, give Feb. 14 as the date of Henry 3 arrival in Landon. (Bru, a 492; Kingsford, Chron 127, Gregory, 131, Chron Lond, 108; Fabyan, 185; but under Feb 8 the lasse Rola records a payment made to a recluse at Westminuter by command of the surg are tenus, and also the payment of the experies. of a messenger sent with a letter ale signers from London to Plymouth. Thu, indeed, in not decrive evidence that the king had reached Westminister by the date in question, but it points strongly to that conclusion.

and joy!, but the official festivities were deferred for the arrival of the queen.

On Friday, Feb. 21, Catherine, who had reached Eltham and beer, met there by Henry", set out thence for London The mayor and aldermen awaited them on Blackheath, attended by a wast number of London craftsmen clad in white with red boods or cars, each gild having its distinguishing badge, while clarions and 'all maner of lowde mynstreisie attested their lovalty. The concourse escorted Catherine to the city, which had exerted to the full its ingenuity in her honour. The splendour and pageantry, indeed, seem to have been scarcely inferior to the display which celebrated the victory of Agoncourt. The author of the Lits Henrici Quinti calls up his last resources of verbiage and bombast in his endeavour to describe the scene. Coants guarded the city gates and howed in reverence. as the queen entered. Lions rolled the rieves. Here was a row of castles manned with armed warriors, there were gleaming thrones encompassed with chanting angels. Binds of aposticia martyrs, confessors, and virgins sang a melodious welcome. The conduits can with wine, the streets were strewn with green branches, the houses hung with costly deapenes! Through these bew Idening manifestations of friendiness Catherine was led to the Towers, where she passed the night. Next day, cladin white, she was carried to Westminster in a gorzeous coach, attended by a procession of noblemen, city magnates, and craftsmen in their best clothes, the streets being decked as on the previous days.

On Sunday, Feb. 23, Catherine was crowned in the Abbey church by Archbishop Chichele?. She was then led into the palace and enthroned. Afterwards "alle maner rultees of metis and dry sless "were to be had in the palace for the asking"

¹ Vits, 296, Wais. il. 226.

¹ Vita, 196, Bent, il 436, 491

^{*} Ibid. 426.

* Vita, 299 sq ; Stretche, 274 a

* Bewt, ii. 426.

* Briat, ii. 427; Wale 11, 337, Vita, 299. Titus Livina (91) says that Henry was eager to have be queen irumout because our e corunations process on a pactor procedure was potent. This explanation is of course false, so Henry had washed all claim to a fowry (see above, p. 194). The date of the coronation is not quite certain. The prelates and magnates had been ordered to be at Westminster on the third Sunday in Lent-Feb. 13-when the coronation was to be held (Rym x 61, cf Devon, 164), but on vi we chron care state that it actually took place on that day "Chron Lond 1084 Kangaford Lit atta). However tereral writers who give other dates an that the exempley was performed on a Sunday (Wale, to 336 eq. | Brist, it. 448 eq., 449; 561). and no other bancay will sust the facts.

^{*} Vita, 100. * Brot, 16. 427

There was also a solemn banquet in Westminster Hall, which scerns to have made a great impression on the cit zens of London who received invitations, for one of them, and probably more, preserved the menu and made elaborate notes of the proceedings and the arrangement of the fables. It would have been contrary to etiquette for Henry to be present, for the seat of honour belonged that day to Catherine. On her right sat the archbishop and the bishop of Winchester, who were served next after her, on her left was King James, who was served after the two prelates. The remaining seats at the high rable were occupied by four countesses. The duke of Goucester, who was "overlooker "of the feast stood before the queen bare-headed, while to right and left of her knext the early of March and Stafford bearing sceptics. The absence of many great men in France made it necessary for several hororitic functions to be performed to, deputy. Thus, the earl of Warwick took the place of the duke of Ciarence as Steward of England, while his own office of panter was fuled for the occasion by Lord Uniford. The earl of Worcester performed the duties of the Farl Marshai and roue about the hall on a great charger, keeping order with the aid of a number of tips aves. Notwithstanding the war, howeven, there was an impressive attendance of the ling ish nobility. Bedford was present in his capacity of Constable of England, the ear s of Northum berland and Westmorland were among the supervisors of the feast; while mere barons were too numerous to count. Besides the high table there were four others. The outer one to the queen's right was occupied by the benchers of Chancery and the barons of the Conque Ports. At the next table sat ten bishops, the abbot of Waltham, the judges, and a number of ladies, knights and esquires. The third table seems to have been occupied entirely by ladies, those accounted noble sitting at the upper end. At the table on the extreme left, next unto the cupborde," were the mayor, aldermen and notable cit zens of London! As it was Lent the mea, consisted almost entirely of fish and confectionery, and the royal cooks had devised a most elaborate bill of fare, in which, besides

The foregoing description is based on the accounts of Brut, it ago in. Chaota Lond and ago, Gregory, 19 ago; Fabyan, 586 aq. They differ in drutis but agos on near yeal important points. Must of their information is evidently derived from a common source.

Beaver with minimal, evidently served as a horr d'autrer, was the only disk to which meat appeared.

whale and porpose, there figured almost every demizen of fresh or salt water that is ever seen on a modern table. There were three courses, and after each there was served one of those "subtleties" which were the pride of the mediacval-pastry cook².

After Catherine's coronation Henry made a hasty tour of the chief towns in his kingdom. On Feb. 27 he was at St Albans². He then visited Bristol and other towns in the reightnurhood! On March " he was at Weobles in Herefordshire, on March 11 at Shrewsbury! Thence he went to Kensiworth, where he stayed at his manor of Plesantmaris, which he had re immed from a swamp. By March 15 he had been suited by the queen, who had travelled from London through Hertford, Bedford, and Northamptor 7. On that day they were at Coventry, where the city gave them handsome presents. They then went to Leicester, remaining there over haster and for some days afterwards. Impurtant political

1 The menu, which is of great interest to the angler as well as to the student of mariners and custome, is given in Brut, it. 447; Chron. Lond. 164 sq.; Gregory, tal Faktiers, 186 mg. Tallian's version in the fadest. On Feb. 15, 4 at 134 and had him paid for fish for the quien a coronation (in Roll & Hen. V. Vicia Feb. 25.

The host discription of them appears in Claron, Lond, 164 sq. The first "extract was a selection have nest with head in and an amage of 5t Kateries with a whele is like hande disputings with the Hethen rhelm, having this Remot in he hande, Madame la Rogne, the Peascan answering Cest entergies, he bracies answerying Est du roy pur tenir jose. A tout gent il met sentent." At the end of the second course rame "a Sotolte, a panter with an yanage of Seint Katerine in the same tarrage (sic) and a whele in hire hand, and a Resson in hire sther hand. The Resson was that in Ringne end for I be parties answering In cost He another best asswering with this Resion, O. A biot: abother best saving. Aves Resource. The third suburty is described, him. A Tagre loke up in a mirrour and a man roleing on horizontal arrand. with a tiggre where to be barne, and theowing ministration his celence, and a Remon next in The force mutte Drest Jay pen ce best. Another Remor for hammers of the tages Gite de retrous Ma fast discour."

Newhall, 266.

 Streeche, 278 at Ryon x, 97.
 Chanc. Ware., Ser 2, 1164/28, 29. It would appear from the acknowledgment by Oldcards's captors, printed in Orig. Lett. II. 1, 88. a correct transcript from Case 9 Hen. V. rs. and that Henry was at Shrewshory on March 4. If the were on, he could hardly have varied Bristol, as there is good reason to busine he did; and in any case it would be hard to see why he should have gone to Weobley by way of Shrewsbury and why he should have vioted the latter town twice. Perhaps the document was drawn up and dated some days before it was realed in the king's presence.

Streeche, 278 a.; J. Rous, Hut. Regum Anglin, 209.

9 Streeche, 278 a

* Cov. Leet, 3: 34., Chanc. Warr., Ser. 1, 667/993.

* Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 362; Cal. Pat. 1416-22, pp. 135, 336, 362, 370; Chanc. Warr., Ser. 1, 667/994, 998-2000; Streeche, 278 at Vita, 300 sq.; Wale. ii. 137.

business was, it seems, the cause of the length of their stay, For part of the time, at any rate, the king of Scots was in the town1; two messengers from Charles VI came thither, though we do not know their errand?, and Henry was probably joined by John Stafford, keeper of the privy seals, and perhaps by the chancellor, who was certainly with him at a later stage of his wanderings. Whatever business was on foot, it was not sufficiently urgent to require Henry's presence in London. On leaving Leicester, he and Catherine went by way of Nottingham and Pontefracts to York, which they reached by April 2 They were welcomed with great magnificence and presented with splendid gifts, and the dean and canons placed their houses in the Minster close at the disposal of some of the great people who accompanied Henry, an act of hospitality which he formally declared was not to be taken as a precedent. He stayed at York for a few days, transacting business*; then, leaving Catherine behind, he paid flying visits to the shrines of Bridlington and Beverley?. When he had gone a short distance from Beverley, he met a messenger with letters telling of the battle of Baugen, the peril of his French conquests, and the desire of his friends overseas for his speedy return. With the se f-control which was the marvel of those who knew him, he said nothing about the news till next day, when he told the magnates who were with him. He and the rest agreed that his speedy return to France with a powerful force was essential, and he at once wrote to his officials and captains overseas assuring them that he would soon be back and charging them on pain of death not to neglect their duties or to allow any fortified place to fat into the hands of the enemy. Henry, however, did not allow the concern that he must have felt to betray tself in his movements. After rejoining the queen at Pontefract 10, he went to Lincoln, where he attended the installation of the

Devon, 366

I lee. Roll B Hen V, Mich , March 11, 1411

Streeche, 278 a.

10 Kangsford, Lit 190.

¹ Ord. Priv Co ii. 362; Chane Warr, Ser I, 667'994, 998-1000. Cf abid. 1365,28, 29; Cal Pat. 1416-22, p. 404
1 Iss. Roll 9 Hen. V, Easter, April 1, 1423

^{*} Ca. Pat 1416 22, pp. , 35, 137, 342, 363, 407, Rym. s. 96 sq., Chasc. Wagy., Set. L 668 1003-4, 11 c6 2 new bishop, Richard Fleming¹, and was present on April 15 when the bishop gave his decision as arbitrator in certain long-standing disputes between the dean and the chapter². He later visited Lynn, Waisingham, and Norwich on his way to London³.

Ser. L 668 1001-4, 11 16 2 Northern Chron. (Kingsford, Lat.), 290, Vita, 104; Streeche, 178 b. Vita, 104; Northern Chron. 190 Vita, 104 109.

Why did Henry undertake this devious journey? The best English authority for this part of the reign indicates that its purpose was mainly devotional and benevolent; the king visited a number of hoty places and shrines, offering generous gifts, and also heard the complaints of the poor and cid justice to the oppressed. This is no doubt true, but Henry was an adept at combining religion with politics, and we may well believe Monstreiet when he represents Henry as an assiduous propayandist during his tour, explaining to his subjects what had been accomplished in France and asking for money and mento complete the work by the overthrow of the daughin, who still he d two-thirds of the country. At Bristol and in Yorkshire, and no doubt in the other places he visited. Henry negoriated loans for the payment of the troops he was about to take to France. It is well to bear this in mind, for many modern writers give the impression that after the treaty of Troves a spirit of arrogant optimism seized Henry, that he visited England in a holiday mood, and that the news of Baugé came like a bolt from a clear sky and completely changed all his calculations and plans. As a matter of fact, Henry hid aiready promised Charles VI and his French supporters that he would return by midsummer with reinforcen ents", and on April 7, that is to say, before he had heard of C arence's deteat, he appointed commissioners in the North and West Rdings of Yorkshire and in Bristol to summon persons who had not yet lent morey to the king and induce them to do so, seeing that he was about to return to France and would not have time Witti, 3004 of Lin. Roll 8 Hen. V. Mich., March 12, 1411, where there is recorded the more of 4,333 for flat for the king softenings and chartable gif a during his ourney.

Memer av ag
 Rem n of

Northern Chron. (Kingsford, Lit.), 290., Streeche, 278 b
 Cal. Pat. 1416. 23, p. 4041 Chane. Warr., Ser. 1, 668/1005, 1006 to raise by ordinary means enough to pay the troops who were to accompany him. His composure on hearing of the disaster and the deliberation of his subsequent movements are thus less astonishing than they at first appear. He had never meant his stay in England to be long; measures had already been taken for raising money and men, and there was no need for him to make hurried changes in the arrangements for the next few weeks. There is no reason to suppose that Henry underestimated the difficulties that still confronted him after the signing of the treaty of Troyes. His conduct after that event, as well as before it, was marked by great political sagacity. The catastrophe of Bauge was of course unexpected, but, had it never occurred, Henry would probably have acted very much as he in fact did.

That Henry gave such a promise was stated by himself a few months later (Brit, Mis. MS Couton, Cleop E. n. f. 153 b); that it was given before he heard the news of Baugé appears from a letter written on April 7 by Charles VI to the people of Rheims (Le Moyen Age, Séz. 18., xxi. 24 the letter is also printed in Le Cabinet Historique, 1. 5%.

The commissions for raising the loan which had been issued on April 7 were followed a fortnight later by others applying to fourteen counties and the town of Northampton³. Through two or three² of the counties Henry had prehably passed, though there is no evidence that he stayed in them, but most of them he had not visited at a l. In the counties where he had been able to explain his needs by word of mouth, he perhaps now relied upon verbal negotiations or appointed agents under the signet or privy seal. At any rate it is certain that the demand for loans was not limited to the counties where commissioners were appointed by letters patent³.

There was indeed urgent need of money. At Lambeth on May 6 the treasurer submitted to Henry, in the presence of his principal ministers and councillors, a statement of the kingdom's finances. The ordinary revenue—apparently for the past year—he put at £55,000°. Of this, indirect taxation yielded £40,600, £26,000 of which was derived from the subsidy on woul. The remaining £15,100 can e from the sheriffs, and from feudal incidents or similar windfals. On ¹ Rym. z. 97 sq. 1 Berks, Oxfordshire, and Wille.

We know of a commission appointed for Norfolk and Suffolk and of loans made by the men of those counties, though the commission was not encolled among the letters putent (Cal. Pat. 1416-21, p. 1631 Ret. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., May 10, 1421)

4. The document is written in a contemporary hand and preserved in Cotton MS.

Cleop F in It is printed in Ord. Priv Co. 2. 122, and, maccurately, in Rym. 1.

^{11 3} sq. — I give only round numbers, but the nature of the same quoted in the original above that, when dealing with revesue, the treasurer was reporting actual receips. On turning to expenditure, however, he plainly abandom fact for prophecy the other side of the account, the expenses of government, apart from the war in brance, would demand £12,200. The terms contributing to this total are some of them aston shing. £9100, it was reckoned, would suffice for the administration of Lingland. If the war continued, Calais would demand £19,100 and the detence of the Scottish border £9500. Ireland, on the other hand, would require only £1666. An ruities payable at the exchequer or chargeable on the sustoms would come to £12,000. Then tollows an alarming list of expenses to be met out of the balance of £3500. There were the royal household, the chamber, the wardrobe¹, the king's ships, the keeper of the lions and constable of the lower, munitions, presoners, envoys and other messengers, and the nucleus of Holland², while there were outstanding debis of various departments of government, of Henry IV, and of the king when prince of Wales

In these circumstances it was of vital moment that the response to the demand for loans should be prompt and generous. In having recourse to a loan rather than to par iamentary taxation, Henry was doubtless influenced, as he said, by the necessity of getting money quick y, but he probably knew also that grave discontent would be caused, and his prestige seriously damaged, if he demanded a grant from parliament just when the nation believed that the treaty of Troves would usher in a period of peace and enable the king to lighter the burdens of his subjects. On the whole his policy was justified by results. Over / 18,000 was received by May 1 32. It is true that £17,666 of this came from Bishop Beaufort4, who a few weeks later lent a further £2000b, and that the remainder was a good deal less than would have been yielded by the usual parliamentary grant of a fifteenth and a tenth. The money, on the other hand, came in quickly; the cost of collection must have been small, and as the clergy not only contributed to the loan but also voted a tenth in their convocations. Henry probably got about as much in the end as it he had appeal, die perliament, It is evide it from the wording of the letters patent up jointing

Jacqueline of Hanault, see below, pp. 190 sqq.
 Rec Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 10, 13, 1411.

¹ The "camera regree, regime" and the "gaederoba regis et segime" appear in the last a though factor the mathematical term.

Ibid May 13, 14214 Rot Park (v. 132) Cal. Fat 1416 22, p. 372
 Ord. Priv. Co. iii. 42
 Wilkins, iii. 199, 403.

commissioners to negotiate with possible lenders that considerable pressure was applied to individuals. Those who were stow in fulfilling their promises were peremptor ly ordered to pay up or appear before Henry or the Council, but, to judge from the scanty evidence on the subject, such delinquents were not numerous. The Council was authorised by parliament to g we such security as it thought fit?. Of the money leat by Bishop Beautort, £14,000 was secured on the customs at Southampton4. Many lenders were immediately granted assignments on the clerical tenth or the next parliamentary grant, The clergy contributed liberally to the loan, but little, if anything, was oftered by the lords temporal. A vast number of small contributions, however, came from knights, esquires, and lesser folk, and several shires and towns sent a tump sun. ..

The meeting of parnament just as the money was beginning to come in shows that Henry was quite free from apprehension lest the raising of the loan should arouse opposition on constitutional or legal grounds. The writs of summons had been issued on Feb. 26, nearly a month before the battle of Baugé. The bishops, twenty-three abbots and the prior of Coventry, the duke of Gloucester, the earls of Northumber and, Westmorland, Warwick, Worcester, March, and Devon, twenty other lords temporal, and ten justices were summoned indiv dually. Seventy-two krights and 176 burgesses figure in the Sheriffs' Returns?, but how many attended we have no means of telling. It must have been a fairly experienced parliament. In only five cases did a shire elect two men who had never been returned, and forty of the county members had been chosen at least once before. Only nineteen boroughs out of eighty-seven selected two novices, and one hundred of the borough representatives had been elected on at least one previous occasion since Henry's accession". Henry was present

⁵ Ord Priv Co. ii. alfo. 4 Rot Parl, 19 230. L Styrre 21 46 1 Ibid 113 199 ; Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 372

Iss. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 12, 14, June 28, 1421; Rec. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch.,

May 10, 13, 14, 1411. Queen Catherine lent £1333 for Ref. (ibid. May 13. 142.)

Rept Digs. Peer, iv. 144. No memons was sent to the abliev of St Augustines. Camerbury, the papal conformation of the election of Marcellus, the new abbot, dated Feb. 144 not having been received when the write were nased. Use Papar Letters, via 291). Of the temporal lords summoned to the previous parliament, all save Hugh Burnes, who was dead, received with ..., he eight sords present at this paralament and for in the previous one had presumably come to England with Henry Rept. Dign. Pier, 1v. 146, 149).

Return Parl, l. 196 199.

in person when parliament was opened in the Painted Chamber on May 2, the day named in the writs, by the customary address from the chance lor. The speaker began by commending the king, especially for ascribing his victor es to God, like Julius Caesar, who would hear nothing about his own exploits for fear of being puffed up. He also likened the king to Job, for as the patriarch gave thanks to God when he heard of the fate of his chi-dren, so Henry, when he was told of the death of Carence and his comrades and the capture of many men of his company, praised God for the visitation of adversity. After enlarging on this theme, the bishop explained that the par tament had been surrmoned for the redress of wrongs and excesses committed in the realm during the king's absence, especially those to the detriment of men in his service overseas, for the maintenance of the laws and statutes, for the case and safety of the people, and for the increase of the general weal, on which matters the king wished to have the advice of the "Estates and Commens"." It was not a very instructive oration, and it is noteworthy that the chancellor seems to have said. nothing about the treaty of Troyes, though the ratification of that agreement was by far the most important business that parliament had been summoned to transact.

The chancelor ended his speech with the customary order that the commons should choose a Speaker, who was to be presented to the king on May 6. They punctually elected Thomas Chancer, one of the members for Oxfordshire, who was accepted by the king?.

The ratification of the treaty of Troyes gave no trouble, though the previous parliament had been a little nervous about it³. The chancellor read the treaty before the "Three Estates"," and at the king's order they then scrutiaised its terms. How ong they speat on this we are not told, nor do we know whether the treaty was discussed. At all events, it was authorised and accepted by parliament, the members promising, on behalf of themselves and their heirs, to observe it for ever.

For the rest, the proceedings of this parliament were not of [&]quot;Les Estats et Communes;" Rot. Purl. 19, 129.

^{*} third, 1304 Beturn Part, 2, 197. * Rote Parl, iv. 147.

Defined to the prelates and clergy, the nobles and magazante, and the commons (Rot Parl iv. 133) great interest or amportance. If the king's popularity was waring and the country becoming discontented, as a famous passage in Adam of Usk's chronicle! has led modern writers to surpose, there is no indication of such a revulsion of feeling in the official records. The king's authority appears to have stood very high. It was laid down, seemingly at Henry's instance, that such statutes and ordinances as might be made wate he was away on his approaching expedition to brance, should hold good only until the next parliament after his return8-a supulation which was applied to some of the measures enacted in this narliaments. Parliament agreed, as we have seen, that the Council might use its discretion in granting security to those contributing to the loan that was ust being raised, and the king was empowered, all statutes and ordinances to the contrary notwithstanding, to remove the Staple from Cala's to whatever place he chose for three years from the fellowing Michaelmas". Next to the ratification of the treaty of Troves, the most notable measure was one concerning the currency, which, though not in so had a plight as that of France, stood in need of improvement. At the instance of the government it was enacted that after Dec. 24 next al. English gold coins should be valued by weight. Most of the gold coins in circulation being dehicent in weight and quality, it was desirable to have them all recoined, and the king therefore surrendered the profits which he might lawfully claim on the recoining of gold money which should be brought to the Tower mint before next Christmas?. Even so, it is evident that the measure threatened great loss to many.

The common peritions were few. There was the customary request, favourably answered as usual, for the enforcement of the Statutes of Labourers. The commons still hoped that

² Ush, 113. These had been rumouse of plots in Norfolk and Suffolk during the prewoes winter (in. Boll 2 Hen. V. Mich., Jan. 21, 1421)

* It has been stated in modern works (e.g. Newhall, 150, n. 14) that the commons promped against the expense of the man. Newhali moreiv refers to Cubberts. Paras-mercary Hutsley. 1, 139, and I have been unable to trace the enery further bare than Speeds. Historical Court Research. Speed and 1631 p. 1632 secretable the perform on he matter came from autodoes and were presented by them to the estates. There are, however, no such pentisms in the printed rolls, though Speed refers to the securds. of parliament as authority for his story.

Rot Parl. iv. apo. 6 Ibid. 131, 132

Ebid.

Ibid. 130.

Thid.; Statutes, n. sol iq

⁶ Rot. Parl. 18, 246

the alliance with Burguidy might be turned to their commercial advantage, they asked the king to negotiate with the duke and his Flemish subjects for the exclusion from Flanders of wool. from Scotland and Spain, which was being worked there in increasing quantities, or, failing that, for the admission to Flanders of woo len goods manufactured in England; but the king merely replied that he would speak to the duke with the object of securing access for English cloth to the Flemish markets! The commons petitioned successfully that the justices of assize might resume their work (which, in the interests of the army in France, had been suspended since the king went abroad in 1417) though saleguards were provided for men serving overseas? As interesting petition represented that owing to pesulerce and war there was a lack of suitable men for the offices of sheriff and escheator and asked that the statute limiting their term of office to one year might be abrogated. The king consented to suspend the statute for four years, with certain precautions3.

But if the influence of the commons in this parliament was relatively small, the records offer ample evidence of the important status they had acquired in public estimation. A great part of the roll is taken up by pentions presented in the first instance to the commons, and a great part of the time of parliament must have been devoted to their consideration. All sorts of people thought it wise to get the commons to commend their requests. to the king and the lords. If Bishop Beaufort wanted parliamentary ratification of the offers patent securing his loans to the king4; if I vey counters of Kent wanted protection against her late husband's creditors, or Beatrice, widow of Thomas earl of Arundel, peaceable enjoyment of her dowry"; if Griffith Donne wanted dispensation from the laws forb dding Welshmen to purchase lands in England'; if the abbots and priors of England wanted exemption from the duty of collecting clerical teaths outside the district where they dwelth; if the fishermen of the Thames wanted its walers to be better preserved, if the earl of balisbury wanted recognition as heir of Rot Parl W 146 sp.

 Ibid 14", Statutes, 21 20g.
 Rot Parl W. 1483 Statutes, 21 206
 Rot Parl W. 132.

Bod 130

[#] Ibid 13

^{*} Ibd 143 199.

¹ Ibid 130 iq.

his father's property1: if the inhabitants of Oxfordshire, Bergs. and Bucks wanted drastic action to be taken against violent and disorderly students from Oxford2; if the men of North umberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland wanted new measures for enforcing order and detending the Marches3; if the municipal authorities and merchants of Calais wanted the royal mint to be re-established there4, if the inhabitants of New Shoreham or Rottingdean wanted their assessment for tenths or fifteenths to be reduced5-would the commons ask the king to grant their requests or remedy their grievances in parliament. There was, however, no fixed procedure for the presentation of petitions. The physicians and surgeons addressed one to the whole parliament, the soldiers of the Calais garrison to the Speaker and the knights of the shires, while there were still of course direct petitions to the kings, the great majority of which have doubtless perished.

It may perhaps be inferred from the records that the petitions addressed to the commons had four possible fates. They might adopt them and present them as "common petitions to ". Or, without going so far, they might, as requested, commend the petition to the tayourable consideration of the king or the lords. In that case, it was read in parliament and apparently considered thereis. The king's answer was given, sometimes "with the assent of the lords18," sometimes "with the assent of the lords and commons 13," sometimes "by authority of parliament 14," son crimes without allusion to parliament or any part of it15, and sometimes it was embodied in the statute of the year. In the third place, it might happen that the commons were not prepared to countenance a petition. Then it might be sent on to the lords, if haply they might regard it more favourably.

```
Ros Parl, tv. 141 1Q.
                                                 * Ibid. 171.
Tind 1477
                                                 · Ibid 146
₽ Thid £ 59 49.
```

* In one or two cases the commons are saked to pray the lords to beg the king to ordain remedies (ibid 143, § 22, 160, 10. 8)

2 I byd 131 I Ibid egg Thad 159, this. Two petitions, addressed to the king, were given to the commons, who were asked to present them (bid + jo, § 23, 24., § 23)

16 This meets to have been done with a petition from Calais (ibid. 146, § 17) and Perhaps with No. vt (ibid. 147, § 29).

Hold. tjt. § 14, tj2, § t6, 27, t43, § 22, 144, § 23.

Blid. t32, § 27.

Blid. t32, § 27. # 1bid. 145, § 22 M thol. 131, 15 14, 153 ef 132, 5 16.

 Statutes, 11 208 (csp. 9), 206 sqq (cap. 7).

 Rot. Pari. iv. 159, 150 sq.

But the commons might reject it totally, though this seems to have been the fate of only one petition presented at the par isment under consideration, and that was not addressed to the commons as a whole but only to the Speaker and the snights:

Some of these petitions had results of public interest. Oxford students, it had been complained, frequently expelled from their property inhabitants of the adjacent country, peached in warrens and woods, and even rescued felonious tlerks from the prisons of the ordinaries. They are, says the really, to be proceeded against according to law, and if a student be curlawed for any of the offences specified in the pet tion, the chancel or of the university is to send him down?. The qualified physic ans and surgeons complained that "uncomying an unapproved" practitioners are allowed a free hand, "togrete harme and slaughtre of many men," and asked that no one except university graduates in medicine be permitted to practise, it was ordained that the Council should be empowered to take action against physicians who had not graduated and surgeons who had not been admitted among the masters of their arth. Of more political significance were the extension to Redesdale of measures adopted in 14 ta to suppress disorder in I vneda e and Hexhamshires, and the recognition of the earlof Salisbury as heir of his father's possessions, a very timely acknowledgment of his services in France. It was in this partiament, too, that a notable step was taken towards the settlement of the long-standing dispute about the division of the Bokun inheritance. In accordance with an agreement between her and the king. Anne countess of Station 1, Henry 5. cousin, had made a division of most of the lands in dispute, and n presence of the lords offered the choice to Henry, who se ected one part, leaving the other to her. Herri's part, with consent of both lords and commons, was annexed to the duchy of Lancaster⁶.

On the whole this parliament, the last at which Henry was

I it is not certain that the petrion in question was disregarded, but no nature to it.

it recorded (Rot. Park iv. 159, no. 5).

Third 1323 Statutes, R. 207 sq. In the previous year the university had been in trouble because students had forcibly liberated two principles of the architectop from Oxford castle. At the instance of the royal Council the academic authoraties had enacted new statutes for the product of sqq).

Been effectual (Snappe's Formulacy, 187 sqq).

4 Ibid. 141, Statutes, ii 206 sq. enacted new statutes for the preservation of good order, but these had evidently not present, was dull and unfruitful. The commons were small-minded and apathetic. There is no hint that anyone criticised the treaty of Troyes¹ or even asked a question as to the future relations of England and France, a matter which should have given parliament much concern. The members acquiesced in the levy of what was very nearly a forced loan, hay even encouraged it, though they must have known that it would of necessity be repaid from future taxes. There was evidently much disorder in the country, but the commons had no remonstrances or suggestions of their own to offer about it. The record of the parliaments which followed the treaty of Iroyes compares hadly indeed with that of the parliaments which followed the treaty of Brétigny.

^{*} Rot Park iv 142 sq. * Hod. 135 sqq 1 G.E.C. (ed. Gibbs), vs. 473 sq

The convocation of Canterbury met on May 5, its proceedings lasting til, the 27th. On May 12 it voted a tenth to the king, half to be collected at the following Martinmas and the other half a year later. A first charge on the proceeds of the tax was to be the repayment of loans made by clergy². One of the transactions of convocation was to sentence a man to be flogged through Cheapside for having forged the seals of Archbishop Chichele and others². Its attention, however, was principally concerned with the case of William Taylor, a reputed heretic, and the old question of the best way to secure occlesiastical promotion for university graduates,

Taylor had been accused of Lo lardy before, under both Arunde, and Chichele. On May 24 he was produced before convocation in the chapter-house of 5t Paul's by the bishop of Worcester, who had long had him in custody for preaching doubtful doctrines at Bristol. On being questioned, Taylor denied that he had ever preached or held the opinions ascribed to him, though he admitted quoting two of them in writing. He then drew from his bosom a paper which was thought to contain arguments in favour of these views. He was forthwith removed and the paper taken from him. The opinions in question, with the contents of Taylor's paper, were referred the ratification of the treaty of Troyer.

¹ The meeting of parliament is noticed by several chronicking but not one mentions the estification of the treaty of Traver.

1 Cone iii. 3991 Fine Roll 9 Hen. V, m. 14. £1668 of the grant was forthwith among to contributors to the sean and entered in the Receipt Ro. as received from the collectors (Rec. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 22, 14.2). £423 was similarly treated a few weeks later (ibid. June 28, July 17, 1422). There could be no better illustration of the fact that the "receipts" of these rolls were by no means always received to a committee consisting of the chancellors of the two universities and John Langdon, doctor of theology, a monk of Canterbury carnedra, who on May 26, Taylor being present, reported that the teachings attributed to him savoured of heresy and were not to be held by any Christian. Taylor concurred, but was nevertheless sentenced to imprisonment for life. Owing, however, to the condign perstence which he displayed, the archbishop, with the consert of convocation, announced that the bishop of Worcester might release him if he could find security acceptable to the royal Chancery that he would hold no heretical doctrines in future. He was taken away in custody of the bishops, but on June 2 John Sengieron, of Chart in Kent, gent eman, William Cokirnage, weaver, and John Aleyo, leather-seller, of London, and John Laurence, of Feltham in Middlesex, husbandman, went bail in / too each. that Taylor would appear before the king's Council if simmoned and that he would no longer preach or teach error or heresy. Tay or was no doubt released, but in 1423 he was again before Chichele, and being convicted of relapse into heresy was degraded and handed over to the secular arm on March 12. While recogn sing that we have only a summary record of the case, a record moreover drawn up by Taylor's enemies, one can hardly escape the conclusion that he was an unstable and distagentious man, who was treated by the ecclesiastical authorities with as much consideration as he hadany right to expect,

4 Cone., loc. cit

It was doubtiess the continued enforcement of the Statute of Provisors with respect to lesser herefices that occasioned the complaint of the chancellors of the universities that these bodies were still suffering because of the difficulty experienced by graduates in securing preferment. On May 26 the subject was debated, and apparently some of the members of convocation seized the opportunity to criticise certain of the ordinances of the universities. It ventually it was agreed with the king's approval, that if the universities would adopt certain modifications of their ordinances which the chancellors were prepared to recommend, a constitution designed to remedy their grievance should be put into force. The chancellor of Oxford went home, but soon returned at the head of a deputation who brought letters expressing the consent of the masters to the proposed amendments, the most important of which permitted members of religious orders who had been through the full course in theology at the university, to incept in that faculty without taking the master's degree in arts. This concession had been sought by the frians, and represents a success for them in their continual conflict with the seculars'. Evidently the charges passed were dentical with those desired by convocation, for the archbishop published a constitution calling upon every ecclesiastical patron to bestow the next vacant benefice in his gift and thereafter every third such benefice, on a university graduate, as arrangement which was to last for ten years. The measure, though simpler in form, was very a milar in purpose to the one issued on the same subject in 1417.

Cone of 404 iq.

Claus, p Hen V₁ m. 22 d.
 Ibid 200

Convocation had also given some consideration to abuses in the Church. It was decreed that no one taking orders was to be at bject to any free or charges on the occasion of the ceremony; the fee for institutions and inductions was fixed; and at the petition of some of the proctors of the lower clergy, a constitution of Archbishop Suchury hairp the st pends of chaplains was read and it was resolved that it should be republished and thenceforth treated as binding4.

The capital was indeed the scene of much debate during May, 1421. For while parliament and convocation were sitting a great assembly of Benedictine munks was being head in Westminster abbey. It had been summoned by Henry, ever realous in the cause of religions. He had been told, it was reported, that Benedictine monasticism had gone far astray and could be restored to the right path by some but him, some Cone is 19934.

 But an Hackener were in he retkined as graduate. We hear nothing of Combridge, which presumably adopted the amendments also.

Tonc. Jii 399, 401 iq

I he summers to the abbest of Frenham in cutar and worth questing. Trivial and
(a) we be found in god, for critical matters the grade currents of the worth has of god as we, as the goods of youte order we behing rate we us be said charge you are by that ye do come to gode not only the fadges bote also the has been elected and operathat been metable persons you gozey hous of the same order you as green combes as in goodly possible to meetable vate own abbeys of Westmanter the viday of may reset comyage. And adjuste so meetable and suche as a byforesaid he excused fro the said congregation with oute to meetable and suche as a byforesaid he excused fro the said congregation with oute to meetable and suddent a cause just by alle reson og the (ac) to be except, as you and they hothe derive to eachie ours indignation. Yetten under ours signet of the Egie yn the absence of ourse oper at core town of Leycestre be say day of marche? (MS. Cost. Time C in f. 18). The use of English in a summore to the heads of a religious order is no line remarkable than the prescriptory language employed.

saving that this libel sprang from certain friars, others that its author was the prior of the Carthusian house of Mount Grace, formerly a Beredictine monk himself. Sixty abbots and conventual priors, with over 300 other monks, were present. The older monks were perturbed, shough willing to admir that Henry had some ground for his concern, as the order had fallen. under the guidance of young ment. On May 7 the king joined the assembly as it sat in the chapter-house, and listened to an address by Edmind Lacy, hishop of Exeter. He himself next made a speech about the pristing rule of St Benedict, which had excited the devetion of his ancestors, and modern neglect of it. He then handed to the monks thirteen articles proposing reforms, and begged them to return to their primitive manner of life and to pray unceasingly for him, the realm, and the Church. Henry's artitude made a favourable impression on the assembly, but did not prevent a critical scrutary of the document which embodied his suggestions. It began by asserting flatly that there were many abuses in Benedictine houses, and went on to propose reforms on such matters as the monastic habit, the periodical blood-letting (marker), the possession of money by individuals, the use of private apartments, and intercourse with women. The articles and cate the prevaience of serious laxity. and hint at worse. They are in no way original, but aim simply at the restoration of the genuine rule of St. Benedict². They were examined by a committee consisting of three nomnees of the king—the bishop of Exeter, the critical prior of Mount Grace, and a secretary-and thirty representatives of the order, headed by the prior of Worcester! The king's proposals underwent much criticism, and sub-committees drew up alternative schemes, but in the end a draft of the aboot of St Albans found widespread acceptance and after some amendment was adopted⁶. Its suggestions were very verbose

² Wale, ii. 3174 Coret. Croyl, 413 eq. Wilkins mistakenly calls the assembly a proxincial chamer and missiaces it under at a Conc. in augh. Cf. Pantin, and an a who prints out the the prosence of so many absent seat grows to stelling evidence of the importance which the possible astached so he occurred

Wall, ii. 237 sq.3 Conc. iii. 423 sq.

Cont. Croyl. 514; ed. Wals. is. 237.

Cont. Croyl. 514; Wals. is. 238. MS. Cott. Titus C. is. f. 28. The document is printed by W. h. of Core in 4.4 sq.. There has been much a infusion over its case in the MSS from which it was taken by Wilkins it was probably ascribed to 1440— "Henrico quinti anno neraso" (NIS Con. Virricus E. 23 f. pt. Reyner, App., pt. 3, p. 170). Wilkens altering the Tortaro is "deceme" But Walsingham and the Continuator of the Croyanad Chronicie leave no doubt that the abbot of St Arbana secon-and obviously an attempt to evade compliance with Heary's proposals. When they were more than pious wishes, they were robbed of their force by qualifications and exceptions! And even these innocuous proposals seem never to have been confirmed by any authority with power to legislate for the hinglish heards times. Nevertheless, Henry contented himself with them?, but the only fruit of his efforts is apparently to be seen in four constitutions passed by the provincial chapter held at Northampions in July, 1423, when he had been dead for nearly a year. One of these constitutions deals with the duties of abbots; the other three have to do with dress.

Henry's amazing energy and industry were never more strikingly illustrated than during this visit of his to England. For, besides all the domestic business already noticed, the detence of the realm had caused some anxiety, and dealings. with foreign powers claimed much of his artention. The dauphinists were active and sanguine and perhaps hoped to keep Henry in England by threats of invasion. At a levents it was deemed advisable in March to send to sea a powerful squadron of balangers and barges under William Bardolph, who had under him a good-sized force of men-at-arms and archers. About the middle of the month it was reported that a large Casti ian fleet was about to make a descent on the Isle of Wight, the inhabitants of which were ordered to bold themselves in readiness and promised reinforcements and munitions. in case of need. The danger, if it ever existed, seems to have passed over, perhaps because of the activities of Bardotph. There remained, newever, the difficulty of maintaining the defence of the northern frontier, which was particularly irksome just then. Though of late years the balance of military success had inclined mendations were adopted at the assembly of 1421, a view confirmed by a close examination of the two Cotton MSS -ched above. The document in Cooc. 1417 aq. is evidently a report of one of the sub-consistent (cf. Cost. Croyl. 514)

Come ill- sas in-

Const. Croyd. 4.4.
• Const. Croyd. 4.4.
• Cone is 446. Cf Waleingham, is 330. He disdains to dozer be the reforms, which apparent it had not been accepted by the proxincial chapter when he wrote. It may be round that if the accepted appeared at Western-outer is 4411, had been given legal effect, the consultations passed at he rehampton would have been superfluors.

* Rom a. 68. Barcoich had at least ten battingers and three barges. Five of the baltingers belonged to the hang, among these being the Names of Journ and the deviale Improved with a case of one hundred. In Roll & Her. V. Mr. h. March 2. and 29-2422. The mariners were suppressed for six weeks, the troops were serving for forth days 6556.).

(1516.).

* Ord. Parv. Co. d. 162.

towards the hing ish, the border counties were in a sad plight, Pestilence had su iplemented the ravages of war, many inhabitants had fled to more favoured regions, great tracts of land had gene out of cultivation; while the trade of the ports was being injured or Scottish raiders at sea, and the burden of maintaining the fort fications of castles and towns was proving too heavy for those responsible. It was high time too that something was done to check the flow of Scottish troops to the dauprinist regions of France-a consideration that gained new weight after the battle of Bauge. Henry was in a strong position for negotiation with the Scots, for not only was their king his prisoner, but he could now use the name aid authority of the king of France. It is consequently not surprising to find that he was soon followed to England by Gilles lord of Clamecy and three other envoys of Charles VI, charged with a mission to Scottand concerning the advantage of all three realms. In March they were escorted north by John Colvile³. It was probab'y with the object of promoting these negotiations that Herry took James I with him to the north. The representations of the Frenchmen seem soon to have borne fruit. Scotsmen. met Henry at York3, and though we do not know for certain why they were there, it is significant that on April 21 safe-conducts were sound in favour of the earls of Douglas and Athol, who were coming to England⁴. In the middle of May Douglas was evidently at Westminster, and on May to he signed an indenture in which, stating that King James had come to an agreement with Henry about his release and had ordered him (the ear) to aid the English king, he promised to do so with 200 knights and esquires and 200 mounted archers, who were to be ready at haster next!. Next day Henry announced that, through the mediation of the earl of Dougtas, it had been agreed that if, with a three months of Henry's return from his expedition to France, James should deliver as hostages a number of Scottish lords and bishops, who are named, he might then return to his country?. It was pererally be leved that Henry made it a condition of the prospective release that James.

Rot. Parl. iv. 1433 Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 343
 Ibid. p. 321 In. Rot! i Hen. V. Mich., March 11 1423 Devou, 363.
 Rot. Scot. il. 226.

Ryon, x, 99 sq. The earl of Athol does not mem to have used his safe-conduct.
 Rot. Scot. St. 149.

Rym. n. ang sq. It is so be noted that the earl's promocs were given to Henry should marry Joan Beaufort!, but it was rather Henry's permission than James's consent that was needed for such a match. The agreement postponed James's release to an undetermined date; nor, as it seems, did it technically involve a peace or even truce between the two realms. Its practical effect, however, was no doubt to establish what passed for peace on the Border*, and, what was still more important to Henry, recruiting for the dauphinists in Scotland appears to have been checked. Indeed, several Scotsmen evidently engaged to serve Henry with substantial retinues4, though it is not certain that these undertakings were actually carried out.

Henry's diplomacy met with other successes about the same On March 17 a treaty was signed at Rouen with the duke of Bourbon, who, helped by the good offices of the duke of Savoy, had long been trying to regain his freedom. He promised to swear to the treaty of Troyes and to make his subjects do the same. He was to furnish seven hostages, including his younger son; to deliver to Heary fill Nov. 1, 1422. six notable places in his lands, the expense of their upkeep and defence being borne by himself, and to pay a ransom of 100,000 crowns. Sixty thousand of these were to be paid by Aug. 8 next, and if this condition were furfilled he would be released. The duke tried hard to fulfil the agreement, selling land, borrowing money, and organising warlike operations against recalcitrant vassals, and on April 10 he received the chancelior of Normandy's quittance for 25,000 gold crowns, 3000 of which were represented by jewels?. The daupnin not only granted him 100,000 /. t out of his own revenues, but also sought, though in vain, to induce Lyons to make a contribution towards the ransom. Beaucourt thinks that the dauphin cannot have known of the duke's "treachery" in accepting the treaty of Troyes, but his grant was not made until May 19%, and it must have been impossible to keep the terms

Kingsford, Lit 2904 Monstr by 26

It had been expected in dauphinist circles that early in May the earle of Douglas and Mar would cross to France with six or seven thousand men. But the troops never came (Beaucourt, 1, 216).

 This seems the explanation of the strangely worded safe-conducts much by Henry. at Dover on June 9 in favour of Alexander Seton, leed of Gordon, Alexander and Forgus Kennedy, Alexander Forbes, and John St Clare (Rym. x. 127, 128).

Ibid 15 199., Hadlard-Breholies, Rangon, 47

f Ibid 48 sq. , Rym. x. 70 sq f Hullard-Bréholles, Rançon, 48.

* Beaucourt, i. 171.

of the agreement secret for two months. Probably the dauphinexpected that once bourbon was at large, his acceptance of the treaty would not count for much; but, whatever the duke's intentions, he tailed to satisfy the conditions of his release, for the 35,000 crowns needed to bring the total paid to 60,000, were not handed over till the following November. No more was paid during Henry's lifetime. As it was impossible for Henry to occupy any places in the duke's ands, neither party gained much by the agreement, though Henry might boast that, besides 60,000 crowns, he had secured from one of the greatest men of the Armagnas faction a formal recognition that the treaty of Troyes was "good, reasonable, and just","

Another achievement, equally striking in appearance and equally fruitless in the event, was the conclusion of a new treaty. between England and Genoa. Two Genoese agents were commissioned on Feb. 7 to treat for an alliance with England, the settlement of a lexisting claims, and a trade agreement. Their arrival must have been de ared, and it was not till May I that the hishop of Worcester, John Stafford, keeper of the privy seal, and William Alewick were appointed to negotiate with them4. The treaty was dated May 29, injuries were to be mutually forgiven, except that the Genoese were to pay 16000. compensation to one William Walderne and his fellows for merchandise which some of their citizens had evidently seized: neither party should be bound to engage in the wars of the other, nor should either aid the enemies of the other unless already in alliance with them, subjects of each party should have access, under the usual conditions, to the territory of the others. Though the treaty was not formally ratified by Henry until the autumn, an official safe-conduct to all Genoese entering or leaving England was issued on June of

It was a time when international politics were extremely complicated and the relations of states very unstable. When the negotiations with Genoa were in progress an envoy from ^ր Rym ու Ձյ.

¹ Huillard Betholes Rangos, 50 pg , who, wehout any grounds, charges Herry with bad faith towards the duke.

^{*} Ibid critist. In equal the negetations with the Genome abortive in 1419, had been resumed, but again they bure no frost cited, in $60, it $61 Cal. Pat 1416-115. p. 276). * Rym n. 66, 93, 117

bilbid, 120 seq

I Ibid. 128

Alfonso V of Aragon was in England!. Now, Cast le being obdurate in its friendship for the dauphin, it was obviously to Herry's interest to cultivate an extente with Alfonso, who was at the time trying to secure the kingdom of Naples in opposition. to the duke of Aniou and was therefore disposed to look with favour on the Anglo-Burgundian cause. But Aragon was at enmity with Genoa, which was supporting the Italian ambitions of An ou, and in the treaty between Henry and the Genoese, Aragon is expressly mentioned as one of the enemies of the latter2. Henry had to choose between the two. Unwise y, as the sequel proved, he preferred Genoa. But, reluctant to reject Alfenso's overtures altogether, he despatched an embassy to express his sense of the king of Aragon's friendly dispusition, to suggest that he might appoint representatives to discuss with Henry the terms of an alt ance; and to ask if in the meantime he would abstain from helping Henry's enemies?. The meaning of this was transparent, and it is no wonder that Alfonso let the matter drop.

About the same time two ambassadors from Portugal, officially an ally of England, were in the country, but the purpose of their errand is not known*

Far more vital, however, than the establishment of friendship with the states of southern Europe was the maintenance of Henry's good relations with the dukes of Britishy and Burgundy, and it happened that during his stay in England his position in regard to both changed for the worse. In the case of Britishy the fault was not Henry's. When he eft France the truce with Brittany still held good, though violations of t by the Bretons seem to have been exceptionally numerous and serious, and in February envoys had to be sent to urge on the duke the enforcement of its terms and to seek reparations'. Apparently they produced some effect, for it was arranged that commissioners from both sides should meet at Pontorson on April 20 to discuss the maintenance of the truce, arrange for the punishment of breaches of it, and hear the complaints of those who had suffered by them. But the battle of Bauge wrought a change in the duke's feelings. Never enthus astic for the English, he now came to the conclusion that they were

I In Reli p Hen V, Emur, June 5, 1422.

Rym. z. 110.

^{*} Crd Feis, Co u at ; Roll & Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 8, 1421; Etch. Acen. 321; 36.

Rym x 9114q

going to lose, and on May 8, after conveniations with the daughen at Sablé, signed a treaty in which, promising to aid Charles with all his resources against the ringlish and their allies, he renounced all his treaties with Herry, while the daughtin uncertook to help him against his enemies, especially Orvier and Charles de Blois, to execute justice upon them for their recent outrage on him, and (in a secret clause) to remove forn his own court the president of Provence and three others supposed to have had a hand in it. In accordance with the treaty, the duke's younger brother, Richard count of Etampes, brought a considerable force to the dauphir's army and took part in the ensuing campaign? Nevertheless, the duke was careful not to break completely with England^a. While he was negotiating with the dauphin at Sablé, Breton envoys, headed by the bishop of Nantes, were visiting Herry, who was at pains to treat them courteously and liberally. On May 21 Ling ish commissioners were named to discuss alleged preaches of the truce with commissioners of the dukes, and friendly relations between him and Henry seem never to have been publicly severed. Still, the treaty of Sabié added greatly to Henry's anxieties and to the difficulty of the military's fuation.

Henry's relations with the Burgundians were not alrogether. happy in the autumn of 1420, but outwardly he and the duke had remained on good terms. Their friendship, however, was soon subjected to a severe strain by Henry's attitude towards Jacqueline of Hainault, whose fateful arrival in England occurred just after Henry had left London for the west. There is no need to recount in detail the events which led up to Jacqueline's flight from the Netherlands, but to appreciate its significance one must remember that her second marriage, to the wretched duke of Brahant, had been arranged in the interests of Burgundian policy, that her quarrel with her husband had caused much approvance to both Duke John and Duke Phinps, and that just before she fled from Hamault to England Phiip believed that he had persuaded her to go back to her Morice, Prenves, il. 2092 sq.; Beaucourt, 1, 224 sq.; Cabinet Hattorique, iv. 273; Bibl. nat., MS. franç. 26,044, nos. 5670-2.

Benucours, i 456 (letter of Jean Caille to the inhabitants of Lyons); Mories, Historie, 1. 487, Presives, il. 1086, 2088, 1089.

The dat of presents in Morice, Preuves, in 1263, 1164, is amoung evidence of the dube's resolve to run with the bare and hunt with the bounds.

* He gave the bullop you marks and contributed towards the expanses of the other anvoys (in. Roll 9 Han. V. Piacht, May 2, 2421; Rym. z. 226, 217).

* Ind. 215.

* Means in set I - There is no an Chart (222.2).

⁶ Money iv. 26; Le Fleve, ii. 30 ng 2 Chaot. t. 210 og husband at Brussels! For Henry to harbour Jacoueline and to encourage her efforts to obtain the dissolution of her marriage could not but give grave offence to the duke, and, to make thirps worse, it was generally believed, probably with truth, that Henry had known of her intertion and had helped her to carry it out?. In 1427 Jacqueane, when mying to induce the English government to maintain her cause, repeatedly asserted that she had come to England at Henry's instance and in reliance on promises he had made, and that he had pledged his support in her divorce suit and arranged her marriage with Gloucester - statements which no one seems to have contradicted, though it was to the interest of Henry VI's Council to do 26. The story that her escape was planned at Valenciennes. by Lewis Robsiet, a Hamilter by birth and one of Henry s amost trusty servants, receives colour from the fact that about the time of her flight Robsart was sent by Henry with messages. to the duke of Burgurds ! Moreover, when the lett Valerciennes, she gave out that she was going to Ponthieu, of which she was dowager countess!. New on March 1, over a week before she crossed to England, Herry issued a request to his this and a command to his safteets to assist Jacqueline and her mother on their projected journey to Porthieul. The direct route from Valenciennes to Pontnieu passed through no English territory and the "alices" with whom the two travellers would come in contact would all be subjects of the cure of Burgundy. It looks then as it Henry were expecting Jacqueline to arrive at Calais and had made up his mind to risk offending Duke Philip, the mention of Pontheu in the safe-conduct would save his face it she were stopped by Burgundian officers. and might prevent the duke from suspecting her real destination until she had crossed the channel. At all events, she le't

* Le Saves is 31 sq., ef. Cal. Pat. 1416-215, p. 29. Monstreiet (iv. 27) and Chaptellian (i. 212) call Jacqueline's confident and protector the engages of Escaliton. So does the Corleines there else (eg., which says has to had come to be accepted from Henry to see his wife. Robsert had setters of demeation on March I, 1427 (Cal. Pat. 1416-225, p. 27), and on May 25, 2420, had hem appeared Henry's standard between (Ret. Norm. & Hen. V. p. 2, m. 26).

* Le l'èsre, il 32. 1 flym x, 67 sq.

⁽Ret. Norm. I Ren. V. p., 2, m. 26).

I I nour date if March. Q. 1224, the I one Roll II Hen. V. Mich I records payment of 166-19 aid to Lewis Robust, and by he king to decare certain target to the date of Birgundy for his wages and passage. I here is no indication whether R. beart had gut back or was about to g., but us a singular coincidence that under the city same tate, acquelize hist appears in the laste house, give being pass for her expresses at Caste and on the way to London.

Valenciennes on March 6, Bouchain nest day, and reached Calais on the 8th1. After waiting at Calais until messengers whom she had sent to Henry returned with assurances of welcome, she was met at Dover by many lords, one of whom was the duke of Gloucester, and immediately escorted to Lenden³. Henry must have been away, a fact which perhaps. he ped him when he made explanations to the duke of Bargundy, envoys from whom were in London in April^a. From the first Jacque are was treated as an honoured guest. Her expenses at Calais and on her journey thence were paid by the Enchequers, and she I ved at the king a charges after her arrival in London^a. On July 8 the Council decided that as from Tury to she should receive a fixed sum of 1100 monthly for the expenses of her households and this was paid to her for the rest of the reign?. On July 9, the keeper of the wandrobe was ordered to deliver to her forty peds and couches for the nobles and others serving her. It looks as if the Council had become convinced that her sojourn in England would be a long one, but there seems to be no evidence as to what advantage Henry expected to draw from it. Perhaps he thought that she might be useful in case the duke of Burgundy became recalcirant, and it is noteworthy that in the treaty with Genoashe buures in the list of Henry's allies! But while it is true that Henry could not foresee the depths of folly into which she was to ten pt his brother Humphrey, it cannot be deried that his conduct in the affair hardly became an ally of the duke of Burgundy and that it was foolish to risk a breach of the Anglo-Burguncian alliance for the problematical benefits which might Le gained through Jacqueline's dependence upon him.

Löher, Jakobāa, 1. 406; Cordeners, 292

Itsel. April 23, May 2, 1421
Ibel. 8 Hen. V, Mich., March 19, 1421, 9 Hen. V, Parch., May 2, 1421.
Ibel. 8 Hen. V, Mich., May 2, May 9, June 18, 1421. Her expenses were included in the Topasser's estimates of May 6 (Oct. Priv. Co. ii. 112, no above, p. 574).

Ozd. Petv. Co. 3. 2923 Rym. x. 134. The money was to be drawn from the immediate linds of Oseen Joan (iss Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., July 5, 421)

Ins. Roll 9 and 10 Hen. V. passim.

Ozd. Prv. Co. 11, 291

Monter 14, 27, Chart is $15 sq. That she stayed some time at Calastis ingrened by Its Reach Mer. V. Mich., March 19, 1421, 411 9 Hen. V. Parch, May 1, 1421.

Rym, m. 121. She is described there as Jacoba, duchess of Bayaria, countest of The west are Fee and. By the E guide she was smeady styled, duchem of the used," even an official documents (see e.g. Rym. x. 234) Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 2923 im. Roll. 6 Hen. V. Mich., March 19, 1422). In June, 1422, her mother was paid 2000 marks b. Henry, the reason does not appear. Devon, 373, In. Ros. 10 Hen. V. Panch., June 4. 1411,

CHAPTER LXIX

BAUGÍ

WHEN Henry left France, the military situation, though it gave no ground for immediate concern, was not really satisfactory. The dauphinists were strategically in a strong position. They held a most undisputed a solid block of France beyond the Loire, whence they could strike, with the advantage of interior lines, at the territory under the control of the English and the Burgundians. This was much less compact and much harder to detend. It is true that Henry had a fairly firm hold on Normandy and the country between it and Pana and that Duke Philip could count on the obedience of his own fets. Not only, however, was the dake's effective strength much impaired by the gap between his lands in the Ne herlands and the two Burgundies, but it was difficult to protect the communications between each of these regions and the country. conquered by Henry. For though north-east France was generally Burgundian in sentment, the dauphinists still heid some important positions there. The operations of Henry in the previous summer and autumn had cleared the line of the Scine and the Young, and so, as it seemed, secured communications between Piers and Dijon; but the daiphinists were still strong in Champagne, where the famous La Hire was very active and the equally renowned Pierron de Luppé head the castle of Montaigu near Rheims, while they were also in occupation of Meaux³, Complègne⁴, Guise⁸, and several neighbouring strongholds of less strategic value, wherea they could impede intercourse between Paris and the Netherlands, besides inflicting much damage on the adjacent country. Some of the dauphinist captains in these outposts of their cause work able and resolute men. While Henry was at Paris, for instance, a force of English from eastern Normandy, soining the Burgard an garnson of Creal, raided Brie and Valois, taking

St Denys, vi. 438 ; Jwr. 965.

ur. 36 i.

^{*} Rym. z. 13. * Monstr it 10.

^{*} Ibid. 97.

many prisoners and much booty; but on their way back they were caught at Montepilloy! by the lord of Gamaches, at the head of troops from Compregne and places near by, and put to flight with severe loss".

In the operations of the winter of 1421, the sim of the daughtrists was to sever the English from the Burgundians by cutting the river communications between Paris and Di on and by conquering the Somme valley. As long as they refused to fight a battle in strength, it was clearly the right strategy for the English and the Burgundians, while of course repelling daughtnist attacks, to root out the hostile garrisons in the north-east. Unfortunately, Henry, eager to go to England, jestingly refused the requests of the Parisians that he should reduce Meaux², the duke of Burgundy remained supire for some months, and the duke of Clarence turned his thoughts to another quarter,

Early in 1421 the dauphinists gained two notable successes. In January Buchan and Wigtown returned from a recruiting visit to Scotland with large reinforcements. On Jan. 27, the daunhin, heid a council of his leading supporters at Seiles, where they discussed how the English might best be resisted and Charles VI delivered from Burgundian domination. It was resolved to summon the States-General of Languedosl to Clermont for May 1, and meanwhile to prosecute the war with vigour. Already, indeed, an important enterprise was on foot, and on Jan 28 the lord of Chaumont-Quitry and the viscount of Narbonne captured Villeneuve-sur- \text{\text{\text{onne}}, and wrote to the dauphin.} begging for reinforcements which would enable them to take Josephy, a few miles up the river. The stroke cut off Paris from a valuable source of supplies, and added greatly to the sufferings. which the citizens were undergoing?. At Sens, a short distance down stream, there was a Burgundian garrison under the lord of L'Isle Adam and there were several other places in the neigh lear hood held by Burgundian troops. The dake gave

¹ A few miles east of Sealm.

¹ Monste av 20.

^{*} Jun 562. * Ibid. 5643 Benocourt, 1 333 n., 335 * J. Charsier (Vallet de Viriville), iii 324 ng 3 Benicourt, i. 229, 329

Third aga sq. The date is wrongly given by all the chroniclers who mention the event, Monotrelet, who puts it in February (iv. 35), being nearest the truth. The place is called Videnesse a Ros by consemporary writers, but the letter prised by Peaucourt and the account in Trahaons de France (exted below) leave so doubt that the town new called Villagaray-say-Vacas is pagent.

¹ Moseur. w 153 Cordstors, 290

orders that these forces should constinct to recapture V lleneuve in the spring, but L'isie Adam, apparently with none but his own men, attacked the place during February. He seems to have been too weak to push the siege with vigour, and his troops suffered much from hunger, the dauphinists intertenting a convoy of bread on its way from Joigny Presently. he learned that a rel of force under Narbonise was near at hand, He had been objiged to send his horses away for lack of fooder: so, fearing to encounter Nathonne, he was fain to bury his artillery and retreat on foot. Next morning the viscount are ved, and, finding no besiegers to fight, immediately grade for foizhy. but he too, had soon to retire, since he could get nothing for his horses to est in the snow covered country. L'Isle Adam shortly afterwards betock himself, with many of his men, to the neighbourhood of Troves! Apart from a fraitless attempt or his part. to be be the capture of Videneuves, the Burgurdians seem hence. forth to have left the place alone; but the Parisians managed to make an agreement with the captain, whereby he a lowed food to pass down the Yonne to Paris on payment of a duty?

The loss of Villereuve, serious trough it was, mattered less to the Anglo-Burgundian cause than events which were happening in Picardy. There Louis Bournel, captain of Gamaches, had turned daughtrist immediately after the publication of the treaty of Troves*, and Henry's departure for England was the signal for a number of other sords in the region to follow his example. Of these by far the most important was Jacques d'Harcourt, count of I ancarville in right of his wife, lord of Montgornmery cousin of the court of Aumale*. He had been identified all his life with the Burgundian cause, having been brought up with Duke John's but his distake of the treaty of Troves was intenshed by anger at Henry's detention of his wife's lands of the courty of Tancarville. Some time during 1410 he with frew to Le Crotov*, where he had been entrusted by noth dukes. John and Philip,

It were des archives municip. (c. 6)

La Roque, Hist. de la Masson d'Harcourt, i. 6:0 :00.

He was it. on he Burgu dun side in December, 1419, when be said a causes to the duke for the nege of Roye (La Picardie, iii. 146)

Trabaton, zét app., a somewhat incoherent but a full and vivid account; of Momus. iv. 30.

Trabaton, zét.

Momus. iv. 35, Cordeliert, ago.

Peris. App. 200. It was malely believed in the my phinarh, and that the treaty of Transce banced Parchies over to the rule of other Duly Philip or Henry and Above the most depts are to Para and other pages to process against it (A. Ledies, Vide & Abbevale lev torse des archives many up. 5.)

Ferse, 35.

with the custody of the castle. He fortified the town and for a while preserved an ambiguous attitude. Early is 1421, how ever, he began to show his changed sentiments. Fitting out a ship, he seized in the harhour of Etaples a vessel belonging to a local lord of Burgundian sympathies, and refused to obey the duke's order to surrender it. At the appeal of the victim, the lieutepant of Ca a s. William Bardolph), attacked the harbour of Le Crotoy, and pursed the shipping there, but Harcourt raided his enemy's estates, and called to his aid a number of lords of Ponthieu who were openly or cover'ly dauphinist. Not a few joined him, he soon got possession of St Vaiery sur Somme and many strong places in Vimeu and the Somme valler, he made war on the highish by sea and land, capturing many ships and much property; and he even surprised and took the rows of Euin Normandy, though he was soon driven out. He now began to receive help by sea, and he was, of course, a serious menace to communication between England and France as well as between Paris and the Netherlands⁸. Intercourse between these two had to be conducted along a parrow corridor through Amiens, and even this was in danger of being cut by a junction. between Harcourt's men and the dauphinists about Com nègne.

As an offset to the gains of their enemies the Burgundians could point to nothing better than the capture of Château Thierry³, while the English had wasted their strength in a futue raid which Clarence, at the request (it is said) of the people of Chartres, led through Beauce to the borders of the forest of Orieans. He afterwards withdrew to Normandy ⁴. From the military point of view, the dauphinist cause was certainly in the ascendant when the approach of spring rendered possible the more ambitious movements which resulted in the battle of Baugé.

It is generally very difficult to discover what happened in a mediacva, battle, indeed, where it took place is often a matter of doubt and controversy. And among battles Baugé is assured y one of the most perplexing. In the first place, the evidence about it is exceptionally hererogeneous. As a rule,

Gillardes van Severen Cocson Marascent, pp. 427, 4292 Rot. Nuces. 1 Hen. V., p. 2, m. cl. d., hu. Roll y Hen. V., Pasch., April 1, 1421 ^{*} Cordelant, 2941 Monstr. iv. 214 Femin, 152.

* Monor: iv. 39. The this is not clear, but the capture apparently took plans should reports of a pattle fall naturally eath two well-marked groups. those from the victors and those from the vanguished, and at we may rudge from the experience of the Great War, the victors, version is like a to be the source to the truth. But at Hause' there were enginers of two nations in the victorious agent. and the impression left in the Scottish accounts of the battle differs greatly from that left by those of the horn, hid supplies to We have, nesites, not only hop ish versions? but several reports by Burgard as writers. One is tempted to place great relaince on the last, for their accounts are clear and longs steet. Some of them, too were force at with military affices, and they had less temperation than dough most brench, Scott, or English to distort the facts. But the value of the Burgundian sources in gravely arrested by the fact that no flugguadians were engaged in the buttle, and the writers must have eith ned their priormation through the medium of people with strong nitional projudices. It is even possible that they reflect the off all story put about by the haglish to a lay apprehension

To be found in the Liber Pluschedensa and Bower's Continuation of the Scotithe Scottash leaders (see below, p. 307, n. 1).

* Of these the most notable are Giller is Bouvier, after the Fierald Berry (very

Catalan Aug v. Country, Jean Jaresa dea min, and the Briggins to be Love. nature bear at the series for I can't recent to the order of a present of a series of the Chromogue dis Beligious were study written by Jean Chartier (La Chronique socidite de Jean Chartier, ugun-14 50, et les dermers livres du Belignene de Le Deca, in Buil de Barton (battus pp. 4 eq.) and le throught acon de Jose Chartier, in Aximano-Bollerin de la Soc. de l'Hist de France, 1916 pp. 114 eq.) Bourdigné's Chronoques d'Anjous et de Maine, though not written till a hundred your later, contains some meful information, butet partly, it mens, on rocal andition, partly on a dauphinest source which had evidently been known also to the Retail Berry

I The more exception my Managham is regions now after the recess Band may a When common spine unique invarious about the neg money of the hat in product w the tribute the expect of the Letter are and the A the bits Here is which to the tribute the expect of the terms of News Const Controller Harmon, and L as barten the of Arra, bib W q. # res 1993 b ti R. th. 210 199.5 Part no art oc may it go has an address dent access which is closely followed in the to draw of Arms White as a sufficient think, he and the authors of the occupie of Aure chross is but a newton source perhaps Bases's Acte Regis Heaviet V (E.H.R. all. 504). Hade's sufernose to a John Besset (p. vsii) I take to be asserly a slip-

The best is Le Yêvre, who has starty details pursuent to himself. The Cordeliers through adds a few particulars. Manuscraft has notic that is not to be found in either of them. Chastellam's account is evidently beard in part on information of dauphinest

F. Nombly Le Fives, who had been at Agences set, but also Monomiet and Chartellain.
Le Fives, a see pathwar research the English. Charte are series; a fewer-lags out. here. For their a course are more impactual than been of the English. Economic of dauphimut writers who go into detail.

among their alles?. On the whole, then, the Burgundian narranges must be handled with causion, their very clearness and reasonableness betray the natural tendency of the judicious nurrator to simplify and harmonise the facts which he has gleaned; and to get near to the vivid impressions of the actual participants in the first, one must look in other quarters.

The weighing of the evidence relating to the hattle is complicated by the singular course which events took. The English were undoubtedly deteated, and consequently were more likely than their opponents to distort the facts. But their misfortunes all occurred in a short spell of hand to-hand fighting, in the sequel hinglish generals in and morale appeared at their best, and the French saw many of the fruits of victory slip from their grasp². One may expect, therefore, to find that numerous important facts were suppressed on both sides, that the French and Scottish accounts are the better for the main conflict, and that for what followed more credence should be attached to the statements of the English.

On every phase of the batile, however, French, Scots, and English have some hing of importance to tell us, and the principal mistake of modern writers has been to follow authorities of one nation only, sphoring or summar ly rejecting the rest. It must be remembered that the batile began unexpected v. Neither side occupied a position deliberately chosen beforehand. There was lettle opportunity for displaying tacheal seed. The actual fighting was almost entirely hand-to-hard. In all probability the combalants seldom had a very clear notion of where they were, they saw the enemy and fought him. Under such conditions it is not surplining if the reports of those who took part in the fight are contradictory. No one

I A comparison of the account of the "Bourgeois" (1913q) with those of Le Francisco. Monacount region in a toget portrage and for the suspense. He account to ever mothing to them, over her so have not do have flattening above traces or her og med a common restroe: but there are several remarkable features common and preading to their descriptions of the bastice.

These broad facts appear at authorisms of every than.

I Mr. C. L. Kingsford (Henry V., 343 aq.) selies almost wholly as English writers, though he cites Monstrelet and Chantellain. He agnored the dauphinest and Scottish chroniclers and so is led to speak of the battle as "a skirmish," which is no doubt how contemporary Englishmen wished to regard it. The authorities be empty in some er, are has ded with great according and he be up out clearly be emercial by ures of the source of the third of the source of the time. Which is have all almost exclusively in Joan Justice des Union, does not even reveal the title that a currence a tabled by hereigh from the north. As an authority for the battle tedard. Jest Javines can among the dasparent where could give a general impression of the course of the action, for no one had one. Each man simply fold what had happened to him personally, and so the vivid stories in the Liber Physicaralor is, the chronicle of the Herald Berry, Hardyng's chronicle, and the Fite Henria, though differ no wately from one another. may yet describe accumitely what was seen and experienced by the eye-witnesses from whom in all likelihood they were directly der ved1.

Circumstances conspired to make a pitched battle more likely in March, 1421, than it had been since Agricourt. Henry had a ways warted one, but his narrow escape in 1415 had evidently taught him caution, and he would never expose his army to the risk of being taken at a disadvantage. But Carence had shared neither the glory nor the experience of Agincolit, and he was consequently ready to face much greater. hezards in order to provoke a right. The dauphinists, too, were in a confident moed, heartened by their recent successes, the arrival of Scottish conferenceis, and the absence of Henry, whore, reasonably or not, they feared more than any other English commander. Further, the Scottish leaders were evicenty in high favour with the dauphing they had not inherited the Fabian tradition of the days of Charles V, and were no doubt eager to demonstrate the injustice of the spects which the brench were directing against them as wine-hibbers and mutton guzziers? So it came about that early in March each side had a considerable army assembled. Chirence's force, formed raigely from the garrisons of Normand vand numbering probably some 4000 men, mustered at Bernayl. Where the daupninist army assembled is not certain, but their enemies believed that they were in Anjous, though a few days before the bittle they were evidently near Tours? The force consisted almost entire y

almo in Beaucourt, i. 455

In compoung the narrative which follows I have tend to guide myself by the considerations just noticed. I am aware that nearly every statement in it might be challenged with the support of a contemporary authority. That disadvantage, however, would extract any attempt to meat a full account of the spirmuose which maintained m the bettle of Bange. 3 Beaucount, i. 120, 135

[&]quot;Devoratores vani et multenum mebulones," Scotic bron. (Hearne). iv 1109 m. i. "intutorium commercores et vini consumptores et hambores," Pluscard a de se et 4 Coll of Arms, M.S. M. p. f. alac Halle, 10 c. De the numbers of the force, see below, pintouring Probabis rear Pisters (Country, 182 n.,). Charter [Vallet de Viriville], at 3.04. * Money, is 27). * Money, is 37; Chart is 23; * Letter of the dauptin to the inhabitants of Cours, March 20, Learning, 1000 a of Scots, under Buchan and Wigtown, but there were also a number of French nobles and knights, headed by the lord of La Favette, one of the dauphin's marshals. Carence moved first. He advanced rapidly southward through Maine, crossing the Huisne at Pont-de-Gennes^a and the Lore at Luché^a. He passed through Bauges, and then, having received the surrender of many towns and strongholds on his march, he came before Angers and made preparations to besiege it. But the place was stronger. than he expected, the garrison refused to give battle, and, having knighted a number of his followers, among them his bastard son^a, he withdrew to Beaufort-en-Vailée, which he made his headquarters while his troops plundered the surrounding country.

Meanwhile the dauphinists had advanced from the east towards Carence's line of communications. On Good Eriday, March 21, they were at Le Lude on the Lours. On the same day they pushed forward to Hauges, having been strengthened by a force of Angevins who had been collected by the lord of Fontaines but had found the English too strong to attacgas, The combined force was stationed at Vieil Baugett. It was thus on Clarence's line of retreat to Normandy.

The dauphinist leaders had selected La Lande Charles, a village about six miles south-east of Baugé, as the place where they would offer battle. They had not, however, intended to

1 Cagny, 2191 Juv. 364, Commot, 1803 Chart. 1. 225, 2273 Monar, 24. 38

Pluscard, i. 355; A. Lecoy de la Marche, Le Ros René, i. 39, n. z.

* Col. of Arms, NIN M. 9, f. x.ii., Hade, 105, Punt-de Gennes is in dep. Sarthe, are Le Mans, caut. Montfort

Coll of Arms, M.5. M. 9, f. this, Halle, 1957 Lucité le se dep. Sarthe, art. La. Pièche, cant. Le Lude

- Jur. 564, Lib. Pluscard. ii 355.
 Vias 30x sq.; Wale, ii. 538 sq.; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), fig.
- Bourier, 440; Bourdigne, il. 141; Coil of Arms, MS M. 9, f. zin, Halle, 103.
 Bourier, 440; Cagny, 119; Cousinot, 180; Bourdigne, 18, 141; Wale, il. 355
 Pluscard in 355; Scottchron (Hearne), 17, 121.
 Bid., Letter of Scottsh earls in Beaucourt, 1, 120.

in Bourdagné, il. 141

4 Ibid. Vict. Bauge is a village about a mile south-west of the town of Bauge, and, lake it, on the right bank of the Coussion. It had been an important place until the eleventh century, when count Fulk the Black had built a castle on the bill protected by the statem of the Couston and Alize. The castle became known as flauge, and gave its name to the town which grew up round it. The new town soon eclipsed the old one, which in the fifteenth century had already sunk to the rank of a value (Berne de I fir y u. 1 176 sqq , 0 74 sqq ; C. Forr, Dictionnaire Historique, grographique et biographique de Maine et Loire. 1 123 sqq ; Bur the town was still Peut Boage "and the visinge. Grand Baugé. Bouwer 440 ; and even it the smooth current the town was sometimes distinguished as Jeung Baugh (Bourdiged, fo. F42) fight till Easter Monday³, indeed, it was afterwards pretended on both sides that an understanding as to the time and place of the pattie had been reached?. Ciarence, for his part, was unaware of the proximity of the enemy force until he was at dinner on the Saturday, when his foragers brought in some Scots whom they had explured. Clarence questioned them in English and they revealed the presence of their comrades and the French at Bauge. The duke immediately rose from table. saving, "Let us go against them, they are ours " Except for the archers of his body guard, he would take with him only mea-at-arms4, perhaps, as some said, that he might give the lie to the taunt that the English victories were due entirely to there bown en, but more probably because it would have taken time to collect a substantial force of archers, most of whom were foregoing, and he feared lest the enemy might retreat before he could engage them. With him went the earls of Somerset and Huntingdon, the former's brother Edmurd Beaufort, John Grev count of Tancarville, and Lords Roos and Fitzwaiter*. Luckily, as events proved, the earl of Salisbury was left behind, with orders to collect the rest of the army and fellow as soon as possible? Clarence and his party rede as fast. as they could, though Huntingdon remonstrated in vain against the rashness of what they were doing?. Near Bauge Letter of such, Beancourt, a. 220. According to Scottchron. (iv. 2224), the Beattish leaders on a league in Lettinde that Camera to it of that grand that he was at Reach of E. This belief is expressed in both English (Bear, ii. 427, Kingsford, Lett. 320), French (I or 364, and according Pincard ii. 255, writers. Jean Jasenal and the author of the I. F. Pincard according to the Champe of the ingresses to the other writers have greaters to other writers have great a charge, and the course of exents mount that an argument tools can have taken place.

^{*} Bouvier, 440, Bourdigné, il. 142, Wale, il. 338,

* Bouvier, 441, Bourdigné, il. 142, Cagny, 120, Plustaed. il. 155; Vita, 302; Beut, ii. 442, 453, Lavie brus, & aguloris, & v., 119, 11.

First, 303, Wass at 139

Vita, 303, Wass at 139; Hardyng, 334, Brut, it 427,448,463,492, Chart I nages a Juv. 359; Bouviez, 442; Consinot, 150. The story that Clarence was the victim of the treathers of a Landbard, which is all lands resect a relation by an heart of Tair (1 % and Surveible 'a Rt. the nature's serson by a quote about this arminale search is to be the conserved the work of Baster, Hanson and Nature in Cola of Arms, MS M 9, If this hyndrig of E.H.R. all, 520), where stappears. It cannot, however, be true; for had he language ready been extract to their down by a singleta and every English and Burguration writes would regard have usued at the extrust. As it is, owner of them had at reachers on he part of the enemy commanders. Bourgeo 5, 1404 Brut, is 427, Kingel etc., Let. 4.03.

Water 139.

Vita, 302; Hardyng, 334; Bourdigné, ii. 142, Tet bien luy menbioit n'y retre jaman henre."

Calbert Umfraville, with five men at arms, came up, and begged Clarence to turn back and keep Easter before offering battle. "If thou be afeard, go home thy way and keep the churchyard," reguled the duke adding that Umfraville had won great glory with the king, while he (Clarence) had gained none. Umtraville urped that Clarence's company was not strong enough to give battle and that the rest of the arms knew too little of his intensions to furnish effective support. Devertheless he would not desert his leader, and they rode on "aye chiding by the way! " Meanwhile Clarence's advancing force had been deser ed by La Fayette, whom Buchan had sent out with a party to inspect the ground at La Lande Chasies where they intended to fight on the Monday!. Hastening back, they gave the alarm. the English to lewing hard at their heels?. It was now late in the afternoons, and the Scots and French were scattered, some resting, some amusing themse vest. Clarence made for the bridge over the Conasnon near the castle of Bauge, the approach to which was swampy4. On the far side were some of the Scots at their sports or their prayers. Hardly had the attirm been given. when the Fig ish banners could be seen coming through the woods towards the bridge. Shouting for help, the Scots snatched. up what weapons they had, thirty men sent by Buchan under-Robe t Stewart of Railstone appeared at the critical momentaand a hundred more, belonging to the retinue of Walter Kenness, rushed down from an adjacent church, where they had been quartered. The herses of the Lighsh refused to face the storm of arrows which carrie from the Scots. U arence and • Hardyng, 134 sq. I have modernized Hardyng's spelling.

Letter of the Scottish earls, Beaucourt, I 120, Scotichron. (Hearne), 19 1414.

Ibid. 1214 iq.; Ploscard. i 354.

Godefror, Annotavous, 732, Pluscard t. 3531 Waln to 2393 Latin Brut (Kingsford, i.e., 310

Planeard, i. 154 (a very vivid and convincing account), Scottchron. (Henrie), iv. 1415, Juv. 564. Cagny, 229.

R has song been known as the Point des Férs, and in some distance to the cast of the last song been known as the road from Sauthur nort enters the town (Point, the modern bridge over which the main road from Saumur now enters the town (Ports i. 223, 226, 228, C. Frayne, Le Folk Lore du Baugron, 31) The bridge is mentioned by Hardyng (335), Scoutchron. (iv. 1215), and the "Bourgeon" (151), though the tan earlier little weight a ruch a major. Other written small merely of a difficult crossing of a river (Vits, 302; Le Favre, it 33; Monor, 17, 31; Chiec i. 414). Walsingham (ii. 319) refers to the swamp, and the statement that Clarence crossed the state near he castle, a detail of great value, as in Vita, 10 a Franciert 1 3 4 * Scottehren (Rearne), iv cazg; Pluscard + 355, Juv. 364. This may have been the pursely entered of St. Leonard, which then stood close to the act of the present hospitals the chapel of St Sulper on the banks of the Alberty or the exapel of St Michel, which was on the slope above the bridge—probably the last (Port, i. 124, 226, 227, 228).

his men had to dismount, and it was only with great deficulty that they at length forced their way over the bridge and alread the Altrée, a small stream which joins the Courseon a few Fundred yards far her west!. They now found themselves faced by a small band of Frenchmen under Jean de la Crojs, who were on their way to join the lord of Fontaines. Fleeing to the parish church, they took their horses inside, barricaded the coors, and hung stones from the tower on the English. These soon realised that they were wasting time, and made off towards Vseil Bauget. In the western outskirts of Bauge the ground rises a little, but beyond the town it falls into a shallow depression, approximately semicircular in shape, with the Courseon as its chord. Across this depression, at a distance of two or three hundred yards from the stream, runs the good to Vieil Baugé. Clarence, wearing over his helmet a golden coronet. glittering with jewels, rode at the head of his men, and he English evidently encountered no resistance until they had advanced some way up the slope which bounds the low ground on the west. Then however, there appeared on the skyline close at hand a strong enemy force, which Buchan, who was leading them, had bastily mustered and got into some sort of erde. Both sides cha grd4, and there followed a desperate hand-to-hand conflict which raged in and around the grave-

 Pluneard, J. 155 sq.; Scottchron. (Figure), iv. case; Wals, M. 159.
 Bourder, 66.; Bourd give, a sqs. I have a dress per book reflected in the margners. by the author of the Vitte Latinica, purchase for exhausty acted counting the servant, by Legals put to Egit a part of he ere ment to return. That the building other them took refuge was the point charters is among terrain for rejuggraphical resource. Beautier, 44.4 Bourdignsh is applied, 303, 203 Le Fevre, it 333 Monate. or, 363 Rectification (Hearing), by and a first note, with the report of the Scottish commandam.

(Basseourt, 1 200), mem to warrant this conclusion. Mr Mowet (259) says, "the breach fought on foot, with the Scottish archers distributed among the men-at-arms." If this were true, it would, of course, mean that the customary rôles of the French and the English were reversed, and that the battle was, so to speak, an inverted Agincount Mr Mowat apparentiv relies on Jean Javénal des Ursins, who says, ' Quand les Francou e. En banda s'ulein : soit la nunce et mar nou de leurs estremu, les ne firem que i un me que because a good graging this have as case and of the bottle is vague and percept, and the magnion just quoted as not confirmed by any authority, though such constact as at attended to the French and Scots could hardly have escaped comment from one or other of the experienced soldiers who wrote about the battle. There would indeed be he terground for conte. Bog tun the Engach boght on feet, as in stated 1. Hardeng fine and my will be flower newto have infrared in the control of the sign there can be no doubt that, having made good their passage of the bridge and swamp, Clarence and his followers remounted, for they would certainly not have tried to walk more than a mile as their armour. The Scots on the river bank were, of course, on foot, and so doubt ethers who could not reach their home in time left aid to their more fortunate commulat to considers a flered. If a source is great for Donive his lateful subservation a decision price about their partim squaster, parties very pedester "....a suggestion that there were men fighting on hard of he's Bouget. Buth sides were constantly reinforces. for the French and Socta had not all governoed when the fight began, and many of he ling she had not been that to keep up with he testers? Throughout, the I nglish were great's outnumbered, the french and Note had at least come engaged, while from start to haish not more than I too how shown can have taken part in the hightest. and the late corners, a rangiang into detain after their king ride and he without possesse of he others, were at a fatal from an back nature. It was interesting a market before and mortist power had time to regarder to the time. I have become the property and the property the first production of the contract of the same of the same of the same of the same of the der and the state of the state to a time to be made the channel of the best of the be en . I con term in the representation of the fight and building or the expend belong that is to find to Continue a leading after an expense a direct (infra, p 306, a. 5).

I be wifer to be her to real time to grant Parish or to green and completely a new more dialog to the control of the property and the property and a first prop Part was a fine or North with the Part of the State of th for the more available a present by man a hardware, a who the date and marries that the act has a Heyman do as a han in die to be a end of the Bengin of Comment of the Section of the Section of straight Bright go been taken of the first about the second to agree over 6 at ever as a format for over this give a section in the safe for ery the reservative to other one deposits and program as past of the scat had signation of the modern monument seems to be more accurate than its inscription.

Pluscard i. 256; Caguy, r g, Monner iv 38; Le Fèvie, ii. 35, Fenie, 153 29 1

Chast. I. 215

2 It is impossible to say for certain how many men were engaged on each side. As was to the growth to the second of the second or the first of the second Scots are given 4000-6000 combatants by Jean Juvénal (264), 6000 by Bower (Scottform to a six of the six of the materials and a second sec cattet of havetpedition a parationo- 7000 by Jean Juvénal (564), 10,000 by Pluscard, (i, were about equal in numbers. Results (7. Charter, iii 169) estimates the dauphin-force at 2000, which is certainly too low, but he does not ascribe more than 4000 to the English Perhaps this is not far from the mark. It would in fact have been practicall. margarage for the first to the first state of the first force specific legisles than the first верга, рр. жас вод.,...

At Hauge the whole of Buchan's force seems to have been at hand, though many distribution of the experimental for the temperature of the experimental form of the experimenta and Godefroy (supra, n. 1) states that the English had 1500 men-at-arms. Jean I for the service of the state of the section the temporal of the section of the amounted to 4000 (5%5). These seems no doubt that as the battle the English were much inferior in numbers. One would expect the Vita Henrici (103) to emphasise this, From (154) that they were "none companion plus que les Engles.

I advantage. The knock of the fire all were terrible. I have green as they are easy that they fought in the great has appear ent carrier his his were in a word were he in 18 Common may one of the prot to tall buth french as the town are gifter nee of their coantritions for distinction of having 4 air hims I receive of the grave land it we and the percent and over

I to agree and his companion with the approximated Barge from the items have too keep against the again which has provided a second to be the bases. It has or receive the females of the first transfer of the Brage attack to the and the state of t the early field by the same to be an experience to the contract of the contrac when the property to agree or go to write a few or to problems up to stony a second and purpose hay march in the first Thin submap measure account their extensions and the same of the same of the destination of the same of the sam Lugach authorities save Hardyng.

The same to have to see the Burgandian weapon have the tradem process with and business or a section of processes and up thing and the state of t the prisoners were not numerous. These are manifest exaggerations. Armong writers of the victorious party Cagny (121) puts the English losses at 1500 billed, Commot produced former for which is a given or in a given Bourdiged (in 143) says that all the English were either killed or capassed, which is probably near the roth. It will be noticed how the dauphinus estimates of the loans of he English confirm the view that they had some 1500 men -4-4-4

Cugmy, tho; Jun 365, Le Fèvre, ii. 35; Chast i. 225 eq 4 Vita, 303.

Bourier (441) mys that Cincener was the first to fall, and Bourdigné (ii. 243) states that he was killed in single combat between the two arms by the ford of Fontai -s picturaque passege, says that the duke fought with wonderful vasour, doing great needs with his sword after his lance was broken. Charles le Bosteiller, however, con him through the stomach, the biade entering under a plate with a booken hingeare a to the texture the true to the order of the texture to the texture of the addition of his order newton or a new case to of End fill of the original property for the country of the country o all was hard, they have have the first of the day for the first of the day of ment a practice. Building to the distribution of the re-orproved for the Robbs of Manager of the Common of the Control of Auditor of A to be a set of the s of the meacteenth century his family still cherished the head of the lance with which he was believed to have unhorsed the dube (Douglas, Barosage, 2294 Exch. Rolls of Scotland, iv. pp. classes, 126, 279; Forbes Leith, 17). On the other hand, the author of the Law Floor grants are to provide the sales to make the representation of the en a district to be deer opposited but to advisuous days and begins for Kongress Mare among the same tang and his is as of tange to be at for to have been a proposed if to date to be about to and a little But a box b question to be in the language. Wagtown had no reason to think that the slaver of Clarence was a Scot, or they would assuredly have commended him to the dauphin in their report. In short, Clasence tied by an unknown hand and there may be truth in Waltingham's assention (i 139) that the victors did not know of his duck usual the hodies of the dain more marched after the fight

Cubert Umfraville were also arriong the dead the early of Harring dor and percent I dround Beaufort and Lord Figwaiter were taken prisoners?. I have who survived stattered in various firections. Some carried the bad news to Beautores, name field worth, hot a planword unit, the fair of dailbress enabled there to riude their enemies in the woods?, The in-ses on he other are were relatively aim. It and of their notable man only Change in House le and the lord of I columns are is to have perished, and hardly one Scot of distinction.

There remained halisburn's force consisting majorly of archers, with their release to Normands cut off. Some of he Fig. ish and Burgungan writers give the impression that they came up which a after the counter to Ciaren ex men, that the become h withdress before them after alight resistance, that they rescued Carence's body, and remained may ery of the holdin which that the nonnurs of the day and the course to custory les with the hing, sha is become of the seque to Ciarence a misfortune will not, however, haid water. It is in the few slace

² Vita, 2033 Wals. ii. 3395 Hardyng: 3385 Kingsford, Lat. 2395 3395 Halls, 206. Manager of the Broom of the Person of the Court of Pluscard, 1, 156; Bouvier, 44x, Bourdigné, il. 143; St Denys, vt. 456; Juv. 565; Bouvier to garage and the first the first to the first make it "Quint," Beaucourt, i. 120. On this true, see G E.C (ed Gibbi), l. 151.

* For the panoners, see Visa, 1033 Wals. ii. 1394 Hardyng, 31 g. Reus, ii. 437, 447. φρα, Kangsford, Lit. 189, 295, 319, Chron. 73, 127; Monete iv. 18; Feine, 154; Scouchron. (Hearne), iv. 1216, Phistoric i. 136, St. Derys, 11. 436, Bouver, 441; Common, 110, 100, 565, Bourdenis, 1. 143; Beaucourt, 1. 220

* Phosened 1, 355, 3565 Cagmy, car. Cf Walt. ii. 359.

* Chastellass (t. 226) and Monstrelet (iv. 39) put the losses of the victors at 1000tacts have a mandress office in by on a start force force and a long give them as twenty-five or thirty killed, the Liber Photoandentis (i. 356) as eighteen killed; and it mee is receive to good to free trace to a continue to the Scottish early (Best court, i. ser). For the death of Bouteslier, see also Lecoy de la Marche, 1. 39 m.; Pluscard, i. 356, the ford of Fontaines, me Lecoy de la Marche, loc. cit., Mozatr. W. 39.

The falle made a give in present in the weat mark and age in about it are will current. The church of View Bauge has a runted spire, and the story gow that Commence a bearing their operations for the first and as a great decay of a dissorbed transfer and a ways. The horse figures in other tales, and its boof-print may be seen to this day on more than one stone in the neighbourhood, including the big slab set up in a monument of the battar. Another trudition tens how the wheel of a mul on the Common turned round three times with the blood that flowed down from the haude field, and it is said that the process against a first and the same that he is the contract to the c two parishes bearing the same cause (C. Frayne, Le Folk-Lose du Baugeon, 17 100) These expends are not without you as so seems that I are as was in the extinct, and the the expensional made pulse and an investigation has been being a section ground which sloped sharply away to the stream most unlikely that the victorious army, holding a strong position, should have withdrawn when threatened with attack by such a force as Salisbury's. Again, an army with the moral ascendancy attributed to balisbury's does not immediately execute a long and fatiguing retreat after discombing its energies, nor is it so ankious to get away as to resort to discreditable subterruges!. Apart from such considerations, one has to remember that darkness was falling when the pattle er ded^a, and that Salishury was not the man to lead his troops. by night over unfamiliar country into the close neighbourhood of a superior army, still less to set them searching for correses in the dark. There is, moreover, reason to believe that Buchan and Wigtown were in Bauge at midnight, when they wrote their despatch to the daughin? Dauphinist sources. further, have an account of the doings of the English force which differs greatly from what is told by English and Burgundian writers, and from a collation of the two versions at is possible, as it seems to me, to form a good idea of what actually happened.

* 1 79, 2024 Wate. ii. 239; Hardyng, 2354 Brot, ii. 427, 4924 Monate. iv. 36; La

Fren, it. 36.

When the French and Scots ceased pursuing the remnants of Clarence's force, they returned to their quarters in and

* See below, pp. 308 nq
* Scoreberg Orleans in 3.4, Waltingham (ii 339 admits that the English losses would have been much greater had not darkness stopped the confic-

The letter was writing "an easte diete ville de Baugé," by which feute Baugé was slower curtain y mannt. It gives no details of the battle and again featility orbits an airctoin to balls bury's force.

[&]quot;The discurrent used to be it the archives of Albi, but the present archivest set sets of the set that it is a linear mining for more than firsty years. It was proved by Compayed in Lodes baseseques out. A regions add and he Beaucourt it array. There would be no reason to doubt its surfector to were it not that it is segred. In events de Douglas et de." the second name having been torn off. Beaucourt supplies the word "Boucan." In compactive which may be correct, though if so it is strange that the name of the commander-in-chief should follow that of a subordinate. It is, however, the other name that raises a mails arrows in the law. For the ran of Douglas was in fertuand, we alrow, p. 116, where about the time he enact have been intrained to overtice from the ry. Backer's associate, Arch, and Louglas, not of he ran was air of Migroup, subject to be a victor, and to record from he transfer the Compagn of Angers used by Lever de la Marche and Condefroy (above, p. 124, h. r., and by arrest fact, final miners. It is not set and to defroy (above, p. 124, h. r., and by arrest fact, final miners. It is not set and to set, as it is not de Victor," Counted to Victor, "I be come de Victor," Counted to the latter police of it this time (cf. Each, Rolls of Scotland, it p. chitzili), but when so many french written by the strike, who was perhaps a local notary, ignorant of the correct style, total and order of presentance of them hereign i refu

1 Letter of earls (Beaucourt, t. 22 t); Juv. 36 3; St Denys, vi. 4 36

Bouvier, 441; Jun 565

Hardyng, 3353 Vita, 2013 Halle, 106, Coll. of Arms, MS. M. 9, f. nliv

4 Bent, 11 492, Wals. ii 339.

* John, Bastarit of Clarence, described as a king's kinght, received revenues and card at feeling? To the re-VI in 1446 and 1419 as a reward for his mercuis. Kym m. 406, 427 sq.). In Dec. 1429 he was about to sait for France with 49 mentat-arms and 700 archers (Cal. Pat. 1419-16. pp. 41 sq.). On July 3, 1437 he was appointed constable of Dubdin castle (ibid. 222).

Figure 11, 406; Brut, il. 427; Kingsford, Lit. 293; Hardyng, 335; Halle, 106; Coll. of Arms, MS. M. 9, f. xlav; Morate 27, 39; Vita, 303. That he recome of the duke's body took place on the morating after the buttle seems probable when the encountrate are considered and the accounts of the various authorities compared. Halle and the 1, large 4 Arms chronic a 135, har t larence into had burn left thin and at Beaufort and that he was still these when he heard of the heginning of the fight. He crossqueries a sold not have reached lining till long after dark, not everything nouris to be have no hear there during he long out set we next day. The 1 args of Arms chronicle adds that the rescuers haved the dead, with the exception of Clarence and other lords; thus, if true at all, can refer only to the corpore of some of the more notable arising. That the flutted many exception when does to he fait that most of the enemy though were or the same rate of lining but loss the ling in the reof from the villages as many doors as they could conveniently remove, and laying these on carts they made a bridge on which they quickly crossed the river. Thence they hastened across southern Maine to Le Mans. When they approached the town, they found that the bridge over the Sarthe had been broken. but the English advance guard, putting white crosses on their coats, persaaded the people of Le Mans that they were breach and induced them to mend it. The English, or entering the town, are said to have some a hundred of the inhabitants, way we are not told. It was not until Salishurs's to ce was across the Loir that the victors of Bauge discovered its whereabouts. Then they rode straight to Le Mans, but found that the English had broken down the bridge behind them and had passed through the town. They therefore gave up the pursuit, and left Salisbury to make his way to Normandy2.

The battic of Bauge was a momentous event, and some of its consequences will be described and discussed below. But to the student of military tactics and strategy it offers ittle of interest. Salisbury's recreat was obviously conducted with year, great skill, and could only have been accomplished with troops of high quality, but we have no detailed knowledge of his dispositions during the march. As for the battle itself, it was little more than a disorderly scuffle. Except when actually giving and receiving blows, Clarence cuts an amazingly poor figure. His folly in rushing off from Beautort with a small force against an enemy of uncertain strength was perhaps no worse than Heary's when he set out from Harfleur on the march which led to Agincourt; but before that battle Henry at least took whatever factical measures he could to ensure success, whereas on reacting Baugé, Clarence rushed at the enemy like a bull, and, if we have interpreted the authorities correctly, let his force, small as it was, come into action piecemeal. His suicidal perversity, however, was well matched by the stupidity and slugg shiness of the Scottish and French leaders after their victory. If they had caught Salisbury, Henry's chances of enforcing the treaty of Troyes would have been ruined, and the verdict of Cast llop would very likely have been ant cipated by thirry years. But, with all the cards in their hands, they threw away the game, and suffered the escape of the most able soldier in France.

Borner, 444; Jur. 1965; the shughter at Le Maor is mentioned by the Bourgeon, Bourme, 4413 Jur. 363

Tidings of the battle reached the dauphin at Politiers on Faster Monday². The first report declared that the Scots had fied and that the victory had been due to the French. This caused surprise, according to a Scottish writer²; but Charles at once went to church, where a specia. Mass was sung and a sermon preached in honour of the good news². The real facts must soon have become known, and, to ser all doubts at rest, the Scottish lords presented themselves at Tours a few days later with their prisoners, the French having none. Charles sharply rebuked those who had spoken against the Scotts⁴.

Authoritative news of the battle did not reach Paris till Friday, April 4. Processions were at once organised to pray for the safety and prosperity of the realm and the city. A week later the Grand Conseil enjoined all it embers of the Parlement to observe the terms of the treaty of Troves and to report ail who should say or do anything against it. Letters in Charles VI's name were sent to the principal towns with the object of reassuring the inhabitants, who were told that Henry and Duke Phil p would soon return⁶. On receiving the news the dake of Burguisdy went into mourning again and had a service for Clarence's soul very ceremoniously sung in the church of St Vasst at Array? The battle caused an immense sensation and the wildest runiours were about. At Bruges for instance, it was reported that Charles VI was dead, and that the dauphin had entered Paris after inflicting on the English a great defeat in which Clarence was killed, and a speedy agreement between the two realms was expected in consequence. In Italy, too, the ser ousness of the English deteat was much exaggerated; it was beneved in some quarters that Henry himself had been k lied"; and the most important developments were anticipated16 At Rome the news was said to have drawn from Pone Martin V the famous mat, "Verily the Scots are the antidete of the English","

L Bouvier, 441; Juv. 565.

Plucard.i 177

Fauquembergue, it is eq.

^{*} Plucard a 1574 of Countrie Life.

^{*} Beaucourt, i. 223; Doven, Hist de la ville de Beauvan, i. 6 s. The government had other grounds for concern, for Consume used of Charles, raptain of Rheims, had afrey been taken personer by the dauphinists, and so April 7 s letter had to be written to the utilizers, etc. etc. etc. etc. of the utilizers etc. etc. etc. of the tail to 6 Baugh. Le Moven Am. See 21, 222 and 2 an Age, Ser H, and 13 apq ; of Le Cabinet Historique, 1. 39 sq.)

Cordellers, 294.

Thele was a series of the Cabinet Historique, 1. 39 sq.)

^{*} Thid noz, n. 4. Se Thid 198 sqq ... "Vere Scoti Anglorum times sunt," Scotichron (Hearing), iv 1216.

CHAPTER LXX

THE ANGLO-BURGUNDIAN RECOVERY

Among the dauphinists, as in more remote quarters, high expectations were aroused by the battle of Baugé. In their letter written just after the fight, the Scottish earls had begged the dauphin to join them and invade Normandy at once, "for, with God's help, all is yours!." There was no doubt much boastfu. talk, and Charles himself, explaining to the inhabitarits of Lyons his absence from the meeting of the States-General of Languedoil at Ciermont on May 12, declared that he had been advised to go in force to Normandy*, and at this same assembly the deputies had offered counsel as to the treatment of the Normans that might surrender to him3. In reality, however, the dauphin's movements were marked by characteristic sluggishness. I hough he left Poitiers on the day when the news of the battle reached him, it was not till March 30 that he reached Tours. There he remained ten days and he d a full courts, entertaining at dinner the Scottish leaders and their English prisoners. The Scots were naturally in high favour. On April & Buchan was at pointed constable of France. Lands and other gifts were bestowed on the Scottish captains, and John Stewart of Darnley received an astrologer, who forthwith predicted the approaching deaths of Henry V and Charles VII. On April 8 the dauphin left Tours for Chinon, where he stayed a week; from the 15th to the 28th he was at Saumur; on April 29 he at last visited Bauge", and from there he went, by way of Le Mans, to Sab e, where on May 8 he signed with the dake of Brittany the treaty already described10.

 Sai above, p. 290

Letter in Beaucourt, i. 458 m. · Bestecourt, i. ant. Di Grandmanou, Nouveaux Documents sur les Etats Généraux du XVª siècle, s.r.

^{*} Besucourt, 2. nan; Counnet, cla. Reg. KK 50. Chimore aux deniers of dauphin, quoted by Vallet de Vinville, ¹ Chartier, in: 314, also in Cabinet Historique, 19, 175.

Sousinot, 1814 Bonvier, 441, Scottchron (Hearne), iv 2218; Benediert, 1, 181.

^{*} Ibid 225 * Letter of Jean Caille, in Beaucourt, 1. 456 sq ; Bouvier, 441.

Meanwhile the opportunity of jushing home the success gained at Bauge had in great measure been thrown away, During April there seem to have been no indirary operations. on either side. Nothing is known of the last stage of Salis Lury's retreat after Bauge, but he apparently hastened back to Normardy without making any sensus attempt to hold Le-Mans!. The news of the battle must have become publicly known in Rouen on April 3, if not before, for on that day the binder were ordered to seize into the king's hand the possessions. of Clarence and the others who had been slasn? On the same day, the authorities forbade anyone to leave Normandy except with beence under the great seal. On April 8 orders were issued that all soldiers and all Englishmen were to report at once to balisbury, the seneschal, or the caprain of an English. garnson for service at the king's wapes. The proclamation of the previous January foroidding arbitrary requisitions was republished, and the Norman builts were ordered to visit every part of their spheres of jurisdiction with a view to repressing all malefactors and disturbers of the peaces. That strict precautions were necessary was shown by a muttiny of the garrison. of Valognes*. Shipping was placed under close control, and measures were taken to ensure an adequate supply of grain for the army. On April 24 a circular was sent to a number of captains of towas and castles. It stated that many of them had been exceeding their powers and committing acts of oppression, and therefore defined the limits of their authority and added certain injuritions. They were not to usurp civil jurisdiction, but were to defer to the officers, military or civil, set over them by Henry. No goods were to be levied from communities or individuals. As soldiers often committed acts of extertion to get means to pay for their vices, they were foroidden to keep women or have any irregular intercourse with them; transgressors were to be imprisoned for at least a month, ³ Bravier, 44 a fur 16 c. Cagnie, 33 i. A day series absorbe buile of Bangé, however, the Scot ish capta as were flavoure. Le Maiss, —a phease which suggests may the place offered at least a little resolution (fouthert Documents méditione la guerre de centrant. () Wassingham for $30.50, was that after the bittle, he exemy took a firefitted town previously surrendered to Henry, slaughtening, he English garmion. It is hard to assume town this good he bug Le Maiss.

¹ Rym. z. 951q. 4 Rym. z. 99

^{*} Brequigny, 217.

³ Befguteny, 173

D K R. xaii. 426

and should not be released until they had given surety for their future good behaviour. A few days later John Radcaffe was commissioned to inspect all garrisons, reform what he should find armss, and purish delinquents. The English authorities. while keeping a firm hand on the territory under their charge. were evidently resolved that disaffection among the Normans should be allayed as far as possible,

I he respite from warfare which the dauphinists granted him. during April must have been of incalculable value to Salisbury He soon began attempts to recover the mitiative, for at the beginning of May, when the dauphin was at Le Mans, an Finglish force was only twelve mises distant from the town and was believed to be advancing. A pattie was expected, but, for reasons unknown, none took place. After the negotiations at Sablé, the dauphin returned to Le Mans, where he is known to have been with his army from May 14 to 18, being credited with the intention of setting out forthwith for Normandy⁴. It must indeed have been at this time that a force of French and Scots, apparently about as large as that which fought at Baugé, advanced under Buchan and La Favette, and laid siege to Alencon. The defenders were soon reduced to great straits by the bombardment, and sent an urgent appeal to Salisbury. With as strong a force as he could muster he marched on Alencon*. Warned of his approach, the disprinists drew up. their men just outside their siege lines, fortifying their position with their transport vehicles. The relieving force, inferior in is imbers, refused to attack, but marched in good order across the Franco-Scottish front at a distance of less than a canaonshot—a most risky manœuvie. They then retreated, apparently hoping to entice their enemies into a general action on ground of their own choosing. The main force of the besiegers, how

P. Ryun, M. Elin 19.

2. Letter of Jean Caille, in Beaucoust, 1, 456 sq.

Letter of dauphin, in Beaucoust, 5, 457 ng.; Charles, L'Esvasion anglane dans le Masse de 1417 h. 418, 31, m. 1, 18.

This operation is mentioned only by Chastellain (i. 227 199), and Monsteelet (iv 40). Its date is appreximately indicated by an order of May 12 from the Rosen. authorities than all unattached soldiers in four buildinger shall join Salubery and remittablesh maste standards stockers soldiers (Brequegay, 277)

Ryen, z. 100 iqq. Further instructions were inclosed, but these seem to have been lost. It is highly probable that the circular embodies the monage sent by Blessy when he received the news of Brugh Wita, 307 sq. . The daue about women is very charse.

ever, would not be drawn, though a part of it attacked the English rear and inflicted considerable loss in killed and prisoners). Though the attempted renet of Alencon had failed, the siege was shortly afterwards abandoned, and the dauphinist army withdrew, part to the east, part to the south. No doubt it had been recailed by the dauphin, who had changed his whole plan of campuign, perhaps influenced by surprise at the resolute start shown is the English and the facure of the Normans to rush to his aid. However that may be, the French at once had another taste of Salisbury's mettle. For no sooner was Normandy clear of invaders than he led a raid right through Maine into Amou, following a route further west than that of Clarence. The French discovered his intentions in time to take messures of defence, and an attempt, aided by treathery, to capture Château Contier ended with the piliaging of the suburbs?. But the English souts appeared before Angers, and altogether it was the friest raid his captains had ever seen, no important man was lost, and they brought home "the fairest previor beasts that those who saw them ever saw." He offered, if Henry wished, to capture many of the places which he had passed. Rasts of this sort were usually of little or no military value, but if ever one was justified, it was this of Salisbury's. For it was the accomplishment of what Clarence had perished in attempting, and a challenge to the dauphinists to fight a return battle. The challenge was not accepted. The enterprise must have gone for to restore the moral ascendancy over the French which the English 'roops had enjoyed from Azincourt till Bauge, and we may we I believe Salisbury's assurance to Henry that "your Peple is gretly Reffreshed with this Rood" and "dredge neurolasse your Enemye thanne theye don at this Day."

It is true that while Salisbury was a sent from Normandy, the French had attempted an operation lattic iess dazing than his.

b Joubert, Use tentative des Angain contre Chairna Gontier en 1411, 5 194.

* Saliebury's report to Henry, Ryst. 3. 131, dated Argentas, June 21. He had ser usued from the rand on June 13.

Memore the private but the French followed the English as far as the abbry of Birc, which, however, her sudged too strong to attack. These are grow periody asserts that the gras of the hing sh retreat was a strong abbry mear at hard it and, though he supplies that the French immediately af erwards penetrated as far as free. The datable from Asençon to Bee, however, as going that many many, and such an advance would outstantly have been noticed by some dauphinist pe Spotials writer. Purbately Ministrice and Champians confined the attack on Asençon with the solution contraction. Bec

Some of the garrison of Dreux, under L'Estandart de Mul'y, appeared on the morning of June 13 at the abbey of Bec, and were admitted to the fort fications by the above miller. They seized the whole place save a great tower, in which the English garrison, under their captain Ralph Cromwell, took refuge. The defenders, knocking a hole in the tower wil, sent messengers to Bernsy, Hircourt, and other neighbouring places. About the hour of vespers, a body of troops arrived under Richard Worcester, captain of Hernay, entered the tower unseen by the careless French, salled forth, slew many of the French from Dreux, together with two monks and a number of people who had gathered in joy from the surrounding country, took many prisoners, among them the French captain and the abbot, and prhaged the abbey buildings, including the terrib of the Impress Mattida, which was in the choir of the church. On his return from Anjou, Salabury hastened to Bec, only to find it safe in the hands of Worcester. The property of the abbey was afterwards taken into the king's hand; the monks were all driver out save two, the abbot was taken to Rough, the miller and others convicted of treason were casecuted. Heary was eventually convenced of the innocence of the abbot and most of the monks. In October the property of the abbey was restored, and on Al. Samis' Day the polluted church was reconciled. The king, however, ordered the fortifications to be destroyed at the abbey's expense.

Considering the speedy retribution which overtook the French at Bec, barsbury was justified in te ling. Henry a week later that Normandy "stod in good Plit and neure so we'l as nowa." That this was so must be doubt be attributed in part to the stackness and incompetence of the dauphin and his advisers, but in the main it was due to Sahabury. In the whole Hundred Years' War there was nothing more resolute, prudent, and skilful than Salisbury's conduct of the affairs under his direction during the three months between the battle of Baugé and the king's return to France.

While Salisbury was raiding Maine and Anjou, the dauphinis's had embarked on a new military enterprise—the conquest of the country between Maine and Paris. Why their plans were so abruptly changed can only be conjectured. Perhaps the new project scemed easier than the conquest of Normandy. Perhaps at pleased them more to take territory from the Bargundians than from the English. Perhaps atorica of disaffection in Paris encouraged them to hope that they might even capture the capital. They certainly gained much initial success, and the speed with which they overran a large tract of country and the ease with which they took numerous strong places testify to the effect which Baugé had had on the sprits of their enemies as well as their own. Nevertheless, there can be no doubt that the change of plan was a blunder. A boid invasion of Normandy would have forced Sa isbury to give battle, and they might have destroyed his army and ended the war. Instead, they left him and his men at large and spent their vigour and time on reducing a few small and had-hearted garrisons.

¹ Bec Chron. 40 104.3 Verseull Chron 212, Becquigny, 117 14., 126; Ryst. E. 154 PQ - - Nym -n - 1 j t

By May 25 the dauphin was at La Ferté Bernard^a, ready to enter upon the new campaign. He had with him a large force, including 2000 men under Richard of Brittans, younger brother of the duke, 1200 men-at-arms and 500 archers under Alençon and Aumale, and the Scots under Buchan and Wigtown^a. The first place attacked was the castle of Montmirall, which had a Burgundian garrison^a. The walls were battered by numerous siege-engines, and after about a fortnight the defenders capitulated, their captains joining the dauphinist army, and the defences being levelled with the ground^a. Thence the force advanced through Perche on Chartres, taking on the way the strongholds of Boisrurfin, Beaumont-le-Chétif, and Villebon^a. Chartres, however, was held by a strong garrison, which included both English and Burgundians^a. The town was nolated by the capture of surrounding places such as [·] Charles, Invasion, 48, of letter of dauphin to Lyons, Beaucourt, 1. 459-

^{*} St Denys, vs. 464., us. 165, Monter ov. 45, Chast a 2355 Cagny, 1223 La Reque, Masson d'Harcourt, s., Add toons st Corrections, 10., Additions to livre I., Letter of Jaco Caille in Benutourt, i. 446

I The segu was aircray in progress during the last work of May (Churles, op. est.)

⁹¹ sq.)

Letter of dauphut to Tours, Beaucourt, i. 22f.; Cagny, 21 who dates the surrender June 0, St Denys, 12 462, Counsot, 18r., Raoulet, 220, Bouvier, 441

Beaumout, i 22i; Cagny, 12; dates the surrender of Beaumout-le Chéuf June 15. The parc is now Beaumout-les-Autels, dep. Eure-et-Loir, ari. Nogent-le-Rotrou, cant. Authon.

^{*} Leuer of dauphin to Lyons, Besucourt, i. 46 :1 cf. Chast. 1, 23 4.

Bonneval¹, Nogent-le-Roi, Maurepas, and Gallardon². The last was taken by storm on June 25, after a siege of less than three days. The garrison had refused a repeated summons to surrender and the Breton troops were infuriated because one of their captains, Charles de Montfort, had been mortally wounded, so when the town was carried nearly all the inhabitants, armed or not, were slaughtered and the walls in great part destroyed4. The dauphin later took up his quarters at the village. of Sours, about five miles south-east of Chartress. The besiegers opened a vigorous bombardment of the walls and gates of the city, and d.d some damage; but the garrison and inhabitants were much cheered by the arrival of the Bastard of Thian, captain of Sensis, a Burgundian leader of some repute, who, having been sent from Paris with a substantial force, fought his way through the dauphinist lines, taking a number of prisoners. He brought the news that Henry had landed in France*

During April and May, England had seen the preparations with which Henry's earlier expeditions had made her familiar. This "voyage" was of course not so elaborate an undertaking. Stil, ships and men were requisitioned all round the coasts from Cornwall to the Humber? Provision had to be made for the victualling of the army overseas. Workmen of all kindsminers, carpenters, smiths, sawvers, masons, tailors, carters, and unskilled labourers—had to be secured. Horses10 and munitions of war¹¹ must be sent across. Indentures had to be Monsur iv 44, Chast, i 155.

Letter of dauphin to Lyons, Beaucourt, 1, 461, Nogent le Roi capitulated (Fauquembergae, i... 19).

Letter to Tours, Beaucourt, i. 228; Cagny, 222; Consnot, 182 it.; Verneusl Chron 222.

Beaucourt, a. 221; St Denys, vi. 462 sq.; Commot, 18; sq.; Cagny, 222; Raourt, 175; Scottchron. (Hearne), 19. 1219; Morice, Preuves, il. 1097

Besucourt, (221

Michier IV 45; Chart. I. 235; Cordeners, 296; Flammermont, 116, 176
 Ita. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., April 24, May 9, July 17, 1421, Mich. Feb. 14, 1421;

Car Pa 1416-au pp. 384, 387, 388, 390, Ryth at 108 sq. 188, 1904 ba Roll 9 Hen V, Pasch., June 18, 1421; Cal Pat. 1416-12, pp. 387, 388, 1904 Claus. 4 Hen. V, mm. 22, 21.

1 Isa. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 17, June 18, July 5, 1421; Cal. Pat. 1416-21, pp. 386, 387 The taitors were to keep the king's tents in good repair (Cal. Pat. 1416-12). p. 387)

19 hs. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., July 17, 1421; Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 387

h Cal. Pat 1414-12, p. 114-commission to William Scorer of Rotherham to take workmen for making 400,000 arrowheads. A considerable quantity of artillery was evidently transported (las. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., July 17, 14214 Cal. Pat. 1416-12). P- 391) signed with captains, and special measures were taken to recruit archers". Some of the troops and much of the equipment and food were shipped direct to Normandy, but the king himself, with most of the fighting men, was to cross to Calais, and the ships for his passage were collected at Sandwich and Dover! Henry as usual exercised close supervision over what was being done, if we may judge by the fact that on May 13, although his attention was much occupied by parliament, convocation, and the assembly of Benedictine monks at Westminster, he paid a visit to Dover.

By the end of May Henry had left London for goods. After a stay at Canterbury, where many of the troops who were to accompany him had been ordered to assemble, he moved his quarters to Dover. On June 10 the duke of Bedford was appointed guardian (custos) of England during the king's absence, and on the same day the king embarked. Early next morning he landed at Calais10.

When the dauphin a few weeks later estimated the force brought over by Henry at 4000 fighting men'1, he was not far from the truth. There were nearly 900 knights and men-atarms and approximately 3300 archers12, a very large proportion.

1 Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., April 24, 1421; Stowe MS, 440, E 47 b sqq.; Erch.

Accts 50, 10

I Two hundred were to be raised in Christie, and John Arnadel, kt., was to find rog, of which 16 were to be miners (ist. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 17, 14214 Cal. Pat. 14x6-21, pp 346 sq.). Four hundred—men of gentle burth, yeomen, or sons of yeomen—were to be recruited in Yorkshire and Lancashire (Cal. Pat. 24x6-22, p. 342).

1 Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., July 17, Aug. 10, 1421, Mich., Feb. 14, 1411 | Cal.

Pat. 1416-22, pp. 384, 386, 387, 390, 3911 Caros. 9 Hen. V mm. 22, 13 Rym x. 108 eq 1 Int. Roll 9 Hen. V, Pasch., May 27, July 17, 1421, Mich., Nov 2, 14221 Cal. Pat. 1416-22, pp. 341, 387, 383; Stows MS. 440, f. 47 b; Exch. Acetti, (n.)

4 Im. Roll o Hen. V. Mich., March 11 and 19, 1412; Rec. Roll o Hea. V. Parch.,

Мау тапала

* Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., Sept. 4, 1421

* Cal. Pat. 1416-12, p. 341; Chanc. Warr., Ser. t. 667/1058-654 Monste. iv. 41

* Chanc. Warr., Ser. 1, 1364 32; Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V. Pasch., Sept. 4, 1421

* Rym. x. 119 10

Witz, 308 j Cordeliers, 295; La Fèvre, 21, 37. Letter of dauphin to Lyons, Beaucourt, i. 461

If These totals are derived from a variety of sources, the most notable being Stown MS. 440, ff. 47 b sqq , which summarkes a number of indentures; Exch. Accs. 50/ts recording numerous masters taken at Sandwich in June; ibid. 50/10, which checks and cometimes supplements the Stone M6.3 ibid. 50/223 Cal. Pat. 14.6-22, pp 3474 386 sq., 388. Some of the captains no doubt failed to raise all the men for whom they of whom were mounted. Most of the indentures were dated May I and were to run for six months from the date of the first muster, usually fixed for May 23⁸. Arrangements for pay varied. Many captains were promised a quarter's pay in advance³, some even six months', though few got so much⁴; while others, who had merely bargained for monthly wages, managed to induce Walter Beauchamp, the treasurer for war, to give them five months' pay long before it was due⁴.

It is natural to ask why Henry went to Calais at all. Normandy had been gravely threatened when he made his arrangements for crossing the Channel, it was in the west that the main dauphinist force was in the field, and the king's presence was urgently desired in Paris⁶. Had he sailed to Rouen or Harfleur, he could have marched to the capital through territory in the effective occupation of the English, instead of subjecting himself and his men to the fatigues and risks of a long march through country of doubtful sympathies. An answer has been supplied by Henry himself. He had intended, had indented, but records of the musters show that most of the retinue were up to mrength and indeed sometimes above it. Thus, John Cornwall undertook so raise 30 men-at-arms and 90 wehers, and at Sandwich on June 16 musered 19 and 132 (Stowe MS, 440, f. 47 b; Exck. Acres. 50, 1). It must not be sessined that the whole of a captain's retinue necessarily mustered at one place. Some of the men serving under Lord Grey of Codose sailed from Southampton, some from Sandwich (Cal. Pat. 446-42, p. 334; Exch. Acres. 90, 1, 10).

Sig Junest Remany (Lancaster and York, 1, 294, n. 1) and Me Vickers (England to Six Jurise Rumsny (Lancauter and York, 1. 1995, m. t) and Mc Vickers (England in the Later Micela Ages, 1995) relying apparently on Rymer's impulsated transcripts from the Patent Rolls, have jumped to the conclusion that Henry's facto numbered only about 1.000 men, and that these were raised with difficulty. Thave found no cridence that recraits were hard organ, itali less that impressment' was more employed, or describe more feared, than usual (cf. Vickers, 279). If it were true, as Mr Vickers hardon, that only gentlemess or yeomen and their sons were recruited as archers, at would not indicate that men were difficult to secure, but the reverse. As a matter of fact, be weren, the restraction was mentained in only one recruiting commission, the object of which presumably was to gave a serie of raite (Ca). Pat. 1416-12 p. 141. Mr Mowat 1 is ference. 6.1 that Henry means to spend as lattic as possible on this new expectation has no support from facts.

Out of gap recorded in 5 over M5, ago, on vip6 are described as uninvoluted, but the N5 in only a transcript of originals and its accuracy on this point is not above suspicion.

* Erch. Acon. 50/1, 4, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16; Stowe MS. 440, f. 47 b.

Erch. Aceu. gojir.

* Thid 50, to 5 Ibid Doubless it was the need of large sums to fulfil the terms of the indentures that caused Henry to have £17,000 sent down from the Treasury to Dover while he was there (Isa. Roll 9 Hen V, Pasch., Sept. 4, 1421)

* Le Fèvre, 11, 374 Monner, 17, 44.

he said, to put Picardy "in better governance", by capturing the places there which were in enemy hands, and it was the news. that the dauphinists were besieging Chartres which caused him to change his plans and hasten to Paris?. No doubt, however, the desirability of an interview with the duke of Burgandy alsoin nuenced Henry's choice of route. Philip had apparent y done nothing to check the growing power of Harcourt, and it cannot be doubted that he was offended by Henry a behaviour towards. Ja. queline of Hamault. Though he sometimes did things which strained the Anglo-Burgundian alliance, Henry must have been sens ble of its value to him, and obviously something might be done to make it more effective than it had been since the beginning of the year. Still, an interview with Burgundy did. not require the presence of an English army, and Henry's explanation of his movements was no doubt the truth, though not perhaps the whole truth. It is one of the many proofs of the coolness of his judgment. The battle of Bauge he treated as an unfortunate incident, and it had little effect on his military. and political plans. His confidence in Sansbury must of course have been immense, for on April 26, when an invasion of Normandy seemed imminent, he gave orders which show that he had already made up his mind to cross to Calais, and take a multary force with him4. Whether his strategy was right it is hard to say. Certainly Harcourt was a serious merace to Henry's hold on northern France, and so hold and resolute a man was much nore to be feared than the daugh n and his corrupt and small-minded counsellors. To crush him at once would enhance Henry's prestige among the Burgungians and provide a tanginle success to set off against Bauge. And there can be no doubt that Henry would soon have crushed Harcourt f he could have spared time for the task. But the rapidity of the dauphin's advance in Perche upset his calculations. The dauphinist strategy was unsound, but, as not infrequently happens in such a case, it caused much temporary embarrassment to the other side.

Deipit, 131; Jurade, 604.

Delpit, 13 (letter from Henry to the mayor and aldereses of London, dated July 23. 143.1)

8 Jurade, 604 (letter to the people of Bordeaux, dated Oct. gz, 1421).

^{*} Rym. x. 108 sq. The fifty-seven ships due from the Cinque Ports are to be at Sandwich before May 31, for the king intends to cross the sea against his enemas, and desires their survices "in fortificationem Armatic viagu practical"

To put heart into the Parisians Henry at once sent forward a party of mounted troops, whose arrival in the capital caused much rejoicing. Herry nimself, after a few days at Calais, awaiting the arrival of the last troops to embark³, moved on by the coast road to Montreuil. On the way, as he himself tells us, he heard of the siege of Chartres. Near the town he was met by John of Luxemburg and other Burgundian lords, sent to greet him by Duke Philip, who had reached Montreul the day before but was sick of a fever. At Montrevil the king and the duke spent three or four days together?, and they evidently agreed that the destruction of Harcourt must be deferred and that Henry should hasten to Paris while his troops got into position for an attempt to relieve Chartrei⁴. The two next went to Domivast, destroying on their march a tower and mill belonging to Jacques d Harcourt at Maintenays. Not being sure of the temper of the people of Abbessle, the duke now went forward alone to secure their consent to the entry of Henry and his troops into the town. He succeeded with difficulty, and only on condition that no expense should fall on the inhabitants. During his absence Henry went hanting in the forest of Crécy, and visited 5t Riquier, receiving the surrender of the adjacent castle of La Ferré, which had been garrisoned by Harcouri'. The English army merely passed through Abbeville, while Henry, who was honourably received by the townsfolk, spent only one night there. Next day he pished on with his men, after paying all expenses and bidding farewell to the duke of Burgundy, who went back to Artois to collect a contingent for the Chartres relief force. The king soon left his troops behind, and hurried to Paris through Beauvais and Cisors*. He reached

Menste av 404 La Fèvre, il. 37 Cordelien, 293
 Masters continued to be held at Sandwich till June 22 (Exch. Acets. 30/1) Jurade, 8044 Monste av. 483 Cordeliers, 295, Fenne, 255; Chart. 237 de pria agrij Juracle, Soa.

Menste in 45 to . Checklers, 1951 Ferrit 155 Chast 1 151

Menste in 461 Chast 1 235 The antitude of the instabilities may have been due to frac of Harcourt, who on May 14 had surprisoned these to embrace the cause of the doughts Champion, (rund de Fievr, I, 8 ;).

Monte iv 46, Ferin, 151 I be new captain of the cautic seon restored it to the dauphiauts (Moustry loc int.)

" Menter or 46 og , Le Pèrre, it 30. It is characteristic that the Cordelium Chron , one of the earliest records of these proposation woulding of Henry and Siculture at Abbeville, Making sherely (1943) that he and the dalar were "granderious on posturement recess," rerear Chanceman (i. 131) even homes the proposance of Abbre de to admit the Enginh king and says that it yasked only out of deference to the duke Menste u. 47; Le Fèvre, u. 36; Feuquembergue, u. cp.

the city on July 4, accompanied by a small body of men-atarms and archers1.

In Paris things had not been going well for the English cause. As we have already seen, the Parisians were disappointed in their expectation that Henry's arrival in December, 1410. would put an end to their sufferings. Prices, which had men much luring his stay, tended to rise still further after his departure, and there was no alleviation of the burden of the municipal taxes. To add to the prevalent distress, the winter was the longest for forty years, there was snow and frost at I aster, and it remained very cold to the end of May. A morth later the vines had not yet flowered, and there was a placue of externi lars, which did great damage. The more prosperous stirens did what they could to help. On Leb 2 the master of the Hetel-Deu was allowed to issue a special appeal for aid, but of more immediate service was the purchase by certain citizens of private houses which they converted into hospitals for children. By the end of the winter there were three of these, containing in all 120 heds, but such measures were scarcely not ced at a time when people were scrambling for garbage, eating uncooked heros that pigs would not touch, and devouring the carcases of dogs*.

The authorities, English or French, could not be justly barned for the state of affairs. Conditions were bad in many parts of brance. The dauphinist strongholds in the vicinity, increased in number by the capture of Vilieneuve sur-konne, out off many of the normal sources of sumply, and for that matter the government had to take action against the municipal authorities of Amiens and Beauvais, Burgundian though they were, for having arrested Paris merchants and seized food intended for the Paris markets. In the circumstances, however, it was natural that disaffection should be rife. Many Parisans had they to dauphinist regions, and their friends often ^{*} Funqueraturgue is, an Did Henry visit Rouen on his way to Fare — we redependent as in critics say that he did Cochon, abb, benin, 154 and there are estable instructions given by the University of Paris to a deputation tent to Henry at Rouen in Just 1441. Det the Chart is 194, thought is of course possible that the University was mincaken in supposing him to be there. This evidence receives some support from the fact, vasched for by Fauquembergue, that Henry cause to Paris from Gison, which is near the abordest route to the capital from Rouen.

^{1.} Bourgemagnage aufer ab 1994 nicht nicht

Cordetters, 294

Dedonnanem, na 164

tried to save their property from confiscation. After Baugé the duke of Exeter, military governor of the city, lodged continually in the Bastille of St Antoine. Relations between the government and the cathedral clergy were still strained, and in April two canons were put under arrest in their houses by Exeter and ordered to find security for good behaviour³. The currency, which was in a wretched state, was the cause of much apprehension. Attempts to reduce the nominal value of the coins in circulation were generally disregarded⁴, though news of a new ordinance on the subject at Rouen immediately sent prices soaring at Parisa. Meanwhile the promised good money could not be comed for lack of gold and sover! The levy of silver, agreed to by the Estates in December, could not be made?. For this the government publicly blamed the damnable doings of the dauphinists, but as nothing was done to collect the amount due from Paris⁹, it seems likely that fear of popular disturbances had something to do with their failure During June the situation became critical. The dauphinist army was advancing victoriously through Perche. On June 8, by order of the royal Council and the duke of Exeter, the lord of L'Isle Adam, who was then in the city, was arrested and taken to the Bastille on a charge of having conspired to admit the daugh n sts to Paris. On his way to prison, some of his men, helped by a crowd of Parisians, with whom he was very popular, tried to rescue him, but Exeter issued from the Bastille with a band of archers, dispersed the mob with a flight of arrows, and brought in his prisoner. The people remained much disturbed, it was reported that the English had kuled L'Isle Adam and intended to remove the king from Paris, and it took much persuasion by members of the royal Council and notable citizens to pacify the armed crowds in the streets10. L'Isle Adam. was kept in prison till atter Henry's death¹. He was never brought to trial, and there is no means of telling whether he Gramorenie, 135, nn n and 3.

 Ordonnances, 21, 108, 1133 Cordelium, 295

Douet d'Areq, il 4es

¹ Ordannanou, zi. 113. 4 Cordeten, 294.

^{*} Bourgeon, 151 * Ordonnances, 20, 117 sq., 142 sq. * Ibid.

Fauquembergue, ii 27 sq., Cordeliers, 296; Monster 2v. 37, Chiat. i. 220, Fenn, 146

Normer av 37. It was bearved that only the intercessors of the duke of Buzgundy saved has life.

was guilty of the offence with which he was charged. It was commonly believed that he was imprisoned because Exeter was atraid of his power and influence. His irresolute behaviour at Villeneuve sur Lonne, however, lends some colour to the accusation brought against him, and there is also the assert on of a writer who evidently knew much about him that he had been in secret negotiation with the governor of that place?, About the same time the lord of Châteauvilliain was imprisoned in Pans on a charge of treasonable communication with the enemy*

The arrest of L'Isle Adam showed that an ug v spirit was abroad in Paris, and tempers were not improved by a proclamation, issued the day before Henry arrived, which greatly lowered the nominal value of the current coinage and laid down that rents and debts were to be paid according to the new rates. The discontent of the people at this decree found vent ir a public meeting at the Maison de Vi le, which perhaps took place during Henry's stay in Parist. Nevertheless the unpopularity of the English must not be exaggerated. They were still dis liked less than the "Armaginacs" and no more than 5 Cordelars, ap6. In some quarters L'Isse Adam's treatment was attributed to personal require on the part of Herica. The story must that during his sege of Me un-Lilite Adam was sent to garrison Joignly against the dauphinists who had been plander. ing the neighbourhood, and returned to Melan by boat. Soon after his arri a to was summoned by Henry to discuss business relating to his office of marshal. After nome convensation the king, noticing his rough grey cloak, asked jokingly if that was the jet it a toesta of his e Dire and a his Auam, I had it made to the journey in the boat down the Seine," and as he spoke he looked the king full in the face. How dare you look a perior in the face when you speak with him?" mad Henry-Son replied the translate. The French say that I see may speak to a sother in hairs or has rank or station, with downcast eyes, he cannot be a good man, because he dares not look the other in the face." "Well, that is not one way," setoeted Heavy. "For Co. 1 man, he most anger with for, herged L like Adam, but, to ago the an occut normed to be closed. Henry never forgave him (Monstrelet, iv. 9 sq.,) Waurin. ii. 338; Fenns, 147; Chast. i. 179). The story, which appears only in Burgundian sources, is perplexing. Hency certainly became irritable in his later years, but it is probable that there was something assolent as L Isle Adam's some and manner. At all events, there is to remote to behave the this episode had anything to do with his arrest more than six more the safet.

* Tanhisons, 164.
* Cordeliers, 296. There is no truth in Chastellain's statement (i. 219) that L'Ink Adam had been depressed of the office of marshal of France during History is reposed in Para (Fauquembergue, ti. 17, 16 n.).

* Distances vo. x 122 eqq. The orderance true dated June 24, but not published cit. July 3. Of Bourgeois, 154, Monter Sv. 47.

* Bourgeois, 155.

" Chaste, lam's evidence on this matter is of small value. His account of events in Parina : Las vive is four 2 an Monstreiet is were worse common to the plan is belomissis. has nothing about the unpopularity of the English.

Doorgoon (4)

some prominent Burgundians1. When the dauphin took the offensive in the spring, the Parisians were anxious for the return of Henry, "in whom they had great trust," and the news of his return to France was received with joy2,

Henry staved in Paris only four days, and we know nothing of his doings except that he discussed public affairs with Exeter and some of Charles VI's councillors, and twice visited Notre Dame⁴. The unpopularity of the recent ordinance on the currency evidently affected him, for a few days after his departure a supplementary ordinance offered a measure of relief to tenants of houses.

Meanwhile the force which Henry had brought with him had been advancing under Gloucester, and was now stationed along the Seine, between Mantes and Meulan⁶. On July 8. Henry, with a large number of men-at-arms, left Paris to rejoin it and lead it to the relief of Chartres? Next day he reached Mantes, but in the meantime he had received letters telling him that the dauphin had raised the siege of Chartres and retreated to Touraine. The news was true, though the withdrawal was not quite so precipitate as the dauphin's enemies believed*. It was an ignominious end to a campaign so vaingloriously begun. Charles was at pains to excuse himself in a letter written on July 9 from Vendôme to the people of Lyons. He boasts of his early successes and of having remained in the field for three weeks after Henry landed at Calais. He attributes his retreat to lack of supplies and unhealthy weather, which, together with the strength of the garrison of Chartres, precluded a successful issue of the siege. He is now witching Henry's movements and will go to meet him no matter what he may do. For, he adds with pleasing natived, Henry is not very formidable, seeing that he has brought ⁴ Cf. the remarks of the Bourgeon" on Philippe de Morvilliers and his amodates (p. 159) Monete, iv. 441 Le Fèvre, il. 37.

Monstr at 47-

Fauquembergue, il. 201 Gramoreille, 136, n. 1 Ordonnanous, zi 125 The concession was enlarged four days later (ibid 125 pq.). * Jarade, 604; Fauquernbergue, ii. 19; Le Fèvre, it. 32, where ' Meulan' should certainly be read for "Melun."

Fauquembergue, il. 20. Belpit, 231 The dauphin was at Yeadôme by July 5, having faden back by way of Illiers, Irou and Chiteaudun Beaucourt, 5, 229), but there were still dauphinist troops at Sours on the 10th (Morroe, Preuves, ii. 1036). The Cordeliers Chronicle says that the dauphin and his army rode twenty six leagues and more at a stretch, never stopping till they were across the Loire (198) only 4000 men with him. The daugh nest army, he concludes, will be kept together".

The day after Henry reached Martes he was joined by the dake of Burgandy, colowed by a large force of his own subjects2. The promptness of his arrival was due to the fact that after the battle of Bauge, his mother had wisely warned him to be ready to go to Paris with an army for the protection of Charles VI, and having taken the advice of an assembly of others and representatives of the towns of his territories, he had called toge her troops from Artors, Picardy, and Vermando's, the rendezvous being hinally fixed at Croissy, near Breteul, on June 293 Thus, when the duke got back to Arras atter leaving Lienry at Abbey lle, he found a force ready to his hard. He led a large part of it, it not all, to the aid of Henry. On July 8 he and his men left Amiens!, and two cass later he was at Mantes. Heavy was evidently much pleased at his zeal, for in a letter to the mayor and aldermen of London, written on July 12, he goes out of his way to describe the duke as a "trusty, levying and faithful brother unto us in al thing! " Now that Chartres had been saved, however, and the daugh mist threat to Faris removed, Henry had no pressing need for the Burgundian troops, and it was agreed that the duce should lead them back to Picardy and deal with Jacques d'Harcourt!...

Henry's line of march towards the Loure being threatened by Dreuk, which had of late been giving much troub e to the adjacent country, he resolved to capture it". Dreux was strongly fortified, and the castle, on a spur of the rock which overhung the town, was thought to be impregnable. The garrison too was large and well found in munitions*, but the captain, a Gascon kright called Maurigon d Estissac, was absent, and there was little heart in the defence. Henry's men were before the town by July 1810. The long took up his quarters at St Denis de Moronyal4, about a mile to the east, and the details of the operations seem to have been entrusted to the dake of

^{2.} The inter is present by Brancourt 1, 46 (19). Much the some explanation in green ir apmeanabne of Aug., Orioniums a

I Marcher iv 10 mg Despet 212

Cord-lera 196 Mosstr w 47ng.

Cord-lera 196 Le Fèvre 11 16

Monstr iv 41; Franc, 157; Cochon 216

Jurade, 604; Vita, 309; cf. supra, p. 315.

St Denys, vi. 444 Jav 566, Bouvier, 441

Chare, Warr, Ser 3, 1365/32

¹ Vita, 10914.

⁴⁴ Ibd ; D.K. R. xlit. 429, 431, 433, Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 66.

Gloucester and the king of Scots. The siege was pressed with vigour, and after hard fighting the English managed to force an entrance into a large fortified vineyard which adjoined the castle1. Then the garrison asked for terms, and on Aug. 8 an agreement was signed whereby they were to yield both town and castle unless relieved in twelve days, the townsfolk might remain if they swore fealty to Charles VI and Henry; the soldiers might go where they liked with their goods on giving an undertaking not to take arms against Henry or his allies for a year*. On Aug 20 this treaty was carried out*; 800 dauphinist soldiers and some of the civil population went away; and Henry placed in the town a strong English garrison⁴ under Gilbert Ha sall, who was also baille and captain of Evreux. In the castle was the lord of Tillières, who after swearing allegiance to Henry had achered to the dauphinists; he was excepted from the terms of the capitulation and afterwards hanged. His castle of Tillières had already been recaptured by Gilbert Halsall who was rewarded with the lands of its lord.

On the fall of Dreux, Henry led his army to Chartres, where he was received with joy, especially by the clergy, and stayed about a week to rest his men?. About this time several places in the vicinity of Chartres and Dreux were taken—Nogent-le-Rois, Bonnevals, Epernonio, and others, including Gallardon, which was again carried by assault. No small part of the territory lost earlier in the summer was thus recovered.

Before the surrender of Dreux, Henry had received news that the dauphin with a great army was preparing for battle on the banks of the Loire not far from Beaugency. He had

Ibid 3:1; Monur. iv. 69:50 * Rot. Norm 9 Hen. V. m. 271 Yaus 3211 Monate tv 69 sq 4 Cochon, al6, D.K.R. rdat 416; Marrène and Durand, Ance. i. 1796 aq

4 Ves, 311; Monstr. 69 sq. 5 For Acces. 20. 61, C; DJCR 261, 432. Verneuil Chron 223; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 66; D K R. zln. 423; Vrts. 313
 Jurade, 604; Comunot, 183; Verneuil Chron 123.
 Yta, 311.
 Bourgeon, 157.

10 Ibid.; Vita, 311.
21 Cordeliers, 198; Vita, 311.

14 It is surprising that Auneau was left in the hands of the dauphiousis (Longbon, Paris, az iq).

16 Jurade, 604; Vita, 319

Vita, 310. Support (pytonesi) were sent from Parls at the city's expense (Gamoreille, previously summoned to his assistance part at least of the feudal host of Normandy; and on Aug. 8, with expressions of anger at the small response, he repeated the command for all the bullauges have Evreux, Mantes and Gisors, which had perhaps obeyed better than the rest, being nearer the fighting. On the same date he called to his presence all Englishmen and all soldiers in the duchy save those belonging to garrisons. while ave days later the captains of thirty-eight Norman strongholds received orders to send him what reinforcements they could. The news about the dauphin was founded on fact. The dauphinist army which had besieged Chartres had been eedered to reassemble at Vendôme on Aug. 15. but at a council. of war held at Biois and attended by Buchan, the two marshals, the viscount of Narbonne, Tanneguy du Chastel and other notable men, it had been resolved to call out the arriver-has an I raise contingents from the towns. The summons was dated Biois, Aug. c, the rendezvous was at Vendome on Aug. 24, and the objective of the army was to be the relief of Dreux). It is not clear what the dauphinist leaders resolved to do when they heard of the fall of Dreux, nor is it certain that there was any concentration of their troops near Beaugency, probably their army was agreed out from that region to Vendôme and beyond it4. Henry, however, eagerly set out for Beaugency4. Châreaudun was held by a dauphinist garrison, and Herry, who arrived before it on Sept. 1, passed on without attempting to capture it4. He went through La Ferté V lleneuil2, passed not far from Yendomes, and on Sept. 8 was at Messass, about two gailes north of Beaugency. Thence he moved on a mile or two to La Bruère, where he took up his quarters for some

^{*} Not Norman Hen. V. in all d. The dates are incorrectly given in D. K. R. all 431.

Ordonnances, xi. and sq., Danmer, 223; Beaucourt, i. 232, 378 xq.

^{} Beaugency was garrisoned (Cordeliers, 198); there were troops at 5k Dye Countries, 181] Vendome continued to be used at the army's have Wendome continued to be used at the army's have Wendome of the dauphous letter to Lyons, Beaucourt, i. 231); while on Aug. 23 and Sept. 2 there were many Breton tourpe at Montour (Morrow Present in 4044 eq.). Henry appearedly come to the cone us on later that most of the daughtness were wer Beer (Torade, 604) ^{} Thic , Vita 312 Henry's eagerness for harde is emphasized by Monstr 11 "0 and by Norm. Chion. (He lor), 66 ng. Countries: (It) implies that there was relactance to fight his the part of many French, and describes Herzy as he prog for hattle.

* Degrate at Manues des Notains du Comté de Donois, ed. L. Merley, 19, 50 Denvis.

Bouvier, 441 T Countrate sky

Lalind Men in Cal Pot 1416-22, p. 409.

days1. Beaugency was carried by assault and the town plundered, but the English failed to take the castles. They raided the surrounding country, and the earl of Suffolk, who presumably had come with the Norman reinforcements, crossed the Loire at St Dye with a strong force at direconnoitred the left bank to the vicinity of Blois, returning by the same ford despite the presence at St Dye of a superior force under Tanneguy du Chastel who incurred much discredit by his refusal to attack3. After some days Henry realised that it was vain to hope for a battle⁴, provisions were beginning to fail, and disease had broken out in the army. He moved up the river past Meung-sur-Loire, and reached the outskirts of Orléans. Some of the suburbs were captured after a sharp fight, and the starving troops found great quantities of wine, which perhaps explains why Henry soon withdrew, after being much harassed by the people of the city. There was now a terrible epidemic of dysentery in the army. Many English soldiers were to be found lying on the roads and in the fields, and many perished at the hands of peasants who had taken to the woods? There was nothing to be guised by remaining in the Loire valley, but Henry was not the man to retire tamely to Paris. There were still ways in which the enemy could be damaged and his own reputation enhanced. Accordingly, the army struck eastward across Beauce and the Catinais. It seems to have advanced on a wide front, doubtless to increase the chances of securing food. The king himself went through Nemours to Montereaulo, Others marched by way of Montargis and Châteaurenard to Villeneuve-sur-Yonnell. Some, if we may accept the circumstantial account of

Contebers, 201; Vita, 321; Monete 1v. 70

Jurade, 604 aq.; Vita, 322; Common, 183

Vita, 313; Consinot, 183; Bouvier, 441; 5t Denve, vi. 464
 Consinot, 122; Bouvier, 432; Vita, 313 pp.; 32 Denve, vi. 464; 1

* "Pour nous emploier a faire plus grant espioit de guerre au bien de ce royaume, Jurade, dog • Ibal.

² Countrot, 181. Henry himself says that he was near Beaugersev for five or ait days (Jurade, 604).

Tonomans que lesdat adventures pla men entrorte de nous bailler journée, Jurade, 605. In point of fact the aemir at Verdome had been broken up by bept in (see the instructions to the dauphinus envoys to Castile in Daumet, 223).

^{*} Counnot, t32; Bouvier, 441; Viti., 313 mp.; 32 Denys, vl 464; Juv 566, Norm Cheon (Hellot), 67.
Le Fèrre, is. 39; 8t Denys, vi. 464; Juv 566; Bourier, 441

Vita, 314. Henry was probably at Nemours on Sept. 11 (D. K. R. elii. 417).
Li Corde iera, 248

a late writer, got as far south as Auxerre and Clamecy1. Throughout the march from Crieans to the Yonne the army continued to suffer from hunger, which caused heavy losies2, but there was not much fighting. Bands of dauphinists shadowed the English, patrols and raiding parties came to blows now and then, and a few places were stormed or yielded, but the only exploit. hat exught the attention of the chroniclers was the pursuit of a band of French horsemen, and the capture of the castle of Rougemont, where they had taken refuge. Henry had the castle burned, the captain and the garrison hanged, the fugitive horsemen drowned, and the food in the castle rationed among the hungry English!.

No sooner had he reached the Yorne than the indefatigable king ordered siege to be laid to Villeneuve. The seguel was in characteristic contrast to the events of I 'Isle Adam's siege in the previous February. Attacked on Sept. 22, the garmon showed little stomach for resistance, and surrendered on the 27th, being permitted to depart with their goods4.

On Sept. 28 Herry was at Jorgnys, and there he seems to have stayed several days. But there was little respite for his troops, who were soon marching north, some going down the Yonne to cross the Seine at Me un, others traversing the forest of Othe, passing through Bray, Nogent-sur-Seine, or Pontsur-Seine, and thence traversing Brie, where they received the surrender of several small places?. The objective of them all was Meaux.

Henry's campaign of 1421 has generally been treated as a failure, if not as indicating a decline in his mental and moral qualities. It is true that he failed to bring the dauphinists to action, and that his losses by famine and sickness were very

Van, 313, Trakisem, 165. 1 Trahaona, 166

Former, Acquirer 314; Moseir or you St Denys, vi a64; Bouvier, 443; Norm. Chron (Hellot), 6y. Rougement is in the department of Louve, some three make south ent of Pahwiers.

⁴ Jurade, 603 . Vita, 323 : Tit. Liv. 92 ; Momer iv. 70 ; Bourgeois, 237 : Bourier, 4421 Fauguernbergte, it an.

Rot. Norm. 9 Hen. V, m. as d.

Maney was received by the laseper of the wantrobe for the expenses of the household at "lagny" or "lugny" on Oct. 2 (For Acets no 59, Fin and via I his night be a careless writing of Lagrey (cf. p. 137), but it is very smallery that Henry was at Lagrey to some jeff Longron, so. The Nigry-suit-Young membersed in Norm, Christ (Heliot), 57, as the place where Henry reset his army is probably a masaginer for Journy.

heavyl, much greater than those suffered by the other side. Fur her, I gains and osses he halanted, he held no more of France at the end of Nep emper than he had done none months before. Let the events of the year afford straking testimions to Henry's mistary reputation. The successes of the Jaur himsels were all work in his absence or tickind his back. His approach within fifth miles was enough to lause them to a landon a higheste prosperous campaign or which they had not great hopes. He took Dreug unmelested from without and later, in the an army smaller than theirs, he maillened for many miles acong the confines of territory that was so acly on their side, and they made it a beast that they had been within " five or six eagues of him! It may have been good poors on their port to avoid harrie, but waste the inustry, and trust to hunger and bacteria. But puthic opinion salges in liner commanders

 There is general agreement on this (Vice, 323; Tir. Liv. 92; Wale, ii. 340; Le Fèvre, is so become gas be the ser after the fire biguese extends on continuents, who san har you was a figure product are found on the fit fire by carrier was and a promoted support on many his court. He is beginned as not produced appear in the court of would be an itransia to the legislating of the slegs. Messay, Hear is new a record to be test 1300-1400 men. Eight captains, who mustered as all 251 men at Sandwich (Exch. Acces, 50, 2), had only 37 on Oct. 23, when the sage of Meint had been in property the most than a foreign a set of the only 3 and fig. h. how above the meters in foreign a set of the only 3 are fig. h. how

(Exch. Acces. 40, 11)

The force which Henry recruited in England was evidently, with the enception of me or thou settame, representating the marrie to me Mt. If at long . Buch. Acces, 10, 11, 20, 21. By Sept. 2 Henry had been joined by Enter with a force which we make later amounted to 311 men (Euch Acets 90/21), but we do not became often no have some related. Here was do not be not the fewer and particular. Here given became the few of the court for the second of the beautiful and the second of the first of the second of to the principle of the engagement of their the firetering property control that of through the law the world recovered both consideration and him an entered to fid by then a new to never to und to many as a german to be get if my lord, and resing the mark that a secretary is the Europe Secretary in the secretary trace from Normal drawing and in the property of area common to have be wrose if the graph of the analysis of the product of the beautiful to be gardenes of the mines and other powers one has the gifter an army when a for the first of the result of a digital interest of the day plant of the other hands, had Build a spread. There is under to the led the day in over it the terms ago, the had the Deutsch er und genet mit Riefig is. d. D. in eg mit einem b. bern, und unigerighte in be de contra Boucquen . Richart de Bretaigne, et nos autres chiefs et gene, qui de persons even on the grant provides in provinces in the case up, drug much extent and an Champion of the transfer measurement design measurement. Design of many beauty to $10000, Becausers is a great Much the same elements appears or the unitractives person by Daumet, 123, where the dauphin, asie at Ambone, declare that Henry is in retreat, whereas at the term tage. To was a 12 year his agreed the dispersing French sering Cl. story responsed applicable decision is under grants. The excellence in region to the daughter it on york a hand-one. Separt or 6-rate a quinter bright do on processe, mui n'estost pas grande dutance" (466)

by their feats of arms, and there can be no doubt that Henry's doings in the summer of 1421 confirmed men in their opinion of his skill and prowess and carried on the work, so well begun by Salisbury of restoring the moral ascendancy of the English forces, somewhat impaired by Baugé.

Nor were Henry's successes wholly in the sphere of imporderables. At the beginning of 1411 the dauphinists were in an aggressive mood, and their offensive was the most formidable that Henry had ever had to face. He had con petels broken it. In August and September they were everywhere on the defensive and had lost almost everything they had gained earlier in the year.

Could Henry have been reasonably expected to achieve more? He seems to have obeyed the first principle of strategy. and to have made the destruction of his enemies' forces his prime object. As they wished to avoid battle, it is hard to see how he could have forced an action without exposing himself to unwarrantable danger. Perhaps he should have landed in Normandy; yet the overthrow of Harcourt was imperative, and in any case the daughinist army in Perche would have had ample warning of his approach. On the other hand, he can hardly he blamed for turning his back on Harcourt when he heard of the danger of Chartres. Nor should he be condemned for stopping to besiege Dreux. The dauphin was resolved not to fight it stithen, or he would not have retreated so fast or so far, and Dreux in enemy possession was a merace to southern Normandy and a nuisance to Paris. As soon as the dauphinists. seemed to have recovered a combative spirit, Henry marched against them without troubling to beauge hostile places in his path. And when once more his hopes of battle were disappointed, he immediately struck at them as hard as he could, cleared the line of the Yonne in order to restore safe communication between Paris and Dijon, and then swiftly transferred his army to Meaux, the most valuable possession of the dauphinists in northern France. The position in France when he returned in June, 1421, offered the most dirhcult problem in strategy that he was ever required to solve, and it has never been shown how he could have dealt with it more prudently. It may indeed be argued that Henry's additary talents never appeared to better advantage than in this summer. The Agincourt campaign was foothards; the conquest of Normancy called for energy, patience, and careful attention to detail, but made little demand. on generalsh p. In 1421, however, Henry displayed a resourceful opportunism and a quickness and coolness of rudgment which entitle him to rank as one of the greatest military leaders of the Middle Ages. There was at all events no sign in his behaviour of that ungovernable ferocity which, according to Scottish writers1, he habitually exhibited after Bauge; in fact there seems at this time to have been no indication of any decline in his mental or physical powers.

That few Burgundum troops served under Henry in 1421 was due not to any disloyalty on the part of Dake Pin ip, out to his preoccupation with a campaign of his own in Picardy, At Mantes it had been agreed between him and Henry that he should return thither to crush Harcourts. But on his way back alarming news reached him. While he was hastening to join Henry, two weil-known dauphinist captains, Guy de Nesle, lord of Offemont, and Poton de Saintrailles, with a strong force of mounted men, had entered Vimeu from the south, crossed the Somme at Blanchetaque, and, uniting with Harcourt, taken St Riquier-a success which was followed by the recovery for the dauphin of the castle of La Ferre, the capture of other strong places³, and several attacks on Abbestle, which they tried to act on fire with flaming darts. It was a well-timed stroke, in fact, the dauphinist movements just at this time were most adroitly executed, whether they all belonged to a concerted scheme or

The duke, recognising that the troops with him would not suffice for his augmented task, summoned reinforcements from all parts of his territories. Arriving at Amiens, he asked for provisions and men, a request granted both there and by most of his own townst. He had victuals brought to Abbeville, fearing lest want of food should impair the loyalry of the inhabitants. At the end of July, after recovering Pont Remy on the Somme, with one or two smaller piaces, he laid siege to 6, n. 4. Burand, ıv. 42 sq.; Monstr. iv. 49 sq.

La Picardie, ii. 148 sq.

Scoticheso, (Hearne), av. 12224 Lib. Pluscard, 1, 359. His treatment of the garrison of Rougemont was indeed brutal but there was probably some upon a remon good or bad, for it, since a few days later the defenders of Viaisseuve were dealt with letter to Monate IV. 41; Cordeliers, 298

Monstr. 17. 48 sq.; Fenns, x57; Raoulet, x77; Champson, Guill. de Flavy,

St Rouser!. He now had with him an English force from Calais consisting of archers and officered by old genilement Nevertheless the siege did not prosper, though great stores of material were collected for the construction of a ege-works, and the duke had a strong force of articlery. The investment of the town was not thorough, and the defenders made many vigorous sorties, in which on the whole they gave more than they got 4. Meanwhile Harcourt had called for rel ef to the daughin st captains in the Beauvaisis, Thiérache, Valois, Brie, and Champagne, and a force of some 2000 men mustered around Compièene and Soissons under some very famous leaders, including Louis de Nesle, brother of the lord of Offemont, Gilles and Louis de Gamaches, Poton de Saintrailles, who had evidently been sent to collect help, La Hire, Pierron de Luppé, and Jean Raouleth. On Aug. 29 Duke Philip heard that this force was advancing through 5 ineu towards the Somme, with the object of ioining Harcourt. He despaiched a reconnecting party across the river at Abbeville, and under cover of night broke up the siege of 5t Riquiers and went to Appeville himself. with his whole army. Farly next morning he was informed that the dauphinists, notwithstanding the loss by a singular accident of the valuable services of La Hire, were making for the ford of Blanchetague, on the east side of which Harcourt would be awaiting them. The duke and his cavalry, minediately set forth. to intercept them. The two forces soon came in sight of each other, but the dauphinists won the race to the ford. The tide was in, however, and none could cross save Poton de Saintra lles. and three others, who swam over. The rest turned to fight their pursuers, while Harcourt, who was on the farther bank with some of his men from Le Crotov and part of the St Riquier garrison, made no attempt to join them, but went back to his headquarters. The night that followed, known as the battle of Mons en Vimeu, was a hard tought combat, waged mainly

1 Monete, iv. 31 aqq.; Durand, vî. 32 1 "Tous archiers et anciens gentilz hommes que ses condunoisse," Cordelars, 199 The English cost grot however arit during August or the ground but the duke new had enough men without them (ibid. 100)

La Picardie, ill. 149 aqq

1834 La Picardie, ili 132.

Chambion, 9, m. 4. 1 He was steeping in a house in a village, when a chimney collapsed, fell on his log, and mined namifor the shouser 443). No other writer mentionally massay to La Hambetween cavalry, in which neither side displayed much factical skill. The dauphinists charged through the Burgundian centre, most of which fied in panic, crossing the Somme at Picquighy and spreading far and wide the news that the duke was defeated and slain. Part of the duke's centre nevertheless stood by him, and the two wings came to his aid. There was a hot fight, in which, as the Burgundian writers affirm with suspicious emphasis, the duke performed great feats of valour. Eventually, the daugh nists gave way, and were pursued for some distance. Those who had been chasing the fugitives of the Burgundian centre presently began to return. They were, however, unable to reverse the fortune of the day, though atter the fighting was over Jean Raou et and Pierron de Luppé occupied the battlehe d with a body of horse, collected the wounded, and took them to St Valery-sur-Somme, an achievement which was apparently regarded by Raouiet as justifying his description of the fight as a dauphinist victory.

The numbers engaged in the battle were not large. No writer of authority estimates the dauphinist force at more than 1600 men-at-arms, while it was probably much smaller. The Burguidian cavalry in the battle-few archers can have been present-seems to have numbered about 1000 men!. The dauphinist losses were heavy, and many of their notable men fell into the hands of the enemy, among these being Louis de Nesic, Gilles and Louis de Gamaches, and the ubiquitous Peton de Santrailles, who must somehow have recrossed the Somme⁴.

The cauphinists had so far achieved their purpose that Duke Philip did not attempt to renew the siege of St Riquier. He had of course sustained loss in the battle, while his enemies had been strengthened by the junction of Raquiet and Pierron de

This account of the battle is based mainly on the narratives in Monste. in 99 aqq., and Raculet, 179 aqq., some details being derived from Le Fèvre, ii. 42 aqq. and Cordeliers, 700 aqq. Raculet, who commanded the dauphinist "battle" (Houvier, 44)) speaks very weal of hiracit but the Cordeliers thround 1, also mentions his provide specially. That the date was Aug. 30 in confirmed by La Ficardie in 41.

Le Fèvre, ii. 41, says they had upwards of 1300 lances, by which he presumably means individual mentificants. The Cordeliers Chron. (300), whose author seems to have been well informed about these operations, given their on in $1.50 incm at an inc. As between two Barrations estimates, the laws in 10 by preferred. Monstreet a future between two Borg and on estimates, the lower in to be preferred. Monteriet's figures are 400 or 600 men-at-arms and 300 or 400 archers (iv. 68), but as he says that 400 were knoed, it looks as if he had somewhere muread his authority (iv. 63)-

7 This is the figure of the Cordeliess Chron. (201). 1 Raouht, 280; Cordeliers, 204, La Picardie, iii. 152

Lupné with Harcourt! The duke in fact disbanded his army and returned to the Netherlands! But he had in his valuable prisoners a surer means of gaining his end than force of arms, hager to recover their freedom, they promoted a proposal of the duke's that they should be released in return for the surrender of the captured Burgundians and of St Riquier itself. After lengthy negot ations the suggested arrangement was accepted by the lord of Offemont, who yielded the piace in November and withdrew with his men to the region of Compiègne².

The battle of Mons-en-Vimeu made a considerable sir. Paris heard of it on Sept. 1, and apparently doubted whether it was a victory or not, for it was made the occasion of processions for the safety and prosperity of the realms. In England it seems to have been regarded as rather a bad business, if we may judge from the confused account given by Wakinghams. At Bruges it was believed that the duke, though victorious, had suffered great losses, and that he was willing to negotiate for peace or a long truces. By Sept. 9 a ministrel had made a song about the hight, which he sang to the duke at Boulognes. In the neighbourhood where the battle took place, it had the effect of inducing the dauphinist garrison of Douvrier castle to surrender to the Burgundians who were besieging its.

Harcourt of course remained at Le Crotoy, and was destined to give much further trouble. But his importance was on the decline and hencetorth was merely local. Had the duke of Burgundy been deteated, the dauphinists would have established their power over a solid wedge of territory extending from Champagne to Le Crotoy, and would have severed direct communication between Paris and the Netherlands. That danger, at any rate, had been removed.

⁵ Resider ets. Moustr or 64, Cordeliers, 104.

He was at Boulogne on Sept. 9 and St. Omer next day. La Picardie, 111. 156 acq.)

Le Pèvre, it as aq., Missir iv 72, Cordebers, 106. The arrangement was expensive for the duke, who had to buy valuable prisoners from his capitalist before it could be carried but. He gave John of Luxemburg 2000 france for Lorin de Neile (La Picardie, 18. 152).

^{*} Fauquembergue, n. 24. * Wals. n. 340 sq. * Maroum, n. 240 sq. * La Ficardie, n. 244.

CHAPTER LXXI

MEAUX

IT was high time that something was done to check the activity of the dauphinists in Meaux. In the previous December, according to a dauphinist writer, the Parisians had begged Heary to stop their ravaging and burning in the adjacent country, but he had told them that such things were the usage of war and that war without fire was like sausages without mustard, and they had to content themselves with a promise that some day the place should be besieged1. The depredations of the garrison had naturally communed, and it was now advisable to humour the Parisians, who were in a critical temper! Accordingly, as we have seen, troops were sent northward after the fall of Villeneuve-sur-Yonne, with orders to concentrate at Lagny-sur-Marne². Meanwhile the duke of Exeter was despatched in advance to Meaux, under instructions to seize the suburbs before the garrison could burn them. He arrived just in time; and the French, offering resistance, were driven into the town by the English archers! The main English force soon followed and invested the places, but Henry, who was at Lagny by Oct. 124, stayed there for a fortnight, superintending the construction of the siegeengines?

Henry was faced with a task of great difficulty. The town of Mexix had originally straddled the neck of a pear-shaped peninsula formed by the river Marne. The Romans, however, had cut a channel through the isthmus just to the south of the town and had thus diverted the river, though the old bed stil.

Will

¹ Jue. v61. The authority for the story is not good

<sup>Hourgeon 155
Charc Ware, Ser. 1, 1365/33; Monste iv 70.
Jurade, 605; Monste, iv. 71; Cordeliers, 305; Chart. 1 283; Juv 56s.
Jurade, 605; Monster, iv. 71; Cordeliers, 305; Chart. 1 283; Juv 56s.</sup> Mionstr iv. 72, says that the investment was complete on Oct 6, but as late as the zethet was possible for civilians to travel from Meaux to Paris (Longnon, 26)

Ordionnames, xi. 13a. Monste iv 114 Cordelien, 1051 Rym. x, 1553 For. Acets. 69, F. About this time, Creey further up the Marse, together with several strongholds in Bese and the Le-de-France, surrendered (Jurade, 605).

received a little water under normal conditions and sometimes filed to overflowing in winter. Opposite the town, on the south or left bank of the main stream, lay a fortified suburb, called the Market, which had come into existence during the Norse investions of the tenth century. On three sides it was protected by the Marne, which here had a very rapid current, to the south a canal had been dug from one reach of the river to another, so that the Market stood on an island. Both town and Marget were strongly protected by walls and disches?

The parrison, according to Burgundian writers, numbered 2000 fighting men? Louis Cast, Juile of Meaux, was in the town, but the military commander was Guichard de Chissay! who had under him some famous warriors, notably Pierron de I uppé and the Bastard of Vaurus, a most fero, lous ruffant. Some of the leaders doubtless knew that they had little mercy to expect from Henry, and they evidently inspired the whole garrison with a spirit of desperate resolution

As an example of scientific siege warfare, the eaguer of Means was probably Henry's masterpiece. Only the sieges of Rouen and Melun can be compared to it, and at Rouen he had relied mainly on hunger, while at Melon the stat bornness of the resistance seems to have surprised him, and his operations lacked system. At Meaux, however, he pressed the siege from the first with great vigour and according to a preconceived plan-The duke of Exeter was stationed between the north wall of the town and the original river hed, close to the abbes of St haro, which he had saved from being burned by the garrison. The earl of March lay on the east, while a force of picked knights was posted on the west, noth of these divisions occupsing ground beyond the old course of the river. To the south of the Market, and therefore separated from the rest of the army by the main stream of the Marne, lay the earl of Warwick. The Caren, Himofre de Meaux, 12 m., 64, 103, 104, 104, 111 m., Vita, 1152 Tet. Les ma. Be for the laye account of the page is in the Vita Hone of The Barguindan inniero alia. supply vacuable information, but the dauphinists are untrartworthy and meagre

^{*} Monstr iv. ye; Le Fèvre, ii. 45

* Rym. x aca., Bourgeon, 1733 Juv yén; St Denys, vi. 452, Vita, 321; The Liv 93.

* Devon, 375; For Acets. 56, E v*; St Denys, vi 4503 Juv. 362

* Vita, 3 51 3245 Tit. Liv. 923 Monstr iv. 723, Le Fèvre, ii. 245, Feran, 172, Cordelien, 1034 Bouvier, 4413 Juv. 362, Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 665 Abeégé des Craydre. tw. request. 6 Charter Valet de Vers de on 145 Cf. har auchtrument English, as the Burgundiane except to Fèvre, and blouvier among the day physical materials and the land of the content of the grant of the grant of the second to the land of the content of the grant of the grant of the grant of the grant of the first of the land of the content of the grant of erroneously style the Barnel espesis of the garrion. Evidently he had very great influence on the defenders: 8 Vita, 126

English lines were fortified with palisades and ditches¹, and a bridge of hoats was thrown across the ever to furnish easy communication between Warwick's men and the rest of the besieging force². The king established markets where the troops could buy provisions and other commodities³. The siege-engines, which seem to have been specially numerous and formidable, were speedily set up on their emplacements and began a vigorous bombardment⁴. On leaving Lagny in the latter half of October, Henry himself at test lodged in the castle of Rutel, within a mile of the town³. At the beginning of December his headquarters were the abbey of St Faro, and there he remained for the next three months⁴.

How many men Henry had with him when the siege began. cannot be precisely estimated. The accounts, warrants, and receipts of William Phi ip show that nearly ail the captains that contributed to the force raised by Henry in England remained with him before Meaux, at east for a time. They also show that very few other English commanders can have taken part in the siege. We know that in the last days of the year there were 1700 fighting men in Henry's pay before the town, and with the abour corps and household staff the total reaches nearly 19007 Philip's records tell us too that seventeen retinues which were engaged in the slege at the end of October lost approximately sixteen per cent, of their strength in the next two months, and there is reason to believe that one or two important contingents, present when the siege started, remained but a short time. Ail things considered, it is probable that Henry began the siege with about 2500 Englishmen. There seem to have been tew French troops concerned. Arthur of Richemont brought a Breton contingent, but it cannot have

1 Month: 19, 71. 1 Vita, 316

* Ibid., Brut, ii. 425; Moratr av. 71, Le Fèvre, ii. 45. Le Fèvre speaks with great admirat or of Henry a conduct of he stege— telle conce est at a sour sury stege.

I largely four Vita. 226. Col. Par. 246-222. It access from Acon. 60. F. I have.

" Jarade, 60; Vita, 316, Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 40], For Acets 69, F. Chance Warr. Ser 1, 136; 27 609 11 18, whereen appears has Better was not there of Nov. 45.

The remains of the castle are now a farm.

* For Access 69, F., Chane. Warr., Ser 1, 1365, 14, 353 Rym. E. 163, 181, 186, 186, 196, 1945 D.K.R. zhi. 437, 439, Bréquigny. 9,3 Ordonnances, z. 1545 Godefroy, Annotations, 798. Repairs were carried aut at 6t Faro in November or December Douës d'Arcq, Comptes de l'Hôtel, 478).

2 Exch. Accu. co/10. The last of the bounhold staff is see complete

Bird. 90, 10, 11
 Notably those of John Cernwall and Lord Scales, For. Acets. 69, G vo. Cf. Exch. Acets. 50, 1

heen large, and, as we shall see, was soon sert elsewhere! French labourers were employed, and a contingent under a Savovard captain took part in the final assault on the town? But the chroniclers write as though the siege had been conducted a most exclusively by English troops, indeed, the Burgundians seem anxicus to make it clear that their duke and his principal captains had nothing to do with it.

The king directed the operations with his usual unremitting vigilance. The town was assailed with increasing vigour as the garrison refused his offers of favourable terms. The artillery gounnes, trepgettis, and engenva" - battered the walls, under cover of a "saw" men filed the ditches with earth, mines threatened the defences from beneath. The garrison, however, were equal to all emergencies. They mended their broken wais, cleared their choked dirches, and day counter-mines. Their watchfulness foiled all attempts at surprise? Their sorties, though always repulsed, were frequent and vigorous, and their art Hery was very destructive?. Their resistance was supplemented by the weather, which in December became very cold and wet. The river filled its old bed, flooded a great tract of country, isolated each of the four divisions of the besieging arms, and compelled Henry to evacuate his sieze lines for a formight and make new ones further from the town? The defenders acreed the opportunity to make sorcies in boats, which the handsh whom lacked, and inflicted much loss with hus few casualties to themselves. The food of course added to the difficulty of bringing supplies, and when it subsided the dauphin's horsemen beset the roads, airriving to intercept the provision convois-an anner ance difficult to counter, since the English had been constrained to send their horses away. Henry had bread made for distribution among the troops, and daily gave food at his headquarters to about 1000 persons 10. Never-See below, p. 343. * For. Accu. 49, F vr. * Monter, iv. 4 a; Cordellers, 109. * The chronicle of Preer Basset and his associates includes very few Frenchmen in its first of captains present at the siege of Means (Coll. of Arms, MS. M. 9, ff. alie have many in the corresponding are for the siege of Means (ff. alieq.).

^{*} Had. 317, 310, Brut, M. 418. Henry had nove German gumess at the sings (Coules Gumes et an excompagence duckness.) there were an histolia Masse, in English games, with two mates, and John Rolf, mother, with those (Each Acets, 50/10).

Vita: 310.

Fibid., St Denys, vi. 448; Jur. 562.

What, 12k, Te Levier Bourgeon, 160. A longer of when was given to the troops backing an expensed posterior caused the bulbrack and to writer giveners, aromae, and labourers who were conspicuous for merikamous service (For. Access 49, First).

theless there was much suffering!; desertions were numerous!; even the officers sometimes lost heart, and there were heard mutterings that the English people had consented to the conquest of Normandy, but had never hargained for an attempt to conquer all France. It is probable that in the eight weeks before Christmas Henry lost, in dead, missing and disabled. about sixteen per cent, of his troops4. But his zeal for discipline remained as strong as ever, and a foreign soldier who stole a pyx from St Faro's abbey was tried, convicted, and hanged?

Had the dauphin and his advisers, who spent most of the winter at Bourges^a, despatched a strong force to the rel ef of Meaux, it would have had an excellent chance of success. I here was, as usual, much parade of what the dauphin was going to do. On Nov. 16, in an announcement that he was about to mortgage or alienate some of his domain, he declared that he meant to assemble the greatest army that he could raise, both from France and from allied states, and to devote the greater part of his resources to fighting the English?. Jean Juvénal dutifully asserts that he did everything possible to relieve Mexux!. But he was at this very time living most extravagantly, and his court was apparently much more interested in the preparations for his marriage than in the perils of the Meaux garmson! Bands of dauphinist cavalry, often attacking Henry's communications, sometimes ventured to approach his siege lines in some force, but they were always driven off with little trouble¹⁰. Such serious operations as the dauphinists undertook during the siege affected regions remote from Meaux, and if they were designed with the object of drawing Henry away, they guite failed of their purpose. On Oct. 25, the Burgundian captain of Cosne reported that he had been warned of the advance on Girn of the viscount of Narbonne with a strong force, which had as its object a raid on the Nivernais and an attack on La Charité sur-Loire¹¹. Nothing more is known of this enterprise,

¹ Wais, II. 340; Tit. Liv. 92; St Denys, vi. 448; Abrègé des Grandes Chroniques () Chartter, in), 24 l. Wate it 140

^{*} St Denys, vi 442; Jur. 1623 Fenin, 276

Exch. Accs., 50,10, 22

F. V. ta., 18 sq. Thus reight be taken to be an echo of the famous mory about Bardolph, which belongs to the Agraculat campaign (see above, it. 116 sq & were it not that the author of the Vita also records that anesdent in its proper place (53)

Beaucourt, i. 232.

T Ordonnances, m. 141 sq. * Beaucourt, 1. 233 sqq

^{*} Juv. 163. * Vies, 311

¹¹ Plancher, iv p. xiv and, as the warning came from a dauphinist, it may have been a fabrication designed to divert attention from western Normandy, where soon afterwards an important stroke really was attempted.

During the summer, the diplomatic relations between England and Brittany had remained ambiguous. On the one hand, the duke's brother Richard was serving in the dauphinist army with a large force of Breton troops throughout the campaign? On the other hand, his other brother, Arthur of Richemont, while visiting the duchy in the interests of England, recruited the contingent which he afterwards took to aid Henry at Meaux^a. One gets the impression that the duke was uncertain whether Henry or the dauphin was the more likely to win, while his subjects supported either or reither side as they pleased. The situation gave the dauphinists a chance of organising an attack on Normandy across the Breton. border, and such an enterprise was being planned in the second half of September, the direction of it being entrusted to Jean d'Harcourt, count of Aumale, the dauphin's seusesantgeneral in Normandy and captain of the garr son at Mont-St-Michel⁴. Early in October Richard of Brittany and Amaury de Severac, one of the dauphin's marshals, invaded Lower Normandy⁸, and at the beginning of November a force of Bretons and dauphinist troops from the south captured Avranches by a surprise attack. Their leader was Olivier de Mauny⁷, lord of Thiéville, Jean d'Harcourt's heuterant at Mont-S -Michel, who had probably sworn a legipnee to Henry in 1419. The English took prompt counter-measures. The authorities in England seized all Breton ships in the ports from Bristol to Seaford*, and on Nov. 9 the Norman Council ordered ail capable of bearing arms in Normandy and the Caron, de Mont-Samt-Michel, i. 207, 214, B. 1.

Brit Mus. Add Ch 11:474

Sie p. 163.
 Above, pp. 316, 331, it 3
 Conneau, 62, 8, 31 Beaucourt, i. 339 sq. 4 Blanchard, vi. 38 D K.H. zlit. 4321 Rym. x 157 iq ^{*} Circelen, you, Money iv top of, Bréquigny, att.

dauphinist army at the siege of Chartres (Morice, Preuves, li 2016) and in the enturquent operations in the Loise valley (Lobinesis, it 979, 98a). Bases and has fellows, like Hade, were moreaken an identifying him with the defender of Falaire (Chron-4e Mont St Michel, 2. 207 m.)

* Caus. 9 Hen. V, m. 12.

conquered territory, save those required for garrison duty, to hasten to St Lo to serve under the duke of Gloucester! against the invaders. As in the previous April, precautions were taken to prevent a rising of the Normans, and efforts made to check abuses? Henry detached troops from the army at Meaux, including the Breton contingent, but if the invaders hoped to attract him to Normandy in person, they were disappointed. In December Avranches was recaptured⁴, and about the same time the earl of Suffolk, who was in command on the Breton frontier of the durhy, with Lord Scales and John Ashton, the capable bailh of the Cotentin, encountered a force under Olivier de Mauny at Parc L Eveque, not far from Mont-St-Michel, and after a hard fight defeated it with great loss. Among the prisoners was Mauny himself. Henry had him taken to Meaux, where he repulsed him for his breach of faith, but instead of putting him to death, sent him in the following summer to the Tower of London, where he died soon after his arrival "for very shame and mere Malyncoly"?. Despite Suffolk's victory, however. Normandy was again invaded early in January, and the feudal forces of all the bailinges save Caux and Mantes were called upon to take the field under Salisbury!. Presumably the French withdrew without a battle.

After Uhristmas no striking incident marked the progress of the siege of Meaux till, towards the end of January, Henry had as his guest the duke of Burgandy. Philip was anxious to visit the duchy and county of Burgundy, where he had not been since his father's murder, and a large force had been sent thence to Flanders to escort him?. After spending Christmas at Arras, the duke set out for Paris, which he reached on Jan. 5, 142216. His troops, who had behaved badly in Artois and Picardy11, Beéquigny, 188. * Ibid. 190; D.K.R. zlit. 415; Rym. z. 160 sq. On Dec. z all commercial inter-course between Normandy and Britany was forbidden (Bréquigny, 230).

Rym. 2. 157 sq.; Cordeliers, 307; Monstr iv 30
Cordeliers, 307; Monstr iv. 80.
Rat Norm. 9 Heo. V, m 22 d.
Coll of Arms, MS M 9 E siv b 20., Halle, 109; Cordeliers, 308. " Halle, 109; Cell of Arms, MS. M. 9, f xlv1; Devon, 175; For. Accts. 56, E ₹

Rot. Norm. 9 Hen. V, m 12 d Monte iv 74; Cordellers, 306

Morsts iv 76, Le Fèvre, il. 46; Bourgeon, 16;.

Morsts iv 75; Chart 2 218. The manicipal authorities of Amiens had nevertheless. begged him not to seave Picardy (Durand, 4, 34).

p llaged the surrounding villages, leaving only what was too hot or too heavy to carry off. The complaints of the peasants to the Burgundian leaders were received with icers. Even in Paris itself, though he was given a ceremonious welcome, the duke was not liked. The issue of some new coins of small value, which were unpopular, was attributed—quite wrong v—to his influence, and men began to contrast the sacrifices they had made for the Burgundian cause with the disregard for the interests of Paris which he and his father were thought to have shown. His manner of life, too, caused scandal. He was considered to have all Duke John's faults. For its father's death he seemed to care nothing, he was entirely under the influence of certain young knights, and led just such a damnable life as the duke of Orléans and other lords who had come to a shameful end². It is worth remembering that these strictures come from a writer who is often described as a fanatica. Burgundian. It is also noteworthy that he never offers any personal censure of Henry V.

While at Paris the duke visited Charles VI who was with his queen at Bois de Vincennes³. On Jan, 16 he left Paris for Meaux, accompanied by Jean le Clerc, chance for of France, Louis of Laxemburg, bishop of Thérouanne, a governor-general of finance, and Pierre Cauchon, bishop of Beauvaist. He stayed before Meaux till the 2 3rd and had lengthy conversations with Henry* Charles VI was probably at St Fare during his stave, but it is not known whether he was permitted to be present at the discussion of the affairs of his kingdom by his two sons-in-aw. While the duke was before Meaux, he arranged the marriage of his sister Marguerite and Arthur of Richemont, who was still there?, but the main topic discussed was the possibility of coming to some agreement with the dauphinists. The relations of Henry and the duke seem to have been harmonious, but it was ominous that the prince of Orange, who had led the duke's escort from Burgundy, refused to go

* Fauquembergue, 1. 375 n., 387, il. 26, 35, 159; Borrell de Series, ill. 137 sq.

Bourgeon, 163

Bourgeon, 163

Bourgeon, 164

Cf regarding the new coinage, Ordonnances, 21. 146 aqq and are below, p. 183 * Monste iv. 28

Monate iv 38, Plancher, iv 41 He witnessed grants there on Jan- 44 (Ordonnances, 21, 194). Godefroy, Annotations, T Chronique d Arthur de Richemonti aj aq. Benucourt, i. 379. See below, p. 374.

to Meaux and went with many other lords to Troyes, where they awaited their master. Their motive, it was commonly believed—probably with truth—was to avoid taking the oath to observe the treaty of Troyes¹,

Having concluded his business with Henry, the duke went back to Paris, whence on Feb. 6 he set out on his journey to Dijon2, calling again at Meaux on the way!. His subsequent doings will be described later. Soon afterwards, Henry was visited by John of Luxemburg, one of the most famous and zealous of the Burgundian captains. His business was private. His brother Peter, count of Conversen, was a prisoner in the hands of Perron de Luppé, and, thanks to Henry's mediation, he was able to secure his release in return for a heavy ransom. The count was so grateful that he remained with Henry and rendered useful service during the remainder of the siege John of Luxemburg went back to Picardy, of which he was Captain-general*

Meanwhile, there was no marked change in the situation at Meaux. Conditions in the English lines seem to have improved. though desertions were still taking place. Supplies for the king's household were sent out from Englands, munitions of war continued to be ordered, and Henry's labour corps was reinforced. Casualties became much fewer, and from the end of December to the end of March averaged only 4:3 per cent. a month, or little more than half the proportion shown by the records of the autumn*. Even if we assume that aggressive operations languished during the three menths in question¹⁰. the losses are still astonishingly light, and it looks as if the English army, however much it may have grumbled, was cared for fairly well. It must be remembered that it contained a great Moriste 19, 78 sq 4 Chast, 3, 292, Cordebers, 301. Monste, iv. 79, Cordeliers, 308; Plancher, iv. 41.

Kym. x. 173.

* Museum, iv. 79 aq.; Cordeliers, 308 aq., Fenite, 173, Ameline, ill. 726

Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 421.
Lind 420, 421; Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V. Mich., Jan. 23, 1421

* Cal. Pat. 1616-14, p. 1919 Ist. Roll 9 Hert. V. Mich., Dec. 13 and 20, 1621.

* Cal. Pat. 1416-22, pp. 422, 422.

2 The Vita Henrici (320), however, scares the ampression that Henry sever allowed the siege to degenerate into a mere blockade.

This estimate is based on the pay-warrants for thirty-six retinues, which reveal their numbers at the end of December and at the end of March. The total fell from 1154 to 1004 (Exch. Accis. 50/10, 15). A few retinues were bigger in March than in December, a reminder that gaps may sometimes have been fieled by drafts from England, though at a plain that this did not occur often many raw troops, who were having their first experience of winter warfare.

Despite the valour of the garrison of Meaux, their surrender was of course meditable unless the daugh in could relieve them. before their food ran out. None heard their appeals, however, but the lord of Offemont, whom they had repeatedly asked to come and command them. On March 9 he med to enter the town with some forty picked men. Though the success of the undertaking could hardly have made much difference to the general situation, it seems to have been cleverly planned. Under cover of right Offemont and his men stole through the English area to the north of the town, as ling one or two sentines whom they encountered. They reached the walls undetected at a place where they had been partly destroyed by the English siege engines. There they found ladders which the besieged, warred of their intentions, had let down, draping them with bed-c othes, so that the English guard, going their rounds, would not notice them against the white stone of the wall. Many of the band mounted successfully, out Offernoot somehow tell into a ditch?. He was in full armour, and the d tch was so deep that he could not reach the spears which his men thrust down for him to grasp. The noise which the mishapcaused attracted some of the English sentries, who raised the alarm, and after a sharp fight, Offemont, badly wounded in the face, was captured with a few of his followers, and led before Heary, who was immensely pleased at the issue of the episode.

The failure of Offemont's enterprise great y disheartened the gazesion. They knew that most of the rownstock were willing to admit the English and that a mine which Henry had dug was almost ready. In the morning therefore they began to move provisions and other goods into the Market's intending, it was believed, to set the town on fire and kill all those who were not privy to their design. In their haste they left the

Bourgeois, 167

One account states that he fell in while crossing the ditch on an old plank (Monster let Ita); at Paris it was said that Offeriont was climbing one of the ladders, when the most in from of him dropped a heavy bug of herriags which struck him on the boad and knocked is most the datch beneath (Rounge on 16).

Manne n. fraq ; Bourgeon, 166 sq.; Cordeliere 309; Fenin, 174 sq.; Vita, 310 nq. Fanquare berg is 11 39 nq. Some accepted, including Jean de Flavy, who is not d'in have "run like a hare" (Champson, Pièces Juenfratters, lens, lens)

Bourgeon, 167; Fenin, 273

^{*} Bourgeois, 167, Monstr 17 $2, St Denys, vs. 450; Vita, 121

wals inguarded, and one of the burghers mounted the ramparts, shouted to the English what was happening, and urged them to attack boldly. They raised a ladder for him to descer d, and he was taken before Henry, to whom he emphatically repeated his story. Meanwhile, the men of a Savoyard captain, stationed at another part of the wall, had observed what was happening in Meaux, and made a sudden assault by escaladel By Henry a orders the attack was soon taken up on all sides, little resistance was encountered; the fighting men took refuge in the Market and the townsfolk in the churches. Henry, however, had it cried through the streets that all should go to their houses and pursue their ordinary avocations. He and many of his men took up their quarters in the town?,

Spring was now at hand, and it was very desirable to free the English army for other operations. The siege of the Market. was accordingly pressed with great energy. The place was exceedingly strong, and Henry relied many on his articlery in his efforts to reduce it. At the end of the long bridge from the town to the Market, he placed many engires, which maintained ar incessant bombardment of stones. Part of the bridge could be raised, but Henry devised a great structure of wood, which was dragged on wheels to the bridge from outside the town, and a platform projecting from this spanned the gulf. After bitter fighting the greater part of the bridge passed into the hands of the besiegers, who seized the mills built on and under it, thereby diminishing the food-supply of the defenders. and securing some shelter from their incessant missiles. The English also got possession of an adjacent island, where they mounted a great force of artillery, which soon did much damage to the walls of the Market⁴.

Towards the south, the earl of Warwick somehow got a "sow" on to the land between the canal and the wall of the Market, which here rose to a broad parapet or terrace, at the back of which was a second wall, an attack being thus faced by a double line of defenders. The earl nevertheless captured an outwork close to the wall, whence he directed a very Monete iv. 82; Cordellers, 309; Fauquembergue, il 40.

Minute iv Rang , Cordeliers, 310, Bourgeon, 168, Vite, 331; Ench. Accts. 59, 154 For Accts. 69 F.

Vitte 3as 19.3 Monter iv. 835 Confelien, 3104 St Denys, vi. 4503 Jun. 363

⁴ Monte is $34 Febra, 174

[•] Carre, 105

destructive rain of missiles. On the west, where Walter Hungerford was in command, the Market was farther from the mainland. But here, by means of boats and wooden bridges, mencrossed and set up wooden she ters near the walls, from which they harassed the besieged with attack and bombardment. In this quarter the defenders made counter attacks of special fierceness, even making breaches in their own walls to gain readier access to the English! At least one of their sorties, here or elsewhere, was disastrous for the English, to Henry's great chagring, but the grip of the besiegers could not be shaken. off, and soon the French were glad to close up the breaches again. At length the attackers pushed a shelter close to the walls and began a mine?.

I broughout the siege of the Market the English losses were heavy, and the earl of Worcesters and Lord Clifford were killed by projectiles. At Easter, out of reverence for the season, Henry granted the defenders a truce of some days; but afterwards fighting was resumed more fercely than ever. In several, places the walls were now breached, and on Hungerford's side. the defenders all slept on or close by the walls in the open". A summons to surrender, with the offer of good terms, being again disregarded, Henry ordered a general assault. It was made with great violence, and the French were pressed hard; but they fought with desperate valour, and after seven or eight hours the English were driven out of the defences.

The untiring Henry now resolved to attack the eastern end of the Market, hitherto immune by reason of the herce current at that side. He lashed together two large boats, set on them a platform of great bearrs, reared on each boat two high masts, and in the space thus formed, with the masts as corner-posts and the playform as foundation, he built a lofty wooden tower with two "chambers" or storeys. The upper one

Vata, yayaq

4 Moostr 1v. 91 sq. ; Fexib, 174.

Als the English connected were killed or taken, save one who fied. There was a story that Henry had a per dug, buried him in it up to the necks and exacted him to death (St Denys, 41, 450 64 3 Jun. 563. Jean Jundam avidently got the story from the St Done charmtelet) ^{*} Vita, 324 sq.

* G. F. C. led. G. bbs), a 275 Vita, 3255 ft. Denys, vi. 4505 Juv. 563. He was buried in Tewhesbury abbes /G.E.C. oc. ot. Leland, Ital. ed. Tournan Smith], iv. 450.

* Inq. post more. Hen. V. 54, 375 G.E.C. (ed. Gibbs), in. 2034 Vita, 325 He was buried at Boliou priory in Wharfedam (Kingsford, Lit. 200).

* April 22.

rose higher than the loftiest tower of the fortifications, close to which the erect on was to be managewred, so that a bridge might be let down on to the ramparts. The value of the structure is said to have been proved by experiment made afterwards1, but towards the end of April, before it could be used, the defenders, worn out and despuiring of relief, asked to be allowed to treat2. Henry was in a truculent mood, for not only had the siege cost him many men and seven morths of precious time, but he deeply reserted the insulting behaviour of the garrison throughout its course. He seems to have been specially annoved with a man who blew a horn, though how the instrument's notes gave offence is not explained. More intelligible, though still childish, was his vandictiveness towards others of the garrison who took an ass on to the ramparts and beat it till it brayed, calling out to the English that they ought to come and rescue their kings. Possibly his arger was partly due to a suspicion that his own troops, whose morale seems to have been none too good, rather relished the gibe at their higher command. He was consequently at first indisposed to listen to overtures; but on second thoughts concluded that it was wise to regotiate. He there ore commissioned Exeter, Warwick, the count of Conversen, and Walter Hungerford to discuss terms of surrender with deputies of the garrison. The negotiations lasted severa, days2, but on May 2 an agreement was signed.

The Market was to be surrendered on May 10. In the meantime, all nostilities were to cease, and 10 one should enter or leave it without licence. An inventory of the provisions and horses in the Market was to be given to Henry; munitions of war, valuable goods, and the moveable possessions of churches and religious houses were to be collected in assigned places, ecclesiastical property (it was implied) being destined for restitution. All prisoners in the hands of the garrison or any [&]quot;Title, $25 eq. Monstr. iv. $5. Juv. $65. Juvenil mentions lack of food as one of the causes of the surrender. But the gareson sub-had a certain amount of grain, though owing to the ion of the milis is was doubten difficult to get it ground. For A cis. 69. I, whence it appears that unsuity these quarters of grain nest found in the Market after the surrender, of Ferins. 75, who says that the partition scar had food for three months).

Vita, 127; Tit. Liv 93, Fenia, 174.

Rym x, 213; Monete iv 33.

⁷ Ibed

member of it were to be freely released. The defenders themselves should remain presoners. In general, their lives were to be spared, but to this undertaking there were a number of exceptions. Twelve of the most conspicuous leaders, among them being Louis Cast, Guichard de Chissay, Fierma de Luppe, Jean de Rouvres, the Bastard of Vaurus, and his cousin Denish were to be at the mercy of Charles VI and Henry Of these, Louis Cast, Jean de Rouvees, the Basturd, and his course were to " he putte to her Dome, and Dome and Justice shall be done and ministred to them ". Several others, including Guichard de Chissay, Pierron de Lappe, and Phingpe de Camaches, were to purchase their lives by the surreacer of altowns or strongholds under the command of them or persons connected with them. I he offensive from blower, the guinners? ad as any way concerned in the murder of Duke John of Burgundy, all haglishmen, Irishmen, and Scets is the garrison, topether with any of the defenders who had previously swern to the treaty of Treves were knewed to be dealt with at the discretion of the two kings, it fact, that is to say, of Henry A hundred persons of the garrison were to swear to the apreement, and menty tour-among them several of those specified above-were at once to be handed over*.

The terms of the capitulation were duly executed, and on May to the Market passed into the possession of the English*. Henry made a ce e nor jour entry and staved in the Market for some cars³. The occup taken was probably considerable. for much property had been brought to Mesux from the surrounding country. The king arranged its distribution, keeping munitions of war and valuaties for himself, and giving to the b Bourgeron, 200. Monoucht for 40 and Prival and see that he was the Bonnet of brother, but the Bourgeon was evidently well informed about the family Concepts and a business of the first and being the services. It has madeing makes many fair Complete words received providing in primage and the Visto Decision gas Continue after speaking of the esecution of some of the precises the writter side, "at quotquot estavornorum forere Anglos per tempra obsidionis occiderant, comincilare agazenticas

The English text of the capitalation argues in Rymer, x 212 eqq , and 12 Grupory, taying Ministrates, is a page, that an about red version in French, by cortex of the articles differing somewhat from that in the English sext. Chastellain (i. 103 sqq.) paraphrases Monstrelet. Cordelars Chron (31.430) gives a good summary. White I am ag the Lagran with it the main. I have found the Bargumian writers seem as several places where its meaning is obscure

6 New York Dentile Auct to ally. Some of the bostages were taken to Preside Many (Fauquembergue, id. 44).

Monte, it gi.

poor some of the grain! On May 14 Henry announced that the inhabitants of the town who had taken part in the siege might have their property restored, provided that they swore to the freaty of Troyes and repaired the fort heations before Ail Immediately after the surrender many of the personers were sent sway2. Some were incarcerated in Parist, where, according to Jean Juvénal, not a few perished of hunger! On May 16. 100 were despatched by boat to various prisons in Normandy and England. The bishop of Meaux, who was one of the party, share it a small hoar with a knight, and was seemingly unchained, but the rest were fettered in twos by the legs, and heaped together "like pigs," with one loaf of black bread among three or four and very little to drock! During the summer there were prisoners from Meaux at Rouer?, Pont de l'Arche, and Caena. In June 1.11 were taken to England. They were lodged for a while in the Tower, but during July, with others who had arrived earlier, were distributed among various, astles, mostly in Wales 10. Guichard de Chissay and Pierron de Luppé were committed to Pontefract castle under the guard of Robert Waterton¹¹

Others of the prisoners were less fortunate. Louis Gast, who was supposed to have courtenanced the misdeeds of the Bustard of Vaurus, and Jean de Rouvres, described as an

For. Acets. 69, I; Vica, 327 19.; Tit. Liv. 93; Wals. ii. 541; Monster iv. 96; be Denys, vs. 452. It is evident that exaggerated reports of the wealth of the place were current in both England and Normandy (Kingsford, Lit ayo. Norm. Chron., Hellot, 41). In the chapal of the Market were found to g books, nearly all of canon law or therefore. These were rarefully preserved by Herry and afterwards passed to his son (East, Miss, Add. MS, 4603, IF 134.102).

Bourgeois, 169, n. 12 Monetz 17, 96 4. The Sarry of Lic, which marked Park in May 2, presumably received for the ment part of presences takes at the act of the source Bourgeon, 160 has quembergue at 47. On the 9th they were sent by loss to Normandy or England Bourgeon, 164,

4 Monte in 96 1 JUY 503 Morser w 95 dourgeon, 172

* Exch. Acess. 188/7, f. 32. Those at Caro-three gentlemen and six variety—store kept in irons

| Ord. Priv. Co. ii 335, For Accts. 59, A1 Devot, 375 sq.; Im. Roll to Hen. V, Pasch, July 10, 1411; Exch Acets, 50, 24.

First was allotted $, Rhuddian, 26; Conway, 12; Carnaryon, 26; Chirk, 15; Barker, 1, 16, 17; Ke do (1), 2, Noth glassing 4, Porte of 16, Krise 1 22; Nq. Ocd. Priv. Co. 11, 15; In. Rod to Hen. V, Easter, July 20 and 23, 1422, For Acets 36, A, A v, B v, C v). The much allowance for a personne's keep was 21, a work (For Acets 36, passes). I we of the Harrech processes dard more allowance than the first way at the formal control of the first way. continuend two more during their science, back to Locider in the feat wing December (auto A.v.) Promat Hole Thick, Carsamon, Fant and Notting very #20 temained in those carries tale the following wrange, an ears one their rejourne, but A. A. vil. B. vil. 13 Ibid. E ve; Devon, 37 gaq.

advocate, whose offence is not sperified, were tried and senten, ed to death by the précôt of Paris. They appealed in vain to the sine's Council, and on May 26 were beheaded in the Hades! The poor horn-blower met the same fate?, and the heads of all three, affixed on lances, were dist layed at the place or execution, while their bodies were hung on the gibbet at Mentiaucen3. As for the Bastard of Vaurus, he was drawn through Meaux on a hurdle and then hanged on an elm near the town, where he had put to death many victims of his own cruelty. His body was left hanging, his head was stuck on a lance at the top of the tree, and his hanner was placed to fleat heside it. The tree also served as gallows for his cousin Densia.

Even Jean Jurénal, though he says that Henry was criticised. by some for treating a "gentleman" in this way, is constrained to admit that others thought the Bastard's fate a divine punishment for his cruelty. The Monk of St Denis evidently approves of Henry's action? So of course do the burgundian writers, especially the "Bourgeois," who tells a ghastly story of the Bastard's brutality to a young peasant woman. Having seized and murdered her husband, he robbed her of the ransom money which she had brought in ignorance of his death, and then, stripping her more than halt make I, prepagnt as she was, he bound her to his elm, where her head was brushed by the feet of earlier victims as they hung swinging in the wind. There he would have left her for the night, but before dawn the wolves, attracted by her cries of anguish, saved her from further suffering. It is no wonder that many Frenchrien preferred the ling ish to "gentlemen" of their own nation and the English king who hanged the Bastard to the French prince who had rewarded this gentleman for his good services*

Historians have frequently regarded the siege of Meaux as on the whole a misfortune for Henry, seeing that it cost him so much time and so many men. But it capturing the place Henry was doing more than rooting out a nest of daughin st

² Fanquembergue, in 49, Vita, 328; Tit, Lev. 93; Monter, 20 96; Cordelium, 315; Chast, a 2063 Bourgeon, 173, St Denys, vi 452, Jur. 363

* Le Ferre, 5 14, Unit 1 306. Monitr iv. 963 Chast. a 306.

^{} Le Ferre, 1 14, Unit 1 306.  Monstr 14 96; Char. 1 306.  Vita, 1 1. Tu Liv 4,1 Monstr 14 96; Cordener, 315; La Fèrre, ii. 545. Baurgeon, 170, 5t Denys, vi. 450; Juv. 563; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 66.  Vita, 321; Bourgeon, 170.  Juv. 563; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 66.  Vita, 321; Bourgeon, 170.  Juv. 563;

Bourgeois, 171 vq 7 St Denys, vt. 450. On Nov. 30, 2419, the dauphin gave ago fewer to the Bastard of Vaurus for his good services (J. Chartier [Vallet de Viriville], in 1449 in).

raiders. The military situation in northern France was at once fundamentally altered.

After the failure of Offemont's attempt to enter Meaux, the dauphinists had made no further effort to relieve the garrison. Their only enterprise during the siege of the Market was a surprise attack by the garr son of Marcoussis on Meulan. The capture of this place, which occurred on April 5, was embarrassing to Paris, since it cut communication by river between the capital and Normandy1. Prompt counter-measures were taken, A I hoats on the Seine below Mantes were seized by English officials to hinder any advance of the enemy downstream2. All available Englishmen and soldiers in Normandy were ordered to join Salisbury at Mantess, and the king despatched a force from Meaux under the count of Conversen to assist in the recovery of the lost town. Salisbury laid siege to the place, and on April I ; the dauphinists surrendered and were allowed to depart with all that they could carry. This was apparently regarded in Paris as a somewhat unsatisfactory conclusion of the episode, and it was recognised that until the Market of Meaux fell Henry would have to content himself with modest successes elsewhere.

Meanwhile, the Burgundians had begun a new movement against Jacques d'Harcourt, who since Oct. 6 had been commissioned as the dauphin's lieutenant in the marches of Picardy and the Somme? During the winter he had not achieved much, his most ambitious enterprise, a raid into Vimeu, being repelied by English troops from the garrisons of eastern Normandy. Harcourt's losses were heavy, he himself was wounded, and the lord of Verdusant, captain of St Valerysur-Somme and one of his most important lieutenants, was taken prisoner. Nevertheless, Harcourt remained secure in his possession of Le Crotoy, and his presence there rendered the Channel unsafe for English shipping.

Faus sembergue, i., 441 Monstr. iv. 851 Cordeliers, 2104 Bourgeois, 168 sq. L D K R. XID. 44%. 3 Rym. E. 201 aq.

Mocatr. 17. 15 Cordeliers, 210. * Favquembergue, m. 413 Countriet, that Monter 19, 863 Cordellers, 3103 Bourgeom, 1.69. (bid)

Bibl. nat., Portefemilies de Fontanies, 111-112, f. 246. The MS. has "Seine" but the is pulpably a mistake for "Somme."
Monatr av 76; Le Févre, il. 46; Cordeliers, 207 sq.
Claim. 9 Hen. V, m. 3.

TL W

17

Early in March an important council of war was held at Bapaume. It was attended by John of Luxereburg, the Burgard an captains commanding casties in Picardy, and the officials of the king and of Duke Phil p in the Picard marches. It was resolved to initiate aggressive operations in Vimeu, Vermandois, and the Thiérache. The campaign in Vimeu was to be conducted by John of Luxemburg himself, and the duke attached so much weight to it that he wrote more than 400 letters to Elemish nobles urging them to support the enterprisc1.

Towards the end of March the force under John of Luxemburg entered Vimeu from the east, and on the 26th laid siege to the cautle of Quesnoy-sur-Airames, a few miles west of Proquigny, the garrison of which had been giving much trouble to the surrounding country. The walls were soon breached by siege-engines, and the castle was carried by storm, some of the garrison being held to ransom, others sent to Amiens, where they were executed. After burning the castle, the Burgundians went on to Gamaches, where they were joined by Ralph Butler, captain of Eu, with upwards of 200 Eng ish troops* Gamaches was besieged, but it was held by a strong dauphinist garrison, and perhaps deeming it too formidable to assault, the united furces turned eastward, and after reducing one or two minor strongholds, sat down on April 11 before the two castles of Airwises, one of the most notable centres of dauphinist power in northern France. The garrisons resisted stoutly, confident of relief, as in the previous August, the daugh nists about Complegue tried to rescue their comrades in the north; and near the end of April a relief force of several hundred men was mustered under the lord of Gamaches, Poton de Saintrailles, and other captains. At the same time Harcourt gathered fresh troops around Le Crotoy, and three vessels brought him a strong body of men-at-arms by scat. John of Luxemburg,

* Feating 122. The sarge armilery from Armena agent not to have been sent to Cordefiers, 300, Plancher, 17 51

L Cordefiers, 3.0, Mosatz 17, 84 sq.; Ferna, 177 sq. Amiens sent to take part in the operations twenty crossbowner, a number of workmen, and its lag gun, with a great bombard which had been beaught from England (Ducated, it. 35, iv. 91, 94, 96, 97, 99)

* Monter iv Sc. Durand, iv. 91.

* The nege was in progress on April 7 (Ryst 8, 202).

Cordeliere, 210 aq ş Monece le #5, 87 aq.ş Ferne, 278 ş Durand, il. 35, îv. 92, 94 97

however, called successfully for reinforcements, Butler's contingent being more than doubled, and having now 700 menat-arms and 2000 archers he felt strong enough to detach 100 of the cavalry and 400 archers to meet the relief force that was advancing from the south. Under the command of Ralph Butier and Hue de Lannoy, recently appointed master of the cross bowmen?, they came into touch with the enemy at P errepont. The dauptinists were attacking the castle. On the approach of the Burgundians and the English, however, they set fire to the town and withdrew. They were vigorously pursued, the archers it aking their way along a blazing street and subsequently akirmishing with the dauphinists, who turned and faced them on a hill a little way from the town. For some time it looked as if a pitched battle would take place. The dauphinists, mounted, were on the top of the hal, the English and Picards, on foot at the bottom. Neither side wished to take the offersive, but at last the Picards, losing patience, mounted their horses and rode up the ascent. Although the English, true to their traditional factics, refused for some time to leave their position, the dauphinists would not receive the attack, and having the fresher horses were able to escape without material loss? The affair, though trivial in itself, sealed the fate of Arraines, for the relief force scattered, and on May 10 the two castles agreed to surrender next day, unless previously relieved. The defenders were suffered to depart with their goods, with express permission to join any dauphinist garrison between the Seine and Le Crotoy. One of the Airaines castles was destroyed, the other manned by a Burgun him garrison*. John of Luxemburg's operations were evidently regarded as highly successful, if we may judge by the space which Burgundian writers allot to them. He had, it is true, reduced several daughinist centres. But he had done little towards reducing the enemy's man-power, and the net gain of the

* Riss spromitment was dated St Faso near Meaux, Jan. 82, 8422 (Godefroy, Annota-

* Cordeliers, 316; Manier iv 90 sq ; Fenin, 179 sqq.; Durand, iv 97

² Rot. Norm. 10 Hen. V, m. a5 d; Cordelsers, 311.

Cordeliers, 312 sqq. This cheen cler, gives a most vivid and integering account of this small operation. He calls the English commander the "conte d'Eu," but Markereta account (iv. III sqc.) though on the whole ees valuable, shows that he was Ralph Butler, who was captain of built is tantalising to have such ful and their information about a attentionable, when the main features of Agircourt and Baugh are largely a matter of conjecture.

Burgued and an reservory was after all not so great, for about this time the lord of Gamaches took by surprise the castle of Mortemer, near Montdidier, and used it as a centre from which to ravage the neighbourhood! As long as desultory enterprises for the acquisition of ground and buildings absorbed the energy of the mintery forces of Duke Philip, no end to the war could be foreseen long of Luxemburg, to do him justice, was not disposed to rest on his laurely, after the fall of Airsines he gave his troops a rest, but ordered them to assemble a fortnight later at Peronne, in order to bestere the castle of Moy². By that time, however, the Market of Means had surrendered.

The capitulation of Means was notable not only because it placed in Henry's hands a formidable stronghold, but still more because it put out of action a considerable number of excellent troops and carried with it the conquest of numerous other graces of indirary consequence. Hive prominent men were to be at Henry's mercy until all castles or towns under their command or that of persons connected with them were surrendered. It is not known how many places were concerned, but the clause seems to have been effective, for we do not hear that any of the five authored death under it. Thus Pierron de Luppé secured the surrender of Montaigu castle, which dominated a large area, and had wrought much injury to the region of Rheims and Laons. More profitable, from Elenry's standpoint, was Philippe de Gamaches, about of St Paro, who had taken an active part in the defence of the town. To save him from drowsing, with which Henry was believed to have threatened him, his brother Guidaurie, lord of Garraches, undertook to surrender the town of Compregne with the castles of Remy, Courses sur-Aronde Neuville-ea-Hez, Mortemer, and Cressonsacq, not to mention others in the same de Geresches unless his brother surrendered the strongholds in his charge.

* Monete: S. 98; Cardelium, 319. Montaign surrendered on May 18 (Finders, App. D, 246)

Cordeliers, 310; Moser. W. 85.

² Cordelient, 316 I he cause is which this objette on secure a security aborded by Monterlet, and the meaning or Rymer's text is not very clear. Alon, as trucking the located Guicharde de C'Eville, Feryn oe Hupe, ac't. Mainter Kobiet Georgie afhâlin de Gamothes, and J. bo Dather ... [her that id we and abode to be [Charm Mai and Henry a] Will Lists the time that I runs and Suengaes, that hem of erry of hem, or other of her included of dy other than any above another owner and above for new, being builder, being practice, and their real territories. In our Doublehm the words who to being practical in staller were regarded by Efensy in sourlying his choose to half Philippe region, on condition that their garrisons might go free!. The bargain was carried out in the middle of June2. Henry, furthermore, drew no small advantage from his lucky capture of Offemont. He had nothing to do with the capitulation of the Market, but before long he obtained his freedom by swearing to be faithful to the treaty of Troyes, and surrendering a number of places in Valois, including the town of Crepy and the castles of Pierrefons, Mello, and Offemont, the custody of which he was allowed to retain, his uncle Raoul de Coucy, hishop of Noyon, and two others giving security for his loyalty³.

Many other dauphinist strongholds on the borders of Beauvaisis, in the region of St Quentin, and near Amiens, surrendered or were evacuated and destroyed by their garrisons at this time. Whether this was in consequence of the terms of the capitulation of the Market of Meaux or whether it was due to the fear which that event inspired, it is not possible to determine. In any case, the capture of Meaux cleared away all serious threat to communications between Paris and the Netherlands, and as the English and Burgundians were meeting with further successes in V meu, Henry could boast at the end of June that only Guise, Le Crotoy, and St Valéry-sur-Somme remained to the dauphinists in all France north of Paris.

Monate iv 103; Cordeliers, 3 174 Femin, 177; Norm. Chron (Hellot), 69; Sorel, ¹ St Denys, vs. 452; Jur. 563 sq., Moneur. rv. 97; Fenm, 177; Cordellers, 317. Remy is in dep. One, are Computane, cant. Estrées-St-Denis, Gournay-sur-Aronde in dep. Oise, art. Compiègne, cint. Kessons-sur-Matz; Neuville-en-filez in dep. Oise, art. and cant. Clermont; Mortemer in dep. Oise, art. Compiègne, cant. Ressons-sur-Watz; Cressonsacq in dep. Oise, art. Clermont, cant. St. Just.

La Prise de Jeanne d'Arc, 72, in. 2, 322.

Champion, 24, in. 1; Monsie iv. 97, Cordeliers, 327; Norm. Chron. (Hellot), 69. He secuved letters of pardon and indemnity in July, 1412 (Bourgoom, 166, in. 1).

Monsie. iv. 97, 98; Le Fèvre, ii. 36; Cordeliers, 306, 317; Durand, iv. 97.

CHAPTER LXXII

THE INDEFATIGABLE DIPLOMATIST

However, much he might be absorbed in military operations. Herry never lost touch with international post cs, and during the winter of 1421-1422 he had, as usual, many diplomatic from in the fire. On the one hand, he was striving to increase his strength by securing more effective aid from his friends and by winting over neutrals or enemies, on the other, he was beginning, very cautiously, to prepare the way for a renewal of negot attens with the dauphinists. In neither direction did his efforts yield much fruit. In some quarters, indeed, affairs went very badly for him. At Genoa the doge Campo Fregoro was driven from power, and in November, 1421, the city passed under the fordship of the duke of Milan on terms which he had settled with the French!. The treaty of the previous May between Henry and the Genoese of course fell to the grounds, and henceforth dauphinist influence was paramount in north Italy. The duke of Milan allowed dauphinist agents to recruit men in his territories and a force of Lombards joined the dauphinist army in the following Junea

In some other quarters Henry's diplomacy, while not encountering such definite reverses, failed to secure its objects. With Scotland relations changed but little during the last year of his reign. King James remained in France! Henry kept in touch with the earl of Douglass, though there is no evidence that the latter fulfilled his undertaking to join Henry at Easter, 1422, with a body of troops. One or two Scots went to France during the winter at the head of small retinues, but they apper-

¹ Beaucourt, 1, 331, 341

When Henry ratified it on Oct. 26 (Rym. x. 155), it was already worthless.

Ordonnances, M. 141, Beaucourt, 2, 341, 342 n. They were near Lyons on Jame 8 [Callet, L ude our les relations de la commune de Lyon avec Charin VIII et Loue XI, 4.</sup> He crossed such Henry in Jone, 1412 (Jorade, 604), held a command or the steps.

<sup>125)

4. He crossed such Henry in Jone, 1412 (Jorade, 604), held a command or the steps. of Dieux our above, pp. 326 sq.), was probably for a time a. Meaux (Rym. n. 153 on a later reaved for a whole at Rouen (shid A 174 on a Each Acen. 50 13), but was again with Henry in July, 1422 (Rym. 2, 227).

Jos. Roll 9 Hen. V, Mich., Oct. 23, 1421; Rym. 2, 230.

ently did not stay long!, and it is clear that the nulltary aid which Henry received from Scotland was negligible. It is true that the Border seems to have been as quiet as it ever was in the fifteenth century, but its defences had of course to be maintained at considerable expenses.

Henry had not yet abandoned hope of reaping some fruit of the treaty of Canterbury, and he was in close touch with Sig smund in the summer of 1421 and during the following months: In July, 1421, Walter de a Pole and Dr John Stokes were despatched to conclude an agreement about certain sums which had apparently been lent to the emperor on the security of the duchy. or Luxemburg, they were also to discuss the grant to Henry and his heirs by Sigismund of Dauphine and lands claimed by the Empire in Languedoc*. We do not know the outcome of their mission, which they reported to Henry at Meaux on Nov. 294. Immediately afterwards it was decided to send to Germanya new embassy with the object of securing armed assistance, especially from the Rhenish archbishops and the Wittelsbachs. In the instructions to the envoys, which the king drew up at Meanx and sent to the Council at Westminster for communication to those who were going, they were bidden to emphasise Henry's need of men, though they might add that there was a good prospect of the war ending speedily and consequently of the organisation of a crusade. Elaborate details were given as to the settling of terms, the Count Palatine and the archbishop of Cologne, being a ready in Henry's pays, were not entitled. to expect such high remaneration as the other princes, but the envoys were to have great latitude in bargaining. If possible, they were to obtain gratuitous assistance, but Henry evidently had small hope of that. The troops sent would be given the wages paid by the king to his own subjects, and Henry's representatives were to secure from each of the five potentates concerned one hundred men-at-arms to serve for five months

F Ryun, at 244; In. Roll y Ron V. Pooth, July 25 and 17, 1412.
For. Acets, 36, F vo. Each Acets, 31/38, Lone was mutalism in suppliering that Ryes, z. 153 sq., 158 174 sq., 204.

 Inc. Roll 9 Hen. V, Mich., Nov. 17, Dec. 1, 1421 jibol. 10 Hen. V, Pasch., May 17, June 9, 1422.

Fig. 1. 1425. Henry has granted the Count Palatine an annual persons of tree marks DKR vi.; 31; Via. 19; Cf Rym t 9; 126). For the architector of Cologne, we above p 31. He was still drawing his 500 marks a year clin. Roll p Henr. V, Pasch.; July 15, 1421, Devon, 268; DKR, xlv, 322).

from May t next. If they cavalled at the pay offered, they were to be reminded that Castilians and Scots were serving the dauphinn great numbers for twents or twents-four francs of 1 feb e Money 'a month—a sum not worth more than a good Fire ish notice, and it was to be hinted that Henry's friends and akies ought at least to be willing to help him at reasonable wages. In the last resort the envoys were to follow certain secret instructions which Henry was sending scaled with his signer, and if there should be an apparently hopeless deadlock they were not to break off negotiations until they had sent a report to the king. and received his reply. After treating with the princes iamed, the envoys were to go on to the emperor, who, it seems, had given the ast embassy to understand that an application from Henry for he p would be favourably received. Nothing was apparently to be said to S g smund about remuneration, for he was bound to aid Henry under the treaty of Canterbury, and (if it could be done without prejudice to the war against the Hussites) he was to he requested to "come and do the King succurse after his many Promesses and often tymes wryting." The envoys might discuss with Signmund the question of the place of the next General Council, if the emperor raised the matter. They were also to at proach the electors not previously interviewed and according to their discretion urge them to send aid to Henry, pleading their obligations under the treats of Canterbury if necessary.

The despatch of the embassy was long detailed, perhaps because of the news from Bohemia, where in January the emperor was ignominiously defeated by Ziaka at Kuttenberg, and it was March before all three ambassadors had or used the tea? The personne, of the mission had been changed, and we cannot be sure that they were actually given the instructions summarised above, though the terms of their formal commissions suggest that the purpose of the embassy remained una tered4. How Henry's pleas were received we do not know, perhaps he never knew himself, for the envoys d d not return to London till towards the end of Septembers. It is certain,

For Acces, 56, A ve, D, D ve, Ench. Acces. 321/39.

William Loggestair was originally one of those selected (Rem. E. 141), but his place was taken by Walter de la Pile stied it just see For Accus 46 Dive,

The commissions were dated Jan. 14, 1422 (Rym. 2, 169), when the envoys ware eppearently expected to start shortly (ibid s. 167).

For Acces, 56, A 76, D, D 76; Exch. Acces, 321/39. The letter from Hartung von Cless, in Rym. 2, 100, is shown by Lose to have been written in 1410.

however, that no serious military aid was secured. Thus, abortive from beginning to end, did the alliance between Henry and Signsmund come to its dissolution. Its sole achievement was to destroy the chances of an adequate reform of the Church through the Council of Constance

It was probably rather in the hope of safeguarding the duke of Burgundy against embarrassment than in expectation of direct assistance for himself that Henry, in the following August, sent a commission, consisting of the dean of Lége and several Frenchmen, to Malines, where they were to treat for the establishment of friendship with the hishop and inhabitants of Liege and with other lords of the German border. Henry was no doubt dead before the envoys completed their errand.

No less fruitless were Henry's efforts to obtain help beyond the Pyrenees. With Aragon he remained at peace³, and Castile was too much disturbed by civil strife to excite either apprehension or hope. During the siege of Meaux Henry reopened negotiations with Navarre, and discussed with the king's almoner the terms of an agreement³. But here too nothing substantial seems to have resulted. Portugal remained an also of Henry, and in January, 1422, Thomas Carew and William Lyndwood were appointed to go thither with the object of securing the speedy despatch of military support⁴. Their mission seems to have been unsuccessful, and in any case they did not return till September⁵.

Henry's diplomacy was not only concerned with foreign countries but also with recalcitrant elements in France itself. Here it did succeed in gaining some success, though I tile enough in relation to the effort expended. Even nobles attached to the Burgundian cause and towns under the immediate rule of the duke were reluctant to take the oath to observe the treaty of Troyes. The behaviour of the prince of Orange has already been noticed. The duke of Lorraine, whose hefs in France brought him under the obligation of swearing to the treaty.

I Rym. z. 234 sq.

1 Track between England and Aragon still went on (D K R skir €16), though it must have been exposed to much interruption

Bestecourt, 1, 122, n. ;
 Rym x, 161; the envoyaleft is February (in: Roll p Hen. V. Mich., Feb. 3 and 21, 1412.
 For. Accts, 56, E).
 Thid.
 Above, pp. 213, 144 sq.

assumed a similar attitude, and for long avoided meeting Henry. on various pretexts. On March 25, 1422, he was peremptorily ordered, in the name of Charles VI, to swear that he would accept Henry as king of France after Charles's death?; and, doubtless under pressure from Burgundy and the impression produced by the fall of Meaux, he swore in Philip's presence that he would uphold the cause of Charles, Henry, and the duke, and that after Charles's death he would do his best to suppress rebels in his lands? I his, however, was not the oath required. by the treaty or that recently demanded by the French king. Further, the document recording what he had done was attested only by his "secret marks," as he had not brought his seal with him-purposely, one may suspect-and his promise to seal a similar instrument was conditional on his receiving first from Charles and Henry the letters which he ought to have, whatever those might be.

Dijon, wherethe duke of Lorraine took his oath, had itself been most rejustant to give any pledge to obey the treaty. When Duke Phi ip went there, in February, 1422, he was accompanied by the chancellor of France and the bishops of Thérouanne and Beauvais, who had been commissioned to receive the oath from the inhabitants. Their chances of success depended entirely on the duke, but Philip had evidently left Henry full of zeal for the Anglo-Burgundian aliiance, he put strong pressure on the obstinate mayor and Abritani, and after a couple of proposed compromises had been rejected by the king's representatives, he commanded them to take the oath in the form required, and smoothed the path of surrender by giving them letters testifying that they did so at his behest.

Tournay, on the other hand, remained obdarate up to Henry's death. Here resistance came from the populace rather than the civic officers, whom Henry seems to have won over in the early summer of 1422. They were so apprehensive of the consequences to themselves that they did not dare to publish an order of Charles VI enjoining the people of Tournay to obey Henry as himself. It was believed that Henry intended to [·] Beaucourt, i. 126.

Douet d Arcq, 1-4-2 14

Plancher, iv p tx

^{*} En aigne de versté avons fait planque nostre signer morair en maege de ou presenten en absence de montre me: " (shid.) * Ibad.

• Ibad. 44 sq.

besiege the place, but if he had any such plans they were cut short by his death!

Henry's diplomacy, however, achieved more in the closing episodes of his varied dealings with Brittany. During the summer of 1421 the relations between the two had remained anomalous. The English persistently treated the truce as still existing², the duke did so on occasion². As we have seen, however, the duke's brother Richard was serving in the dauphin's army with a large Breton contingent. On the other hand, the bishop of Nantes went in August at the head of a mission to Par st. Arthur of Richemont, moreover, was at first in Normandy on parole, which he steadfastly refused to break. and in August and September, 1421, accompanied at least for a time by the earl of Suffolk, he was in Brittany, sent thirter by Henry to persuade the duke to withdraw military support from the dauphin. The duke refused to reply until he had consulted the Estates of the duchy. When they met, it was argued by some that the dauphin had broken the treaty of Sable by retaining in his service men who had connived at the outrage of the count of Penth evre, but the majority were of the contrary opinion, and the Breton troops were not recalled?. They were, however, to some extent neutralised, for Arthur of Richemont himself raised a force of men-at-arms, archers, and crossbowmen for service under Henry®, and, as was recorded above, took them to the siege of Meaux⁹. The position of Brittany became more ambiguous than ever. It remained the policy of the Erg ish to presend that the truce continued in and the duke still lent him. self to the fiction 11. At the same time he was trying to attract to Brittany, especially to Rennes, Normans discontented with English rule, large numbers of whom are said to have settled in his territories14, while the support given by his subjects to hostile enterprises in Normandy and at sea impelled Henry, in D K R xlu, 414. Blanchard, no. 1504.

For Aces. 69, F vo.

Pot 1906; Daumet, 222.

Rot. Norm. 9 Hen. V, m. 26 d.

Bid 133; DK R. 269 632.

W Blanckard, no. 1918; Bouckart, 181

4 Rym. z. 257 ag.

14 Cal. Pat. 1476-23, P. 444

J. J. Smet, Corpus Chronicorum Flandriae, in 172 app. (Chron. des Pays-Bus, de France, d Angleterre, et de l'ourant. Cl. Beaucourt, in 490, 497.

^{*} Boschart, Les Grandes Chroniques de Bretaigne, 179 h; Chron. d'Arthur de

Morice, Hist. i. 442, President ii. 1121, 1123, 1123, 1124, 11643 Cosmesu, 614 Blanchard, the autumn of 1421, to arrest the ships and goods of Bretons in many English ports and to forb d trade between Brittany and Normands¹. English agents, however, had remained with the duke after Arthur of Richemont's depar ure2, and in the end their influence seems to have prevailed. At all events, in April, $472, the duke announced that he wished to come in person, or at east to send a deputation, to Henry in the cause of peace. The necessary safe-conducts were granted, but whether the embassy was sent does not appear. At the beginaing of June, however, matters had advanced further, for on the 4th sate-conducts were issued for commissioners whom the diske was sending to swear to the treaty of Troves, though their wallcity was conditional on his promising to take the oath in person afterwards. The bus ness nevertheless made slow progress, for the dake's letters empowering his representatives to swear on his behalf were not actually drawn up till lune 26. He was careful to state that he was alt ng with the advice of the notable men of the duchy, and record was made of the ecclesiastics, rooles, and officials who had given their consent⁸. The mission, headed by the bishops of Nantes and Vannes, arrived in Paris on July 278, but they drove a hard hargain with the royal government, and it was not until after He my's death that the eath was formally taken, in return for a substantial grant of land to the duke and a promise to aid him against his enemies and to punish Olivier de Blois!, Still, Henry had detailhed Brittany from its alliance with the dauphin.

Nothing Illustrates better Herry's superiority as a strategist over Edward III and the Black Prince than his refusal to dissipate his strength by undertaking big operations in Aquitaine. Whatever changes occurred there, whether through diplomacy or through force, had no more than local importance, and there is no need to describe them in detail. Little of note happened during 1419. The great lords of the south-west, determined to keep their lands in any event, continued to mt on the fence. The count of hors, after being invested with the government of Languedoc by both French parties, recovered

Chun a Hen V. m. 11. D K.R. alle Gpt, Brequigny 124, 154

Moreon Heat is ally 4 Tead armin Rem n non son. Maria, Preuves a 1212 to Frucuersbergue, d. 54 oq. 7 Moroe Preven, a. 61,9, 1220

Flourne, 72, 74, 77, 844 sq ; Vannite, 81, 1048, Banacoust, i. 374.

nearly the whole of it for the dauphin! but after the tragedy of Montereau, where his brother Archambaud was kaled, he was won over to the Burgundun cause, the dauphin consequently revoking his commission when he visited the south early in 14202. From then till 1412 he was friendly with bo h Burgundians and English, though very cautious in his dealings. with them. One of his brothers, the captal de Buch, was, as we have seen, serving Henry zealously in Normandy; while the other, Mathieu, count of Comminges in right of his wife, was beginning to waver in his devotion to the dauphin in 1420, and ranged himself with the Burgund an party. Henry's truce with the count of Armagnac and the lord of Albret had been prolonged to June 24, 14198, and even after its expiration the two lords gave no trouble.

There was, however, a certain amount of fighting in southwestern France, some of it in Santonge, some in the neighbourhood of Bayonne. The men of Saintonge were not willing to go far sheld in the dauphin's cause, but, the English having taken Mortagne, a good deal of zeal was devoted to its recovery. The operations, first directed by the lord of Pons and afterwards by the count of Vertus, the dauphin's heutenant in Saintonge, ended in the capture of the place by escalade on the night of Dec. 20, 14194. Meanwhile, the inhabitants of Bayonne. were in great again at the active intervention of Castile on the Armagnac side. Documents captured by one of their ships betraved the Castilian plans for transporting Scottish troops to France and besieging Bayonne'. A few weeks later, in September, 1419, they wrote to Henry begging for aid against the Castilians, who had entered the country in great force and laid waste the land from Fuenterrabia to the very gates of the city. It was believed in Bayonne that the whole military force of both Castile and Aragon was shortly to be directed against them^a; but such fears were of course fantastic, and the mutual jealousies of the two Spanish kingdoms, together with domestic strife in Castile, prevented the achievement of anything permanently important.

¹ Flouric, 71 acq 3 Ibid. Bragg. 4 Ibid. 13.

Rym. ix. 690, 695. * Beaucourt, i. 174.

It was perhaps the news of the activities of the Castikans that moved Henry to show a little more concern than usual for his interests in Aquitaine. It was time that something was done, Even those regions where English authority was paramount were in rvil plight. The coasts were exposed to the raids of French privateers1. There were recurring pestilences and famines in most districts! For long, the archbishop of Bordeaux, so far from being able to visit his province, was constrained to neglect his own diocese. At so important a place as St Emilion both church and fortifications were rumous! Henry, indeed, did not intend to do much himself, but in the autumn of 1419 he wrote to the prelates, nobles, and towns of Guienne, ordering them to attend a meeting of the Estates which he was instructing the mayor and the constable of Bordeaux to summon* These officers were charged to ask for a fourge at least, and for more if the capital de Buch, who was sent at the same time, thought t advisable. Probably, too, the king gave orders for the initiation of a campaign for the recovery of such parts of the duchy as were in French hands. In the following April, at any rate, La Réole, Purnormand, Malengin, and Lamothe-Montravel had been attacked, and Bordeaux had sent troops and its big bombard to assist in the operations'. Some of the men of Bordeaux, however, had shirked service, and when on April 11, 1420, the summons to the meeting of the Estates was read to the jurien and they were told that the lieutenant-seneschal had chosen Dax as the place and the first Sunday in May as the time, the news evidently roused misg vings. The risks of the journey were admittedly great. and the purpose of the assembly had not been disclosed. The people were reluctant to give their delegates power to consent to taxation, but in the end it was decided that they should have author ty to accept anything demanded by the king, provided thel 148

^{*} Ibid gang Green till affan

^{*} Ord Priv. Co. 11 2652 266 1911 Jurade: 363 191. The letters were dated at Gisera. Sept. 26 On the Estates of Guierage, see Lodge, Gascony, 246 29

Ord Prev Co. u. 165 eq., 267 eq. 7 Jurade, 362, 363, 366 Paymormand and Malanger are in dee Gronde, are I bourne, cant Lunac; Lamothe-Montraval a to dep. Dordogne, arr Bergerac, cant that nothing done should create a precedent or cause prejudice to the rights of the city. The provost and two others were chosen to go1.

Jurade, 166

The "parlament," as it is repeatedly cailed in the records of the Bordeaux jurana, met on May 17. John Radchife, constable of Bordeaux, speaking on behalf of Henry, expressed the king's regret that he could not personally undertake military. operations in Guienne, but asserted his intention of making war there until he had recovered the whole duchy. This would also have the good effect of preventing the French of the southwest from helping those elsewhere. He therefore asked the Estates to grant a fourge of a gold noble on each "bearth," adding that the whole would be spent on operations in Guienne3.

The Estates retired to del berate in the refectory of the Friars Minor; but when all were ready to begin, the deputies from the Landes declared that they must debate separately from those of the Bordelais, and notwithstanding remonstrances from the archbishop of Bordeaux, withdrew. Left to themselves, the representatives of the bordelais drew up a reply to the constable, which was communicated by the archbishop, four lords, and the deputies of Bordeaux, Libourne, St Em hor, and Bourg. They said that a number of lords and clergy, and the towns of Ciasrac4 and Castil onnès8 had not been summoned, though they should have been, and that in consequence those present could give no defin te answer to the king's request, seeing that what touches all should be approved of all. When all those named in the list which they presented had been summoned, they would be pleased to give a reply after due consideration. With this the proceedings evidently ended, What was said by the deputies of the Landes is not recorded.

It looks as if the king's officers regarded the message of the representatives of the Borde ais as a polite refusal to do anything. At Bordenux, nevertheless, the civic authorities were for the most part loval enough. They tried to prevent trade with the king's enemies, and discussed measures against disloyal agitators. To compensate in some measure for the failure of the assembly at Dax, they resolved to raise one hundred men-at-arms to fight the French and to pay them for three months. Meanwhile, the places besieged in the early spring having fallen, the civic nulitia had been taking part in the siege of Rions, which had been brench since 1408, and with the formidable artiflery of the city also lending its aid, the town was reduced by the middle of July, 1420. By agreement with the constable it remained in possession of the civic authorities of Bordeaux. The men and artiflery of the city were forthwith sent to 5t Macaire, which was carried by assault on Aug. 25°,

¹ Jurade, 163, 364, 369 iqq-, 376, 377.

Dep Lot et Garonne, arr. Marmande, cant. Tonnem. 6 fibid. 380 sq Dep. Lou-ec-Garoning airs. Villeneuve-sur Lot, chef-lieu of canton " Jurade, 38x ang. The editor of these most valuable records thinks that the list of those not summoned employe us to determine the extent of English authority at this time. But, first, it is admittedly not exhaustive (find year secondly, places far beyond the sphere of effective English jurisdiction, and places or the very heart of the area where English rule was loyalty accepted, are mixed up inducriminately. The king's officers had apparently usued their summons in an haphazard way.

The seneschal of Aquitaine, John Tiptoft, had accompanied the king to Normandy and, as we have seen, had been president of the Scotterium and treasurer-general of that duchy, besides rendering useful service in diplomacy. Henry's increasing interest in Gascony was indicated by his despatch of Tiptoft thither in the spring of this year. This had been resolved upon in May, when shipping for his transport was commandeered in Bristol and neighbouring ports, but he did not sail till after June 18". It was declared that the king's officers in the duchy of Aquitaine were to be paid before any others, and that Taptoft's arrears of pay were to be cleared off in a way satisfactory to him?. He took with him sixty men-atarms, too archers, and a considerable quantity of grain and foragel* On Aug 23, 1420, be landed at Bordeaux4. With him came the mayor, John 5t John, who, with one of the citizens, had been on a mission to Henry 18.

In addition to his administrative and military duties, Tiptoft had been empowered by the king to adjudicate in a bitter dispute which had been waged for more than a year between the civic authorities and the archbishop¹³. The question at issue,

```
1 Jurade, 378, 386, 389.
2 Ibid. 388, 403, 403, 423, 480; Drouyn, 1, 238 aq.
4 Jurade, 426.
5 Cal. Par 1426-22, pp. 178, 329, 320.
7 Ibid. 324, where the date is wrongly gwee.
6 Rym. ix. 913.
8 Chanc. Warn, Ser. 1, 667/938.
11 Jurade, 438.
12 Jurade, 438.
13 Ibid. 386, 438 aqq.
```

15 Ibid. 441

as was usual in such cases, was the frontier between ecclesiantical and secular jurisdiction!. Anti-clerical feeling evidently ran high in Bordeaux, and the juran had sought to counter the support which the archbishop received from the pope by putting the matter before the king*. The quarrel apparently caused more concern in Bordeaux than the war, and it still had a long course to run. But it may most conveniently be treated in connection with Henry's general attitude towards the pope.

As for the recovery of Gascony, Tiptoft's arrival seems in no way to have promoted it. He soon talked of laying siege to Budos, and Bordeaux placed its military resources at his service; but if any operations were attempted before the end of the year, they were not successful. The autumn, indeed, was depressing. There was much sickness in the city4, and the French were aggressive. At the beginning of November the mayor of Bourg sent word that his town was threatened by the dauphin, who was at Pops with a large force. Evidently this was not believed, for he was told that Bordeaux had no articlery to spare and had to content himself with twenty-five pounds of gunpowder. A little later, however, the Bordeaux authorities, perhaps alarmed by the arrival at Rochefort of galleys from Castile, were in apprehension of an attack on the city by both sea and land, though their fears proved to be groundless.

In 1421 Gascony witnessed much warlike activity but few important changes. In Murch a truce was signed with the dauphinists at Budos and Bizas', but long before midsummer, when it expired, preparations for the siege of the former were being made's. Bordeaux sent a contingent, with the city's big gun and two smaller pieces, and before June 29 André de Budos, who was in command of the defence, began to parley with Menaut de Fabas, captain of the Bordeaux troops. His terms, which were somewhat insolent, were rejected by the seneschal, and the siege was pressed to a successful issue by the middle of July's. The zeal of Bordeaux had strained its resources, and the civic government had to raise a loan to cover blbid. 519, 520, 521, 322 iqq., 549.

WILL

¹ Ibid. 463. 1 Ibid. 469, 4721 Auny, Registrat, iii. 307 84. 1 Iurade, 494. 2 Iurade, 494.

military expenses? At this time grain was so dear that Henry was asked to permit its importation from hingland?

In All not the appearal isked for the use of the big gun egazing an Marque, the siege of which was in progress a month later, when it was agreed that the zun should he lent? Bordeaux ers. had men on active service, and in October tent supposes to Menaut de l'abay, it pulating that he should hold the trontier and make unremiting war on the garrison of Bazasa. The in a are activity of the English and their supporters evidently thused concern to the French, even in regions which were not directs threatened for wher the daughin summoned the forms of his territories to send their contingents to hendeme in August, 1421, St. fern d'Angely begyed for exemption, jest the town should be sen to the mercy of its exempest. There angest have been better ground for this aiarm after Nev. C. when two letters from Henry reached Borcesus. In the first of these he thanks the master and rarms for their lovalty, and proces them to wage too trull war against Potton, Suntonge, and other daughterist riggious, under the direction of the capital de But I and the schess half. A few days later in reserve se to this appear, the civic au horst er resolved to maintage forty men atarms and eights archers in the king's service? About a month

I find $49.

* Lind, $50 $64. The city had greet confidence in artillery and was evidently proud of its guas busis is not easy to discover from the scattered references in the records what its insolutions in artillery wins. Besides negative groups of the old type—stangonias, for buckets, and such like—it possessed a large bombant and one or two smaller cannon in the spring of $420 (ibid $63, $66, $26, $400). In the number of that year a large gua, capable of firing a stone of seven hundredweight, was being made; it was apparently used for the first time at the siege of Budos (ibid $426, $50). Smaller cannon were also being by when present me the times of the matter of the matter state of the matter of the m

* Incl. 370.

* Jurade, 373. The aerond letter ordered the authorities to settle accounts with the mayor ("bid 373 sq.). The dating of these letters furnishes a horrible warning to the historical investigator. The first is dated, "some nostre prive sock, a mouse paleys de Westmonster, le quint jour de juya." Nevertheless, it asserts that the king had arready arrived at Calais (of above, p. 318). It confounds confusion by adding: "Et, pour on the most crosses que de ce puries estre plustost certifies de nostre royasime é'Anglesera que de les rostes ou nous suymes, a avont feit custes nos letras (ac), desons nostre prive me, en nostredit (ac) rotaume enterné. The second letter, also under the privy mal was dated at Dover, June 18. It is with great reluctance that I assure the moder that on June 3 Henry was not at Westminister and had not yet reached Calais, and that on the 18th he was not at Dover. There could not be a better illustration of the danger of using the dates of reces was document as a form of he had a summarise to the Nagar 1 to 18-74, 30).

* Jurade, 378

later another letter from Henry thanked the people of Bordeaux for their share in the recent fighting, exhorted them to do yet more in future, and asked for frequent informs. tion about the enemy!. Accordingly, when in January, 1422, it was rumoured that the dauphin was at hand and had declared that he would presently attack Bordeaux, a balinger was despatched to convey the news, though the populace seems not to have believed it. The citizens, however, were concerned about the condition and prospects of Gascony, and wished to discuss with the people of the Landes, Bayonne, Dax, and St Sever the advisability of sending a deputation to lay their views before the king. The long's Council and the nobles were in favour of the proposal, and nominated two members of the projected mission, inviting Bordeaux to appoint a third, and suggesting that Bordeaux, St Emakon, Libourne and Bourg should furnish one-third of the expenses, the Church and the barons supplying the resti-The city government, however, eventually decided that the cost of the deputation would be too great*, but in March sent the mayor and the town clerk to Henry, a course probably more expensive than the one rejected. Meanwhile further letters from Henry had promised his support against the archbishop, given a long report of his last campaign, and once more urged an offergive in Saintonge and Portous. The citizens were apparently ready to comply, but what they did we do not know, for shortly afterwards the records of the inrade fail, and there is no available evidence as to the course of the war in the south-west of France for what little of Henry's reign was left. The captal de Buch had planned to be sege Montguyon, and had secured the loan of the famous big gun and two smaller ones!. The outcome is not known, but an active policy on the part of the English was apparently expected, for in the spring the count of Armagnac had a force for the defence of the frontier of Ginenie against them!. Nothing very startling can have occurred, for when Henry died, Bazas and St Baze lle blid 601 613 Morrguson is in dep Charente-Inf., 222 Jonasc

4414

Describer Blandlam, July 11 (Jurade, 186).

1 Bud 191, 602. 4 thid bog Did for iog bil. 1 Ibid 4 co sqq Itel do juga do juga ^{*} Bibl. car , MS frang 26,044, not, 5701, 5729. The count's brother Bernard was the daugh n's lieutenant-general in Saintonge, Augeumon, and the Lamousin during the latter part of 1421 (Annry, Reg. ii. 219 19.3.

were still hostile to the English, neither being reduced till 14141. The operations of the last two years, though distinctly favourable to the hip ish, had not materially changed the situation, and the area in Aquitaine over which their rule was effective remained very narrow.

But if arms achieved little in Aquitaine, diplomacy accomplished still less. Henry was evidently willing to make great corcessions to the nobles of that region. Shortly before the treaty of Troyes was signed, he authorised the captal de Buch. to offer his brother, the count of boix, the choice of the office of constable of France or the governorship of Languedoc as the price of his support of the Anglo-Burgundian all ance". On July 1, 1420, he granted the viscounty of Narbonne, with other lands in Languedoc, to Mathieu de Foix, count of Comminges2. The English military successes of 1420 probably account for the fact that at Rouen, in the following January, envoys from the lord of Albret and his cousin Francis, ford of St Bazenle⁴, undertook that these fords should do homage to Henry as duke of Aquitaire and swear to obey the treaty of Troyes, while there was to be a mutual restoration of property and, on Henry's part, the grant of an amnesty for misdeeds arising out of disputes that had originated in the famous appeal. against the Black Prince more than fifty years before. But the two lords failed to rat by the treaty, and it was only after much difficulty that the English authorities in Gascony concluded a mere truce with the lord of Adret later in the year.

During Henry's stay at Rouer there were also present two agents of Jean de Grandy, count of Foix, who were officially described as having been sent to expose his affection for the treaty of Iroyes and his desire to serve Charles VI and Henry, The conclusion of an agreement was, however, frustrated by the question of homage, or Bearn, which Henry claimed as due to him, and all that could be decided was that the difference should be settled by negotiation and not by force?

* Bauren, Varietés Bordeloues, 19. 1911, Carocide, est boyag

Figurac, $3 mg

Deronde, avs. 16 un ged DRR ulv 310

Appeared on Sept. 15, 242. (1 16).

Rum. 2, 41 eqq. When Piets, y stird. 2, 45) spoke of the two fords at having done howage and accepted the treaty of Troyes, he was plainly membring to these the action. of their representatives

* Juride, 491, 494, 556, 555.
* Rym. E. 46. These negotiations are mischand by Figures (54).

In the autumn of 1421 negotiations were resumed. Henry having in the meantime renewed his offer of the previous year?; they were conducted before Meaux during the winter, and an agreement was signed at 5t haro on March 3. When the count had personally taken the oath under the treaty of Troves. he was to be invested with the government of Languedoc and the county of Bigorre, together with other lands claimed by him as his own. He was to receive money sufficient to pay t coo soldiers, and for himself and the nobles of his retinue he should have 750 gold crowns a month. He was to begin military operations against the dauphin before June 12. Formal commissions to the count as governor of Languedoc and Bigorre were forthwith made outs, and the French Treasury was ordered to provide for the regular payment of the sums fixed n the agreement, with the exception of 2750 crowns, which, it was stipulated, were to be paid in England⁶. Thither, accordingly, the count's representatives betook themselves, the money being delivered to them at Southam iton on April 217, They were taken back to Gascony in one of the king's ships, and reached the count on May 29 at Mont-de-Marsan. He then declared that they had in certain respects exceeded their nstructions. After discussion with his brother, the capial, and other commissioners sent by Henry to receive the oath to the treaty, he approunced that he would take it when the agreement had been subjected to various amendments. The truth was that he had been listening to overtures from the dauphinion Before further steps could be taken Henry died. The count seems to have kept the money brought by his envoys from Southampton, and up to Henry's death this was the sole tangible result of the elaborate negotiations, evidently regarded by the king as of great moment, the records and instruments of which fill many pages of Rymer's Fadera.

The Norman Rolls for a Hen V contain a writ, dated March I, ordering the preschal of Guerne to aid he count of Forz, who had been entrasted with the reduction of Languedoc and Bigorie (Nym x 70, D K R x.ii 402). There can be no doubt, however that the document ought to have been corolled under the following year.

Ibid. 204 sqq ; In Roll to Hen. V, Patch., April 20, May 26, 1422
 Ibid. April 20, 1422.

^{*} Rym. x: x30 sqq:1 Gwonde, zvi: 57, 29, 30, 314 Vic and Vannhie, in. 1071. 39 Flourie, 87

Although Henry left no stone unturned in his efforts to secure help in prosecuting the war, he seems to have been oppressed by the magnitude of the task that faced him. It would be interesting to know his private views as to the possibility of giving tull effect to the treaty of Troyes. Probably, when it was signed, he hoped that it would be generally accepted by Frenchmen, and that the dauphinist party, though it would doubtless resist, would be too weak to hold out for long. The campaign of 1420 must have opened his eyes, and as we have seen, he evidently realised when he went to England in 1421 that a hard struggle lay before him in France!. Since his return he had materially improved the situation of the Anglo-Burgundain party; but he had achieved nothing decisive; and, while it is true that in conquering Meaux he conquered many other places, he must have recognised that if all such success was to cost such effort, his resources would fail long before the dauphinists were subdued. We may well believe, therefore, that he began to incline towards compromise with the enemy. After all, the treaty of Troyes placed him in a very strong position, and he might confidently expect to secure such terms as no Englishman would have dreamt of three years before.

There is consequently nothing incredible in the story that Henry confided to the duke of Burgundy and a few of his councillors—presumably at the siege of Meaux in January, 1422—that he desired to treat for peace with the dauphinists and hoped that, at the instance of Burgundy, the duke of Savor would make the first approaches. The two dukes had an interview at Geneva, which Philip reached on March 29 and left on April 43. It appears that the duke of Savoy agreed to send envoys to France with a view to mediation, and they passed through Lyons on May 174. What followed is not known but the attempt probably broke down very soon.

It was of course to the papacy that men generally looked for mediation between combatants, and Henry's preference for [•] See above, pp. 172 sq.

Beautouzt, i. 319, at 520 sq., citing Collection de Bourgogne, 39, pp. 421-428, 422 which contain instructions of Duke Philip to envoys at the time of the congrue of Arras of 4 c. In the Burgundian document, printed by La Barre (1342), according the English of breaking the treaty of Troyes, it is said that Henry V "cust ouvert an ion civant is vaye de tadue Pais generale, et en east hone voicaté de la poursuir."

the duke of Savoy was no doubt due to the ill-concealed unfriend mest of Martin V towards the English. The pope was becoming more insistent in his demand for the repeal or modification of the Statute of Provisors. In June, 1421, after renewed representations from Martin on the matter, together it seems, with advice about ending the war, Simon de Teramo, the papa, collector in England, was requested by Henry to go to Rome and communicate his reply!. Henry assured the pope of the devotion of himself and his I ng ish realm to the apostolic see, and caused that he had always striven to maintain his conquests in their accustomed obedience to the papacy². As for the offensive statute, it had not, he repeated, been made by him, but by his predecessors with the consent of he Three Estates, without whose concurrence it could not reasonably be repealed. He had never undertaken to raise the question in the recent parliament and indeed pressure of urgent public business rendered its discussion impossible. He now, however, offered to consider in the first parliament held after his return to England (which he hoped would not be long delayed) whether the statute could reasonably be maintained. Had the trafter been brought up when there was no time to seitle it. those hostile to the payacy would have been forewarned and the pope's interests prejudiced. Henry's explanations were per-haps a little too plaus ble; after all, he might have frustrated the auti-papat legislation by neglecting to enforce it, as previous kings had done, instead of being the first to execute it strictly. and it is not surprising that he failed to convince the pope of his amcerity. In a reply dated Oct. 19, Martin again en arged on the wicke iness of the anti-papal measures and the disgrace that must attach to any country where they were applied. What Simon de Teramo had been told to say about peace we

I on Ruling How V. Panel., Fully 19, repl., third. Mitch., March 19, 1922; Ravenschun.

Will 131 by In the same month an embases from Charles VI and Henry was assessly mt the current but he huminous is correction (Mineraum), it, 224 h.).

1 Cotton MS., Cleop. E. ii. f. 353 boq. 4 Raynaldus, von. 938 oq.

nt the curse, but he business is uncertain (Morosini, it. 224 ii.).

2 So far as we can tell, this claim was justified. It was by the Armagines that the Libertus of the Catalian Charch were uplend, the Burgand and had formally accepted the restored authorize of the paper and declared thereasing content with the courses one made to Marian Y in his case relativistic the French near the claim of the Courses of Courses (has see any other with the French near the claim of the Courses of Courses (has see any other had be seen as set of any over their units of region to of region of France reducines that he seen as set in the parameters of the courses of the courses of the courses of the course of magnificance of their passages one made that the Parameter was in favour of magnificance. In do not know, but Henry can hardly have shown much desire for it, since in another letter, apparently written about the same time, Martin exhorts him to turn his mind to it, lectures him verbosely on the mutability of fortune, and reminds him that the continuance of the war in France delays the extirpation of hereby in Bohemia. He must receive with readiness the pope's counsels and isten attentively to the bishop of Bologna, whose wisdom and purity have led the pope to choose him to go to France in the cause of peace. The pope also wrote to the dauphin, commending peace and commiserating him in his mistortunes. This letter is more friendly in tone than the one addressed to Henry².

No doubt the dispute between the archbishop and the city of Bordeaux increased the tension between king and pope. The arbitration of John Tiptoft, after some vacillation on the part of the archbishop, had brought about an agreement on the basis of the status quo aute. In May, 1421, this was supplemented by a settlement of some outstanding points. The quarrel might have ended there, had not the pope meanwhile rejected the former agreement as showing insufficient regard. for the rights of the Church⁶. The jarati in office at the beginning of the dispute still lay under sentence of excommunication, and those of the current year were now declared to have incurred. the same fate. Both pope and jurate had sought the assistance. of Henry". Hitherto he seems to have contented himself with efforts to mediate, but in the summer of 1421, evidently annoyed by Martin's intransigence, he began to throw his weight on the side of the city*, and in the autumn instructed his agents and friends at the curia to forward its cause by all means in their power⁸. A further appeal from the city was followed by the summons of the archbishop to the king. He set out in March, 142219.

Just at this unpropitious moment, there was on his way to Henry Urban de Florencia, of the Carthusian house of Santa

¹ Raynaldus, viii 539.  Ibid. 540.  Cal. Papal Lett vii 93 Jurade, 453 sqq  Ibid. 512, 513, 516.  Cal. Papal Lett. vii 93 Jurade, 516 sqq  Ibid. 440, 456, 526 sq., 521 sq., 548 sq.  Ibid. 427, et passim; Cal. Papal Lett. vii 9.

Jurade, 567
 Ibid, 502, 503 sq.
 Ibid, 508, 519.

Croce in Rome, whom the king had expressed a wish to meet, and who was entrusted by the pope with pusiness which presumably had to do with the repeal of anti-papal laws and the conclusion of peace in France¹. Of Urban's doings no more seems to be known, but little can have come of them. He was closely followed by Nicholas Albergati, bishop of Belogna, who on Feb. 0. (42.2) was commissioned to visit Henry, the day phin, and the duke of Burgundy, with a view to making peace. Though furnished with eliborate instructions, he was to be guided largely. by his discretion? This must have been subjected to a speedy test, for about the time of his departure, March 26, Martin received from the dauphin a complaint about papal encroachments on his rights, and though the pope wrote protesting his innocence and his affection for the dauphing, the bishop can hardly have found a very friendly atmosphere at his court. But what happened there we do not know. In July Albergati had reached the second stage of his task and was at Serlis! If the humanist Poggio, then in England, is to be believed, his sanctity and single-mindedness made a most favourable impression on the English king and his counsellors, and another contemporary states that he had framed conditions of peace which had some chance of acceptance, when the deaths of Henry and Charles VI threw everything into confusions. He travelled about in France till the summer of 14237 but passions. ran too high for him to accomplish anything.

When Henry was dead, his non-committal promises about the Statute of Provisors became increasingly defin to in papal letters to his sen's Council. Soon after the beginning of the new reign, Martin alleged that he had promised to call a parliament immediately on returning from France and to take measures at it for the restoration of the Church's liberty. By $435 he had resolved to give the pope full power over all benefices, and only death could have frustrated the performance of this laudable intention.

1 Cal. Papal Lett. 113. 9

Acta Sanctorum, II, die nona maij. p. 479; Raynaldus, via. 440.

Acta Sanct., Isc., cit., g Beaucourt, i. 530, cf. Cal. Papal Lett., vii. 4.

Beaucourt, i. 3123 cf., Dovit d'Arcq, Comptet, x84.

Acta Sanct. II, die ist maij, p. 472.

Beaucourt, i. 3123 cf., Dovit d'Arcq, Comptet, x84.

Representation and comptet.

^{1 [}bid 470, 480. * Rayesidus, viii 557

I lbid it rouse Engenius IV in Henry VI) For the agreement said to have been made be ween Henry and the pope about the posterious of later, petures, see above, L 341 sq.

CHAPTER LXXIII

THE REGENT OF FRANCE

It must not be forgotten that Henry was regent of France The terr tery over which his authority could make itself feliwas of course small. Normandy and the "conquest" were administered as a separate state. Until just before his death Besttany was at best an unfriendly neutral. The duke of Burgardy had of course to be treated as an ally rather than a subject. Beyond the Loire the country was almost solicly daughinist. North of it, Vendome and Anjou were entirely and Maine was mostly in dauphinist hands. Perche and the Chartrain still contained a number of dauphinist strongholds, such as Châteaudun, Senonches, Nogent-le-Roi (taken by Henry in August, 1421, but evidently lost again), Rambou llet, and Autoraul; while in some parts of the royal domain, even though the population might have accepted the treaty of Troves, the multary activities of the dauphinists made effective administration impossible. Thus, as we have seen, Picardy, the northern parts of the Ile-de-France, and a great part of Champagne were the scenes of constant fighting, amid which the civil at thorities were powerless. Between the treaty of Troyes and Henry's death, there are records of appointments of baids. in the bandrages of Amiens*, Vermindois*, Valois*, Serlis*, Meaux⁶, Melun⁷, Sens⁸, Troyes⁸, and Chartres¹⁰—a list which probably gives a somewhat too favourable impression of the extent of Henry's authority¹⁴. Normandy apart, his position was not unoke that of a French king of the tweltth century.

Fauquembergue, i. 391; Fenin, 190

Fauquembergue, 1, 391. Ibod. ii. ça. ■ Ibid at an Ibid. i 191 1 Ibed. 12. 30 P Ibid i. 190, ii. 2719.

34 Fauguembergne, II. 1. Boutiot, al. 439. At these bulleages with the exception of Me un were the scene of much fighting Means remained in Japphinist hands for move than fourtien months after Henry had made an approximent to the borlinge of which it was the centre in hile the business of Chartres, as we have seen, was overrun by the dauphinus fir some weeks in the early number of 1427. In 1422 judges were established at Beauvais to deal with cases which ought property to have been tried at Senan, because of the rasks of travel between the two places (Farmmermont, 233).

h Bibl mat., MS. franç 26,044/5740; for Senonches, cf. Registres et Minutes du comité de Dunois, 15

Except for a few weeks in the winter of 1420-1421, Henry was engaged in military operations during the whole of the time which he spent in France after the signing of the treaty of Troyes. He had thus little lessure for reforming the French system of government-not that there is any reason to suppose that he desired to after much. Such changes as he made all had to do with finance. Within a few weeks of the conclusion of the treaty, he was trying to reduce the waste and extravagance. which marked the administration of the public revenues. This had for some time been under a single direction!; but in the actual receipt and disbursement of the money, the timehonoured distinction between commune and aides, or ordinary and extraordinary revenue, still caused a wasteful duplication. of officials. Heavy began, on July 14, 1420, by dismissing two of the four commissioners of finance Guillaume le Cerc and lean de Précy being suffered to remain in office. On Sept. 9, however, a much more crastic measure was taken. The two commissioners were discharged, accompanied by the changeur of the Treasury, the two deres on Treser, and the receiver-general and controller of the "extraordinary "revenues; all revenue, it was ordained, should be paid into the hands of a single efficial at the Treasury, without undergoing any deduction for the needs of the locality where it had been collected; this same functionary should make dispursements in pursuance. of orders from the king or his commissioner; and the clere du-Tresor should keep the account of all receipts and payments, and render it to the Chambre des Comptes at the accustomed times. The changes thus introduced not only made for economy, but brought under Henry's control all the available revenue of the crown, much of which had hitherto failed to Borrel, to home, in about. On the meaning of the term mater, of Dupon.

Ferrier, in Bibl. Ec. Charges, lexxix. Ordonnancei, xi. 94.

² Continuously since 1421 (Borrelli de Serres, iii. 176 eq.). It was under communicer appeared to 401 an gouserneurs géneraus tant du dessaute que det aides, montaires et autres finances. ² Violiet's belief (Institutions, iii. 424, 6, 5, 442, h a) that the unified control, after having level ansacreadadly prescribed by the Ordensizer cabe home, was introduced by flexy a n haved or a singular manualing of a document which in any case had to do with Normandy alone.

^{*} The might Their perturbe attached to historia and minds are fix the interring of the praintie. Comme Some announcement fait ad mer sur in fait it go amorement de fon finances, et avois este advertir que pour s'excessi nombre et grant mu'i oblatoir e tiff iens et aussi put sei est recu sichium, tant our entrers de decharges, nombre suivei : Resign por finances soit renues a teste diministration que Bux fair et affiares son, dem surez ... sam aucuste esse ution, fora a price notre fingueu le ent venue presque a totale destruction......"

teach the Treasury owing to ill-considered assignments. The duty of receiving and disbursing the money was apparently assigned to the chargear, who had for some time performed these functions in the case of "ordinary" revenue. A certain An iré d'Epernon was selected for the office, which he held until Henry's death!. There was still a clerc du Trésar, but no new derc, au Tresar, receiver-general, or control er seem to have hern appointed as long as Henry was regent? As for the genverneurs des finances, Gu llaume le Clerc, though deprived of the title, carried on their work until January, when Précy was restored to his position, with Pierre d'Orgement as colleague? These were replaced in the following September by Louis of Luxemburg, b shop of Thérovanne and Jean Doule, avecus général in the Cour des stides, noth of whom retained their posts for the rest of Henry's life*.

The officers named above, it will be observed, were French Dauphinist authors and later French writers in general give the impression that under Henry Englishmen governed those parts of France where his authority was effective. There is no basis for such a notion. The officials appointed in France during Henry's regency were almost without exception French men. The hallas, so far as we know, were all French^a. The great political and household officers, such as the chancellor, the marshals, the presidents of the Parlement, remained French^a. The personnel of the reval Council, of the Parlement, of the Chambre are Compten, and of the various departments of the household, so far as can be judged from the scanty and lable evidence, continued to be almost exclusively French^a. Even the government Borrelli de Serren in 159, 161, 163 iq.

Ibel. 173, 277; Ordennances, 21. 104.
 Borrelli de Serres, in. 137; ef Fauquernbergue, in 12; Bourgeon, 161, 8. 2.

^{*} Borreile de Serrei, 137 iq ; Fauquembergue, il. 14.

^{*} Ibid.; Bourgeon, 161, n 2.

* Jean le Cierc was appointed chancellor in Nevember, 1422 (Fauquembergus, 175 n-; 307), and held the position til. 1425 (ibid. il.; 59). At the beginning of 1421, the marshall were the bard of L'Isle Adam and the ford of Chancellox. After his arraw, L'Isle Adam was recorded by Jacques de Monthéron, a chamberlain of the dulie of Busgundy. On Jan. 15, 1422, Chancellox and Manthéron were replaced by Antoine de Vergy, court of Dammarian, and Jean de a Basme Monteres as appointment which was apheld, depose the protein of the lorde who lost office (Fauquembergus, n pf sq.; Bourgeon, 152, n. 44 Godefroy, Annotations, 797). For the presidents of the Parlement, see Fauquembergue, battim of Paris, a matter of such vital concern to the English, was, as a rule, entrusted entire y to Frenchmen. All the préson were French1; the police of the city was under Philippe de Morvilliers, the First President of the Parlements; on July 8, 1421, Exerer was replaced as military governor of Paris by Jean de la Baume-Montrevet, lord of Valhn2. Indeed, the only important exceptions to the general rule were the captains of certain garrisons, the Bastille4, the castle of Bois de Vincennes6, and the towns of Montereau⁴, Melun⁷, and Dreux⁸, being held by English troops for at least part of Henry's regency. Of course all the French office-holders were of the Burgundian party, and there is reason to believe that the duke of Burgundy had much influence on Henry's appointments?.

^{7.} It can entries the Crops at at meetin, when he was caption of Paris (Fauquembergan, 6. 4). A account lineid by Henry in Paris on June 5, 2422, there were present Bestroed, Easter, the earl of March, and the chancellor of Normandy (shell 50), but the presents.

The ordinances issued by the government at Paris from December, 1420, to August, 1422, were almost all concerned with the reform of the currency. The measures projected in December, 1420, speedily proved impracticable. The levy of silver had to be postponed in, and the price of the mark of silver, notead of being reduced to seven letters towerests, remained at wenty-six21, while in February, 1421, the lack of metal was so great and the dangers of transporting it so ser ous that the masters of the mints were authorised to offer an additional 403. All Meanwhile the existing coins were given and taken with but little regard to the value assigned them by official regulations¹³ of the last shows that it was an extraordinary assembly, and the names of those recorded. as having been settined as regular members of the royal Council in 1421 and 1422 are all French (161d. 18. 1 sq., 9, 37). For the Partement, see Fauquembergue, parsent for the Chambre der Comptes, Féribien, 1 1511; for the lung's bomesoid, Douet d'Areq. 1. 429 sqq. Comptes, 270 sqq.

1 Fauquembergue, 1-190, il. 12, 16, 17; Bourgeott, 147, 6, 1, 152, 8, 4, 156, 3, 1.

Douet d Areq, ü. 152.

1420-2

Bourgeon, 152, n. 45 Félibien, il. 1534.

Monster, iv. 374 Chart. i. 2204 Norm. Chron. 202; D.K.R. zlii. 408, 427; For. Acets. 74, G vo. Exch. Acets. 50/20.

Monstr iv 23; Chast. 1. 203; Norm. Chron. 202; Exch. Accts. 50/12, 13.
 D.K.R. xbi. 407; Cal. Fat. 1416-21, p. 435
 Monstr. iv. 23, Chast. 1. 203, D.K.R. xdi. 407

Ibul. 431, 437, xliv. 638; For. Acets. 61, C; Bibl. nat., MS frung. 16,044, no. 5677

It was while the duke of Burgundy was at Mesur that Hise de Lanrary was made master of the crowbowmen and that the marshau Chasteliux and Montheron were temoved in favour of Antoine de Vergy and Jean de la Baume Montievel. Fauquembergue, iz. 36 aq., Bourgeon, 152, n. 4, Godefroy, Annotations, 797).

W Cf above, p. 313

 Dráoanances, xi. 108, 117, Fauquembergue, n. 30.
 Dráoanances, xi. 117 aq.; Fauquembergue, n. 30. B Ordonnances, Ri. Rt g.

In June, 1421, a serious attempt was made to grapple with the situation. Unfortunately the government at first increased the prevaiung confusion by applying its new rules locally. As if it were not bad enough that the value of the currency in Normandy was different from that at Paris, new regulations were announced in Picardy a month before similar but not precisely the same changes were published in the capitall, There it was proclaimed on July 3 that throughout the realm the gold crown, which had latterly had the official value of four france or letres and in some parts had actually been current at seven, should henceforth circulate at 30s. t., while the silver gros, the coin on which most prices seem to have been based, was to be reduced from 20d t to 5, not to mention other changes on a similar scale. All monetary transactions, it was orgained, were to be made in terms of said and levres. Rents and wages due in the past year were to he paid in the money most recently in circulation, which was to be valued at the rate which had been current. Loans were if possible to be repaid in the currency in which they had been advanced. Merchants, tradesmen, and others were to charge reasonably for their goods and labour on pain of severe punishment. There were one or two further clauses designed to obviate injustice?.

The measure, as we have seen, caused consternation in Paris. Taxes had to be paid in "forte monnoye," that is, according to the new rates, while the officials were believed to be paying their creators and employes according to the old ones. The agitation in Paris caused the government to make speedy concessions. Tenants of houses or other property in the triemal of Paris might terminate their leases or Oct. 1, if they gave a month's notice, rent still due being paid according to the value of money at the time when their leases were granted. Lanctory, and tenant no doubt often can e to an amicable understanding. Most of the tenants of the cathedral gave notice, but the chapter agreed that its rents might be paid at the old rates. This may have been an equitable concession, but it of Cordeliers, 295.

^{*} Ordonnances, 21 132 sq. In Picardy it had been laid down that the gold crown should be valued at 34r pair 1.6. 42r 6d. mars. After July 3, when the new regula was were proclaimed in Paris, Picardy ought no doubt to have come into line, but the Cordelers chronicle certainly implies that it did not course frustrated the government's attempt to bring the real value of money into some relation to its nominal value and thus to prepare the way for the introduction of a sound comage. Farmers of taxes were also given the opportunity to terminate their agreements. On Aug. II came a fresh ordinance concerning the new money which was to be coined. The plans of the government had changed. They now intended to coin gold saluts worth 2 35.1, half-saluts also of gold, and blanes demens, made of an alloy of silver, which were to be worth 2 d.1 and 1d.1. The masters of the mints were to give 61.3d.1. for the mark of silver—a price which does not suggest that silver was scarce, though the abandonment of the silver coinage projected a few months before gives a contrary impression2,

^{*} Hoorgroin, 155 * Luc. 55cm a.

The change in the government's programme was due to the dauphinists, who by counterfeiting the good money struck in accordance with the scheme of the previous winter had made its circulation fut let. So it was stated in an ordinance, published on Nov. 3 together with a second designed to mingare the hardship which the new rules might occasion. The public was informed of the introduction of the new coins, many of the small ones having already been struck. Of the coins previously in circulation, the gras was to be reduced in value from 5d. t. to 214. The changers of the Pont de Paris were to give new money for old without charge. Those who possessed old money were not to hourd it on pain of having it forfeited, they must either circulate it or take it to the mini. Maximum prices were fixed for a number of commodities, and those concerned in certain trades were enjoined to reduce their charges in proportion to the changes in the value of the coinages. These measures had to be supplemented in December by an ordinance regulating the payment of rents and debts, and imposing rules about the fulfilment of contracts. Its principles were generally those of the similar measure of the previous June". At the same time there was drawn up an ordinance—not published, however, till Jan. 17, 1422-which forbade the use of any money save Отформация, ж. таб эрр.

Portonnamors, 20. 12.5. Libid 192 000.

² Ibid 228 4 Ibid 1532 254

I list. 134 eqq. As printed in the Orehonouser, the measures commanded apply only to Perio but the rules about coinage were evidently of general application and no docto provestions against a rise of prices were taken chewkere. The Cordelien chronicle (306) gives lept. 3 as the date where the value of the great or flowrite was reduced, but this is almost certainty a mistake for Nov. 3.

English gold nobles, coins called penti-montous worth 151 t. the gros (now worth 21d t.), and the coins struck since December, 1420, in Normandy and the territory under Henry's regency. No one was to export gray to places outside the king's obedience, and no bullion was to be transported except to the nearest mint1.

I he measures just outlined had to be supplemented in May. 1422, by an ordinance calling in all gros, as the dauphinists still found it profitable to counterfeit them?. Next month the prohibition of the use of the gros was repeated in terms which showed that the first order had been widely disregarded. Henry's efforts, however, had at least gained some success, and kenin, who shows special interest in financial matters, considers that 1421 marked the end of the depreciation of the currency which had become serious after Agincourt⁴. The new small coins were good, and their nominal value being but low, the dauphinists, though they counterfeited them, hardly found it worth their white to do so. Unfortunately, there were few other coins in circulation, and it was consequently very burdensome to carry large sums about. In his approval of Henry's measures benin is, however, probably voicing the opinion of property owners, who, with rents and dues fixed in sals and Arres, had suffered greatly owing to the high value attributed. to the coins in circulation, while tenants were ofter lable to pay their rents with the price of a few bushels of grains. In short, Henry's efforts to reform the currency, however conducive to the lasting welfare of the country at large, were not likely to increase his popular ty with the peasants and tradesment

Still more unpopular were the attempts made to collect the levy of silver authorised by the Littates in Deceriber, 1420. The whole matter is rather mysterious. In February, 1422, some of the clergy of Notre Dame declared that they had never heard of it. Others were under the impression that only a

* Fenm, 189.

Ordonnances, at $43 eqq.

I loid a63 eq., Bourgroot, 194 Frank, 198 eq. The come were to be taken or sent to the researchyst mint, which would pay for them according to the weight of salver they contained.

^{*} Ordonamen, zi. 168 sq. * Cordeliers, 1963 of. Dieudenné, 264.

^{*} Ferun, 189 squy of, Monster Iv. 35, 74.
* As on other of Beautian decisional that it were better to be hanged than to pay rents. its force more axe. It up a be work have preferred to cut off the heads of officials. who attempted to enforce the decree (Bourgroup 1956 to 2).

forced loan had been authorised. Two chroniclers-one dauphinist, the other Rurgundian-believed that the government undertook to pay in coin for the silver it received? There can be no doubt, however, that the levy was sanctioned by the Estates3, indeed, some of the Paris clergy admitted that a majority of the clerical Estate had voted for it4. But the government was slow in codecurg the silver, though the need for it was admitted a great. The first serious efforts seem to have been made outside Pana. Here and there the offic als were oppressive and demanded more than they were entitled to exact. Robert ie Jeune, sailly of Amiens, being a conspicuous offender. In the capital the collection of the silver was begun during the winter of 1421-14224. It caused much consternation, and little was received until Henry returned after the slege of Meaux, when the collectors set to work in carnest".

There was much murmur ng, especially against Philippe de-Morvilliers, who seems to have used drastic methods to enforce. payment, but fear of Henry prevented open reastance. Some of the accounts of the receivers are extant. They show that considerable trouble must have been taken over the assessment of individuals, and that the levy really was of general application, very influential people being made to contribute. The silver might be handed over in any form, provided that it was of the proper weight! In the extracts from the accounts printed by Douët d'Arag, no one appears as assessed for more than fifty marks12; while many, of very various callings, were Grandreille (14g.m.): This seems to have been bringed at Troops (Bocust, 4, 14g.) * for 152 feets, 140 I his manappitchesion was probably due to contenue of this less was also sometimes use in Normandy (impaliance p. 237), where the more were paid for by the government.

^{*} Above 7. 119. 4 Gimmornille, 146, n. s. Fenin, 290; Monste, iv. 79. * Conscionation tope 2. 2.

⁷ Monstr. iv., 100 sq., Chast, i. 183-

^{*} Bourgeon, 159, 262 sq. 8 Monete iv. one

^{} Hotergrott, 159, 20 taq.

 Hotergrott, 159, 20 taq.

 He demonrant in Palma";

Madame d'Orgemont, presumably the wife of Pierre d'Orgemont (50 marks'; Guy Gulbant, "trésorier de monnieur le duc de Bourgogne" (20 marks), Martelet Tents, "trèsorier de la Riyre" (2 marks), Pierre de Margon king a confessor and maltre des Requetes de "Hital fromarks. — Jouet d'Arce, 14.0, 226, 227. In August, 14.11. the Laivernity of Paris hadagest a departation to beg. Here's for exemption, but in an (Denrie, Chart W. 180 tq. 187. Desirt d'Airq, 1 419, 427). On y students, estdients to ness, and the very pines were exempt tolid 414, 417, 418). There seems to have here a right of appeal from the amesors to the Council, and it must be admitted that tevera strable people had their assessments grantly reduced.

²¹ Thid, 41 510.

 Macain: d'Organism was assessed at that attouch and apparently mand no objection (ibié. 426).

called upon for only two ounces. The assessment on three quartiers of Paris, including the Cité, amounted to 415 marks, but the expenses of collection, with defaults and exemptions, reduced to 311 marks the sum actually paid into the Paris mint¹.

There were many causes of discontext. In Paris the winter was again a hard one. There were great floods in December, lasting for ten days, and these were to lowed by severe frost, which stopped the water-rulis. The severity shown by Philippe de Moevalkers in enforcing the currency regulations and measures consequent upon them, drew on him general execration Pierre d'Orgemont and Jean Doules were also much hated, for they were believed to have fixed the maximum prices of commodities, which, we are told, so crippied trade that nothing could be bought but bread and wine, Tenants of houses were very hard hit by changes in the currency notwithstanding the precautions taken for their protection. Many left their homes, sold their goods in the street, and eft Paris for Rouen, Senlis, the woods, or the Armagnacs. Wherever one went in Paris, one saw people begging alms, and getting little, for everyone was hard up. Curses against fortune and the government were to be heard everywhere, with prayers for the end of the war and vergeance on the Armagnue traitors. It is noteworthy that the "Bourgeois," from whom comes nearly all our knowledge of conditions in Paris at this time, never bames the English for the troubles of the city during Herry's regency. To him the dauphinists are att I the source and origin of the people's sufferings. Probably most Parisians were more critical of the English, but the diarist's attitude was not that of a mere time-server, for he was very bitter about several Burgundian officials who owed there appointments to Henry.

The certre of resistance in Paris continued to be the cathedral. The chapter gained a great success when, in June, 1421, Martin V confirmed the election of Courtecuisse to the see. The University and even, it seems, the Parlement were friendly to the bishoph, but Herry was not to be placated, especially

¹ Doubt d'Aroq, i. 417, 424 sq. 1 Cl. above, p. 380.

⁴ Bourgeon, 163. Granoreelk, 13t, n. 3, 139, n. t.

^{*} Bourgeott, 264, n. 2; Fanquembergue, 2. 24

^{*} For reculatory advances on the part of the chapter, see Grassocralle, a 19, n. z., ran, n. z., z.e., n. z.

as the chapter soon afterwards tried to avoid contributing to the cost of the soldiers which the civic authorities were raising for the siege of Meaux¹. In the winter Courtecuisse, who had been living at St Germain-des-Prés, moved into Paris, but, as he did not take up his residence on cathedral property, the clergy were able to plead in answer to Henry's request for his ejection that they were in no way responsible for his movemen's. The nice, however, was turning against the chapter. In December, Charles VI, then at Meaux, was made to ordain the deprivation of its dauphinist members - a measure justified by the terms of the treaty of Troyes?. It is true that no action seems to have followed; but the chapter was less fortunate in relation to the evy of silver, which it vainly endeavoured to evaded. And meanwhile Henry must have been pargaining with the pope to some effect, for on July 24 it was announced that Courtecuisse had been translated to Geneval, and ammiediately afterwards Jean de la Rochetaillée, patriarch of Constantinopie—a partisan of the Burgundian party—was appointed perpetual administrator of the see in spirituals and temporals. Henry thus scored the last point, but the honours of the dispute undoubtedly belonged to the chapter.

One of the matters that exercised Henry's mind during the winter was the state of the king's household. He had in 1420 abolished the funds called the Coffres and the Eparyne, which were administered at the king's discretion?; and in September, 1421, the offices of master of the Chambre aux deniers, of the Garnisons de vius, and of the Argenterie had been placed in a single hand, while about the same time a number of secretaries had been removed from the household establishment. He now caused to be drawn up an ordinance fixing the number of officers and menials in each department of the household and defining their daties and wages to lit made no attempt to after the main I nes on which French kings had been wont to conduct their establishments, and its object seems to have been the

```
· Granorello, 138, 11-3
```

^в Ibid. 142, п. т. 143, п. 2, 144, п. 1) Bourgeon, 164

Granomilie, 148 at.

^{*} Ibid. 144, n. 2, 145, nu. 1, 2, 146, nn. 1, 1,

¹ lbid. 146, n. 3.

1 lbid. 148 n. 1, Bibi. nat., Portefeuilles de l'ontantes, 111-111, pp. 278 199.

Douët d'Areq, Comptes, 270 sq., Bornelli de Serres, 111. 190, 195

Doubt d'Areq, Comptes, 172 sq. " Douet & Areq, i. 419 149

388

remova of abuses and the curtailment of superfluous expend ture. A comparison of the ordinance with earlier house. hold accounts shows that the personne' of the household was paid or approximately the same scale as that of forty years before; if in some cases the wages prescribed in the ordinance are less, in others they are greater. It was ordained that champerlains and maines d'hôsel were not to draw pay or allowances unless they were actually at court or employed elsewhere. on household business. Meals in private rooms were not to be allowed, those entitled to board were to eat in hall. What was over from their ration of victuals and other things was to be given in alms and not sold. Those who were allowed horses must keep them, or suffer a deduction from their abowances. The transactions of the majore of the Chambra and deviers were to be strictly checked by the controller, and the clerks of the several departments must render daily accounts. Ai household officers must swear to obey the ordinances.

It is realigting to emphasise the significance of this measure. The Burgundians later accused Henry of having reduced Charles VI's household by a half?. No doubt, in the recent confused and corrupt times, many abuses had grown up in the household, and Henry, with his orderly mind, naturally sought to remedy them. There is no reason to suppose, however, that the ordinance was directed to the hum list on of Charles VI. It deart with the household of the king of France, not with the private establishment of an invalid, and Henry, who doubtless expected to succeed to the French grown before long, certainly had no desire to diminish the efficiency or dignity of the court. The ordinance was enacted on July 1, 1,22 From then to the death of Charles VI the total wages of the household officers were proportionally greater than they had been in the previous six menths⁴. So, moreover, were the ordinary expenses of the household*

It is often supposed, however, that after the treaty of Troyes Charles VI lived in neglect and poverty, while Henry was surrounded with splendour and comfort. This belief is based on ¹ Douët d'Arcq, 1. 435, 431, 439, 441, 442, 444, 445, Compten, 16, 18, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 202, 202, 202, 205, 206.

^{*} La Barre, i. 341
* From July 1 to Nov. 11 they totalled 2094 /rs. par ; for the previous an months they had amounted to 112; for par 2004th Arcq, Compten, 250, 25;)

the statements of certain French writers about the way in which the two kings respectively celebrated Christmas in 1420 and Whitsuatide in 14221. There is no resson to suppose that the contrast was celiberately arranged by Henry. After all Charles was a junatic, whose jucid moments were new rare and imperfect. Henry was regent, and very active in that capacity. It is not surprising, however reprehensible, that the Burgundian lords and the Paris, and should have thronged to him and forgotten their king. Apart from these festive occasions, there was little opportunity for magnificent display by Heary at the expense of Charles, seeing that he was either in England or campaigning from January, 1421, to the end of May, 1412. Charles, meanwhile, was generally at Bo's de Vir centres!, though, as we have seen, he probably visited Meaux during the siege! Some of the staff of the household were evidently at Herry's disposal, and for a time, at any rate, Renaud Domac, master of the Chambre and devices and other others, and Monsieur de Rance, maitre d'hitel, were with Henry at the siege of Meaux4. But the fact that two or three officers are specially named as being in the service of the regent indicates that the majority were still in the service of the king; and an examination of the household accounts from Septen ber, 1421, to November, 1422, leaves no doubt that they refer almost. f. not quite excusively, to the personal enterrage of Charles VI. It is true that if these accourts be compared with those of the early years of Charles VI's reign the totals of both receipts and expenditure show a great dimir ution. For instance, for St John term, 1313, the household receipts came to 40.117 httes parins, while the expenses totalled 49,348. For the corresponding term of 1422, however, the receipts were 14,953 fespari, the expenses 14,114. Comparing the sums devoted to otheers' wages in the two terms, we find a decrease from 4173 hv. per to 1225 But it must be remembered that in the first years of Charles's reign, the authority of the crown was as effective over the greater part of France as it ever was during the Hundred Years' War, while in 1422 it could make itself felt over but a small and much impoverished area. Considering

L Sie pp. 232, 406.

Fauguembargus, it. 22; Donit d'Alog, Compus, 274, 275. 278

² Cor p. 344.

Doute d'Areq, 1. 434, 437, Compen, 19404.

the situation, Charles VI's household seems to have been conducted with reasonable liberality. It is likely enough that Charles was not well served by his personal attendants, but that would be due to his malady, which in those days excited decision and cruelty rather than sympathy and devotion. Henry was doubtless a hard man, but he was not a foolish man, and it would have been foolish for him to counterance any diminution of the respect hitherto commanded by the French crown.

The significance of the accounts of the French royal household cannot fully appear unless they are viewed in the light of the general financial situation.

This is not easy to understand. We are lucky in the possession of the household accounts of Charles VI for the last fourteen months of his reign, and it is still more fortunate that we have the detailed account of William Philip, who was Henry's keeper of the wardrobe and treasurer of war from Oct. 1, 1421, to the king's death, remaining in office till Nov. 8, 14228. But the practice of providing Philip with money through the king's chamber often makes it impossible to be sure what was the ultimate source of the funds at his disposal. Still, with the help of the Issue Rolls of the English Exchequer, one can hazard a rough estimate of the respective contributions of the various regions controlled by Henry to the cost of the war.

Philip's account gives his total receipts as \$\iiii_5,080\$. Of this \$\iii_11,12\$ is entered as drawn from the English Exchequer. The remainder is described as \$Re epis Formered*. Sums amounting to \$\iiii_3313\$ are mentioned as coming from the fees of the great seas of Normandy, from transactions of the Rouen int, and from the Rouen indemnity. Royal officers in Normandvand France, with the king's chamber furnished in French money as um equivalent to \$\iiii_5206 \iiii_4900 \text{came from perquisites of war \$\iiii_9675\$ of the so-called receipts were unpaid debts, and existed only for purposes of book-keeping. Of the balance of the Recepts Formered—\$\iiii_20,961\$—a very large proportion was paid to Philip by the king's chamber, to which at least £19.318 was sent across the Channel by the English Exchequer! Apart from Normandy, the contribution of which has been discussed a sove", it is evident that Philip cannot have received much from French sources, and that by far the greater part of his receipts came from England. It is true that the money was not all devoted to military purposes. Philip's expenditure is put at $\int \zeta \zeta_0 \delta \eta^3$. Of this, no more than 12 5,808 figures as prestita et soluciones guerre, while (24,389 is entered under the head of household expenses. Not only, however, was the royal household the General Headquarters of the army, but there is a further section, devoted to presum ad receptam maccaru, which records little save payments to troops enusted for service in Frances. While it is thus imposs bie to estimate precise y how much of the money spent by Phi ip was devoted to multary needs and how much was absorbed by services, in the household or elsewhere, which would in any case have been rendered, it is evidently safe. to say that by far the greater part of the expenditure for which he accounts was essentially military expenditure; nor must it be forgotten that the English Exchequer paid many military expenses without any intervention on Philip's part?. One is, in short, confirmed in the impress on left by an investigation of Philip's receipts-that the cost of the fighting in France was stal being shouldered mainly by the English.

For Acce 69, F, G, H, L

For Acets, 69, F.

^{*} Quant larbel may have had some ground for compliant, using that from Nov. 3, 1423, to June 30, 1423, the secured for her homehold only 73.4. However, she managed to spend 6663/ t. (Doubt d'Arcq, Compan, p. 2011). On paper the dauphin a securete and expenditure were much greater than his father's, totalling cospectively 120,844.t and 189,167.t in St John term, 1422 (ibid). We must remember, however, that the currency is his territories was a most worthless (Dieudonné, 498)

Later, when the duke of Burgundy was seeking pretexts for abandoning the English alliance, he accused Henry of having used the revenues of the French crown in his own interests. There seems to be no record of the receipts of the French treasury for 1421 or 1422. In 1423 they amounted to approximately 152,000 hv. warn , and it is unlikely that they were greater in either of the two previous years. Now from the beginning of September, 1421, to the death of Charles VI, the money anotted to his household amounted to 48,209 ho. tours., a

For. Acets 69, F, F vo Ins. Roll 9 Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 1, 1422, 10 Hen. V. Pinch. April 20, July 29, 1421.

Sec above, p. a59.

³ For Acets, 69, L.

Thid Gaqq.
The Role 9 Hen V, Mich., to Hen V, Proch , param, of p. 119. * Ibid. I.

[.] G. Ritter, Extraite du Journal du Trésor, in Bibl. Éc. Chartet, Iteas. 472 sq. 478 sq. The recepts here recorded presumably come from both "ordinary" and extraordinary" sources large proportion of his whole revenue. Of this 4 (,8 74/. t. was expended on the actual maintenance of the household, that is to say, the king's personal establishment, for Charles's household did not occupy the position in political and military affairs which was taken by Henry's Over and above the money assigned to the royal household, there may have been about 100,000 hv. tourn, which Henry might have turned to his own advantage. At three shillings to the livre, this is equivalent to $f_{15,000}$ sterling. Even had Henry applied the whole of this sum to the expenses of his warfare against the dauphinists, it would have been small in comparison with the English contribution and not much greater than that of Normandy. From Henry's point of view, the dauphinists were rebels against the French crown. He had contracted to make war upon them with English resources, but it was only just that French resources should be devoted to the same end. Regarded in this light, the amount allotted to Charles's needs seems not ungenerous. After all, there was a civil war in progress, more than half the resources of the realm were in the hands of the dauphinists, and, even had the treaty of Troyes never been signed and Henry never become regent, some abatement of the pomp and luxury surrounding the French crown would probably have been inevitable and certainly decent.

Doučt d'Arcq, Comptes, 271, 277, 280, 284.

CHAPTER LXXIV

THE CLOSE OF THE REIGN IN ENGLAND

During the period of nearly fifteen months which elapsed between Henry's fina departure from the country and his death, the history of England itself was comparatively uneventful-Until April, 1422, the duke of Bedford was costs of the realm. His authority was bestowed on him on June 10, 1421, at Dover: except that he might not receive the fealty of greater prelates or restore their temporalities without consulting the king, and that he was not to receive homage from other landowners, he was endowed with royal powers, which however, he might only exercise according to the advice of the Council. There is no information as to the relations between the Council and Bedford, which presumably were amicable.

The event which excited most interest—and indeed it was of the highest importance—was the birth of a son to Henry and Catherine. This took place at Windson at 4 p.m. on St Nicholas' Day, Dec. 62. In London the bells were pealed, and a Te Deam was sung at St Paul's in the presence of the chancellor, many other bishops, the mayor, the aldermen and the craft-gilds. At Paris, where the news became known on Dec. 22, it gave an excuse for the kindling of the usual bonfires4, and two days later the Parlement took part in processions. of thanksgiving at Notre Dame, while rejoicing was general in the parts of France which achered to the Burgundian partys. As for Henry, engaged in besieging Meaux, it is uncertain what he thought or said, but he characteristically sent word and 2417 (thid in 30514-47514).

Letter Bk. L. 2644 Vita, 3211 Waltingham, it. 342; Brut, it. 427, 4911 Chron. Lond. 210; Kingsford, Chron. 74, 128, Denife, Aug. h. c. 285

* Brurgeois, 143 * Brut, il 445

* Fauquembergue, al. 33. Two months before a society Mais had been celebrated at Notre Dame with a view to securing for Catherine a happy debrery (Gramowalle, 144, 14, 1).

7 According to the author of the Vita, he was much delighted at the news; but in the authenth century it was believed that he said to Eard Fitzbugh, "I Henry borne at Monmouth shall small tyme reigne and much get, and Henry borne at Wysdame shall long reigne and allow, but as God will so be it." Holes, 1 if

² Rym. z. 229 sq. His powers were identical with those bestowed on him in 1415 to Catherine that she must hear a Mass of the Trinity and offer the child to God1. The infant was baptized by Archbishop. Chichele; his godparents were the duke of Bedford, Bishop Beaufort, and Jacqueline of Hamaults, a trio whose selection might have been suggested by the Spirit of Irony in its most mischievous mood. The churching of the queen, to which many notable people were summoned, was on Jan. 128. By March 19 the attle prince had a household of his own!.

Mention has already been made of the lamentations and forebodings of Adam of Usk in the previous spring! There was, however, little sign of discontent or unrest during what was left of the king's I fe. Queen Joan remained in detention, but she was still treated with sherality and on July 13, 1422, an order was issued for her release and the restoration of her goods', though it was not executed until after Henry's death^a. The principal cause of apprehension seems to have been Sir John Mort mer, of Hatfield. At some date unknown, but prior to the end of the parliament of May, 1421, he was arrested by order of the Council on suspicion of treason, and committed to the Tower. He was not brought to trial, and at first his imprisonment was probably regarded as precautionary, for the Council returned a favourable answer to his wife. when she petitioned for a grant of money on which to live, and in November it consented that the arrears of an annuity of /40. granted him by the king, should be paid. Shortly afterwards, however, Bedford transferred him to an underground dungeon10. The next we hear of him is that he has escaped, apparently in Wah, it. 142; Brut, it. 417, 492; Chron. Lond. 110; Kingsford, Chron. 74: 1284 Monste 19 80, Lüher, Beiträge, 21 t.

² Devou, 170.

 The laste Real record numerous payments to Thomas Labourne for the expresses of her house sout. On Italy 15, 1441, (108, 13) and was granted to pay for houses hought for her classe (ins. Poll 10 Hen. V. Patches July 15, 1422).

Rot. Parl. iv. 246.

¹ Vita, 321

I from March of tathe end of the might Cities recorded to have been push by the Tremury to loan flateman, treasurer of the household of the ford prince in Roll. 9 Hen. V. Mich., March 19, 1422, ibid. 10 Hen. V. Pinchi, June 16, July 13, 1422). · See above, p. 277

^{*} Ibed. agricing. On Aug. 30, coast the Treasury was still allotting money to Lilbourne from the mose of Juan's saids for the expenses of her household (lie. Poll to Hen. V, Pasch , Aug. 30, 1423).

Rot Parl. 19, 160 * Ord. Priv. Co. ii. 194, 307, 37 t. Mortimer's removal underground is mentioned by his wife in a petition which is andated. But the wording of the document indicates that it must have occurred after the concession made by the Council respecting his assuity.

the company of John Beaquemont, knight, Marse in de Flisc. of Genes, Thomas Payne and others, who also had been imprincipled in the Lower. The date of the escape is not known, but it may be conjectured that it occasioned the order of Feb 28, 1477, to the bishops of the southern counties instructing the nati concert measures for the preservation of order with the justices of the peace and other notable men of that part of the country! Braquemont, Flisc, and Payne were caught ar Somersets, when does not appear. Mortimer himself was retaken in April, but we do not know where. He was brought back to the Tower, but in May he was sent to Pevensoy casile, where he was kept till June, 14234. He was then restored to the I ower, whence in 1424 he again escaped, with tragic consequences that are well known.

The episode is mysterious. Mortimer was eventually conwated on the ground that his second escape was treas mable. We are told nothing of the reasons for his original imprisonment except that it was on suspicion of treason. That he was never brought to tria, until 1424-and then merely on the ground that it was trens inshie to break prison—suggests that there was not much evidence for the original charge against him. It may be, however, that he was suspected of rictting in the interests of the earl of March, and in that case, no matter

Iss. Roll to Hen. V, Pasch., April 30, July 10, 1422. They were sent lack to the Tower, where they were at Henry's death (Cal. Pat. 1422-19, p. 166)

Int. Roll to Hen. V, Patch., April 30, 1422. When news of his capture resched Wissewers stee the Leavisia man as local heat prior. That persons the data to have limit Aprel (Col. Pre. 14 6-22, pp. 427, 428, 443; Rym. 2, 201, 204, 205 29.)

Ord. Prov. Co. II. 1324 Close. 10 Hen. V, m. 64 For. Acces. 39. A4 Devot., 384.

1 Rot. Parl. iv. 202, 2604 Devon, 3894 Beut, 11. 431, 364

Not. Parl 19 202, 260

^{*} Cal. Pat. 2416-22, p. 413. Braquemont (Cal. Pat. 2422-29, p. 286) Claus. x Hen VI, 18; Rym. x 279; Ord. Priv Co. iii. 23) and Fluc (Cal. Pat. 1422-29, p. 186, were prisoners of war. Thorase Payne, who came from Glamorgan, is mid to have been O 4. enote's confidental secretary (Ord Priv. Co. v. 1044 Inc. Roll to Hen. V. Paschi, April 10, July 20, 1422). He had been expensed in the rating of 1414, but but secuped subtirt; and some time between July, 1417, and the end of 1419, he had taken a leading part in a sarefully planned plot to rescue the long of Scots, then at Windsor, and convey him to Scotland. He was, however, caught by Thomas Haseley, a clerk of the crown, who had into in wait for him near Windaor for five days and six nights. He was committed 40 prison to await the king's return from France, and at the first parasisent of 142 s he was prought before Herry and the forth, who questioned Hawley object the arrest, the long deciazing. I Hawles is on he be invest, that it is parated him more than I him degener or given him a came for the grow in inveniences that meet also in the large the terms. Parse, however was morely committed to the Tower Old Pre-Le n v n r canq) in hour undergrong and ress. But Part in 196. Dec in a translation (173, 173) of the entires relating to the escape is growly miniming. Only Payne was secured of having been associated with Oldcastle.

how strong the evidence, publicity would be the thing that the government most wished to avoid.

The summer of 1421 was wet and stormy in the north, and the hay and corn harvest was large y spoiled. There was much disorder and violence in various regions, but the evidence does not suggest that host lify to Henry or his policy was the cause, or indeed that the insecurity of life and property was worse than usual. It has often been asserted that, under the crushing weight of taxation, the war had become ur popular?; but, apart from Adam of Usic, no chroricler suggests that this was so, and little indication of it can be found in official records. The proceedings of the parliament which met on Dec. 1, 14014, certainly lend no colour to the belief. There was an exceptional v small attendance of temporal lords. Only three earls, those of Northumberland Westmorland, and Devon, received writs, and no more than twe we barons. With the exception of James Lord. Berkeley^a, all had been summoned to the parliament of the previous May. The eight, udges and two serjeants-at-law were the same as those summoned on that occasion. The write de expensiare not carolied, but returns are known to have been received from all the usual shires and from ninety-four cities or boroughs?. Of the county members thirty-five had previously been elected. to parliament since the beginning of the reign, eighteen more than once, though only eight had been returned to the last parliament. Sevents-nine of the citizers and burgesses returned had had previous parliamentary experience under Henry V, of these forty-six had been returned more than once, and thirtytwo to the first parliament of the year. How many members

Fine Roll 9 Hen. V, m. 11

A quarrel between the corporas of Sonthumberland caused some disturbance in that county (Chius. a Blen. Y, min. 21 d, 2 , 12 f). Westmortand was eviden by very disorderly. Not hard or 161), and impunished acts of molence in Statisticalities were the autient of a peacon presented in the parameter of December (ibid. 184).

See e.g. Newhall, 150, m. 343 Vickers, 373.

Rot. Pari. iv. 150.

^{*} His claim to incrept to Berhaley gards had just been recognized (G.E.C. & 330).

^{*} Rept Dign. Poor, iv $ 50. * Beturn Parl. 1. 29y 2qq.

^{*} Return Parl 1. pp. x15, xx, xx0, xy4 sqq. Some of the city and borough representations, if they had attended when decide, were old parliamentary hands. Thus, Walter Shirter of Sambury had attended here exerted eight remaining them a screenistic stud-$87, ella 198 g. $16, 190, 195, 196, 198), John Harteston of Wikon and William Gascoigne of Bridgwater seven times (ibid. 202, 279, 284, 183, 286, 290, 292, 293, 293, 295, 298). Thomas Godeston of Coichester and John Whithorn of Wilton six times (ibid. 178. #kg, akg, aké, akg, agu, agu, agg, aga, agé, agil).

were actually present there seems to be no means of telling, but it may be inferred from the figures just given that this parliament was by no means an inexperienced body. As reported in the rols, the chancellor's opening speech was exceptionally uni'lumirating. Speaking on the text Lex Domini immiculata conversers animast, he discoursed on the three kinds of law and on the three virtues—faith, hope, and charity—and went on to announce that the causes of the summons of purhament were the conservation of the peace of the reaim, the defence of its frontiers and the common profit? Probably, however, he was really rather more specific, for on the very same day, even before a Speaker had been chosen, the commons granted a fiftrenth and a tenth half of each to be paid at the ensuing Candlemas, the other half at the next feast of St Martin in winter, the four northern counties being exempted. The main purpose of the grant was described as the defence of the realms; but at the time England was not threatened with any serious danger from outside, and everyone must have known that the greater part of the money would be spent, directly or indirectly, on the war in France. After Christmas, as had been ordained in the previous paraament, gold money was to be valued according to its weight⁴; but as a concession to the tax-payer it was agreed by the government that a gold noble worth 51 8d. in weight would be accepted by the collectors at its nominal value of 61, 8d7. On Dec. 3 the commons presented as their Speaker. Richard Banvard, esquire, one of the members for Essex, who had been returned to the second parl ament of 1414, but had not been elected since. The common petitions were except onally few, and mostly concerned the reform of the currency that was then being carried out. They are not of great interest, their principal purpose being to prevent fraud on the part of moneychangers and to enable the public to obtain the new money on fair terms. The government granted a petition that the mint at Cala a should be re-established for the coining of money of the same quality as that issued at the Tower¹⁰, and it was also

```
1 Ret. Parl. 19 149
* Pr. mm. y.

* Dod. 152, Fane Roll 9 Hen. V, mm. 6-15

* Rot. Park 19, 152
```

Ser above, p. 177.

Rot. Parl iv 151; Chron. Lond. 109 19. Rot. Parl. iv 151; Return Parl. 1. 183, 299 Pot. Parl. iv. 254.29 ; Statutes, il. 209.29 10 Rot. Parl. iv. 254; Statutes, il. 220.

agreed that justices of the peace, sheriffs, eschestors, or special commissioners much take action against forgers of weights and imprison them without maintrine until their trial. The most notable of the petitions was one about the jurisdiction of the Council and the chancellor. It pointed our that a though divers statutes had enalited that none of the king's beges should be required to make answer in any suit save by original writ and due process according to the law of the land, nevertheless certain of them had been summoned before the Council or the chanceline by letters of privy sea, and writs of mepican. The commons therefore begged that when in such a case the plaintiff had a remedy at common law, the defendant might take exception to the jurisdiction of the court before which he was cited, and that the case should thereupon he dismissed. They further asked that all such proceedings should, if then pending, be forthwith quashed, save when they had been in tisted by authority of parliament. The commons put forward this petition as a matter of grace, notwithstanding their appeal to statutes, and it is not surprising that it was answered with the polite formula of refusal?. Though the protest concerned only civil suits, it is remarkable to find the commons betraying so much suspicion towards the Council in the reign of the most popular of the reputedly constitutional Lancistrians.

This par lament witnessed some interesting judic all proceedings of the kind that often took up much of the members, time and much space in the rells, though usually ignored by writers on constitutional history. We care Lord Clinton and Say, who was himself summoned to this parliament as one of the lords temporals, had petitioned the commons to pray Bedford and the lords to ordain by authority of parliament that one Wildiam de-

L Rot. Part ly 155; Statutes, sl. 210.

A some not e vitenue ex do eras hatatata que todos fe ses Lagos terra amendas en responere, suson par Buell Original et due Proces acione la Leis de la Terre et enu son, que diversos des Lieges de notre... Seigneur sont faitz venir devaunt son Conseil et son Chanceller, par lettres de Proces Scales, et briefs Sub Pena... et (m. m. ancion in lettres ou trusts norm granters et posses appares par la use sentent del Plantif, que sa action est a la commune Leis, que le Defendant sont admis de prendez enception al portudiction de court, et dire que le Plaintif ad remedie sufficient pur luy a la commone lue en son est, et que cell exception soit a ly aloue, et sur nell dismanz hore da court." (Res. Parl iv 136)

The petition closed with the formula "pur Dieu et en oevere de charitee," common torre un petitions of individuals for royal grace and favour but most unusual in petitions of the corntices in partiament. The answer was 'Sort if advise par la Roy 'Rot Parties." Roy Carl.

tv rai. 4 Rept Dign Poor, iv 652.

la Poole should carry out an agreement which he had made with the pet tioner. The petition, having been publicly read in parliament, Poole was called before Bedford and the lords and questioned. His answers were unconvineing, as, according to the justices concerned, they had been on the numerous occasions when the case had come before the courts. It was consequently ordained by authority of parliament that Poole should execute the agreement in the sense desired. He then came again into parliament, and, in the presence of Bedford and the lords, delivered to Clinton two deeds giving effect to the decision. The episode presents several interesting features. It appears, for instance, that Bedford and the lords could still be regarded as "parliament," but, on the other hand, it is remarkable to find one of the lords addressing his fellows through the medium of the commons.

Another case—originating in a suit about tithes—was laid before parliament by the chancellor, who, despite long proceedings before him, had been unable to determine whether it belonged to the temporal or to the spiritual courts. The chancellor explained the issues to parliament, and the parties, whom he had ordered to be present, were heard by counsel. The justices of the two benches and the chief baron of the Exchequer, their being present, were charged by Bedford to give their opinion, and when they had done so in a reasoned statement, Bedford and the lords accordingly pronounced that the matter was one for the ecclesiastical court to decide⁸.

The date when parliament was dissolved does not appear in the roll. It was still sitting on Dec. 18³, so that, even if it ended immediately afterwards, many members could not have got home for Christmas.

There is no reason to suppose that the public grumbled more than usual at the readiness of parliament to meet the government's demands. The collection of the taxes voted was promptly begun⁴, and by heb 2 the money was coming in at the Exchequer⁵. It has been argued that the proceeds of the grant were disappointing⁴, but the Receipt Rolls show that they came to about £32,700, £15,700 of which <sup>Rot. Parl. 19. 151 eqq.

Lu. Roll 9 Hen. V, Mich., Jan. 13, 1423. Collecton had been appointed on Dec. 29 (Fine Roll 9 Hen. V, m. 1).</sup>

^{*} In. Roll to Hen. V. Paschi, May 21, 2422.

* Newhall, 1501 Ramsey, Antiquary, 111. 95 was paid before Henry's death, and if the total is below the average yield of a hiteenth and tenth, it must be remembered that the tax-payer could meet a demand for a noble with money intrinsically worth or ly 50 Bd. It apiears, nevertheless, that there remained an urgent need for ready cash, for in March commissioners were appointed to raise a loan in twenty southern and midland counties. In each county the sum to be asked for was its share of the second half of the fifteenth and tenth, due at Martinmas, when the debt would be repaid. There seems to have been little response. It is true that in the last six months of Henry's life [8800 was raised on loan, but nearly all of this was lent in July and most of it by bishops, judges, and in portant government officials. There is, however, nothing very sign heart in a widespread reluctance to find two instalments of a tax within a few weeks.

What financial difficulties were felt by the government were due rather to the magnitude of their task than to any exhaustion on the part of the country. Every source of money was incroughly exploited. The sequestration of the lands of Queen Joan must have been a godsend to the Exchequer. For the hoard and maintenance of Joan herselt, Thomas Lilbourne drew some £1300 from Henry's departure in June, 1421, to his death. In the same period, however, the chamber received £5h42 from the issues of her lands. Queen Catherine had £1274, mairly in repayment of her loan of May, 1421, John Radclife had £1010 for the upkeep of the castle of bronsac in Guienne; and nearly £300 of Joan's revenues were spent on previsions and munitions for France* £3000 was indeed a sabstantial addition to the public revenue.

It is of course notorious that no accurate notion of the state of the Treasury at a given date can be of tained from the Receipt

¹ Rec. Rolli g Hen. V, Mich. (no. 698), 10 Hen. V, Pasch. (nos. 701, 702),

1 Hen VI, Mich. (no. 703)

* The connect concerned were Kent, Somet Cambridgeshive, North, Suffills, Essex, Herts., Hunts., Northants., Gloucessgridge, Wordmershive, Waronckshive, Staff relative, Herriczdabire Leicestershive North Desart, Coronnai, Fedic, and Bucks (Cal. Pat. 1416, 22, pp. 416 sq.). A commission was appointed for Someriet on April 7 (hid. 427). It is of course possible that less formal bargaining may have occurred in countrie which are not named in the Chancery rolls.

* Rec. Rolls 9 Hen. V. Mich. (no. 692), March 12, to Hen. V. Fanch (no. 702), April 20, May 27, June 8, July 12, 14, 2] Professor Newhall states (149, n. 12) that a 1,024 was beerowed during Easter term, 10 Hen. V, but I cannot see how he gets his to-tax

* Lie Role 9 Men. V. Pasch., to so Hen V. Pasch. The notice scrating to Quien Jones hade not numerous.

and Issue rolls. One can, however, derive from them a general impression of the position of the national finances. On the whole there was no great difficulty in raising money. The taxes voted in #421 vicided / 36,200 before Easter, 1423. In #421 and 1422 nearly 447,000 was raised by borrowing! Neverthe. less the ou look was not cheering. If England was still to contribute to the cost of the war as she was doing in the years. 1421-1422, the extraordinary revenue-i e that produced by loans or par jamentary grants—must remain as great as in thise years. This even Henry himself would hardly have dared to suggest, and Bedford immediately recognised that if the warwas to go on, it must be supported mainly by the resources of Normandy and the rest of France. But to think of England as exhausted in the fast years of Henry V inevitably leads to misapprehension of the later phases of the war. The burden of the war rested mainly on England until Henry's death; and it was sustained with little apparent difficulty. Had the country really beer drained by Henry, it could not, even after the respite from taxation in the early years of Henry VI, have maintained the war with such stubbornness when the tide had turned in France.

Nor is there evidence of any present shortage of man-power. In 1421 Henry had taken a broad with him some 4000 mcr. The heavy losses during the summer and before Meaux naturally rendered necessary the despatch of reinforcements, and these began to be recruited in the following February. They were to be led by Bedford, whose place as casas of England was to be taken by Gloucester. Bedford himself furnished a retinue of two knights, ninety-seven men-at-arms and 300 archers², while other retinues in the force amounted to 135 men-at-arms and 424 archers². They yilled from South-ampton early in May⁴. Some weeks later Robert Lord Wilsouphby, with twenty-nine men-at-arms and ninety archers, crossed from Wirchelsea⁵, so that the English army in France ^{*} Rec Bolls 9 and 10 Hen. V, and 2 Hen. VI, Mich. Under taxation is included £34% from the elected tenth of 1427. Half of the York tenth was not due till mid-summer, 1423 (Fine Roll 9 Hen. V, m. 11). Of course much of the money raised by taxation was devoted to the repayment of loans.

Go. gle

For Accu. 69, F. I.; In. Roil 9 Hen. V. Mich., Feb. 18, 1421.
 For Accu. 69, F. Luqu.; Brit. Mun., Stowe MS. 440, f. 44 sqq

[•] The exact date is not known, but the ear sest arrived patent attribed by Gloucester are dated. May 4, the he last attended by Bedford are dated May 4 (Car. Part 4.16-12, p. 4.16).

^{*} Inc. Roll to Hen. V. Posch . May 4, June 8, July 19, 1422; Ord. Priv. Co. to 3314 For Access 69, F., Cal. Pat. 2414-22, p. 445, Claus. 10 Hen. V. m. 5.

must althougher have been strengthered by nearly 1 100 men. There was evidently a scarcity of captains2, but there is no reason to suppose that any special difficulty was expenenced in ratsing the men.

During the early months of 1422, the chief preoccupation of the leng ish government seems to have been the provision. of transport for the reinforcements and for Queen Carherine, who was to sail with them, leaving the infant prince behinds. Ships were already being pressed in hebruary, and during the fo lowing month they were mustering at Southampton from many English ports, while one or two threigh vessely had also oeen hired. For some weeks the troops destined for France av in the neighbourhood*, indeed Southampton was for a time the seat of government, Bedford having with him there the chancelor, the treasurer, the keeper of the pavy sea, and several other members of the Council, it was at bouthampton that the ambassadors of the count of Frix received. the money which Henry had contracted to pay their lord in the treaty made at. Meaux in the previous month. Catherine herself had lodging at Southwick®. The crossing was safety accomplished early in May, Catherine disembarking at l farticu-io.

The lorg-announced reform of the co-nage underwest much delay, but on Feb. 13, 1422, Bartholomew Goldbeter, goldsmith, of London, was appointed master of the mints of the Tower and Cal ist. He undertook to con gold notice worth

1 Most of the archers were mounted (Stowe MS. 440; ff. 44 199.)

* Ben . 1 965. It have no Catherine's journes was see ded upon he lan 16, when she was evidently expected to set out at once (Rym. x. 171)

* Ryat, x, xyg; Devon, 170; Inc. Roll y Hen. V, Mich., Feb. 23, 1412.
* Venezis were retained in Melcombe and other western poew (Devon, 170); the Cinque Portrand London were of course drawn upon (Rym. x. 1753 lm. Roll 9 Hen. V., Mich., Feb. 23, March 11, 10 Hen. V, Pasch., April 20, 1422), while on the east court Lowestoft, Yarmouth, and Alamouth contributed a ship each (For Accu. 69, G), Foreign severa were hir obed by house, Modethery, and Core, 164)

* Rym #- 201 1 libel, 2014 204, 205 sq.; Inc. Roll to Hen. V, Paschi, April 20, 1422, Chang, Warr. 669/1280, 2181, 1545/70, 71; Cal. Doc. Scot. 20v. 135

* For. Acets, $9, F v* her above, p. 171. H. Kingeford, Chron. 94, 1284 Beut, il. 428, 4484 Montte, ev. 98

Many are an convergents, were sent at the name of reason to preservably were unfit for military service. Thus, Thomas de Bradshaw, esquire, and Tku estess de Anderton, esquire, and in their names Gilbert Donkesbury and Thomas Stake, esquire, each were there mounted archers Stone MS as iff so as it? John Havings and three mounted archers went in the name of a lady, Dame Beatras Shieley (ibid. f. 44).

⁴ Claus, 9 Hor. V, m. 2 d. Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 4104 Oed. Priv. Co. ii. 321.

61. 8d., fifty pieces of which were to go to the Lower pound, and a so half and quarter nobies of the same quality. He was furthermore to make the usual kinds of silver coins-groats worth (d, half-groats, "esterlings" (to be current for 1d), "mailles" (worth half an esterling), and "ferlings" (worth a quarter). Ninety groats were to weigh a Tower pound. The quality of both gold and silver coins was to be good! The manufacture of the new money seems to have proceeded slowly, a shortage of silver coins caused much inconvenience, and in the summer it was found advisable to bring coiners to the Tower from Brabant^a and even from Rouen¹, where one would have supposed their services to be still more urgently needed. It is yet more surprising to find baldon, presumably silver, being desparened from Rouen to London, doubtless to be coined.

The Church in England was fairly quiet during the last year of the reign. The convocation of York met on Sept. 22, 1421, in compliance with a royal writ of July 26. It followed the convocation of Canterbury in voting a tenth-half to be paid at midsummer, 1422, and half a year later -and was prorogued to Jan. 14, 1422. On reassembling it was concerned principally with the question of the preferment of graduates, discussed in the previous spring by the southern province, and on lan, 12 it was ordered that constitutions on the subject should be published. They were to the same effect as the ordinance issued in the previous year by Archbishop Chichele.

In the following summer, on July 6, the convocation of Canterbury again met, but no necuniary grant to the crown was requested or made. There was some debate as to what should be [&]quot;Et serron, les dits monoys dor de astij carrets troys greins et dimy (see) dor fyn et vandras ekeieun zure des eitz monovs dur es ihares kill eit in desterang. have dargent. du poys tiendes sij unces et ij 4 desterbing du poys dargent fyn et avin du poys dallay chescun denier contenant axing grant (56). Claus, 9 tien. V, 4 Greg Chron, 141

^{*} In. Rod to Hen. Y. Pasch., June 0, 1412.

^{*} Ibed Aug 30, 1422, Devon, 37).

1 In. Roll to Hen. V, Pasch., July 19, 1421.

Conc. iii 403, Records of Northern Convocation, ii. 131 eqq. The grait was subject to very narree as exemptions. Total exemption was granted to a line ignorehouses and ecclessation benefices in Cumbertand, Northumberland, and Westmortand. to the abbeys of Se.by, Rocke, and Meaux, rusned by floods; to several satisfies bottles, and to all benefices appropriated to numeries, by reason of their notonous poverty Partial exemption was allowed to York Minner? propter celerem constructioners et consummed nemetasters. Thurgamor priory the hards of which was threatened with exim, the property boste? Popularica, and His h, burdened with debt, and Cockersand priory, striost destroyed by the set (Fine Roting Hent. V. m. 11) done towards paying the expenses of the English representatives at the General Council which was to meet in 1423, and it was unanimously resolved that a contribution of threepence in the pound should be levied on church property which was assessed for clerical tenths¹.

404 The Close of the Reign in England [cn. 1222]

Convocation was called upon to deal with two insubord nate clerks. One, Henry Webb of Bath Easton, confessed that he had exercised priestly functions without being duly ordained. On his submitting himse f to correction, the archbishop, with the approval of those present, sentenced him to be flugged at the head of a procession, once through London, once through Worcester, once through Bath. He was removed in the custody of the bishop of Worcester.

The other offender, William White, chaplain, had preached without beence at Tenterden church, kent, had been arrested by order of the archinshop, and had been long imprisoned, though Unichele had released him from the sentence of excommunication which he had incurred. In the presence of convocation White admitted hat he was reputed to be tainted with error, heresy, and Lollardy. It was resolved that he should formally abjure all error and heresy, after doing which he would be hable to the penalties of relapse if he again fell into heterodoxy. White took the required each, and was then presumably released, though he was destired to die a heretic's death some years later².

Apart from the adventures of Thomas Payne, little was heard of the Lo'larc's at this time. John Prest, formerly vicar of Chesterton, Warwickshire, was pardoned for having harboured Oldcastle there in August, 1415, and had to give and find security that he would not maintain unorthodox opinions and would appear before the Council when summoned. John Revnald, too—a tailor, apparently of London—had to furnish similar guarantees that henceforth he would not be of the covin of John Oldcastle, or upho diany of his opinions, but would be loval to the king and come before the Council if required. It is strange to find what a hogey Oldcastle still was, even when he had been dead four years.

Conc. in 404

This

Cai Pat 1475-22, p. 377. Claus 9 Hen V, m 14 d

Opod spie de auerniu et couins Johannis Oldecastell auger proditoris. exmane minime ent aut aliquas oppisiones (ac spieus Johannis Didecastel, palam vel occuste a predicabit, revelabit, docepet (ac), aut excist et quod tapquam verus agens Regit.

During the last fifteen months of the reign there was but one vacancy of an episcopal see. This was caused by the death of Robert Clifford, bishop of London. The dean and chapter received royal licence to elect a successor on Nov. 9, 14211; but before their choice could have been known at Rome, Martin V had translated to the vacant see John Kemp, bishop of Chichester^a, who, as we have seen, was also chancellor of Normandy, Thomas Polton was translated from Hereford to Chichester, and Thomas Spofford, who had lately been provided to Rochester but had never entered into possession of that see, was translated to Hereford, John Langdon, a monk of Canterbury, being provided to Rochester3. These appointments were presumably agreeable to the king, and they must have been very lucrative to the pope. Apart from hishopines, however, the pope's influence on the English Church was not marked. Abbeys and priories that fell vacant were filled by canonical election, which was confirmed by the ordinary and assented to by the king4. So far as is known, no other ecclesiastical dignities or benefices were filled by papal provision during this time. That the Statute of Provisors was stul being strictly enforced in respect of lesser dignities and benefices appears not merely from these facts but also from the continued efforts of Martin V to secure the repeal of the obnoxious legislation.

exnunc, se habebit et quod superionaliter comparebit commidicto domino Rege et contilio aug infra av dies postquam ipie ieu aliquis manucaptorom suorum primazitus fuerit ' (Claus, 9 Hen. V, m. to d).

Cal. Pat. 1416-21, p 403
Cal. Pap Lett vo. 161. The bull of translation was dated Nov. 17

² Ibid. 161, 214. Spofford, before being provided to Rochester, was abbot of St Mary's, York (Cal. Pat. 1416-22, p. 401).

For examples, see Cal. Pat. 1416-22, pp. 393, 394, 396, 400, 402, 403, 408, 410, 413, 415, 426, 417

It is worthy of note that John Ixworth, who had been provided to he canoning and prebend of Biggieswade by the pope and collated to it by the bishop of Lincoln, successfully penuloned Martin that he might use the latter title as justification for his possession of the benefice (Cal. Pap. Lett. vii. x13).

* See above, pp. 375 sqq.

CHAPTER LXXV

IN MANUS TUAS, DOMINE"

Hanny seems to have remained at Meaux for some time after. the surrender of the Market, and it was not until May 16 that news of Queen Catherine's approach took him to Bois de I incennes. Latherine, who had made a leisurely journey from the coast* serived on the same day, her father and mother had been lodging there for some time?. On May 10, Henry and Catherine entered Paris, the king characteristically visiting Notre Dame before going to his quarters at the Louvret. Charles VI and Oueen Isabel came on the same day, and ledged at the Hôtel St Polt. Next day was Whitsun, and the two kings celebrated the feast in their respective quarters. Henry, with Catherine and many notable Englishmen, dired publicly n great state, though, to the disgust of the Parisians, the spectators got nothing to eat or drink. As at Christmas a year and a half before, the contrast between Henry's splendour and Charles a lack of pomp and company filled many Frenchmen with grief; but the French nobles did nothing to comfort their king in his distress.

On June 2 and 3, Henry and Catherine, escorted by many nobles and ladies. French and English, went to the hibrer de-Nesle to see the Mystery of the Life of St George, which had been staged for their entertainment by some of the citizens of Paris7. On the second day of the performance the Hotel de-Nesle was the scene of an important council at which were present the dukes of Bedford and Exeter, the earl of March, the chancel or of Normandy with the bishop of Coutances and Rioul le Sage, Arthur of Richemont, the chancellor of France. Philippe de Morvilliers, and the bishops of Thérouanne ar d Beauvais, to mention no others*. It seems to have been the

1 She had arrested at Reservicia May 24 (Cochors all I)

Fauquenburgue, is. 40 00 Little co., Cordelieze, 1271 Montes ev 90.

Brut, it $923 Monste iv 99. Chor i jiniq

Tranquembergue, 12. 50 sq., Bourgross, 174

4 Ibid.

* Fanquembergue, in 51.

¹ In the following paragraphs, I have adopted the dates given by Fauquemburgusfirst and only occasion on which a joint council, representative of England, France, and Normandy, was held.

Henry was cordially welcomed on his return to Paris1, and according to one authority his sigorous administration of justice maintained his popularity with the poor?. On the other hand, his efforts to collect the silver which had been voted by the listates, together with new regulations about the currency, caused much marmaring, though the "Bourgeois," as usual, puts the blame on the dauphinists³.

It had apparently been lecided that Henry was to go to Picardy and crush Jacques d'Harcourt once for all. While in Paris he wrote to the towns of the bailinges of Amiens and Vermandois, asking whether they would be willing to supply his army with provisions at prices which he named. Failing an agreement, he hinted, the English army would be employed elsewhere, leaving the regions in question still exposed to the depredations of Harcourt. Henry's messengers, however, were well received, and returned with satisfactory reports. The earl of Warwick was already operating in Vimeu, and on June 11 the garrison and the citizens of Gamaches agreed to surrender both town and cast e on the following day. Louis Bournel the captain and anywho wished might go beyond the Seine to dauph in stregions, taking with them their personal property, provided that subjects of Henry, all who had sworn to the treaty of Troyes, and anyone concerned in the murder of Montereau should be handed over, the rest, on taking the customary oath, should be pardoned and restored to their property!. Warwick then went forward to lay siege to St Valéry-sur-Somme*.

On June 11 Henry and Catherine left Paris for St Denis, on the way to Compitane, where the garr son was shortly to surrender the town 7. On the next day, accompanied by Charles VI

Coedelsers, 3.7. 1 Fenm, 182.

Monite 19, 100 sq ; Chast 1, 113, Bourgeou, 161 sqq.

In the 95 Cachon, 288. Living quater what purports to be the letter written by Henry to the buildinger of Americand Vermandon; but if he did not make it up altogether, he tertainly edited it drastically. The need for Henry s enquiry was thown by the fact that Amiens refused to furnish men at its own expense for the stege of St Valery (Durand, iv 95),

Monstr 14, 96, 1 1, Le Fèrre, ii 955 Chast 1, 114, Ferin, App 302 sqq. The surrenuce of Garnaches does not again to have been atvolved in the terms of the capatala. tion of the Market of Means.

Menstrary, 10 to Duranda vy. 44.

^{*} Fauquembergue, u. 5 s.

and Isabel, they went on to Senlis!, where part of Henry's household had arrived some time before? In a day or two, however, he was recalled to Paris by news of the discovery of a plot. An armourer, his wife, and a baker, who dwelt at La. Heaumeric, having fallen under suspicion, were arrested, and the woman confessed that they had been concerned in a conspieacs to deliver Paris to the dauphinists. It was currently believed that a body of malcontents in the city were to have opened the gates to the garrison of Compagne, as they were withdrawing southward after their surrender, and that the scheme explained the readiness with which they had yielded a place capable of holding out for a year. At a l events, Herry returned with an armed force, and had the woman and some of her accomplices drowned^a.

Henry went back to Senlis⁴ and thence at last visited Complègnes which had duly surrendered on the 18th, the lord of Gamaches, with the garrison, departing to daunhinist country beyond the Seine® and making no attempt to annov Paris now that their plot—if plot there was—had been exploded. From Compiegne, however, instead of going north against Harcourt, the king returned to Senhal, perhaps recalled by bad news from the south.

It will be remembered that after his campaign in Vineu in the spring, John of Luxemburg had ordered the troops under his command to reassen ble at Peronne towards the end of May in order to reduce the troublesome castle of Moy. Before the date fixed, however, the dauphinists, no doubt influenced by the fall of Meaux, had evacuated Moy and severa, neighbouring strongholds, after setting them on fire. The rendezvous was therefore changed to Le Cateau-Cambrésis, and the date to June 15. Then John was summoned urgently to Paris, and it was announced that the force was to muster on June 26 at Bray-sur-Somme, where the duke of Burgundy himself, who ³ Bourgeon, 174.

[&]quot; W mass Philip had received money there on June 5 (For Accts, 69, F).

Monita is, 124 sq., Cordebert, 318, Bourgeon, 124 sq. An examisation of Henry's wovements at the time shows that the plot must have been discovered before Henry's wait to Complegue, notwithstanding Monstrelet a test-mony ^{*} Longnon, 451 D K.R. xiii 433, 444; Rym x. xx11 Moustr iv. 105. * Monstr iv. 1042 Vita, 329; Tit Liv 44. * Monstr iv. 103, Sord, La Princ de Jeanne Durc, 52, 712, 312. They passed through Master, conducted by the hails of Guori (Grave, Arch. municip. de Marties, 19) was bringing many other troops, was to assume command. The result of these delays was that the Burgundians lost the initiative. The soldiers, many of whom had been kept under arms by their captains, did much mischief, especially in Artois2, and the only exploit of note accomplished at this time was the capture of the town of St Dizier in Champagne by Jean and Antoine de Vergy, who afterwards beat off an attempt by La Hire to relieve the castle, which eventually fell in Augusta.

[&]quot; D.K.R. zlii. 443, 4501 Douet d'Arcq, l. 429-

Meanwhile all the plans of Henry and Philip had been upset by a dauph not offensive against the county of Nevers It was a shrewd stroke, for it threatened to cut communications between Dijon and Paris. By June 20 the dauphinists were besieging La Charité sur Loire in force4, under the viscount of Narbonne and Tanneguy du Chaste.4. Some attempt at renef was made, probably by troops raised locally⁶, and the duke, who was at Troyes on his way northward after his visit to Burgundy and Savoy, turned back and went to Dijon, whence he appealed for help to the dukes of Savoy and Lorraine? His preparations were hindered by a mutiny of Burgundian troops in Charolais, who had received no pay for a long time⁸. Before they were pacified, La Charité feli⁸. The dauphinists might have been well advised to push on into the county of Nevers, but instead Charles, who had established his headquarters at Sancerre10, ordered slege to be laid to Cosnell, a few miles distant. The dauphinists were in great strength18, and the garrison soon agreed to surrender unless relieved by Aug. 12, hostages being given as a guarantee of good faith11. Messages passed between the daugh nand duke Philip, who agreed to fight a battle on the day fixed for the surrender at a place near Cosne on the right bank of the Lottel⁴.

1bid. 118 sq., Morme Iv 105; Plancher, iti. 58.

Letter of the dauphin to the marshal de Severac, in Beaucours, 1 470 Monste, iv rof, Cordelien, 3.8.

Countrat (15 Plancher iff 54 iq

Berneourt, i. 470.

* 1bid. 56

Couringt, 135; Moser. w. 106 16 Cordeliers, 3193 Monate iv. 206.

13 Ibid.; Le Fèvee, ii. 19; Tit. Liv. 944 Vita, 329
14 Cordeliers, 319, 321; Monter av. 106 Vata, 319
15 Cousinot, 185; Bourgeois, 175 sq.; Cordeliers, 322 Various dates are given for the surrender, but the chase independent authorities exted agree on Aug. 12, which accords well with the movements of the Anglo-Burgundian scuef force as given by Piancher (iii 38).

14 Counnot, 285. Bouvier, 4423 Corachers, 3213 Monstr. iv 206, Le Fèvre, ii. 605

Fenin, 184; Bourgeon, 176; Durand, 17 96

The duke had summoned troops from all parts of his territories. but, being weak in infantry, he asked Henry for a contingent of archers2. The sing replied that he would join Philip in person. with al. his available men?.

In the second half of July the English force was joined near Paris by the lord of Croy and Hue de Lankoy, with 300 mena'-arms from Artnis, while John of Lucemburg, who had just recovered from small pox, brought a contingent from Picardy". Henry, who was very sick, came from Bois de Vincennes and artempted to lead the army, but was obtiged to turn back at Corbei 4 Bedford was put in command of the force, and, accompartied by Exeter, lea it to Vézelay, where the dake of Burgundy joined them on Aug. 4 with the troops he had mised in his southern territories. The combined forces were very powerful, forming a greater army than any that Duke John had ever put into the field. As the dauphinists were also very numerous, everything seemed to presage a great and decisive battle, news of which was anxiously awaited far and wide? The Anglo-Burgundian army acvanced on Cosne. To obviate the jealousy. which had manifested itself on some previous occasions, there were English, Picards, and Burgundians in each of its divisions -vaward, "battle," and rearguards. It arrived before Cosne on Aug. t 18, and early next day the advance guard, under John. of Luxemburg, was on the ground selected for the battle, the centre, under the duke himself and Bedford, following at once10. The whole army waited till three hours after dinner, but no enemy appeared, and scouts brought word that the dauphinist Ibid 106 sqq , Le Fevne, u. 60.

Cordeliers, 317, 320 sq.4 Monter v 1074 Fenin, tas

. Va 2, 330; Tit Liv 95, Cousingt, 1854 Houvier, 4424 Monne av 107

* Vi s., 230; Wale it. 345; Tit Liv 45; Cordeliers, 320; Moneir iv 107; Fento, 144 G. de Roye, 186; Bouvier, 442; Plancher, 81 58

* Cordeliers, 312, Le Fèvre, ii. 61 Fenin (185) says that the Anglo-Burgundian arm, numbered a romen, a cred ble figure, and 114, examples the English conum-

DOOR 14 PROM

Fig. he interest shown at the French court, and Doubt d'Areq. Compact, 184. At fare the budy of 5t Unter the was carried as processed in the cathedra, with the object of aiding the Argan Surgindian cause. Commercial 180, n. 1). Amore tent a memerager of Farm to find our what has ready been arranged. Durand in 40, On Aug. 22 a Main of the Belly Spirit was sung as Treeve after a general procession asset in the order you present force. More, the Bringingse constitue an Azinoguaco, may hi Cone" (Arbois de Jubasaville, Sér G, 1 p. viii).

Monste iv. 104, Corde sen, 311

Plancher, für gli-

 Cordeliers, 121 sq.

¹ Cordeliers, 3 9, 322, Monstr 19, 106 troops had been dishanded. Certain of them, however, were to be seen on the other side of the river, and a few tried to cross, but were driven back by the English archers? Some of the besiegers remained on the left bank of the Loire for two days. But they did not offer battle, recognising their small chance of success, and eventually acknowledged their defeat by giving back the hostages they had received from Cosne². For their part, the Burgundians and I noush were evidently at a oss and made no attempt to cross the river and invade daughinist territory. On the third day, John of Luxemburg was sent to raid in the direction of La Charité, but daughtrist troops moved up the opposite bank watching him, and after reaching the town he fell back on the main army. The Juke of Burgundy then thanked those who had come to his aid, bestowed gifts upon their leaders, and ordered a general with drawa. Phiaip led the Burgundians back into the duchy, while the English and Picards went northward under Bedford, suffering much from hunger until they neared Troves when they shread themselves over the country and greatly annoyed the inhabitants. At I roves the Picards and the English parred arricably, the former going home, the latter towards Par st Bedford, on arriving at Iroves, had received news about the king which caused him to hasten forward to Bois de Vir cennes?.

Cosne had been saved, and the dauphinist army had dispersed. On the whole, however, the honours of the carriagn

2 Commot, 185; Bourger, 443, Rasulet, 171

Common, 1865 Houvier, 442 to 7 Fermin, 185

Monstr iv 104; Le Févre, 8. 61, Chast 2. 327, Plancher, 11. 58. In and around Paris at the end of August there are known to have been nearly 1300 English combatants (Each Acets. 50, 22, 13, 17). Seven retinues which had been mattered at Mestar rowards the end of March (Each. Acets. 50, 23) were also mustered at Paris in the last days of August (Each. Acets. 50/12, 17). In March they numbered attogether 619 ($\phi = \phi_{22} \lefta_1 \text{ Acets. } \for \phi/2 \lefta_2 \text{ Acets. } \for \phi/2 \text{ In the last is decrease at most 1 san accessed for by the drop in Eacter's numbers from 275 to 235. Most of the other settinues had grown. Deafts from England to the several captains might account for thus but it is probable that many of the small contingents brought over by fledford had been put under expression is after. The retinary of Reillard homest Wilsonghin, and one is two others were, however, maintained intact (Each. Acets. 50, 22, 13, 17). There is no indication how many retinates had been to Cospe. From other sources we know that breaked and Exeter had been there and it is perhaps up heart that the interest from had been been reduced to 3.4 some his tanding. Each Acets. 50, 24.

Moustr, ir 2093 Chief, i. 3273 Plancher, m. 38.

^{*} Cordeliers, 322. Cf. Morner iv 108; Bourgeon, 276; Vita, 330; Tit Liv 94; Wals, d. 341. * G de Roye, 186.

^{*} Counner, 185. According to Vita, 330, Bedford was under orders to had his men back to Henry as soon as the select of Cosne was accomplished.

rested with the dauphinisis. They still held La Charité, which constituted a valuable bridgehead on the right pank of the Loire and gave them a good point d'appai for attacks on the county of Nevers or the ducky of Burgunds itself. And they had entirely u set the clans of King Henry and Duke Philip. Jacques d'Hircourt was still in possession of Le Crotov, whence he was not to be dislocated till 1424. The siege of St Vatery sur-Somme, it is true, had ended satisfactorily for the Emplish. The garnson at first showed a first spirit, and Warwick's advance guard was handled very roughly; but on the arrival of his main force the defenders were driven within the walls. Warwick lodged in the abbey, and most of his men iavin tents. The keg ish opened a heavy bombardment and broke. down the walls in several places, but the dauphinists made many sorties, and, being at first blockaded merely on the landward side, could resort to Le Crotov and other ports for supplies. Warwick, however, sending for ships to Normands, soon cutthem off entirely from their friends, and after this the garrison speedily lost heart, and about the beginning of July made an agreement to surrender the place on Sept. a unless the daughin should make a serious attempt at their relief before then. Meanwhite, they were not to raid in the neighbourhood. Having received hostages, Warwick, instead of attacking Le-Crotos, led his force to the king!, and according to some authorities took part in the relief of Counes, St Valéry, in accordance with the capitulation, was delivered to the English on Sept. 43; but that date falls in the reign of Henry VI.

This success, however, was in some measure counterbalanced by a regrettable incident in Normandy. It was always hard to protect the frontiers of the duchs, and the inhabitants of the county of lvry were so harassed by raids of the dauphinist Monster, iv. 102 190; Chart. i. 316, Cordeliers, 318, 320. The date of the rap tulation is uncertain. The Cordeliers class rate, a good authority on points of chromology, dates k (,2 = 0.515, and Ministrate says 1.5 . . that the single antest three weeks. It was still in progression June 29 (Rot. Norms, 10 Hen. V, m. 15 d. This document is bad y materialisted in D.K.R. ziii 450).

Monstr. 17, 1071 Wals. 2. 341.
Cordalines, 323.

It seems likely that Warwick's orders to mjoin Henry came unexpectedly, for on July 7 it was apparently believed in Bouen that Warwick's force was besinging Lo Crotoy (For. Acon. 69, F v*, G. The date is given as in 9 Hen. V, but this is obviously a to p. That Warmick's force had been described for this operation is indicated by the fact that Henry and Charles VI had must to Jacques d Harcourt an embastic convexing of his brinder the bulog is Armira, Pierra Cauchies bulog of Beauties, and Hur its Larmy, who demanded the surrender of the Crushy Suggestations followed, by an agreement was mached (Manuer, W. 103 sq.)

garrisons of Perche and the Chartra in that in July the collectors of the taille were instructed to leave them in peace until next Christmas 1. Yet there was frequent temptation to use the men of the garrisons for service in the field, it was believed that many had been sent to join the Cosne relief force2, and it is true that on Aug. 9 the captains of a number of airong places in Lower Normandy and Perche, including Donifrort, Falaise, Verneuil, and Evreux, were ordered to despatch troops to reinforce Raiph Butler at Eul. This was a piece of luck for the viscount of Narbonne and the count of Aumale, Jean d'Harcourt, who were on the point of attacking Normandy with a force which had been assembled in Maine. Just as everyone's attention was turied towards Cosne, they broke across the frontier. They got as far as Bernay without meeting serious opposition, and the English garrison, which evacuated the place on their at proach, was pursued and scattered with heavy loss. Next day, having thoroughly pulaged the town, the raiders withdrew southward with their booty4. Meanwhile an English knight, Ph lip Brancht, had mustered a strong body of troops, and he now followed in close pursuit. A skirmish at Moulins la Marche failed to arrest the retreat of the Irrench, but some miles farther, near Mortagne, they were constrained to turn and right. The English dismounted and drew up their line behind a palssade of stakes, but on being charged they broke and fled. They lost beavily, both in killed and in prisoners. The French went on their way with their plurder, and though they were still well within English territory there was no further attempt to stop them!. The episode, while not of the first amportance, showed how difficult it was to protect Normandy against dauphinist captains who possessed a little resolution. The raid was evidently very well timed and executed7.

Bibl. par. , MS franç. 26,044/5740.
 Bot. Norm. 10 Hen. V, m. 9 d. They were to be with Butler by Aug. 36.

* St. Ann. vi 414 agg., jur 1871 Cagny 114, Consmot, 186 ag.; j. Charter, in.

Buil. Soc. Hist. France, cacs, pp 252 sq.

For Branch, see D.K.R. zli. 792, zlii. 406. He was presumably identical with Philip Braunche, knight, of Fleet, Lines (Cal. Pat. 2416-22, p. 160).

* St. Denys, vi. 476 sqq 3 Cagny, 1855 Country, 1875 J. Chartier, in Bull. Soc. Hast I make, 1858, pp. 432 sqq. The St. Denn chromeke is to that after the fight the Freez's bestock therease we with these plunder to the neighbouring town of Mortagne II this is use, it is senting evidence of the washings of the English definites must be nouthern frontier of Normandy.

* Professor Newhall (ago sq.) places the incident in November, 1422, but I am not convinced by her arguments in support of this date. The St Denis chromother, followed.

But operations against Harcourt and raids on Normandy were of little moment compared with the sickness of King Henry I ar y in the year his health had given cause for concern, and an Inglish physician and been summoned to Meaux! There is no sign, however, that Henry's ailment, whatever it was, seriously impaired his mental and physical vigour until the acge of Meaux was over. The weather in June was very hot!, and this may have had something to do with the removal of the two courts of Henry and Charles VI from Paris to Seolis. though an epidemic of amail you was probably a giore powerful motive. It has been thought that Henry's health was broken by incessart anxiety, warfare, and hardship4, but that opinion seems to be based on mere surruse. Henry doubtiess had led an active and harassing ate, but he was by a l'accounts a man of cool and confident disposition, not at all likely to soccumb to rervous strain or menta, worry. As for the hardshops he had endured, they were not very great. After a l, he had seen little actual campaigning. A good deal of his time in France had been given to diplomacy. His military operations consisted main y of sieges, and when he personally took part in these. he was of course lodged in fairly comfortable quariers. Much has been said of the sufferings of the English at the siege of Meaux, and they were doubtless considerable; yet we have seen reason to think that the losses from a ckness were small, and it must be remembered that the king was housed in the large abbey of 5t haro, surrounded by a great part of his household staff. Of course Henry always took an active interest in the conduct of operations under his direction, and at Meaux, as elsewhere, he must have been frequently exposed to danger or wounds or death, but that he ran greater risk from "natural causes" while before Means than he would have done in Paris or London, it is impossible to prove. Physically, his most trying experience after the march to Agincourt was probably the campaign of the summer of 1421; he must to some extent have suffered from the hardships that affiliated his men; and it may be that they left behind a gistric or injectinal weakness by Juvenal, and Cagny expeculy attention the raid to August, the last, indeed, giving a precise date, the 24th, for the action near Mortagne. Such evidence must hold good against the vagueness of the other authorities, whose chronosogy is invariably a was ha Rod g Hen. V, Mich , Feb. 3, 1421 Bourgeois, 274.

Vickers, 212; Kingsford, 378.

⁵ See above, p. 119

which rendered him an easy prey to dysentery or kindred diseases. Walsingham, an excellent authority on contemporary opinion in England, says that the fatal illness grew out of a long-standing distemper1. Nevertheless, in June Henry was projecting a campaign against Jacques d'Harcourts, and no one scems to have had any misgiv ngs about his health until he returned to Senlis after his visit to Complègnes. Then, however, he must have felt seriously id; for though he made light of it in public, he summened a new physician from Englands and on July 7 moved to the castle of Vincennes, while next day the University of Paris, of course with his knowledge, took part in processions for the prosperity of the realm and the safety and recovery of the king of England. It was popularly believed that Henry had small-pox7, and few can have known that he was dangerously sick until he attempted to lead the Cosne relief force. He could not ride, and had to be carried in a horselitter. Even so, it took several days to convey him to Corbeil, and further he was unable to got. At Corbeil he seems to have remained for more than a fortnight. An improvement in his state was soon to lowed by a relapse, and it was resolved to take him back to Boss de Vincennes. He was rowed down the Seine to Charenton, where, wishing to reassure public opinion, he lett the boat and essayed to ride, but was fain to dismount after a few paces. Thence to the castle he had to resort to the horse-litter, and at his journey's end he took to his bed, which he was never to leave¹⁰.

From this time, Aug. 1311, to his death eighteen days later, there seems never to have been serious hope of his recovery14 The nature of his disorder is vaguely and contradictorily

See above, p. 407.

Vitta, 129.

D.K.R. Eli, 445, Rym. x. 234 sq., Fauquembergue, ii. 56

Vxa, 531, Monatt. iv. 108

H. Fauquembergue, ii. 56.

² Vita, 329; Montte. W toy No chronicler suggests that anything was seriously wrong before

Mister John Swanwyth, M.B. (In. Roll to Hen. V. Puich., July 14, 1421)

Fauquembergue, it. 72 iq. Paugeon, 173
Van, 130 Faul Henry could not go beyond Corbeil a also stated by Tit Lw 933 Coenos, 181, and Norm. Chron (Heliot), 69, ad of whom think that siekness first overtook him there ¹⁰ Vica, 232, Monstr. iv 108 11 It can hardly have been later than Aug. 22 that Bedford heard at Troyes the rems which camed hate to historito Bois de Vracennes, for duke Philip reached. Trovet sterspent eight dars there, but did not hear that Henry was dying until he was on his way thence to Paris (Fenin, 185 of above p 411, ind cated by the chroniclers. Walsingham calls it desentered, and descriptions of the symptoms in other writers confirm the diagnosis, even when they use other names? If dysentery it was, the long resistance to it which Henry offered testifies to the strength of his constitution, and tells against the theory that he had long been in weak health.

Up to Aug. to Henry was able to transact business. He had his household at Bois de Vincennes, and Bedford, Exeter, and Warwick reached the castle some time before the ends. The duke of Burgundy evidently wished to avoid meeting him again; for, on hearing that Henry was at the point of death, he contented himself with sending Hue de Larnov to his bedside, though he was no farther away than Brie comte. Roberts. Queen Catherine was still at Senlis with her parents, and Henry seems to have betrayed no affection or concern for her during his last hours. He thought only of politics and his soul.

On Aug. 10, feeling his end to be near, Henry cailed to his bedside Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Lewis Robsart, and a few others, Englishmen, in whom he had special confidence?. He told them that he knew death to be at hand. If he had wronged ary man, which he did not believe, he asked pardon. He thanked all present and their fellow soldiers for their services, which he would have fifly rewarded had he lived loager. He enhanted them to continue the war until all brance had accepted the treaty of Troyes, protesting that he had invaded I rance for he worldly ambition but for the maintenance of his just claims, as saintly and wise men had told him he might do. Bedford he wished to have the custody of Normandy until 2 Vita, 3324 Monste re. 109.

E1, comme je fus amez veritablement informe, la principale maladie dont ledit roy. Heney als de vir a trespus sur vint par feu qui le feri par desinche on fantierbert, men semblable au feu qu'on dit de saint-Anthoine" (Monsir le 113). St. Anthony's Pire, however, is now another name for crystpelas and in the Middle Ages was a synonymfor the melaric articule; a very prevalent disease, resembling crystpers, but now apparently extract. The Monk of St Denis (vi. 480) souther flerry's death to an anticontast fluxus ventres," while Javénal des Urana (567) apeaks of "an flux de ventre aner ver lessa, avec been orrhordes."

² Rum. B. 259.

^{*} For Acets 69, F vi 3 Exch Acets, 50, 12, 13, 17, Vita, 332; Monour 19 109.

Fenin, 185, Monte, 19, 223, 174
Filbid, 197, 123, Cordellers, 322. The Cordellers chronicle, however, mys (120) that Camerine had visited Henry after his return to Bost de Vincennes Iron Corbe I. This is denied by Monstrelet (iv. 107). Livius (93) says that Charles YI and the two queens were at Bon de Vinceanes when Henry died. This is most improbable. In any case, Catherine does not figure in any account of Henry's last moments

Henry VI should reach years of discretion. He was, too, to hold the regency of France, unless Burgundy was writing to undertake it. Gloucester was to be protector of England; but Exeter and Waiter Hungerford were to have personal charge of the little king. Dissension with Burgundy was to be avoided at all costs. The duke of Orleans, the count of Eu, and two or three other prisoners must on no account be released until Herry VI came of age. Other captives Bedford might treat as he iked? No treaty with the dauphinists must be made except on condition that Normandy remained in English hands.

After showing his will to those present[®] and conversing for a short will ewith Hue de Lannoy[®], Henry called his physic ans, and asked how long he had to live. At first they put him off with talk of God's restoring him to health, but when he insisted on hearing, he truth, they gave him no more than two

1 Vita, 333 tq

* I his is well attested. I have adopted Monstrelet's record (it 100), which is belowed by Le have it the and Charlesan (1921) who adds that after Herry's death Beaford of ferrel the repercy to Burgandy, who re used it 1911 sq. Confirmation of these Burgandian authorities in afforced by Walangham (it 144), who evidently thought the Burgandy had at epied the repercy. The author of the Vita mexterna only England and Normandy, and his omission of any reference to Herry's wishes respectively the French regercy may perhaps effect the fact that they indicated confidence in Burgundy, who was luted to England after 1435

- With, 1935 The Law 93. Both those authorities had strong reasons to give permissions to Dote Humphore. But 1 4 1) and that Haves named him projectic and detender of the sea or but the information is inserted amount by se an alterthought and more green as part of the long a dying queech. The Nacistary Chromos Chromos pointed by Mr. K. nguford Tut. 118 has that Herry entrusted the potention of England to Bestroot Connected Extern and Bishop fleautiest and that there four, with centent of par sament, occasione that Hedd ord should be cause of his mountly and Connected when summarising Herry V state outlier, fact state that England is a region to England. Monte on 2, he have a fact of the partiament in virtue of his commission to act as cause presided at theory VI's first parliament in virtue of his commission to act as cause granted by Henry V in the previous apring. Gloucestee's claim (Rot. Parl. 19. 316) that the greenment of England had been left to then in Henry a will was of course authorities.
- Wita, 133; Tit. Liv. 95; Monate iv. 112; Brut, it 429, 431; Kingsford, Lit. 295. Vita, 133; the time authority to mention Hange find. Monateries (in 112) has at that the 12 and Warman was to be Herry's to 12; but Warman spirit mount of his many years in France. Other authorities associate Bashop Bestfort with Enter (Brut, 11, 429, 4313 Kingsford, Lit. 293).
 Monaterity 210 og ; Fenin, 286. The form in which this advice is said to have been.

given in clearly a sedection of later events

W 107

Monetr, iv x cosq.; Le Fèvre, ii 62
 Apparently his first will, relating to his parsonal effects. Sec i 539 sqq.

10 Monne, iv 212, Chair i. 229; Fenos, 28y Launcy forthwith went back to Dulin Philip hours. He then ordered his confessor and other clergy of his household to say the seven pentrential psalms1. At the words 'muri Jerusasem' in the fifty-first psalm, he stopped them, and sa d, "O good Lord, thou knowest that mine intent hath been, and yet is, if I might live, to re-ed fy the walls of Jerusalema." Having spoken thus, he suffered them to continue. After wards he received the communion and extreme unction. When his end was plainly at hand, he cried out, "I hou liest, thou liest, my portion is with the Lord Jesus Christ," and then, grasping the crucifix, he recited in a loud voice, "In manus tuas, Domine, ipsum terminum redemisti," and, with a gentle gesture as though commencing his spirit to his Seviour, he passed away peacefully, like one who fell asleep!. It was a little after two in the morning of Monday, Aug. 3th.

17

The English and the earlier Burgundian chron clers have of course much to say of the grief feit by the people of England. and Burgurd an France. More impressive are the tributes to his ability and character paid by dauphinist writers?. Notwithstanding the assertion of Percival de Cagry that his death was concealed for fitteen days, the English authorities seem to have made no mystery of it, at all events it was known in Flanders by Sept. 7th Nevertheless, legends soon grew around it. In Flanders it was believed that Henry had died of leprosyll. In French circles unfriendly to the English it was told that he had resolved to move the reacts of St. F. acre to England from the famous shrine near Meaux, and that he was stricken with tickness as a punishment, the name " St Facre's sickness" being apparently invented as a title for the disease that carried him offit. The story perhaps had some slight foundation in fact,

Monates in the Ferries 116

Brut, a. 401. Words to similar effect are reported by Monstrelet (iv. 212).

Notey v. 212.

* The Cordelless Chron. (322) and Fenns (186) are particularly emphatic about the regret feit in France.

These will be considered below. Cagny, 226. Morosmy so ana

H St Denys, vi. 460; Jur. 367. Both say that he died of St Finere's disease; but I have been unanigenteren the existence of annough author before this time. Chartelisin (i. 179) who represent a thing ing of Burganchas and Armagnas traditions, save that Henry was sented with the disease which "sulgure depay de Sainet Fyagre, autum de Swince Archorre," the laster name being derived by nam from Monstreat (iv. 1158)

Rym & 213, Fauquembergue, it of These two au horines are conclusive as to the date and time of Henry a death. It is correctly dated in Oed Priv Co. iii. 33 Yhay 334, 3574 Brut (Contin. H), m. 563, Kingsford, Chron. 74, 1284 Monste 1v. 1114 Bourgeom, 176; St Donys, vi. 480; Juv. 567; Cochon, 248 but one may probably trace its origin to the coincidence that St Fiacre's Day, Aug. 30, was the last of his life.

More than a generation later, Chasteliam, who write hostile to the English tries to be just to Henry, to dia strange story, which he had from the lord of la Irémonle. About a year before his death, Henry was visited by a hermit, who had, he said, hern ordered by a messenger from God to hid him cease. from affecting the French and approve himself the champion of the faith. The hermit added that when Fleury, as prince of Wales, had been wounded in the forehead while highting against. heretics in England, God had chosen him to be His unitrument against the infidels. He had been suffered to proceed thus far in France, but if he went farther his life would be cut short. Henry, after some hesitation, resolved to ignore the hermit's words, and dismissed him with an ambaguous reply, but before leaving, the hermit, perceiving the state of the king's mind, warned him that he would be punished by death within a year. The visitant departed, no one knowing whence he had come or whither he had gone, but when Henry fell sick, repented, and desired to see him again, he reappeared, and in reply to the king's enquiries said that God's mercy was infinite but that, for his unbelief and disobedience, he must die. Henry then asked whether his son would reign in France after him. The holy man, after retuking him for thinking of such matters at such a time, answered that he would not?. The origin of the story is probably Vincent Ferrer's visit to Henry at Caena; but it is eloquent of the deep impression which Henry hade on of above, p. 416, a. 2), a description which hereave some bewildermant. The authors of the Liber Phaseardeness and of the Continuatio Scotichron. (iv. 2217) have a various of the story which is characteristically designed to shed distinction on the Scota. The fuller account (Pluse 1 358) sells how some of Henry's men had ravaged the lands of St Finere and plundered the church which contained his relics. Henry, having refused te make resultation, was so a sea with Schuren's sockness and find at Schlass about Euglig. both St Piacre and St Maue being sons of Scottish kings. After he fel, sick Henry and a hat was he matter and the object same replied a unit matter. eent en nin u.fa nervenieris quae inchen entre mustem igreum adductt et qued ipie finit egte be mae. Extime empion fitert, dia est maericta encie cam ub cumque locorum perrenero, sos in barbam savenis. N miesten, sequit, 'at ten atroces' et ward-datavi sunt in vita cocum, qui tam cru-delens vindictam post mortem operantur." There is far more instrumental apparent in the heartists of acution of the time than in those of England or France.

St. Flaces, the ugh perhaps a Sent, was probably server in Scienard, but went in the continent from ireland. For an account of him, see Cash. Incycl. 1 v.

Soud or have been Jean de Grand, who abureasels sected at Techni, where he died ят 1439 (Bootiot, н. 446, cf. Същим, Рэопринасии, 32 5004). * Above, pp. 752q.

Chast, i. 117 seq.

#*****

the French that they should have so freely ansoked the supernatural to exp ain his unexpected end.

A funeral had the same fascination for the men of the M ddle. Ages as it has for most people nowadays, and it is annoying to find detailed histories of Henry's corpse by writers who give but the baldest account of the great events of his life. The body, it seems was dismembered and the flesh separated from the hones by honing. The flesh and hones were then placed in a leaden casket with a great quantity of spices?, what remained was buried in the churchward of 5t Maur-des-hosses!

Meanwhile the duke of Burgundy had arrived at Bois de Vircennes. After conferring with Bedford, he went to Paris, and took up his quarters in the Hôte d'Artoiss. Incred ble as it may seem, he apparently took no part in the obsequies which were being arranged. From his whole attitude at this time, one carnot but conclude that Henry had deeply offended him. He still needed the English alliance, and as long as Henry was able to direct affairs he had to preserve an appearance of triendliness. But as soon as he dared he showed his real teelings. His behaviour was scarcely decent, and must have aroused by their resentment among the English.

No less remarkable is the fact that Henry's body was never taken into Paris*. On Sept. 147 it was carried with great pomp to 5t Deais, excreted by Bedford and other English lords, and Monter iv iss, Le Fèvre, it 641 St Denys, vi. 452.

* Monter av 153

Only Vita (337) mentions Burgundy as present when the body was removed from Bott de Vincennes. The Monk of St Denis (vi. 482) and Montrelet (iv. 552) say that it man excepted by Body of and when Fing ish sorts. They could hard a have failed to be see that they are both to also past in the propertings.

• New You help to accome the transcence and their conduct on reatments Jarquelius of Humanis?

• Monstrelet (iv xxx) regardicantly takes it for granted that the body was brought to bear Dame but he as and which a surgetive. In regions of the hapter of he results contains to allisson to Henry's death, even when recording Bedford's gift to the church on Sept. 10 of a fine piece of goldsmith's work, with enamel images reported by the Timesy. So Decree St. George, Henry, and Cataronic Grantership, 140 and 6, 1, 1, 131, 2, 11

² Shorter is, and Free care Fauquers being a rate force are a second to be using (n. 47). He was doubtern maked by the fact that the budy stacked or Denn age in the day.

Co_gle

he have followed the account of the Monk of St Devis (vi. 482), who was in a good position to know the facts. He is copied by Jean Javénal (562), whose testimony at least shows has be known of method to the rotation. In the time should be in the cole (but him de little de brance 1866 3 to 120 methods the total place in the other hand, that the first was bareed. The author of the bias 16 declared in the other hand, that the body was so emacasted that it was possible to embairs it entires but his testimony on this point is not so weighty as that of the St Denis writer.

* Monate in 183, Le Fèvre, is 641 St Denis, vi. 482.

was ceremoniously received by the autor and convent. It temained for the night in the choir of the church, while monks prayed around it, and next day the bishop of Paris, with nermission of the abbot, celebrated the principal requiem Mass. Henry's executors gave very hardsome gifts to the church and convent, and in the afternoon the procession left on its way to Normandy!.

The ceffin was placed on a cart drawn by four great horses. Above the coffin was a bed, on which lay an effigy of more than life-size, made of boiled leather, it was clad in regal robes, with a crown on its head, a scentre in its right hand, and a golden apple in its left. As the body passed through towns, a rich silken cloth was held above it, rein noting observers of the cloth borne above the bacrament on Corpus Christi Day. On Sept. 19 Rouen was approached. Two hundred and twenty burgesses in black, carrying torches, joined the procession and escorted it to the cathedral, amid the folling of all the bells of the city. Next day, after the appropriate services, the coffin, with the superincumbent effigy, was placed on a litter and borne by noblemen to the castle. There it remained till Oct. 5%.

Meanwhile, on Sept. 24, Queen Catherine, with a great train of laggage-waggons came to Rouen⁸; and Bedford, having reached an understanding with Duke Philip, arrived to do what was necessary for the government of Normandv⁸. It had been resolved to ship the body from Calais, and Catherine accompanied the procession when, on Oct. 5, the journey was resumed⁸. The route by through Abbeville Headin, Montreuil, and Boulogne, and progress was very slow. The bier was escorted by clergy, who chanted without ceasing the office for the dead as it moved on, and celebrated Masses every day from dawn to noon in the church where the body had lain the

I S. Denvi, vi. alicing. The gift. I Charter, in Bull for de l'Hist de France, riich, pp. 21754. Bourge in 176. Estaquembergan, a gr. Henry amenear working a moache on he was from his de Vincernes, for it mandermed servirarezhout that two lamps accarbed to the hier human throughout the sourcest to St. Denis. St. Lenys, v. 46., J. Charter at one at p. 217. After recounting the proported absolute in Henry, Menureret (m. 176) comments that as much be nour was thems by the length to the dead sing as if he were a same in Paradise, and if the magnetic of the samps had som repeated or paralleled, he might have anticipated his son and become one.

Cochon, 189, Monstr iv 112. Vita, 3374 Brut, ii. 436.
 Cochon, 289, Monstr, iv. 213. It is impossible to credit Monstrelet's statement that up to the time she was agreeant of Henry's death.

^{*} Monte: 10, 113, Vita, 337.

* Cochon, 1841 Memer: 10 X14, Wals. 8 1451 Brits ii 430.

previous night. The funeral car was surrounded by men in white bearing torches; behind, in black, came the members of Henry's household, followed by English nobies. Next came the queen, with a train half a league long. Bedford and his counse lors, with a zeal for propaganda worthy of Henry himself, were resolved that the people of Normandy, Picardy, and Artois should remember him as a being hardly less mighty and magnificent in death than in life, entitled to almost divine

Meanwhile shipping had been so lected at Calais*, and at the beginning of November, after a delay caused by unfavourable winds, the passage to Dover was safely accomplished? Great preparations had been made for an in-posing tournest through Kent The archbishop of Canterbury, several bishops, and many lords awaited the body at Dover4. Hearses had been erected at Dover, Canterbury, Ospringe, Rochester, and Dartford. A requiem mass was celebrated at Dover by the bishop. of Durham, at Canterbury by the primate, and at other places by other bishops. On Nov. 5, when the procession neared London, the mayor, aldermen, and the craft-gilds went out to Blackheath, as they had done after Agincourt and when Henry brought home his bride, but dressed this time in black. A great body of clergy were waiting at 5t Thomas Watering, and all together followed the body to St Paul a along Lombard street, the funeral car, with the great effigs, being arranged and arrayed as I had been during the journey through France. At the cathedral a dirge was sung, and next morning a requiem. Mass. In the afternoon of Nov. 6 there was a great funeral procession to Westminster, in which a multitude of the citizens of London took part; and from the church of St Magnus to Temple Bar there was a torch-bearer before every house. In the Abbey church, after the usual requiem, Henry was next day buried, with more ceremony than had been seen at a royal funeral in England for 200 years. He was laid in a very honourable place, between the shrine of Edward the Monete, iv 114; Le Eèvre, ii 65 sq. To judge from the detailed account of the journey given by the Burgundian chroniches, Redford produced the impression he

F Rym. x xg1 xg2 Ord Priv Co. iii yg Iss. Boll to Hen. V. Pasch., Sept. 26,

⁴ Ord. Priv. Co. m. 5

Confessor and the chapel of the Virgin¹. His tomb was fitting y made of Caen stone and Purbeck marble². Later, at the expense of Queen Catherine, an effigy of the king was placed upon it, the head being of solid silver, the body of oak covered with plates of silver g lt². Before many years had passed a great chantry-chapel rose above the tomb⁴, and it remains one of the most notable monuments of the Abbey.

"And in that same vere deiden the moste partie of alle the lory treis thorugh all Engelonds "

Henry's English subjects had more warrant for their unrestrained lamentations than most of them imagined. With him the glory of mediaeval England departed; indeed, he had himself done much to destroy it. That, however, was not understood until long afterwards, and for the troubles that followed scarcely anyone of those days held him in the least degree responsible. Had he lived, Englishmen believed, all would have gone well. To them he was a "nobie prince and victoriouse kynge, flour in his tyrn of Cristen chiua ried," and the writers of that century and the next expanded the theme with wearisome verbosity until his fame culminated in the days of Elizabeth. Of the real Henry little can be learned from the conventional eulogies of his fellow-countrymen; far more

Rym. z. 256; Hist. Monuments Communos, London, I. 71, 71

* Brut if 444. The head and gut plates were carried off by theree in a 446 (Acts of Prevy Council 1 148). The hands also are missing (Hist. Monuments Comm., London, Bruti 10 4 50s.

Blud. 491 CF. Gregory, 148

Wale in 1945 of Bent, it 430, 448, 493; Chron Lond, 120, 211; Kingsford, Chron 75, 228; Monstr iv 214 of 3 Le Fèvre, ii. 67. According to the records of the Brewen' Company, four war horse, with harness and trappings complete, were offered at the high altar (Herbert, Twelve Livery Companies, i. 99).

t. 75)

* I his seems to have been erected by Heavy's instructions, which stipulated that three range should be sing there daily. Brut 11 495. Ut. Hist. Monuments Comm., London, 1. 11 199.). It was not yet completed it. 440. Ibid. 71). The inscription of the comice of the tomb pla form runs. Henness Quintus Gallorum Marrix just the Henness in time 1411 downs omnia varies purchas varienque suum sociat tandem Catharina 2437 ocium fuge. It dates from the sixueath century (ibid.).

The conventional passegynes, me Wals at $464 Vas, $15 Streechs, housing manufacturity were at the end of his chronicle (ff. $75 a.eq.), declared Harry to have been a Julius in insides, a Herrise in valour, or Achilles in strength, an Augustia in records, a Paris in also ance, a Solumen in distinction in a Trauma in love. The author of the "First Line" (4) commends to Henry VIII "the vertuous manners, the victorious conquests and the excellent argue and windows of the most renowned Prince in his dates, Kinge Henrie the Fifer... (of whose superior in all noblems, manhoods, and vertue, to my pretence, it is not read nor heard amongset the princes of England state Walliam of Normandia obtained the government of this scaline)."

valuable are the judgments passed upon him by open enemies or reluctant allies in France

One would have expected all French writers of the fifteenth century to be critical towards Henry, and some of them to be venomous. But on reaching his death, whatever hard things they may erevious y have said about him and the English, they either content themselves with a hald notice of the event or give a survey of his personality and character in which the good is far more prominent than the bad. Nothing in Henry impressed the French so forcibly as his zeal for justice. For this, says the Burgundian Fenia, the poor loved him above all others, since he was resolved to save them from the oppressions of the we l-born, and thus he had the prayers of the clergy and the humble! The Cordeliers chronice, also written soon after Henry's death, likewise selects this love of fustice for specialpraise2; but far more convincing than eulogies penned while the English were still a power in northern France is the testimony of Chastellain, a bifter critic of the English, who wrote after their expulsion from all Henry's conquests. "Above all," he says. Henry was "the prince of justice, both in relation to himself, for the sake of example, and in relation to others, according to equity and right, he gave support to none out of favour, nor did he suffer wrong to go un; unished out of regard for kinship?," And it is still more astonishing that dauphinists tell the same tale. To Percival de Cagny Henry was "tres fort pushicier4." That his fair dealing between great and small should wir the commendation of the Monk of St Denish is not so remarkable, for that chronicler never commits himself wholeheartedly to either side, but neither caution nor prejudice can have prempted Jean Juvéral to borrow the Monk's praises. stall less to heighten them in the process of translation. Henry

Fanta, 16 1 Corde son, 331

^{*} Chart 1, 234. "Et tout noutries il intrét person de justice tant entres iny nume, pas etemple, comme et ters nu tray que equité destrución, ne supportes personne pas lateral de torfam ne lament, impagran par a finné de song."

^{*} St Derve, vs. 1.16. The time of the Chronique du Rengeur would be more surprising if the last chapters of the work were written as M. Samarar corrects, by Jean Charter Bibl. For Charter last vis. 152 aqq.). 'I may be possited out, however, that the esternice of Henry in the Latin chronicle which Charter sequencinally wrote is much benfarousable than that in he Chronique du Rengeur (Soc. 4g / Plan de France, Bulletin, 1858, p. 279, Annuaire Bulletin, 1916, pp. 184 sqq.).

[&]quot; Leult fle v avost ente gemed jurch un qui une accept unt des pursuntus fabilit avon beson juntim un print que au grand" (fur. 567).

was doubtless often harsh to the point of cruelty?; but men expected nothing else in the wars of that firme, and much could be forgiven to one whose justice, however rough, was yet administered truly and indifferently.

The French found other reasons for admiring Henry That he was an honourable fighter neither party disputed? His claim to the French throne, preposterous though it seems to us, was defined with little recriminations; and even Chastella n was content to refer it to the judgment of God4. He was remembered as a brave, loval, and upright man, temperate in speech. unfinching in adversity, with his trust in God rather than in fortune. On French opinion he left the impress of a commanding personality, a mind habitually touched to great assues. a character in which the mean and the paltry had singularly little place. To his ability all paid tribute. French writers naturally and justly make much of the advantage which he derived from French dissensions, but they recognise frankly that by his mil tary skill, his far-seeing prodence, his unresting energy, and his inextorable resolution, he was able to wrest from his opportunities a success which no other living man could have compassed.

Whether Henry's French contemporaries estimated him aright may be left to the judgment of those who have read the foregoing narrative. In my opinion they showed a ngular fairness and acurren. It is not, however, for that reason along that I dispense with that neat portrait of the hero with which a biography is traditionally supposed to end: I am also influenced by the consciousness that my sketch would not have pleased Dr Wylie, who, as I think the preceding pages have betrayed, liked Henry less than I do Yet on certain points, I am sure, we should agree. Hard, domineering, over-ambitious, bigoted,

St Denga, vi. 480; Jun 487

¹ This semphasize the several contemporaries, e.g. Monter 19, 116, Le Proje, ii 53. J. Charner in No.: Soc de . Hist de France, 18 (%) 225. Many instances of Henry 6 harskness have been given above.

Et bien entrefenait la discipline de chevazzie comme jadu faitoient lin Rommaiss" (Le Fèvre, il. 68). Cagny (126) calls him "mouli chevalereux" sanctimonious, priggish Henry may have been. His will was doubtless set on purposes unworthy of a great or good man. Though he was fond of music1, tried to achieve the completion of the most famous church in England2, prized a good book3, and by example and precept promoted the use of the English tongue in diplomacy4, business5, and literary composition6, he cannot, as a patron of art or letters, approach his brother Humphrey, or even equal his uncle Bishop Beaufort. Nevertheless, take him for all in all, he was indisputably the greatest Englishman of his day, and placed beside the flashy Sigismund, the afflicted Charles VI, the sluggish dauphin, the treacherous John the Fearless, the unstable Duke Philip, he towers above them all—more forceful in arms, more discreet in council, more steadfast in purpose, and, with all his imperfections, more honourable in life harp, which had been bought in London and sent to birn in France (Devon, 367).

5 See e.g. the allusion to it in St Denys, vi. 480.

⁴ Chast il. 157-"I exox sobre de bouche, veritable en parolle, hanft et eleve en couraige, et a viles choses et banes se declinoit envis....craignoit plus Dieu qu'il ne se fiast en fortwee, et ses vertueux et constant en cuer avoit la socie " (Chast. 1, 334). "Magnonimus, ralent 15 arms, prudess, segut. ... populo famabetur" (St Denys, vi. 410, fallowed by Juv. 351). Cf. Cordeliess, 3224 Fenne, 216.

Cheet 1. 3344 Monite iv. 1261 Le Fèvre, ii. 68. Cordeliess, 3225 Cagay, 126.

2 See above, 1 205 seq

First L fe 92 In November, 1421, he paid (12.8s od for tweeve books on hunting (Devon, 368). Like all book-lovers, Heary sometimes omitted to return books he had borrowed (Rym x 317).

4 Rym. ix. 417 sqq.; cf above, p. 151

Herbert, Twelve Livery Companies, i. 206.

¹ Cf above, p. 212. For ministrels with Henry in France in 1421-22, see Exch. Accts. 50/13; For. Accts. 69, H vo. 10 September, 1421, he paid £2 131 8d for a harp, which had been bought in London and sent to him in France (Devon, 367).

Lydgate, Troy Book, Protogue, I. 69 sqq., Hoccieve, Mi. Po. 1, 130, cf. his Regement of Princes, patient.

APPENDIX A

(Vol. i. p. 1)

HENRY IV

On the date of Henry IV's death, in addition to the authorities cited in Wy, e, ir 105, see Limham, Lib. Meir 195; Brut, ii 593, Bodi MS. 496, f. 2246. Many modern writeri give the wrong date, some being wildly inaccurate.

With regard to the cause of death, the recently discovered portion of Adam of Usk's chronicle (119) states that he had suffered for five years from rotting of the flesh, parching or the eyes, and protrusion of the bowel. It further asserts that he died in the abbot's room at Westminster, thereby bearing out his horoscope which indicated that he should die in the Holy Land. His dreadful end, according to the same authority, was for etcid at his enformation, when his head was infested with lice after the amounting and one of the gold nobtes which he had ready for the offertory slipped from his hand and roded away, Adam himself having picked it up and returned it. One of the facts about Henry IV which remained in popular memory was that "he travaylede with grete sekenys" (Greg., Chron 53). Hardyng (374) refers to "his face so foste that leprous doth appear." His death is ascribed to leprosy in Kingsford, Lit. 277 Southern Chronicle), and 282 (Northern Chronicle), and in Cartellieri, Bestrage, iv. 7, where there is a statement, daving from a year or two after his death, that the same disease had afflicted his mother and her father.

Streeche (264 b) says that Henry IV appeared at the parliament of 1413 declaring that he would recover the Holy Cross for Christendom if God should give him life and strength, and that he got a grant of money for the crumde.

For Edmund Labourde, an illegitimate son of Henry IV, born in $401, see Cal. Pap. Lett. vi. 314. No other trace of him has yet been found, and it is therefore probable that he died young. Cf. Eng. Hist. Rev. xix. 96.

APPENDIX B

(Vol i, p, 1)

THE BIRTH-YEAR OF HENRY V

In Wylte, ni 323, 324, reasons are given for believing that Henry V was born in August, 1386. Many modern writers have accepted the year. Others however, have favoured 1387 or 1388. The correct data appears to be Sept. 16, 1387, which is given in the calendar of Elmham's Annales Britainfolum, Saxonum, et Anglorum (Cotton MS., Claudius, E. w. f. 22 b. cf. Kingsford, Biogr. 62).

f. 32 b; cf. Kingsford, Biogr. 62). A cradle in which Henry is said to have been rocked was sold to "an unknown purchaser" at Christie's on Feb. 21, 1908.

APPENDIX C

(Vol. i. p. 1)

JAMES I OF SCOTLAND

[Under this heading Dr Wylie left a few notes, consisting mainly of references to modern writers who have treated of various aspects of James's reign, with occasional quotations of their views. There is apparently no addition to our knowledge of James, and as it is impossible to tell what Dr Wylie meant to include in this Appendix, there seemed no purpose in an attempt to put the notes into literary form.—will will.

APPENDIX D

(Vol. i, p 16)

SIR JOHN FALSTAFF

For John Fastoif, kt., of Cowhawe in the parish of Nacton, near Ipswith, against whom Sir John Oldcastle brought an action for a debt of 800 marks in 1403, see Harcourt. The two Sir John Fastolfs, 58-60, where it is argued that he and not John Fastolf of Caister is the original of Shakespeare's Falstaff. For John Fastoffe of Maldon, Essex, see Maidon rolls 13, 2, May 26, 1421. Extracts from the will of Hugh Fastolf, cinizen of London, dated May 11, 1392, are given in Hist MSS. Comm. Rept. iv. 461. This may be the same man as Hugh Fastolf, sheriff of Norfolk (List of Sheriffs, 87). A "Mons. Hugh Fastolf" was in the retinue of John Blount in 1417 (Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 24,704, f. 32) and "Sir Hewe Fastolf that devide at Cane" is mentioned in the will of John Fastolf of Ca ster (Paston Lett. 1.456). Fastolf Alley, in the parish of St. Stephen, Coleman Street, London, is referred to in the will of Joan Fastolf, Sept. 13, 1417 (Sharpe, Wills, ii. 419).

will of Joan Fastolf, Sept. 13, 1417 (Sharpe, Wills, ii 419).

[Dr Wylie added a number of modern opinions as to the credibility of the tales of Henry's wild youth. These had been conected before the discovery by Mr Kingeford of "The First English Life of Henry V," a knowledge of which is shown only in a note inserted after the greater part of the Appendix was written. The whole question has of course been put on a new footing by Mr Kingsford's edition of this work.—w. T. w.]

APPENDIX E

(Vol. i. p. 22)

THOMAS CHACCER

For Thomas Chaucer as Chief Butler in the time of Henry IV me Wyle, it 470, it. 110. To this office was attached that of Coroner of the City of London (Lett. Bk. I. 5, 31, 115, 5mon, 1.20°). In the Subsidy collist 14. 2 Thomas Chaucer mans property in London yielding 4R per annum (Archaeol. Journ. aliv. 61). For his re-appuintment as Chief Butler on March 22, 1413, see Ord. Priv. Co. 11.159. Particulars of the duty on wines appear in his account for 1-6. Hen. V in Exch.

Accts. 81/8.

On March 22, 1413, he was appointed a Justice of the Perce for Oxfordshire (C.4) Pat. 1413-1416, p. 422, and on Jan. 11, 1414, he was on a commission for trying I sharks in the same county (bid. p. 178). For the contensation to him of Queen Joan's grants of Woodstock, Hanturagely, and Sussentiald, see this. p. 7. On Sept. 23, 1413, he was granted the custody of the forest of Woodstock and A ice Holt ibid. p. 102), and on Jeb. 13, 1414, he was contribed in the enjoyment of twerty marks a year from the farm of Wallingford, which he had received from Richard II and a 152, of Wile in 117, is 235). On New 6, 1413, he was shortful of Hants. (List of Sheriffs, 551 Woodward, no. 121).

Chauser was appointed a commissioner of array for Oxfordshire on May 29, 1415 (Ren in 25°). For 450 received from him and John Beck for the custists of the manne of Rycote, near I hame, see Receipt Rod 3 Hen. V. Pasch. June 6, 1416. [In 1417 hewent in the cupedation to Normands with nine men-at-arms and thirty archers (HU 90, 1215 App. VII) and he remained on active nervice its transcribinoughout 1418 (D.K.R. id. 713, 717, 191.] By Mar 1, 1420, he had cented to be Chief Butler, and on June 29 of that year the office was held by Polandar Merbury (In. R.d. 7 Hen. V. Pasch., May 2 and June 10, 1413, In 1420 he had to do with loans from two hundreds to Oxfordshire (ibid. 7 Hen. V. Mich., Feb. 3 and 15, 1420). On June 26, 1420, he was abroad (Rot. Franc. 8 Hen. V. m. 4).

The inscription on the seal with the pelican referred to in Welle, is 312 in certainly 15. Ghofra. Chaucier 1 (see Aubrey, 1. 760, Kirk, pp. 41-323. Louisbury (i. 100) is wrong in supposing that the letter. G1 has disappeared.

The Sacrist roll of Westminster Abbey shows that Thomas Chaucer was the owner of the house in the garden of St. Mary's chapel which Gooffrey had rented just before his death (Athenaeum, Jan. 27, 1900). Several acholian have taken this as conclusive evidence that Thomas was Geoffrey's sora, but Gar ictt (1.140) will only admit that it rance a strong presumption in favour of close kinship between the two. It has also been suggested (k. rk, pp. li, ki) that Thomas was the adopted son of Geoffrey Thomas became a member of the Council on Jan. 25, 1424 (Ord. Priv. Co. iii. 155, 157). In 1431 Philippa, duchess of York, left one hundred marks to Thomas Chaweser, or Chauser (Wills of Kings, 228). He died in 1434. For his estate and that of his wife Maud, including Ewelme with a manor called Burgess, see Cal. Inq. post Mort. iv. 160, 177. In the statutes of the almshouse at Ewelme founded in 1437 by his daughter Alice, the inmates are to gather daily round the tomb of "oure fadyr and mother Thomas Chaweer and Mawte his wife." (Whetham-Rede, ii. 552).

[For APPENDICES F (1 42: on the Duchy of Cornwall); G (1 71: on St Patrick's Purgatory), H (1 71: on Queen Isabel) I have not found any material among Dr Wylte's papers.—w T. w.]

APPENDIX H

(Vol. 1, p. 95)

EXPENSES OF ARAGONESE ENVOYS

[It is evident from an examination of Dr Wylie's papers that the reference to a second "Appendix H" was made by mistake. -w. r. w.]

APPENDIX I

(Vol. 1 p. 95)

COST OF LIVING

The following prices are taken from the accounts of daily expenses at Dunster Castle in the year ending June 27, 1406 (Maxwell-Lyte, Dunster, 114-19) chickens (pull.), 14d each, or fourteen for 16d, mallards, 2d each, geese, 24d each, woodcock, 1d, curlew, 3d, teal, 1d, congers, 4d.; malwel, 3d to 6d, turbot, 5d; eels, 6d, ray, 3d, i salmon, 7d.; hake, 24d to 5d.; oysters, 3d, a tun, sea-dog, 1d; gurnet, 2d.; ling, 6 for 15d.; red herrings, 6s. 8d, the cask.

M lk cost 1d a gallon; sa.t, 21 4d a bushel; dates, 3d. a pound. Wheat was 61. 8d. a quarter, cats, 16d a bushel. I hree portles of mustard could be bought for 7\frac{1}{2}d, and a pottle of honey for 8d. Eight oxen and calves were bought for 46s. 8d

In the Maldon rolls there are the following figures: red herring (1403), 41. 6d. a cask (1/6), cats (1421), 21. 8d. a bushel (13/4), a goose (1409), 5d. (5/2), two twes (1420), 40d. (12/4).

APPEND.X J

(Vol. i. p. 164)

THE THREE ESTATES

[Dr Wylie's notes under this heading consist mainly of references to modern works. They are manifestly incomplete and it is impossible to tell what purpose this appendix was intended to serve.—w. T. w.

For APPENDEX K (vol. 1 p. 171 on Simon Caboche) and APPENDEX L (vol. 1 p. 173; on Lodwig of Ingoheast) Dr Wy ie's papers common material.—w. 7. w.]

APPENDIX M

(Vol. i. p. 176) JEAN PETIT

Jean Petit was probably born at Bacqueville, near Dieppe, where he was intimately associated with Gullaume Martel VII, lord of Bacqueville (Hellot, Nobles, 5, 13, 36-42, 64). The date of his birth as uncertain, but must have been about the middle of the fourteenth century (Aubert, Compétence, 245; Vapereau, 1576 Munter-Jolain, 270). His poems (published by Le Verdier for the Société souennaise de Biblioph les, extracts being given in Heliot, Nobles, and Sauvage, Plan d'Education) prove him to have been not only a learned and outspoken man, a good hater when his feelings were aroused, but a devout and highminded patriot (Sauvage, passim), at least in the first portion of his life. His power of hating is shown by his polemic against Jean de Morzon, the Sparish Dominican, who in 1387 had opposed the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, then held by the dominant faction in the University of Paris (Boulhot, L. 242, Feret, iv. 136). His heated language in this controversy has lent colour to the widely-accepted view that he was a Franciscan friar, but he seems never to have been called friar by any of his contemporance, and the evidence supports the opinion that he belonged to no religious order. Under date of 1408, when he was mailton des Requêtes to the duke of Burgundy, La Basre (a. 102, 113, 156) calls him Maistre Jean Petit, Cordelier, and an extract from an account of Jean de Prassy, belonging to 1408, is quoted in Itin. 693, where he appears as "Maistre Jehan Petit, Cordelier" The passage is taken from a volume of extracts made in the eighteenth century, now in the Bibl. Nat., Collection de Bourgogne, tome lav, f. 80. M. Henri Omont very kindly supplied the information that the word "Cordeller" does not appear in the original, which rurs "M" Jean Petit, docteur on theologie, conseiller ordinaire aux gages de cl. livres par lettres du 20 fevrier 1405.

For a summary of Petit's famous treatise in defence of tyrannicide, see Vallet de Virivilie, Assass. 274-81, Collas, 369-96. A version of the text is given by Monstrelet, i. 178 sqq. For a criticism of this, an account of a better text, and a survey of the whole subject, see Coville in Bibl. Ec. Chartes, lixin. 57 sqq.

Pent died at Vieil Hesdin on July 15, 1411 (Du Pin, ni 59; Valon, 14. 315)

[For APPENDIX N (i, 192; on Pier Candido Decembri) there a nothing in Dr Wylie's papers. See his article in Eng. Hist. Rev. 221v. 84 2444, 1910 which most of his material for this appendix seems to have been diverted.—w. T. w.]

APPENDIX O (Vol. 1 p. 196)

JOHN SOMERSET

The name is given as "Sumerseth" in Cal. Pat. 1436–1441, p. 426, "Somenethe" in Cotton M.S., Jahns, E. iv., Harl. VIS 864, f. 182, and many other authorities, the form "Somerset" occurring to Wills of Kings. 292; Rot. Parl. v. 70, 72, 216. The word is played upon in Vita, 339, where Somerset is "doctor gloriosus qui aestatu aedis gloriosum cognomen sortitus est," of "fortila aestatis florida sedes," ibid. 341

In 1427 Sometset received a grant of the manor of Ruisip in Middlesek (Cal. Pat. 416-1441, pp. 46, 286. This he vacated on May 13, 1444. when it was bestowed on King's College, Cambridge. Rot. Parl. v. 87). It is to his connection with Ruislip that we owe most of our knowledge of the details of his life (see E-mham, Mon, Aug, 2011). Dier, Nat. Biog. hii. 445; Kingsford, Biogr 68). For he had a grievance about this property against the Feliows of King's, and in his old age he set it forth in Lann elegracs (Cotton MS., Juleas, F. vii. 4. In Cotton Cat. p. 23, it is headed "Querimonia Johannis Somerset Physici Herrici VI" and is subscribed at the foot, "scripta in Univ. Camb per M. Wyrcester, May 19, 1471") It is printed in Vita (347 sqq). From it we learn that he was a Londoner by birth (ibid. 354), that when quite young he had been a student at Oxford (ibid 350, of Tanner, 682, Wyle, in 417, Brodrick, Univ. 63), whence he passed to Pembroke College, Cambridge, of which University he was twice proctor (Vita, 354, In 1418 he became master of the grammar school at Bury St Edmund's "I anner, 6h2' This appointment he awed to his patron Thomas Beaufort, duke of Exeter Vita, 348. He was one of the witnesses to the duke's will, dated Dec. 29, 1426-Wila of Kings, 246). On Sept. 27, 1423, he was appointed the first supe visor of physic when an attempt was made to systematise the practice of surgery and medicine in London [Power, 7], and he claims that he had a high reputation among the doctors in London, Paris, and Rouen (Vita, 348. His name, however, does not appear among the members of the English nation at the University of Para, and it is urdikely that he actuary studied there). On Feb. 21, 1428, he appears as a distror of medicine receiving £40 a year and his I very as a servant of King Henry V. (Cal. Pat. 1422-1420 p. 460; cf. Ord. Priv. Co. iii. 28"). On Christmas Eve. 1430, he was with the court at Rosen, where he appealed his uguarure. "I have now of the presents ico of the famous stomal to the lung by the duction of Bodford, describing himself as "domine regio ad personanti servitor et san tate il sitacque conservationem consulting (Gough, Minnl, 19, Dibdin, Decameton, 19, 200001). On Oct. 2c, 1432, he was in receipt of a bota year for his services about the king's periou, both in teaching him and in preserving his health (cal-Pat 1425- 436 p. 242, of Ord Priv. Co. ir. 30, 132). He nevertheless stated in his old age that he had been his fig for the last receive five years in the king's hoseafield without receiving any pay (V ia, 348). Cits Dec. (1), (4-49), for became Chancellor of the Exchequer and Warden of the Tower Vaint and of the coinage of gold and silver. Cal. Pat. 1436taal, plate ef ibd eto, far eers bies, 352 Rem ic Soas Dier Nat. Bug icit 245), holding these offices till May 29, 1447, but during the whole time he was retained as the service of the sings person (Vita, 110 mg., Cal. Pat. 1436-1441 p. 426). He found time, however, to write a vine medical treatises (Lib. N. & Seace is p. 1831), as well as the book er ti led " De Facultate Metrica" (Bale, Index, 25"). When Henry decided to build his great college at Cambridge, Somerset was one of the commensurers appreciated to draw up the statutes (Cal. Par. 14.36-14.4). p. (21) he helped to choose its use, and became one of the trustees of its endowments (Rot Par v 48, 201 Vins, 3594 Weils of Kings, 348). He was an executor of the will of Hampit 5, cake of Gloucester, and one of the commissioners appointed to enquire into his possessors. Rot. Park v. 170: Ca. Pa. 1446-1452, p. 45. Rem xi. 160, b. chen, 442. For his communications with the University of Oxford as to Dune Humphies's books, see Tanner, 681, Kingsford Lit 53). In 1451, par innest petit med for his disminal as a partials of the duke of Suffice. Rot. Parl. v. 116). The result does not seem to be known.

Sometice was a married man Bekenson, it 244). His interests were largely bound up with the county of Actodieses, or which he was a use co of the peace in 1437, 1439 and 1446 (Ca. Pat. 1436—1441, p. 680, 1441—444th p. 474). In his old are he hought a house at Cuteries, near Bren ford, where the naked and the hangry were always at the door (Vita, 340), and here he died before 1445 (Rot. Parl. 334, Cal. Impost Mort. iv. 324; Lysons, ii. 24).

[For APPRICATE P (i. 199) on the hermit of Westmisster) and APPRICATE Q : 204 on the circle of the Hanaper), Dr Wyke's papers contain no material.—w. r. w.]

W LEE

桶

APPENDIX R

(Yel. i. pp. 205, 300) RICHARD WHITINGTON

In Richard's epitaph in the church of St Michael Paternoster he is called "Albeficans villam" (Stow, 11. 5), which seems to indicate that his name was spelt Whitington and that the first "1" was pronounced long. The spelling Whitington appears in the Subsidy roll of 1412 (Archaeol. Journ, xl.v. 62). In Lib. A.b. i. 4, his intimate friend John Carpenter spells the name Whityngton. It is "Whytyngtone" in Lett. Bk. I. pp. 52, 53, et passim.
[The rest of Dr Wylie's notes on Whitington consist of references to well-known modern works.—w. r. w.]

APPENDIX S

(Vol. i. p. 208)

RICHARD II

[Dr Wylie's papers contain some very rough notes on Richard II's character his badge, his seal, portraits of him, and one or two other matters relating to him. The notes consist largely of references to wellknown and readily accessible works. I cannot tel what use Dr Wylie intended to make of them. -w. T. w.]

APPENDIX T

(Vol. i. p. 214)

ARCHBISHOP SCROPE'S RISING

The account of Archbishop Scrope's conspiracy given in Raine, Historians, in 288 (the volume being published after the appearance of vol. u of Dr Wylie's work on Henry IV], was evidently written some considerable time after the death, in 1435, of the duke of Bedford, whom the author attacks as a second Ahithophel for deceiving the faithful David He wrongly gives the name of the archbishop's father as Stephen instead of Henry. He had his information about the capture from John Corbridge, who was present at Shipton Moor and told how the archbishop celebrated Mass in the open air on May 28, 1405, and then addressed his followers. He was not, he said rising against the king, but merely approaching certain lords in order to obtain a remedy for the oppression of the Church, which was burdened every year with the exaction of a tenth of her belongings. He added that he was going to mediate in the quarrel between the earl of Westmorland and the Earl Marghal. After the speech Lard (i.e. Sir Henry) hitzbugh arrived and offered his hand, promising that fishe archibiship would come across and treat fire peace, he should ters to to his people infe and sound. The archbishop accordingly advanced with a few followers, his crosser being borne before fum. The hittle band was su roundeds or nee John called the archbistion a tractor, serzed him together with the East Marshai and Sir William Plumpton, and ordered the rest to be gone, in peace was now made. In the account of serial fist owed, Henry IV is called "the son of John Gaunt, duke of Lancaster in right of an wife." When the mayor and citizens of York prostrated thermelves, the archbestop, it is said, was present, and the king said to him, "hee, you trait it show you have brought their men to gried, to which the arc) bishop made no reply, but commended the people to God. Garchigne's refusal to pass sentence is recorded in these words: Thirt, you have no law to still an archbishop, and what you cannot do as a larg. I cannot do as a sudge." The king flew into a rage and violently appresided him, but successful amemory was bleat, because he send hims for God's truth, while Fulthorpe (called "vito non judici"), who passed the final sentence, was afterwards struck with leptung, the urrier having himself seen him in that state at York.

The writer who calls himself Thomas may have been Thomas Cumberworth, who died in 1451 (Wylie, ii. 234, in. 2), or Thomas (successing who died in 1451 Wylie ii. 350). It could not have been Thomas Dauter, as suggested by Raine (p. 288), for he died in 2437 (Wylie, ii. 234, ii. 2).

For Falth the as "juris et litterarum peritus" me Raine, If stor and a § 2. He is called Fulch sine, chivaler qui est le south (iii) constable" in Year Book, § 7. Hert. IV. Mich., no. 10, quoted in Harcourt, §05, who thinks that "the popular view that Scrope was subjected to a mock trial by a few laymen is a complete travesty of the facts." Adam of Usk (99, 275), writing a 1422, refers to him se "jam mecras ex mult tudice in raculorum approbatus." John precche (264), writing after 14.22, though strongly Lancastrian in sentiment and regretting that I one is making far two good a thing out of its disloyalty. levis bound to recard, for the benefit of posterity, the miracles worked an the architectural grave-"in memoriam futurorum non ejus miracida. feixo e concrepando nec cui sicam alterius meritis del iginifo sed plane procedender prout volgus communiter legicut." The "Northern" Caromore the nestors, List , written early in the reign of Herry VI may, "infinita miracula. quan out die de nivio choruscant. Nam simulacia et sam itudines miraculorum cum cedulis monstrantibus infirmitates et loca personarum testantur satis clare" (p. 282). In Pol. Songa, ii. 267, the architistion is "hely histop Scrope the blyssed confesious". In $471 I dward IV declared that the archbeshop suffered death for the night and hele of our ancestry" (Scrope and Grosvenor, ii. 161, Purey-Clar, i. 151).

I we execution is now believed to have taken place in "one of the fields opposite to 5: Clement's Rectory, " Rebie, 64; or on the spot where

Google

a Bear

houses not. 67 and 69, Bishopthorpe Road, now stand—this information being kindly communicated by Dr J. Solloway. Streeche (a63) describes the place as being "extra muros civitatis sub quodam molendino venutico."

{For Appendix U (i. 220, on the Charterhouse of Sheen, and Appendix V (i. 221 on the sale of pardons), Dr Wybe left no material that could be used.—w. T. w.

For Arrangia W (i 225 on alien priories), Dr Wylie left a few references, mainly to Monasticon, Rot. Parl. v. 48, and the Patent Rols. I hey seem to contain nothing of material value that may not be found in the standard works on English Monasticism or in the Victoria County History.—w T. w

For APPANDIX X (1 229, 286 on John Wycliffe), Dr Wyl e collected some opinions on the Reformer's character. The recent publication of Dr H. B. Workman's "John Wycliff" (2 vols., Oxford, 1926) has robbed them of most of their value and interest.—w. 7. w.]

APPENDIX Y

(Vol. i. p. 235)

THE KINGS HALL AT CAMBRIDGE

On March 26, 1413, John Stone, king's secretary, was appointed warden of "our college of our students in Cambridge University"—i.e. the King's Hall (Cal. Pat. 1413–1416, p. 11; cf. Wylie, iii 351, 408). Stone was archdeacon of Northampton and a notable pititalist (Cat. Pat. 1413–1416, pp. 11, 167, 175, 187, 198, 632; Gesta, 117; Le Neve, ii 427). He was succeeded at King's Hall by Richard Dereham on June 5, 1415 (Memoranda roll, K.R. 3–4 Hen. V (no. 192, in. 7; Cal. Pat. 1413–1416, p. 350). In June, 1416, Dereham was at Constance, where he acted as protonotary in the enquiry as to the Strasbourg dispute (Finke, Elektenprozess, from Hardt, iv. 1384). He was dead by Sept. 25, 1417 (Orig. Lett., Ser. 111, i. 74). [For his doings at Constance, see also Finke, Acta, ii, 322, iv. 680.]

On Oct 3, 1427 (Cal Pat 1416—1419) Richard Holme succeeded Richard Dercham (Wylie, iii 351) at warden of the King's Hall at Cambridge. For his appointment see the letter of Henry V to the chancellor, Bishop Langley, written at Caen on Sept. 25, 1417 (Chancery Warrants, Ser. 1, 1364-38). Ong. Lett., Ser. 11, 1-74). Richard Holme had formerly been a school of the King's Hall, but had ceased to be so in favour of his brother on Aug. 20, 1415 (Exch. Accts. 348/29).

For the account of Richard Holme as warden of the King's Hall (Gardein de la Salle) from Oct 3, 1417, to Oct. 3, 1421, see Exch. Accts. 348 30. The receipts for the four years are given as 2435. The number of scholars varied from twenty-three to thirty-two. Each received 2d a day and the warden 4d. The expenses include payments for splinters (i.e. stakes) for the garden, 6d for "sowding" a lead gutter, 2d, for two "fothers" of burnt lime, 6s, 2d, for a rope for the well, 6s, 8d, for glazing windows, and 62s, for 6000 flat slats. A baker received 2s, 11d, as wages for a week, two labourers 1s, 6d,, one stater and his "famulus" were paid 2s, 11d, for five days, and another slater 4s, for a week.

Holme, who died in 1424, left many books to the library of Michaelhouse at Cambridge (Willis and Clark, ii. 399). He was succeeded on July 6, 1424, by Robert third son of Henry Lord Fitzhugh, the king's chamberlain, who became chancellor of the University in the same year and bishop of London in 1431 (Le Neve III. 697; for his preferments, see Cal. Pat. 1413-1416, p. 283, 1416-1422, p. 303, Le Neve, I. 611, II. 57, 96, in. 189, 191, 599).

[For APPENDIX Z (i 263 on Figurett's field) and APPENDIX A¹ (i. 278. on John Prophet), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material.—W. T. W.]

APPENDIX BI

(Vol. 1, p. 282)

LOLLARDRY

Some modern purists in language insist that the word is Lollardy, not Lollardry. On philological principles the truth would appear to be exactly the reverse; but the examples given in Murray, s.v., prove that in practice both forms have been used indifferently from the beginning. It may be pointed out that in Cotton MS., Cleop. E. ii, both "Lollardia" and "Lollardia" appear in official documents, as they do in the ballad printed in Pol. Songs, ii. 243.

[Dr Wylie had collected a number of references to mediaeval and modern writers to ill ustrate his point, which, however, will hardly be disputed.—
W. T. W.]

[For APPENDIX C1 (i. 289) on seriveners), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material.—w, \u03c4, w

APPENDICES D¹ (i. 289: on meals), E¹ (i. 299: on Wickham's foundations), F² (i. 303. on the pallium), G¹ (i. 306 on St Stephen's chapel), H¹ (i. 323: on Walter Hungerford), I¹ (i. 324: on the duchy of Lancaster).

Dr Wylie's papers contain no material which can be used for these appendices.—w. T w.]

For Appendix J¹ (i. 328, on Richard Holme), see Appendix Y; and for Appendix K¹ (i. 337) on alien priories), see Appendix W.

[For APPENDSX L¹ (s. 352: subject uncertain), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material.—w. r. w

For Appandices M^1 (i. 353, 362, on song-schools), and N^1 (i. 354, subject uncertain), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material that can be used.—w. r. w.]

APPENDIX OF

(Vol. i. p. 356)

THE PROPOSED CONFISCATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY

[Dr Wylie's draft for this appendix was written more than twenty years ago. Since then several writers have dealt with the subject, notably Dr H. B. Workman in Appendix Z of his "John Wyclif,"—w. T. W.

For Appendices P^1 (i. 300: on chimneys), Q^0 (i. 373 on Nicholas Flamel), R^1 (i. 374 on beds), Dr W_p he's papers contain no material.—w. τ . w.]

APPENDIX St

(Vol. i. p. 376)

SURGERY

[For this appendix Dr Wylie left some notes, the precise purpose of which is not clear. Some of the references they contain may, however, be of interest.—w \tau w]

For surgical treatment of wounds, gangrene, cataract, hernia, dropsy, and stone, see Chauliac, loci. For the treatment of a tooth that is "akynge or rotynge," see Arderne MS. f. xlix (Emmanue, Coil., Cambridge). There is a picture of a dentist at work in Schuttz, 142. Operations on the skull are illustrated in Besant, Survey, 1-337; J. A. Herbert, 200: on the ear, in Schultz 142 on the leg, in E. H. Langlois, 142. There is a picture of dissecting at an anatomy school in Chauliac, 25. For a bone-setting contracts see Bones, 1, n. extra

Setting ointment see Bonis, 1. p. exxii

There is a reference to "femmes entendues en medicine, mulieres Salernitanae" in Chautiac, Ixiii. For "metgesses" at Perpignan, see V dal, 182. For "barbiers souvent des femmes," see Piton, 161; and for women licensed to perform surgery in the fourteenth century, see South, p. x.

[For Appendices T^{τ} (1, 382 on lazar-houses) and U^{τ} (1 388 on masers). Dr Wyhe's papers contain no material that could be used.—w τ , w.]

APPENDIX VI

(Vol. i. p. 392)

EDWARD HALLE

[Dr Wylie's papers do not reveal what he intended to say about Halle, but it may be pointed out that recent researches have shed much light on the trustworthiness of Halle's Chronicle: see Bibl. Ec. des Chartes, boxxv 123 sqq.; E.H.R. xli. 504 sqq.—w. T. w.

Appendicts W¹ (i. 393° on the Oriflamme), X¹ (i. 397° on toils at Bapaume), Y¹ (i. 407° on King John's ransom), Z¹ (i. 408° on Charles V of France), A² (i. 409° on the death of King John of France), B² (i. 413° on the duke of Burgundy's daughters), C¹ (i. 427° on tennis-balls), D¹ (i. 448° on finance in 1415), E² (i. 451° on the capture of Ceuta), F² (i. 455° on paper and parchment), G² (i. 456° on the defence of the march of Calais), H² (i. 456° on maritime defence), I² (i. 457° on soldiers' pay), J² (i. 459° on compulsory armour).

For mone of these appendices do Dr Wylie's papers yield any material. In one or two instances, indeed, there is reason to suspect that what he at one time meant to use for an appendix subsequently found its way into the text. w. r. w.]

APPENDIX K²

(Vol. i. p. 461)

PLATE ARMOUR ON MONUMENTS

[It seems to have been Dr Wylie's intention to compile a list of monuments dating from the early afteenth century which represent knights or men at-arms clad entirely in plate armour. His knowledge of such monuments, however, seems to have been derived almost entirely from fairly well-known books, and the fragmentary list which he had made does not, so far as I can judge, ead to any new conclusions. Much work on the subject has been done since Dr Wylie's notes were made.—w r w.

For Appendicus L² (i. 467: on horses in the army), M² (i. 475' on the royal chapel at Windsor) and N³ (i. 509 on Bourges cathedral), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material.—w. r. w.]

APPENDIX OF

(Vol. ii, p. 7)

For the Pagus Caletanus (i.e. the district of the Caleti of Caesar, Bell-Gall in 4), see Mem. de la Soc. des Antiquaires de la Normandie, 21, 1 t. Chef de Caux is spek in a great variety of ways by fifteenth-century writers. Some of the more striking forms may be given.

Quie de Caux (Cagny, 94), Chief or Chiest de Caux (Cochon, 123; Norm Chron 168, C. Beaurepaire, Notes, in. 267); Chiefe de Cauxe or Calx (Kingsford, First Life, 33-34), Kyef de Caux (Orig. Lett., Ser. II, 1.84), Ketecaus (Harflet, 307), Ki de Caws, or Kydecause (Gesta, 13, Chron. Giles, 13, Streeche, 268, Capi., de Illustr. 115. Wals. ii. 307, Caxton, Chron. 145), Kidcaus, Kydeaws, Kyddecause, Kidecaus (Flinham, Lib. Metr. 106, Capgr. 310, Caxton, 225, Vita, 37, 38), Kitcaws, Kytkawys (Greg. Chron. 109, Brut. ii. 376), Kittance (Brut. ii. 553), Kedecaux, Kedeaux. Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Kedecaux, Chron. Lond. 1001, Kingsford, Lit. 350. Wortester, Itin. 3723, Nobleme, 283, Grey Finars Chron. 13, Gale. Scriptores, ii. 5001, Kingsford, Chron. 721, Stows, Chron. 347), Kittecaux, Kitcaux, Kytcaux (Hardyng, 389, Chron. Ric. II—Hen. VI, p. 403, Godstow, 211), Kitcawe Kingsford, Lit. 316, 325), Kydecamp (Otterbourne, 276) (Doubtless many of these forms represent attempts to reproduce phonetically the name as pronounced by Henry's soldiers. The censors of our own time might furnish as many and strange variants of Ypres or

Airnentières.-w. T. w.]

APPENDIX Pa

(Vol. ii. p. 8)

HARFLEUR AND HONFLEUR

For variations in the spelling of the name Harfteur, see Cochet, Seine Inferieure, 179, Morient, il. 74.

[To the examples there given, Dr Wylie's notes add upwards of sixty, taken from mediaeval sources, mainly of the fifteenth century. About half of them retain the original "t" in the second syllable, forms approximating to Harflet and Hareflete being numerous. In many instances, however, the "t" has disappeared, without being replaced by another commant forms like Harreflew and Harefley are thus produced. The intrusion of an "r" into the second syllable is comparatively rare, and occurs largely in works by writers who are neither French nor English. We find, however, Harifforium (St Derivs, v. 540, vi. 100, Rym, ix. 38), Harrefley (Debat, 22), Aurifforium (St Denys, v. 532), Arrefleyr Martial,

i. 19), Arfleur (Verneud Chron. 217), Harefleur (c. 1404: Margry, 184)

Dr Wyke noted some twenty variants of the spelling of Honfleut. Here again the 't" of the second syllable is retained by a large proportion of the authorities: thus Blonder, if 153, has Honnofluctus, while Scottchron. (Hearne), iv 1184, gives Handflet. Apparently, however, it was more askal in the lifteenth century to spell the word with no consonant at the end of the second syllable. "Honnefleu" and forms resembling it are common. The "r' nevertheless appears in Honoflorium and Onoflorium (St. Denys, vi. 42, 100, 144), Honnefleur (Jav. 536; Verneui, Chron 217; C. Beaurepaire, Notes, 1.1. 258), and Aunfleur (Longnon, Entrée, 107) w. r. w.]

APPENDIX Q2

(Vol. ii. p. 9)

MONTIVILLIERS

Montiviliers is variously called Monasterium Villarum (Cochet, Seine Inf. 176), Monasterium Villaru (Biondel, Reductio, 151; Morlent, Havre, ii 90, Arrondisa xiit C. Beaurepaire, Notes, ii. 19; Gall. Christ, Rt. 281); Monastervilliers (La Trémoille, 70); Monastervilliers (Gesta, 277), Monasterdevilliers (ibid. 37); Monastervilliers (Norm. Chron. 176), Monastervelers (Kingsford, Chron. 119), Monasterveless (Kingsford, Chron. 119), Monasterveless (Kingsford, Frist Life, 35), Musterdevillers, Mustherdevillers (Vita, 40, 42); Mosterdeweiers (Gesta, 129, 130); Musterdevillers (Hardyng, 378), Mosterevelers (Pol. Songs, ii. 123).

[For Appendix R² (ii. 11 on the port of Leure), Dr Wysie's papers contain no material,—w 1. w.]

APPENDIX 52

(Vol. ii. p. 32)

VEGETIUS

Vegetius was the only writer on military science studied in the Middle Ages. His work De Re Militari was translated by Jean de Meung in 1284 under the title of "L'art de la Chevalette" (Leroux de Lincy, Bibl. 71; Delisle, Cabinet, i. 106, Recherches, i. 273; Boutaric, 297) and versified by Jean Priorat as "Lordre de Chevalette." In 1285 Gilles de Colonna incorporated a great part of it in his De Regimine Principum, MSS, of the work are not uncommon. For one belonging to Thomas duke of Gloucester. In 1397, see Dillon-Hope, 281. There is another at Ail Souls College, Oxford (MS, xcii, see Coxe, ii. 28) and one, formerly at Westminster, in Lambeth Palace (Robinson and James, 24). The De Re Militari was also translated by Christine de Pisar at "Le Livre des faits d'Armes et de Chevalerie," or "Le Livre de Chevalerie" (Robineau, 251, Petit de Julievalie, ii. 365; Guiffrey, i. 270, where it is presented by her to the duke of Berry on Jan. 1, 1413). This version can hardly have been known to England at the time of the siege of Harfleur.

Google

APPENDIX T2

(Vol. ii. p. 33)

GUNS AND GUNPOWDER

[Dr Wylie's papers contain no material that could be printed as an appendix on this subject.—w. r. w.

For APPENDIX U² (ii. 47 on John Phelip) and V² (ii. 108: Blanche-Tache), Dr Wylie's papers contained no serviceable material.—W T. W.]

APPENDIX W2

(Vol. n. p. 126)

COAT-ARMOUR

[Dr Wylie left some notes justifying his use of the term coat-armour by quotations from sources of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The following will serve as examples "a vesture which that men thepen a cotearmure," Chaucer, House of Fame, 1. 3233; "by hir cotearmures and by hir gere," Chaucer, Knight's Tale, 1018, 2002, "cote armure over his hernais," ibid 2142, "three cote armures," Brit Mus Add MS. 4601, f. 95 (122); "one cote armour," Amyot, 256, Antiq. Report ii. 277, "turneas armorum vocatas coatarmures," Rym. iz. 457.

Dr Wylie also made some notes on the history of the military surcoat, but they contain no information which is not given in "Mediaeval Eng-and" (ed. Davis), $77 sqq.

For Appandix X2 (ii 133 on dismounted troops at Agincourt), Dr Wylie's papers contain no material

After p. 133 there are no references in vol. ii. to any further appendices, though in several notes the reader is directed to consult certain earlier ones. Dr Wyhe's papers show, however, that in some of these cases he really meant to provide an additional appendix, which he would doubtless have furnished with a distinctive description. Thus Arrendix H, referred to mil 142, 183, is not the one on Queen Isabel cited in 1.71, but was intended to deal with estimates of the numbers at Agincourt. Some of Dr Wyhe's notes for this appendix may be reproduced. —w r. w.]

Among fifteenth-century estimates of the numbers of the French army may be mentioned the following 10,000 men-at-arms (Giles, ii 61) Fabran, 580, 10,000 altogether (Gruel, 18), 40,000 (Aen. Svl., Orat. iii 191; Fabyan, 579, for total of highling men), 50,000 (Le Fryte 1 247 Waurin, ii 205), 60,000 (Gesta, 57, Orterbourne, 277, Usk 126; Lib. Metr. 120; Pol. Songa, il. 124; Capgr., de Illiatt. 116; Kingslord, Chron, 119, Chron, Lond, 119, Greg. Chron, 111, 80,000 (Kingsford, Chron. vo. Lit. 277, Caxton, Polychron. 227), 100,000 (Rym. in 385, Brequigny, 247, Serecche, 267 b. Kingstord, Lit. 286, 317 326, Hardyng, 375, 391, Landowne MS 1054, Salabury Corporation Records, Ledger A, 1, £ 55 in Hist MSS Rept , Var. Coll. iv. 195, Pluscaril. 1 350, Bouvier, 430 , tot, 200/Kingsford, First Life, 52); 120,000 (Chron. Rec. II-Hen. VI, p. 413 Chron. Lond. 101; Brut, ii. 379 555, Verneuil Chron 217), 140,000 (Wals it 3101 Niem, Vita, 35); 150,000 (Monstr, 373 n.; [Cod. of Arms, M5. M. 9, f. 200011), 200,000 (Scritchion (Hearne), iv. 1185), 1,200,000, i.e. sixti score Mi (Brut, ii 59-)

[An for Appearance L, referred to in 11.151, and 178, n. 2, I am at a long it is certainly not to be identified with the Appendix L referred to in 1.173. It appears however that the Appendix L of 11.178, n. 5, was to deal with the name Agincourt. Unicerning this Dr Wylie had written the following note. "It has been customary to suppose that the name Agincourt is a modern English corruption of the French word Azintourt... But this is alrogether disproved by the earliest instances in which the name occurs," which show the "g" as an essential part of the pro-numeration, with the accent usually on the penultimate, e.g.

"Rega Londonne ab Agincourt ndvementi, Elmham, Lib. Metr. 125.
Slin, Pictateme, mand Agincourt memorantur, abid 1,1
Hon minns October Gallos confregit Agincourt, Mone. St. Michel, 1. 20
Henzieus quintus rus Agyncuetum fuit criss, Monasc. 10, 149.
Agencourt nomen abs Christian desist omen, Lambeth MS 44, f. 193.
To Agyncourt now in he is ride, Harbet, 67.
Til he come to Agincourt cost, but
In Agincourt feld he fought mustly, ibid.
At Agyncourt so homeward in his ways, ibid."

Dr Wylie gives für her examples of fifteenth-century spellings of the name. The following are of special interest. Agincourt (Le Fèvre, 2694 St. Denys, vi. 466. Norm. Chron. 70, Hellor, 28, Blondel, i. 313, 314, 442, 443, Brit. Min. Add. MS. 17,716, f. 102, Ruimeauville. 2413, Agencourt (Kym. 11. 457. Hunter, Agincourt, 11. 49, Ord. Priv. Co. 11. 229 i. Agincort. Bee Chron. B2)4 Agincort. (Gesta, 49, 207. Stevenson, Wars, ii. 441, 454)4 Agyncourt. (Rym. 12. 3194. Rot. Parl. 13. 3204. Rot. Norm., Hardr., 246, 277. Kingstord, Lit. 326)4 Achendurt. (Streeche, 207. a)4. Egincourt. (Bourgeois, 134)4. Gyncourt. (Lagny, 97, 99. Verness. Chron. 218. Debat, B)4. On the other hand, the form Azeneourt occurs in Chanc. Warr. Ser. 1. 664/6594. Rym. in. 357. Azynoorie in Pol. Songs, ii. 1243. Kingsford, Chron. 119. Azincourt.

in Le Fèvre, i. 241; Waumn, ii. 204, 230; Chast 1. 150; Fenin, 65; Cousinot, 134; Dynter, ni. 246, 303. Assincourt in Cordehers, 229. But the balance of evidence is in favour of the spelling with "g."

The Appendix M referred to in it 182 was apparently to be concerned with the Agincourt casualties. It is doubtful however, whether Jr Wylte would have written this Appendix at any rate, most of his notes on the subject have been embodied in the text or foot-notes of vol. ii., and the rest do not throw much additional light on the subject.

The reference to Arrandix Chin II. 193 I campot explain. Arrandi x N. referred to in i. 195, was to give some account of the Chronique de Russeauvi le. According to Dr Wyhe the dialect in which this work is written indicates that it originated in Ponthieu, Picardy, or Artors, Inboth form and matter is occasionally shows strong affinities to Le Fevre, Monstrelet and the Condeliers Chronide, but the general independence of the writer is such that he cannot be supposed to have copied from them. There is no doubt that the chromole is of fairly early date, but it seems very doubtful whether it was written at Ruisseauville (as stated by N. Lambert, 41B, Belleval, 30); it asserts, for instance, that the English crossed the Somme at Doingt, which is not actually on the river, and describes Agincourt as "un lieu que l'on dut Agincourt-en-Ternois." The writer says that the consecration of the ground in which the dead were buried was performed by the abbot of Biangy, contradicting Monstrelet's assertion that it was the abbot of Russeauville who officiated. Not only does the writer exhibit no animosity towards the English, but he goes out of his way to denounce the Armagnacs for robbing the fugitives from Harfleur and plandering towns, churches, and monasteries.-w r w.)

[APPENDIX YI

ROBERT REDMAN'S "VITA HENRICI QUINTI"

No references to Redman's Life of Henry V have been made in vol. in. Dr R. R. Reed has shown (E.H.R. ixix 691 sqq) that the Life was not written in the reign of Henry VIII but in that of Elizabeth, probably between 1574 and 1578. Redman (or Redmayne) was thus in a position to the Halle and Stow, and his work consequently has no independent value whatever. Miss Reed thinks that the author is to be identified with the Robert Redmayne who was chancellor of the diocese of Norwich from 1587 to 1625, when he died at the age of severity-four.

—w. T. w. 1

(APPENDIX Z:

THE FIRST ENGLISH LIFE OF KENRY Y

"I se First English L for of King Henry the Edits," secondered and edited by Mr. C. L. Kingstord, was not published till 1911, when Dr. Wylie's researches were to advanced. Dr. Wishe of course knew the brosk and his foot-noise often refer to it, but it weren hat he had not studied it very closely or formed a critical estimate of its naise. Indeed its interest and importance have never received proper recognition.

In an excellent Introduction to the "I fe" Mr Kings and described its character and contents and showed as influence in later historical writings. It is a compilar on based mainly on the Later Life of Henry by I tus Livius of horn and the Chemicle of Monstreier. The author, who exceeds styles himself "the Translator"—though he was much more inapplemented his two principal uniform with extracts from one or two Ligish chromoles, especially the Pelvichromaun, as princed by Caston in table. In the passages taken from these sources the Life" of course te is us nothing that was not familiar believe its recovery. But, in addition, the longrapher has a served in the worst "divers other opinions," for which he was indebted to an earl of Ormander and it is in these that the value of the book consists.

The "First Life" was used by Nicholas Harpsteld, Store Holoshed (to whom Store left his cupy, and Hearne, who cres it in the notes to his exition of Listins. The work is now extail tin two MSS — Bodier, 906, and Harvey, 36, both writter in the reign of larges L. The Hariey MS is much for or to the other tarking the "Procuss" and four of the passages for which Ormonde is named as the authority in the Bodier AIS. Store's copy has sanished. It exidently delicted in important respects from both of the start is versions. Appeare the worker at MSS inference printed until our own time. That it was fort for nearly 1.0 seats was done in misorscription by Bernard and the computers of the malogue of the Hartean manuscripts.

All kingsford rightly emphasized the importance of the "Ormonde" pusages. From the east the beigraphs, deternal his statement that from his accession to his marriage H ries terratised attemprachable continent—ar american which before the recovery of the "F rid Life" was besieved to rest on the authority of Harpsheid. It was probably from the east that the "I randator" had the wolly of Henry's enemig in fartastic dogume to seek forgoverous from his father, and Ormonde is supremly named as the marce of the report of Henry IV's during advice to his son. It used to be impossible to trace these accounts further back than never. In the next passage, given on Ormande's authority, he writer tells how, when prince of Wales, Herry, accompanied with some of his rounge Lords and gentlemen, would awaite in designated any for his owne receasions and during them of their emoney", it was probably, too, from Ormande that the prographer had the story of Henry's dismenal of his wild companions. That Henry suddenly reformed his conduct when he became king in attested by many good authorities, but the charge that he had been gutte of highway-rathery used to be supported by no one earlier than how, and it was formerly thought that his repudiation of his old friends was after rd by no independent witness cave habyars. The story that Henry tried, though an acceptuly, to found a house of Celesteres at Islewarth, is peculiar to the "First Lafe", it is denied from Orminde. The earl, too, is made responsible for the story that when Signmand armed at Dover, Gloscower and other magnates invisted or his going ar assurance that he came as arbitrator and not as emperor—a tale generally discredited as resting on an higher authority than Haltenhed. Coming to the incoming of Normandy in Eq. 7, we find Ormando cited in the source of a story, not otherwise known, about the division of the spoil after the capture of Carn-There is, too a long account of the year to Henry of Vincent Ferrer, the particulars given are new and interesting though the earl was wrong in placing the incident at Rouen instead of user. It halls, the earl is cited for the story that Barbazan, the defender of Meiua, having been condemond to Jeath for composity in the min der of John the Featlen, mixed himself by the plea that by his combut with electry in the mine he had become the king's brother-mearins. This is told in an abridged form by Househed, but, while the "First Life" was lost, his reference to a "transator of Littue, as his authority carried little weight, since no one knew who the translator was.

One effect of the recovery of the "First Life" should be an increase in the respect paid to Stow and Mourabed. The more one learns of their methods, the more one admits the incapation way in which they handled their sources. When they make statements for which as ret no exit or authority has been found, one may feel conhibert that they were using some written source and reproducing it faithfully. It does not follow, however that their authorities were always historically valuable, and we must now sale how much weight to to be attached to the ir formation of the "Translator's" earl of Ormonde.

For his account of the young lifenes's recenciliation with his father, Stow refers to the "translator of Litus Livius", as he was informed by the Earle of Enround an eve witness of the same. Stow thus has in mine James Burler, the fourth ear, who was homeon 1392 succeeded to the trile in 1474, and died in 1472, and it is rese that he might have been at coast on the occasion in question. All Kingshold accepted the identification, apparently without in saming or heattern, and consequently regarded the passages derived from O monde as pomenting all the weight of contemporary evidence.

This manipulous man got Mr K nysford run difficulties. As he himself pointed out (p. s), the Prisem and Epilogue of the Thirs Title Teave no doubt that it was corrossed between June 30, 1513, and the autumns of the following year. The writer, therefore, could haldly have derived the "Ormande" stories from the mouth of the fourth earl, at d. Mr. Kingsford cornequently assumes that they must have been taken from a written source. Of this, however, the houth earl could not have been the author, for one of the passages which the "First Life" derives from him con aims a reference to the canonisation of Vincent Ferrer in 2455. So Mr. Kingsford win driven to justulate the existence of a Life of Henry V will ten a ten. 445 by a serva it of the fourth earl, who set evilual mornisation which he had received from his late master.

I be whole of this messy I believe to lack warrant. It depends on the identification of the "I randator's" earl of Ormonde with the fourth earl, For that I have found no evicence save the statement of Stow cited above, In matter extent MS: of the biography does it receive any support whatever. On the other hand, there is much evidence against it.

In the Proess ip it the author writes that to the matter taken from tourses previously specified he has added "divers other opinions that I have reade of the report of a certaine and honourable auncient perion, to which as me seemeth for the grountle and experience credit is to be given. And that is the homorable Erle of Ormanda ". Introducing the report of Henry IV's last words to his son (p. 13), he says, "I remember also to have braid of the credible report of my mide Lorde and Mr the Earle of Ormord The account of Herry V a youthful excesses (p. 17) he says he trained of the crederics before rehearted." The story about the Criestines (p. 30) he had "hearde of the totore credible reportes." He narrans what happened at Signer and a landing (p. 64). "as I have beard the tolore rehemod the Honnicable Earle of Ormonde saye that he heards of cresible reporte." He rells of the distribution of the besty at Caes (p. 92), as I have heard of the report of the rofore named Earle of Ormand. Similarly, concerning typicers herrer and Barbagan, he tells what he had "heard" from the earl of Ormonde

There can be no doubt that all these references have to do with one and the same earl, and around unconstructing them with no preconceived up more about their contents would naturally suppose the earl mentioned to be the one his rig when these passages were period. That is to say the literature of informant was not the long-dead fourth earl James, but the living strength earl. I homas. I homas was James's courgest son the enrichment runery years old, and he died in the rear year. He had been a Lancas run in the Wars of the Roses, though he made his peace with Ecward. V. Under the Tush is he rose to high favour, and on Hersey Val. 's accession became Lord Chamberlain to Queen Catherine. G. E. United by 142 of These a nothing whatever in the "First Lift." or his career to forbid the identification of him with the source of the Ormande.

It may be urged also that and it been the fourth earl who supplied the biographics with information, one would have looked for something different from what actually appears. Earl James took part in the Agricourt transpage of int Life, p. avail, yet from the earl of Ormonde the author of atories.

the "First Life" seems to have learned nothing about it. He was, too, at the stege of Rosen, but the one Ormande story concerning it is false, for Vincent herrer never went there. On the stage hand, the "Translatoris" informant had something to rell of the stege of Caeri, at which the fourth earl seems not to have been present. And regarding the story about Barbazan, the biographer says that he had "often" heard the earl "reporte" it "by the opinion of the Frenchmen as he teatred in the time of his solourne amongest them." James Butler, a contemporary of everything, ecounted in the story, would not have depended for his knowledge of the facts "on the opinion of the Frenchmen", her thus have been well known in English military circles. There, however they may well have faded from memory by the time that I homas Butler went to France to escape the worst consequences of his attainder.

If the seventh earl was the source of the Ormande stories they of course lack some of the authority they would have possessed had they come directly from the fourth earl. Thomas Burlet was not both antil Henry V was dead. Still, his reminiscences stretched back a long way from 1514, and his taiher had not died till he was nearly thirty years old. We may well helieve that many of the thirtys which he told the "Translator" had been told to him by the fourth earl, Henry V is contemporary. In any case it is probable that the stories we have been uncuming were current by the middle of the fifteenth century.

There remains the question whether the author of the "First Life" had the Ormonde "reports" in writing. In the Proem, as we have seen, he refers to "opinions that I have reade of the report of the earl of Crmonde. Fisewhere, however, he never speaks of "reading" anformation derived from Ormonde, but only of hearing or learning it, he even says (p. 13) that he remembered hearing what Ormonde told of Herry IV's last words. The Rev. h. W. Weaver, who at my request most kindle collated the printed version with the Bodley MS, found that the word "reade" in the Proem had been correctly transcribed; and since the Proem is missely from the Harley MS, that reading consequently holds the held. Nevertheless, in view of the restriction of the word "hear" in the other references to Ormonde. I strongly suspect that the authorong nally wrote not "reade" but "heard." It seems clear, at all events, that most of Ormonde's information came to the "Translator" by word of mouth.

Had I foreseen the early death of Mr Kingsford, I would have published this appendix elsewhere some time ago, and I deeply regret that, owing to a series of mischances, I was prevented from facturing my intention of discussing with him the points I have raised.—w. v. w.]

LIST OF PRINTED BOOKS TO WHICH REFERENCE IS MADE

Abrate, A. Social Life in the Fifteenth Century. London, 1909.

—— English Life and Manners in the Later Middle Ages. London, 1913. Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. Mémoires. Paris, 1844, &c. Académie Impériale de Reims. Travaux. Rheimi, 1870, &c.

Academy, The. London, 1869, &c.

Acta Sanctorum. Ed. J Bollandus, &c Antwerp, Brussels, Paris, 1643-1887

Acts of he Parnaments of Scotland, 12 vols. London, 1844, &c.

Acts of the Privy Council of England. New Series. London, 1890, &c.

Adams, W. H. D. Memorable Battles in English History 2 vols. London, 1879.

Battle Stories from British and European History. London, 1883.

Adelme, J. Rouen au xvie siecle d'après le 115 de Jacques le Lieur. Rouen, 1891.

- Les Quais de Rouen autrefois et aujourd hui. Rouen, 1880.

Adler, M. The History of the Domus Conversorum from 1290 to 1891. (Jewah. Historical Society.) London, 1899.

Aegidius Romanas (Gilles de Colonna, 1247-1316). Libellus de Re Militeri Veterum. In S. F. Hahn, Collectio Monumentorum veterum et recentium meditorum, vol. 1. Brunswick, 1724.

- De Regimme Principum lib. iii. Rome, 1607.

Aeness Sylvius Piccolomani (Pius II, 1405-1464). Opera. Basle, 1551.

- Historia Bohemica. Helmstadt, 1699.

Commentant Resum Memorabiaum quae Temponibus suis contigerunt.
 Frankfurt, 1614.

Oranones politicae et ecclesiasticae 3 vois. Lucca, 1755-9.

 Amores Eurali et Lucretiae. In S. F. Hahn, Collectio Monumentorum, vol. 1. Branswick, 1724.

Affré, H. Archives Communales Ville de Rodez, Rodez, 1877.

— Inventure sommaire des Archives départementales; Aveyron, a vols. Pans, 1866-7

Affry de la Monnoye, A. d' Les Jetons de l'Échevinage de Paris. Paris, 1878. Ainger, A. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols. London, 1905.

Arry, O. Text-book of English History 2 vols. London, 1893-4.

Alart, B. Inventage sommaire des Archives du Département de Pyrénées-Orientales, 2 vols. Paris, 1868, 1877

Albert Petit, A. Histoire de Normandie. Paris, 1911

A.bizzi, Rina do degli (1370-1452). Commissioni di par il Comune di Fitenze (1399-1432). Ed. G. Guasti. 3 vols. Florence, 1867.

Alcock, D. Crushed yet Conquering. A story of Constance and Bohemia. London, 1891

Allen, L. History of Portsmouth. London, 1817.

Allen, T. (1803-1833). History and Antiquities of London, Westminster, Southwark, and Parts adjacent 5 vols London, 1827-37.

Allgemeine deutsche Biographie. 56 vols. Leipzig, 1875, &c.

Allies, M. A. Three Catholic Reformers of he 15th Century. London, 1878
Alparul M de (d. 1440) Chronica Activatorum temporibus Domini Benedicti XIII. Ed. F. Ehrle. Paderborn, 1906.

Witn

Altmann, W. Die Urkunden Kaiser Sigmunds (1410-1437). In J. F. Böhmer, Regesta Imperil 2 vols. Innabruck, 1896-7.

Ametilier y Vinyas, J. Alfonio V de Aragon en Italia y la Cruia religiona del Sigle

xv. 2 vols. Gerons, 1903, 1904.

Amot, G. Inventure analytique des Archives de la Ville de Cherbourg. Cherbourg, 1300.

Amundesham, J. (c. 1450). Annales Monasterif S. Albani. Ed. H. T. Riley.

RS. 2 vols. London, 1870-1.

Amyot, I' Pranscript of two Kolls containing an inventory of 1 ffects formerly belonging to Sir John Fastolfe. In Archaeologia, vol. 221. London, 1827. Ancestor, The. 12 vols. London, 1902-5.

Ancient Correspondence of the Chancery and Euchequer preserved in the Public Record Office, List of London, 1901

Ancient Deeds in the Public Record Office, Catalogue of 1 vols. London, 1890-

Andeli, H. d' (c. 1250). Œuvres. Ed. A. Héron. Paris, 1881

- Le Las d'Aristote, Ed. A. Heron, Rouen, 1901.

Anderson, H. C. In Sweden. London, 1852.

Anderson, J. (1662-1728). Selectus Diplomatum et Numismatum Scouz-Thesturus. Edenburgh, 1739.

Andrews, J. P. History of Great British 1 vols. London, 1794.

Andrieu, J. Histoire de l'Agenasa, 2 voli. Agen, 1892

Androuet du Cerceau, J. (d. 1592). Les plus excellents Bastiments de France. 2 vols. Paris, 1 576, 1579.

Anglia. Zeutschinft für Englische Philologie. Halle, 1877, &c.

Angua Sacra, H. Whatton, a vols, London, 1691.

Anglure, O (c. 1400) Le Samt Voyage de Jerusalem. Ed. F. Bonnardet and A. Longnou. Soc. des Anciens Textes Français. Paris, 1878.

[Anjou Lett] Letters of Queen Margaret of Anjou and others. Ed. C. Munro. Camden Soc. London, 1863.

[Ann] Annales Ricards II et Heartei IV (1392-1406). Ed. H. T. Riley R.S. London, 1866

Annales Bourbonness Moufins, 1887 &c.

Annales du Mid. Revue archéologique, historique et phi ologique de la France méndionale. Toulouse, Paris, 1889, éc.

Anquetil, L. P (1723-1808) Histoire de France, 2 vols. Paris, 1837.

Anie me, de la Vierge Marie (Pierre de Guibours, 862 (-1694). Histoire généalogique et chronologique de la maison royale de France, 9 vols. Paris, 1726-41

Anson, W. R. The Law and Custom of the Constitution. 3 vols. London, 1909. Ansta, J (1669-1744). Register of the Order of the Garter, a vola, London,

 Observations Introductory to an Hastorical Essay upon the Knighthood of the Bath London, 1715

Antiquarian Repertory Ed. F. Grose and F. Astle. 4 vols. London, 1807-9.

Antiquary, The. London, 1880, &c. Antonio, N (16:7-1684). Bibliotheca Hispana Vetus. 2 vols. Madrid, 1788.

Appleyard, E.S. Welsh Sketches, 3 vois. London, 1852-3

Arbois de Jubanville, H. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales Aube. 3 vols. Troyes, 1864, &c.

- Répertoire archéologique du Département de l'Aube. Paris, 1861.

Arbon de Jubanyille, H. Histoire des Duca et des Comtes de Champagne, 7 vols. Paris, 1859-69.

Archaeologia; or, Muscellaneous Tracts relating to Antiquity 39 vols. London, 1770, &c.

Archaeologia Cambrensis. London, 1846. &c. Archaeologia Cantiana. London, 18 (8, &c.

Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland. Proceedings. London, 1846, &c.

Archaeological Journal London, 1844, &c.

Archives historiques, artistiques, et littéraires. 2 vols Paris, 1889-91.

Archon, L. (1645-1717). Histoire de la Chapello des Rois de France. a vols. Paris, 1704-11.

Arderne, [(b. 1307, d. after 1377). Treatises of Fatula in Ano, Harmorrhoids, and Clysters. Ed. D'Arcy Power. E.E.T.S. London, 1910.

Ardouin-Dumazel, V. C. Voyage en France. 20 vols. Paris, 1893-1903

Arenija, P. (b. 1349, d after 1415). Chronicle (extracts from) Ed ff Denife. In Archiv für Latteratur und Kirchengeschichte des Mitte-alters, von in Berlin, 1887

Arctinus (or Leonardo Bruni) (1369-1444). Rerum suo tempore gestarum com-mentarius. In Muratori, vol. 212. - Ep stolarum Libri octo. Ed. J. R. Fabricius. Hamburg, 1724

Argentzé, B. (1519-1590). Histoire de Bretagne. Paris, 1618.

Arnold's History Readers, 7 books, London, 1894.

Arnold Foster, H. O. A History of England. London, 1903.

Arms, Jean d' (fl. 1394). Metoane. Ed. C. Brunet. Pans, 1854. English version. Ed. A. K. Donald, E.E.T.S. London, 1899.

[Arundel MSS] Catalogue of Manuscripts in the British Muleum. New Series, vol. 1, part 1 the Arundel Manuscripts. London, 1834.

Aschbach, J. (b. 1801). Geschichte Kaiser Sigmunds. 4 vols. Hamburg, 1818-45. Ashbee, C. R. Survey of London London, 1900, Sec.

Ashdown, Mrs C. H. British Costume during Nineteen Centuries. London, 19 0.

Ashmole, E (1617-1692) The Institution, Laws and Ceremonies of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. Loadon, 1672

- History of the Order of the Garter. London, 1715 Assier, A. Une Cité Champenoîse au xr* siècle. Paris, 1875

Assmann, W. Geschichte des Mittelalters. 4 vols. Brunswick, 1875-1906. Astesan, A. (1412-after 1466). De Varieure Fonunze. In Muratori, vol ziv.

Athenacum, The. London, 1828, &c.

Atkinson, T. D. Cambridge described and illustrated. London, 1897.

Atkyns, Robt. (1646-1711). The Ancient and Present State of Gustershire. London, 17:2.

Aubert, F. Le Parlement de Paris († 114-1422): son Organisation. Paris, 1887. - Le Parlement de Paris: sa Compétence et ses Attributions. Paris, 1890.

- Histoire du Parlement de Paris de l'origine à François I z vols. Paris, Aubrey, J. (1616-1697). The Natural History and Antiquities of the County of Surrey. 5 vois. London 1719.

- Topographical collections for Willishire (1659-1670). Ed. J. E. Jackson. 1 vol. Devizes, 1862.

Aubrey, W. H. I. The National and Domestic History of England. 4 vols. London, 1878-86.

- The Rise and Growth of the English Nation. 3 wols. London, 1895 Auden, G. A., Historical and Scientific Survey of York and District, York, Aufauvre, A. Troves et ses Environs. Troyes, 1860.

Autauvre, A. and Pichot, C. Les Monuments de beine-et-Marne Paris, 1858. Aumale, H., Duke o. (1822-1897). Notes et Documents relatifs à Jean ros de France et sa captivité. Paris, 1824.

Aungier, G. J. Chroniques de Londres. Camden Society. London, 1844.

Aussy, D. de. La Saintonge pendant la Guerre de Cent Ans (1372-1453). La

Rochelle, 1894

Registres de l'échevinage de St Jean d'Angély. Paris, 1895-1902

Averbury, Robert of (4 after 1350) Do Gestis Mirabilibus Regu Edwards Terni. Ed E. M. Thompson. R.S. London, 1889.

Awans, R. d', and Lameere, E. Histoire de Belgique. Brussels, 1890.

Axon, W. E. A. Lancashire Gleanings. Manchester, 1863

Ayroles, J. B. G. La vraie Jeanne d'Arc. 5 vols. Paris, 1890-1902.

Azurara, G. E. (c. 1400-after 1472). Chronicle of the Discovery and Conquest of Guinea, Fr. C. R. Beasley and E. Prestage, Hakluyt Society. 2 vols. London, 1896-9.

Bibeau, A. Le Louvre et son Histoire. Paris, 1805 Biedeker, K. Le Centre de la France. Leipzig, 1889.

Biena, J. A. (d. atter 1449), El Cancionero del Ed. F. Mickel. 1 vols. Lesprig. r 860

Bieske, W.: Oldcastle-Falstaff in der englischen Litteratur his zu Shakespeare. In Palästra, vol i. Berlin, 1905.

Baildon, W. P. A. Wardrobe Account of 16-17 Richard II. In Archaeologia, vol. Ind. Oxford, 1911.

- Select Cases in Chancery (1364-1471). Selden Society. London, 1896.

- The Site of Lincoln's Inn London, 1902 - The Court of the Star Chamber. London, 1894.

- Three Inventories. In Archaeologia, vol. xi. London, 1908.

Bailtache,] La Monnaie de St Lô. In Revue Numsmatique, ser iv, vol 12viu. Pars, 1924.

Bailly, A. (d. 1851). Histoire Financière de la France. 2 vols. Paris, 1840.

Bunes, E. H story of the County of Lancaster. London, 1868.

Baker, G (1782-1851), History of Northamptonshire. 2 vols. London, 1822-41

Baker, G. ic, de Swynebroke (c. 1350). Chronicon. Ed. E. M. Thompson. Oxford, 1889.

Baker, Ser R. (1968-1649) A Chronick of the Kings of England London, Balawin, J. F. The Schage and Knight Service in England. Chicago, 1807. Antiquines of the King's Council. In English Historical Review, vol. xxi.

London, 1906.

 The King's Council in England during the Middle Ages. Oxford, 1913. Bele, J. (1495-1563). Index Britann se Ser. ptorum. In Ariecdota Oxonienia. Ed. R. L. Poole, Oxford, 1902.

-- Select Works of Parker Society. Cambridge, 1849.

- Brefe Chronycle of Sir Johan Oldcastle. In Harleian Miscellany, vol. ii.

Ballin, A. G. Renseignements sur le Château de Rouen. In Précis Analogique des Travaux de l'Académie royale de Rouen (anno 1841) Rouen, 1842.

Baluze, E. (1630-1718) Histoire Généalogique de la Mason d'Auvergne

2 vols. Paris, 1708.

Banks, T. C. Dormant and Extinct Baronage. 4 vols. London, 1807.

Bapst, C. G. Testament du roi Jean le Bon et Inventatie de ses Joyans à Londres.

Paris, 1884.
Barante, A. G. P. (1782-1866). Histoire des Ducs de Bourgogne, 10 vols. Brussels, 1835 Ed L. P Gachard 3 vols. Brussels, 1838

Barbazan, E. (1696-1770). Fabliaux et Contes des Poètes Français des xiº xiº nècles. Ed. M. Méon. 4 vols. Pans, 1808.

Barbot, A. 1 (66-1625). Histoire de la Rochelle. In Société des Archives Historiques de la Saintonge et de l'Aunis, vol. xiv. Paris, 1886.

Baring-Gould, S. Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. London, 1881

- Lives of the Suints. 16 vols. London, 1897, 1898.

- Germany. London, 1887.

- In Troubadoux Land. A Ramble in Provence and Languedoc. London, 1861

Barland, H. (or Van Baer and) (1488-c. 1542). Historiae Rerum gestarum a Brabannae Duribus. Brussels, 1665

Barnard, F. P. Companion to English History in the Middle Ages. Oxford, 1902. New edition, entitled "Mediaval England" Ed. H. W. C. Davis Oxford, 1924

Barnes, R. Liber Pontificalis of Edmund Lacy Bishop of Exeter Exeter, 7847. Barreau, Abbé Guide du Voyageur dans la Ville de Bourges Bourges, 186 ... Barrett, W. History of Bristol. Bristol, 1789

Barrière Flavy, C. Conser du Pays de Foir à la Fin du xive nècle. Toulouse,

- Cintegabelle au xvt siècle. Toulouse, 1888.

Barrington, D. (1727-1800). Observations on the Practice of Atchery in England. In Archaeologia, vol. viii. London, 1785.

Barron, O. Fatteenth Century Costume. In The Ancestor, vol. ix. Westminster. 1004

Barthéiemy, A. Essa, sur la Monnaie Pansis. In Mém. Soc de l'Hist de Pans, vol. ff. Paris, 1876.

Barthélemy, C. Histour de la Bretagne ancienne et moderne. Tours, 1863. Bascle de Lagreze, G. La Navarre Française. 2 vols. Paris, 1881, 1882. Basin, T. (1412-1491) Histoire des règnes de Chirles VII et de Louis XI Ed. J. J. Quicherat. Soc. de l'Hist. de France. 4 vols. Paris, 1855.

Basier Chronixen Fd A. Bernoulli, 5 vols. Leipzig, 1872-95. Basseun, Olivier, Vaux de Vire de. Ed. L. du Bois. Caen, 1821

Bastard, A. de. Librarie de Jean de France Duc de Berry. Paris, 1832. Bates, C. J. Border Holds of Northumberland. Newtastle upon-Tyne 1891.

- History of Northumberland London, 1895

Bateson, M. Catalogue of the Library of Svon Monastery. Isleworth. Cambridge, 1808.

Records of the Borough of Lettester 2 rob. London, 1800, 1901

- Cambridge Gdd Records. Cambridge, 1903.

- The English and Lann Versions of a Peterborough Court Leet, 1461. In English Historical Review, vol. xix. London, 1904.

- Borough Customs, Selden Society, 2 vols. London, 1904-6.

Bauffol, L. Le Nom de la Famille Juvénal des Ursins. In Bibl. Éc Chartes, vol. 1. Paris, 1889.

- L'Origine Italienne des Juvénal des Ursins. In Bibl. Ec Chartes, vol. liv.

Paras, 1893

Faras, 1804. Prévêt des Marchandes de la Ville de Pans (1360-1436).

Le Châtelet de Paris. In Revue Historique, vols. In. Inn. Paris, 1896.

Bandot, J. Les Princesses Volande et les Ducs de Bax de la Famille des Valois

Paris, 1900

Bandot de Judey, N. (1678-1759). Histoire de Charles VII. 2 vois. Paris, Histoire de Catherine de France, Reîne d'Angleterre, Pana, 1696.

Baumgarten, P. M. Untersuchungen und Urkunden über die Camera Collegii Cardinalium für die Zeit von 1295 bis 1437. Leipzig, 1898.

Baurein J (1713-1790). Variétes Bourde oises ou Essai historique et critique sur la l'opographie ancienne et moderne du Diocèse de Bordesux. 4 vols. Bordesux, 1876

Bauzon, L. L'Art Flamand en Bourgogne au ziv* siècle. In L'Art, vol. xxxvii. Paris, 1884

Batter, D. Syon Abbey Chudleigh, 1906.

- England's Cardinals. London, 1903.

Baye, N de (c. 1364-1419). Journal. Ed. A. Tuetey. Soc. de l'Hist. de France. 2 vols. Pans, 1885-8.

Bayle, A. Vie de Saint Vincent Ferner. Paris, 1845.

Bayley, J. History and Antiquities of the Tower of London, 1830.
Bayly, J. A. Sparvel. Some Historica, Notes on Dartford and its Neighbourhood.
Dartford, 1876.

Beamont, W. Annals of the Lords of Warrington. Chetham Society. Manchester, 1872.

- Warrington Church Notes. Warrington, 1878.

Bearne, L. Pictures of the old French Court. London, 1900.

Beaucourt, G du Fresne de Histoire de Charles VII 6 vols Paris,

-- Le Caractère de Charles VII. In Revue des Questions historiques, vol. ix. Paris, 1870.

---- Les Chamer Recherches sur Gullaume, Alain et Jean Chamier. In Mém. Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol xiviù. Cien, 870.

 Le Meurtre de Montereau In Revue des Questions historiques, vol. v. Paris, 1868

— Discours prononcé dans l'Assemblée générale de la Société de l'Histoire de Normandie, Dec. 20, 1883. In Balletin de la Société, 1880-1883. Rouen, 1884.

Beaufils. C Étude sur la Vie et les Poésses de Charles d'Orléans Coutances, 1861

Beautepaire, C. M. de Robillard de Inventaire sommaire des Archives communaies de la ville de Rouen. Vol. i. Délabérations, Registres, &c. Rouen, 1887.

Notes historiques et archéologiques concernant le Département de la Seme Inférieure et spécialement la ville de Rouen, q vols. Rouen, 1883, 1888, 1892.

---- Nouveaux Mélanges historiques et archéologiques Rotten, 1-904

Besurepaire, C. M. de Robillard de. De l'Administration de la Normandie sous la Dominadon anglaïse, 1424, 1425, 1429. In Mém. Soc. des Andquaires de la Normandie, vol. xxiv. Paris, 1859.

- Les États de Normandie sous la Domination anglaise. Évreux, 1859.

- De la Vicomte de l'Eau de Rouen et ses Contumes au xi.iº et xivé stècles... Pans, 1856.

Accord entre les Capitaines des Parties de Bourgogne et d'Oriéans (1418).
 In Bibl. Éc Chartes, vol xxxvi. Paris, 1865.

 Notes sur les Juges et les Assesseurs du Procès de Condamnation de Jeanne d'Arc. Rouen, 1890

Beaurepaire, E de Robillard de Caen Illustré. Son Histoire, ses Monuments. Caen, 1896.

---- Paunoch présentés au Puy de Rouen. Recueil de Pierre Vidoue (1515). Rouen, 1897

- Entrée de Charles VIII à Rouen en 1485 Rouen, 1902.

---- Emrée de François I dans la Ville de Rouen (1517). Rouen, 1867.

Les Vitraux peints de la Cathédrale de Bourges. Caen, 1898 Beauville, V. Histoire de la Ville de Monididier. 3 vols. Paris, 1875

Recueilde Documents médits concernant la Picardie 5 vols. Paris, t 866-82. Beaven, A. B. The Aldermen of the City of London 2 vols. London, 1908, 1913. Beaziey, C. R. Prince Henry the Navignor New York, 1895.

- The Dawn of Modern Geography 3 vols. London, 1897-1906.

Bec, Chroniques du. Ed A. A. Porée. Rouen, 1883

Beccana, G. Spigolature sulla vita privata d. Re Martinoin Sicilia. Palermo, 1894. Bectet, Thomas, Materials for the History of. Ed. J. C. Robertson and J. B. Sheppard, R.S. 7 vols. London, 1875-85.

Bedford, W. K. R. Blazon of Episcopacy Oxford, 1897.

Bedford, W. K. R and Hotbeche, R. The Order of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem. London, 1902

Bedier, J. Les Fabliaux. Paris, 1899.

Beka, J. de, and Heda, W. Historia veterum Episcoporum Ultrajectina Sedis. Utrecht, 1642

Beke, M. Histoire de la ville de Bapaume Arras, 1865

Bekynton, Thos. (c. 1440). Official Correspondence. Ed G Williams. R.S. 2 vols. London, 1872

Belfort, A and Mirot, L. Archives de la Masson Dieu de Châteaudun. Paris, 1881.

[Bell, Chaucer.] Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Ed R. Bell. 4 vols. London, 1889-92.

Bell, N. The Royal Manor of Richmond. London, 1907.

Beil, R. Early Badads Illustrative of History, Traditions and Customs. London, 1864.

Bellecombe, A. de Mémoire pour servir à l'Histoire de l'Agenais. Auch, 1899. Be leforest, F. (1530-1583). Histoire des neuf roys Charles de France. Paris,

- Les Chromques et Annales de France. Paris, 1573.

La Cosmographie Universelle de tout le Mende. 2 vols. Pans, 1575

Belleval, R. de (b. 1837). Agmeourt. Para, 1865.

La Journée de Mons en Vimeu et le Ponthieu après le Traité de Troyes. Paris, 1861

- Lenres sur le Ponthieu. Paris, 1868.

Belleval, R. de (b. 1837). La Grande Guerre, fragmenti d'une Histoire de France am xive et xre siecles. Paris, 1862.

Belloc, J. H. P. Paris, London, 1900. - The Eye Waness. London, 1908

Beltz, C. F (d. 1841). Memorials of the Order of the Garter. London, 1841 Benham, W. Old St Paul's. London, 1902

- Winchester, In Dioceian Histories, London, 1884.

The Tower of London, London, 1906

Benham, W and Welch, C. H. Mediaeval London, 1901

Benham, J. (1708-1794). History and Antiquities of the Conventual and Cathedral Church of Ely, with Continuation by W. Stevenson. 2 vols. Norwick, 1812, 1817.

Béroud, | B. Historie des Ducs de Bourbon. 2 vols. Paris, 1815.

Berauk Bereasten A. H. (1713-1794). Historic del Eglise. 24 vols. Maestricht.

Berger, W. Johannes Hus und König Sigmund. Augsburg, 1871.

Bermondsey, Annales Monasterii de. Ed. H. R. Luted. R.S. London,

Bernard, M (1820-1882) The Growth of Laws and Usages of War. Oxford Essays. London, 856

Bernard, P (1640-1720). Annales de Calais. St Omer, 1715.

Bernather Prix, J. (1769-1845). Noti e d'an Manuscrit de la Bibliothèque publique de Grenoble contenant diverses Poésies d'Antoine d'Astesan. In Magann Engresopedique, année vas, vol. 1. Paris, 1802

Berry. See Bourier

Berry, H. F. Statutes and Ordinances and Acts of the Parliament of Ireland, John to Henry V. Dublin, 1907

Berthier, G. F. (1704-1782). Histoire de l'Église Gallicane. Brussels, 1825, &c. Berthoud, F (1749-1807) Histoire de la Mesure du temps par les Horloges. a vols. Paris, 1862

Berty, A. (1111-1867) Topographie historique du vieur Paris. Région du Louvre, 3 vols. Paris, 1866-8. Beryn, The Tale of, Ed. F. J. Furnivall. Chancer Society, London, 1870. Besint, W. Westminster, London, 1895.

- The History of London London, 1891

- Survey of London, to vols London, 1902, &c.

Besant, W and Mitton, G E. Holbert and Bloom bury. Lendon, 1903.

Bess, B. Die Verhandlungen zu Pernienan und die Schweht bei Agineaum. In Historisches Jahrbuch, vol. zw.i. Munich, 1901

- Das Bundnes von Canterbury (Matteilungen Ing. Österr Geschichtsforschung, vol xx i Vienna, 1901)

Bethe acoust, J. (1360-1422). Le Canarien. Ed. G. Gravier Rogen, 1874. Beugnot, A. A. (1797-1864). Les O m ou Registres des arrêts rendus par la Cour du Roi (1254-1318). Collection de Documents médits 4 vois Paris, 1819-48.

Béziers, M. (1721-1782). Mémoires pour servir à l'État historique et géographaque du Diocese de Bayerix. 3 vols. Rouen, 1894-6.

Historie sommaire de la ville de Bayeux. Cien, 1773

Bibliothera Topograyhica Britannica. 10 vols. London, 1780-94.

Bigot, L. (1826-1872). Jehan le Coupeur ou le siège de Sossons en 1414. Soissons, 1877

Binder, G. Dieheilige Birgitta von Schweden und ihr Klosterorden. Manich, 1891. Bonds, J. F. (1572-1644). History of the Civil Warres of England. London, 1641

Birch, G. H. London on Thames in Byegone Days. London, 1903. Birch, W. de G. Early Drawings and Illuminations. London, 1879.

- Scals, London, 1907.

Bissey, Abbé. Genealogie des Pot. In Mémoires de la Soc d'Histoire, d'Archéologie, et de Littersture de l'Arrondisse ment de Beaune, 1878 q. Beaune, 1879. Black Book of the Admiralty Ed. T Twiss, R.S. 3 vols, London, 1871 -6. Black, R. History of France related for the rising Generation. A translation of Gurzot. 3 vols. London, 1872-1.

Black, W. H. (1808-1872). Catalogue of the Ashmolean Manuscripts. Oxford,

- Catalogue of the Arundel Manuscrapts in the Library of the Coilege of Arms. London, 1829.

Blackie, C. M. Reginald Pecock. In Eng. Hat. Rev. vol. 22vi. London, 1911 Blackstone, W. Commentaries on the Laws of England 4 vols. Oxford, 1768-9. Blades, W. The Lafe and Typography of William Caxton 2 vots. London, Blakeway J B. The Sheriffs of Shropshire Shrewsbury, 1831 Bane, C and Mantz, P Histoire des Peintres de toutes les Écoles. École Florentine. Paris, 1876.

Blancard, G. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales: Bouches-du-Rhône Pans, 1865

Biancas, G. (d. 1590). Ad Regum Aragonum veterumque Comitum depictas Effigica in regia Caesaraugustanerisi deputationia Aula positas Inscriptiones. Saragousa, 1587

- Aragonensium Remm Commentarii. Saragossa, 1588.

Blanchard, R. Letties et Mandements de Jean V Duc de Bretagne. In Archives de Bretagne, 5 vols. Nantes, 1889.

- St Vincent Ferrier, Durée de son Apostolat en Bretagne. In Revue de Bretigne et de Vendee, vol. 2221. St Briege, 1887.

Bled, C. Registres des Évêques de Thérouanne, 2 vols. St Omer, 1904-7 Blomefield, F. An Essay towards a Topographical History of the County of Norfolk, 71 vols. London, 1805-10.

Blondel, R (c 1390-c 1461). Œuvres. Ed A Héron 2 vols. Rouen, 1801. - Reductio Normann e. In Narratives of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy, Ed J. Stevenson, R.S. London, 1863

Bloom, H. English Scale. London, 1905

Blore, E. Monumental Remains. London, 1726.

Blount, T. (1618-1679). Law Dictionary. London, 1717.

Boase, C. W. Register of the Rectors and Fellows of Factor College, Oxford. 2 vols. Oxford, 1879-94

Bodin, J. F. (1776-1829). Recherches historiques sur la vide de Saumar. 2 vois. Saumur, 1845-6.

Recherches historiques sur la ville d'Angers, Saumur, 1846. - Recherches historiques sur l'Anjou. 2 vols. Angers, 1847.

Bofarull y Mascaro, P de Los Condes de Barcelona vindicados y Cronologia y Generlogu de los Reges de España - 2 vols. Barcelona, 1836 Generacion de Juan I de Aragon. In Memorias de la Real Academia de Buenas Letras de Barcelona, vol. vi. Barcelona, 1898.

Boileau, E (c. 1257) Livre des Meuers. Ed G. P. Dophing. Coll. de Documents inédits. Paris, 1837. Ed. R. Lespinasse and F. Bonnardot. In Histoire Générale de Paris. Paris, 1879.

Bonal, A. (1548-1628). Comté et Comtes de Rodez, Rodez, 1889.

Bonaparte, L. N. (1808-1873). Étude sur le Passé et l'Avenir de l'Ardillette 6 vols. Paris, 1846-71.

Bond, F. Westminster Abbey. London, 1909.

- Visitors' Guide to Westminster Abbey. London, 1909.

Bond J J Handy Book of Rules and Tables. London, 1875. [Bons] Les Livres et Comptes des Frères Bonis, Marchands (1345-1368). ld E Forestie. 2 rols. Pars, 1890-4

Bonnardot, A. Les Rues et Églises de Paris vers 1500. Paris, 1876.

 — Dissertațions archeologiquei sur iesanciennesenceintes de Paris. Paris, 1852. --- Études archéologiques sur les anciennes Plans de Paris des xvi, xvii et xviii necles. Paris, 1851

- I conographie de vieux Pirii - In Revue Universelle dei Arts. Brussels, i 856. Bonnechose, F. P. (b. 1801). Les Réformateurs svant la Réforme, 2 vois. Parit-1844

Bouney, H. R. (1780-1862). Historic Notices of Fotheringhay. Quadle, 1821.

Book of the Army Pagezet. London, 1910.

Bordeaux J. H. R. and others. La Normandie Pustree. 2 vols. Nantes, 1852. Bordier, H. R. and Charton, E. Histoize de France. 2 vols. Paris, 1859, 1860. Borély, A. E. Histoire de la Ville du Havre. 3 vols. Le Havre, 1880-1

Bott elli de Serres, L. L. Recherches sur divers Services Publics du gisté au Evire siècle y vols. Paris, 1895-1909.

Borsa, M. Pier Candido Decembri e l'Umaneumo in Lombardia. In Archivio Storico Lombardo, ser a , vol. x, anno xx. M.lan, 1893.

- Correspondence of Humphrey Duke of Gloucener and Pier Candido Decembri. In Eng. Hist, Rev. vol. ziz. London, 1904.

Bonard, E. Gilles de Rais Pans, 1886.

Joseph J. (1789-1876) Compendious Anglo-Saxon and English dictionary. Landon, 1848

- Anglo-Saxon dictionary . enlarged by T. N. Toller. Oxford, 1882-98. Bouchard or Bouchard), A. Les Grandes Chroniques de Breta gre. Ed. H. de Meignen Nantes, 1886

Boucke, H. (1598-1671) La Chorographie ou Description de Provence. 2 vols. A124 | 16644

Bonchet, J. (2476-1550). Les Annaies d'Aquitaine. Postiers, 1644.

- Le Par égyrique du Seigneur Loys de la Trimoille. La Parithéon Libéraire. Paris, 18 36.

Bouchot, H. La Franche Comté. Paris, 1890.

- La Famille d'Autrefois. Paris, 1887. - Les Primuss français. Pans, 1904.

- Le Portrait de Louis II d'Anjon Roi de Sicile. In Gazette Archéologique, année n. Paris, 1886.

Boudet, M. Registres Consulures de St Flour (1376–1405). Paris, 1898. Bondet, M. and Grand, R. Frude himonque sur les Épidémics de Pete en Haute. Auvergae. Paris, 1-902 Boullians, Livre de Archives municipales de Bordenux, vol. j. Bordenux, 1867. Boolay, C. F. on (or Buneus). Hatura Universitatis Parinensis. 6 vots. Paris, 1665471.

Boulé, A. Le Chevalier Helyon, sire de Jacquevale. Fontamebleau, 1803.

- Jean sans Peur et Jeanne D'Arc 2 vols. Paris, 1900.

Boullé, J. Recherches historiques sur la Marson de Saint Lazare à Paris. In Mém. Soc. de l'Hist de Paris, vol. 16. Paris, 1877 Boulliot, J. B. J. Biographie Ardennaise. 2 vols. Paris, 1830.

Bouquet, F. Jeanne D'Arc au Château de Rouen. In Revue de Normandie, vols. v. vi Rouen, 186c-6.

 Notice historique et archéologique sur le Donjon du Chîteau de Philippe Auguste beit 1 Rouen en 1205 Rouen, 1877 Documents concernant l'Histoire de Neufchâtel-en-Bray. a vols. Rouen, 1884-5.

Bouquet, Th. Alain Blanchart. In Revue des Sociétés savantes, vol. v. Paris, 1868. Bourassé, J. J. Les Cathédrales de France. Tours, 1845.

Bourde des, Pierre de, lord of Brantôme Les sept discours touchant les galantes. Ed. H Boachot. 3 vols. Paris, 1882.

- Œuvres completes, Ed. J. A. C. Bouchon, 2 vols. Paris, 1838. Bourdigné,] (d. 1547). Chroniques d'Anjou. 2 vols. Angeri, 1842

Bourgeo's de Paris, Journa, d'un Ed. A Tuerey Paris, 1881 Also in Nouvelle Collection (Michaed and Poljoulat), ser 1, vol. 11

Bourget, J. (1*24-1776) History of the Royal Abbey of Bec. London, 1779. Re-translated into French by V. E. Pillet, In Mem. Soc. dei Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. 211 Caen, 1841

Bournon, F. Paris, Histoire, Monuments, Administration, Paris, 1888.

--- Histoire de la Ville et du Canton de St Denss. Paris, 1892.

- L'Hôtel Royal de St Pol. In Mem. Soc. de l'Hist, de Paris, vol. vi. Paris, 1879.

- La Bastille Paris, 1893

Bourquelot, F (1814-1868). Histoire de Provins 2 vols. Provins, 1819-40. Notice sur le Manuscrit intitulé Cartulaire de la Ville de Provins. In Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. xvii. Paris, 1856.

Bourncaud, A. Marennes et son Arrondissement Marennes, 1866 Boutall, C (1$12-1877). Monumental Brasses. London, 1849

Boutane, E institutions Minimires de la France avant les Armées permanentes. Paris, 1863.

Boutot, Th. (1816-1875). Histoire de la Ville de Troyes et la Champagne méridionale. 5 rols. Troyes, 1870-80.

- Documents inédits tirés des Anchives de Troyes, 3 vols. Troyes, 1878 - Louis Jouvenel des Umins, Chevalier, Baille de Proves. Troyes, 1804.

- Rapport sur les Archives municipales de la Ville de Troyes, Troyes, 1858. Bouvier, G les Le (or Berry) (1486-c 1457) Histoire Chronologique de roy Charles VII In Godefroy, Charles VI, and Charles VII

Armona de France, Angleterre et autres Poissances. Ed. Valletde Vietville-Paris, 1866

 Le Recouvrement de Normandie. In Narranves of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy. Ed J. Stevenson. R.S. London, 1863.

Le Livre de la Description des Pays. Ed. E. T. Hamy. Paris, 1908. Bowen, T. An Histor cal Account of the Origin, Progress and present State of Bethlem Hospital. London, 1781

- Extracts from the Records and Court Books of Bindewell Hospital London, 1798

Bower, W. See Scotichronicon.

Boyle, R., Earl of Ossory (1621-1769) Six Plays. London, 1690.

Boys, W. (1735-1803). Collections for an History of Sandwich in Kent. Canterbury, 1792.

Boysset, B , 1349-after 1415). Chronik. In Archev für Litteratur und Kirchengeschichte der Mittelasters, vol. vn. Freiburg-im Breisgan, 1803.

Bozon N. d after 1320). Contes Moralisés. Ed. L. T. Smith and P. Meyer. Soc des Anciens Textes français. Paris, 1880.

Brahner, J. H. F. The Comprehensive Gazetteer of England and Walet. 6 volt. London, 1894, &c.

Brachet, A. Pathologie mentale des Rois de France Louis XI et ses aicendants Paris, 1901

Brackenbury, H. Ancient Cannon in Europe. Woolwich, 1864-6.

Biacton, Henricus de De legabus et consuerudint bus Angliae Libri qui nque Ed. T. Twist. R S. 6 vols. London, 1878.

Bradley, A. G. Owen Glyndwr, London, 1901.

-- The Battle of Shrewsbury In Macmillan's Magazine London, July, tgoj.

- The Romance of Northumberland, London, 1908, Bradley, E. T. Annals of Westminster Abbey. London, 1895.

- Popular Guide to Westminster Abbey. London, 1885. Bradley, J. W. Di tionary of Miniaturists, Illuminators, Calligraphers and Copyists. 3 vols. London, 1887

Bradley, M. C. and E. T. The Deanery Guide to Westminster Abbay London, toot.

Beampton, T (c. 1414) Paraphrase of the Seven Penstential Pialton, Ed. W. H Black Percy Society. London, 1884

Brandenburg, E. König Sigmand and Kurfarst Friedrich I von Brandenburg. Bertin, 1891.

Brands, J. (or Brando) (1360-1428). Chronique (1384-1414). Ed. Kereya de Lettenhove. In Chroniques relatives à l'histoire de la Belgique sous la domination des Dues de Bourgogne. 2 vols. Brussels, 1870, &c.

Brants, V. Pail ppe de Maizieres et son Projet de Banque Popula re. Louvain, Bras, C. de Bourqueville de (1504–1593). Les Recherches et Antiquités de la Province de Neustrie. Caen, 1588.

Braun G and Hogenberg, F. Civitates orbis Terrarum. 6 vois. Cologae, 1373, 1618.

 Thelitre des principales Villes de tout l'Univers 2 vols. Cologne, 1574: 1575 Bravley, E. W. and Betton, J. History of the Ancient Palace and late Houses of Parliament at Westminster. London, 1836.

- Beauties of England and Wales, 19 vols. London, 1801-18. Brésto, C. Le Compte du Clos des Galees de Rossen (1383-1384). In Soc. de l'Hist de Normandie, Mélanges, vol. 11. Rouen, 1893.

- Les Archives de 🛦 Ville de Hoofleur. Paris, 1885 Bree, J. The Cursory Sketch of the State of this Kingdom during the fourteenth.

century London, 1791 Bréqu gay, L. G. O. F. (1712 1794). Rôles Normands et Français et autres Proces tirées des Archives de Londres. In Mem. Soc. des Antiquaires de la Normandae, vol. axt. t. Caen, 1858.

Brett, E. J. A pictorial and descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour London, 1894

Bridges, (1666-1714) History of Northamptonshire 2 vols. Oxford, 1791. Bridgest, T. E. History of the Holy Eucharist in Great Britain. 2 vols. London, 1881

Brie, F. W. D. Geschichte und Quellen der Mittelenglischen Prosachronik, "The Brut of England" or "The Chronicles of England " Marburg, 1905. Brièse, L. Notes pour servir à l'Histoire de l'Hôtel Dieu de Paris. Paris, 1870.

Bught,] F History of England. 5 vols. London, 1887.

[Brioc, Chron] Chronicon Briocense. In G. A. Lobineau, Histoire de Bretagne,

British Archaeological Association, Transactions, 2 vols. London, 1844.

Britton, J. (1771-1857). Historical and Descriptive Essays accompanying a series. of Engraved Specimens of the Architectural Antiquities of Normandy London, 1921

History and Antiquities of the See and Cathedral Church of Winchester. London, 1817

— The Beauties of Wiltshire. 3 vols. London, 1801-25.

Britton, J and Brayley, E. W. Memoirs of the Tower of London. London, T 8 30.

Brockhaus, F. A. Konversations-Lexikon, 17 vols. Leipzig, 1892-7

Brodrick, G. C. A History of the University of Oxford. London, 1886. Memorials of Merton Codlege Oxford Historical Society. Oxford, 1885. Brooke, Ra.ph (d. 1625). Catalogue of the Succession of Kings. London, 1619.

Brossard de Ruy lle Histoire de la Ville des Andelis. 2 vols. Les Andelys, 1863, 1864.

Brougham, H. P. England and France under the House of Lancaster. London, Broussillon, Bertrand de La Maison de Laval 4 vols Paris, 1895-1902.

Brown, A. M. The Leader of the Lollards. London, 1848.

Brown, E. Fasticulus Rerum Expetendarum et Fugiendarum. See Graes.

Brown, J. T. Authorsh p of the King's Quair. Glasgow, 1896. Browne, J. Fabric Rolls and Documents of York Minster. York, 1863.

Brace, J. An Outline of the History of the Court of Star Champer. In Archaeologia, vol. 12v. London, 1834.

Bruchet, M. Inventage partiel du Trésor des Chartes de Chambéry à l'Époque d'Amédee VIII. Chambéry, 1900.

Le Château de Ripaille. Paris, 1907

Bruel, A. Pouillés du Diocèses de Clermont et de St Flour du 2118 au 21118 siècies. In Collection de Documents médits, Mélanges Histor ques, vol. 19 Paris, 1882. Brushfield, T. N. The Bishoprick of Exeter, 1419–1420. In Devorshire Association for the Advancement of Science, vol. zvin. Plymouth, 1886.

[Brut.] The Brute or the Chromeles of England. Ed. F. W. D. Brie. E.E.T.S. 2 vols. London, 1906-8

Brutais, J. A. Carrollire de l'Eglise Collégule Saint Seurin de Bordeaux Borderuz, 1897.

Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales: Gironde, Bordesux, Brute, Thorpe, Cobhara, &c., Writings and examinations of, with the Lantern of Light. London, 1891.

Bry, G., ford of la Clergene. Histoire des Pays et Comité du Perebe et Dirché d'Alençon Paris, 1620.

Bucelin, J. (1571–1626). Annales Gallo-Flandriae. Doual, 1624.

Buchanan, G. (1506-1582). Rerum Scottcarum Historia. Edinburgh, 1582 Buck, 5 Antiquities and Venerable Remains of Castles, Monasteries, Palaces, &c. in England and Wales. 3 vols. London, 2764.

Buckler, B. Stemman Chicheleans Oxford, 1765

Buckley, A. B. History of England for Beginners. London, 1892. Bueil, A (c. 1405-1477). Le Jouvencel. 2 vols. Paris, 1887-0.

Busien, A. H. Selections from the Poems of Michael Drayton. Chilworth, Bullet, J. A. (1699-1775) Dissertation sur Melusine. In J. M. C. Leber: Collection des meilleurs dissertations relatifs à l'Histoire de France, vol. zvili Paris, 1830.

Bolletin critique. Paris, 1866, &c.

Bullrich, G. Ueber Charles d'Orléans und die ihm zugeschriebene englische Uebersetzung seiner Gedichte. Berlin, 1895

Butteau, M. I. Monographie de la Cathédrale de Chartres. Soc. Archéologique d'Eure-et-Loir. Chartres, 1892-1901.

Bund, J. W. W. Register of the Diocese of Worcester during the Vacancy of the See. Oxford, 1897

Bunge, F G. Lav- Exh- und Curlandisches Urkundenbuch. 6 vols Reval. 1854, &c

Burchett, J. A Complete History of the most remarkable Transactions at Sea London, 1720.

Burlington Magazine, The. London, 1881, &c.

Burnett, G. The Red Book of Mentenh reviewed. Edinburgh, 1881. Burney, C. A General History of Music. 4 vols. London, 1782-9.

Burrows, M. The Cing Ports. London, 1889.

--- Family of Brocas of Beaurepaire. London, 1886.

Burton, J. (1607-1771) Monasticon Fhoracenie York, 1788
Burton, J. H. The History of Scotland. 8 vols. Edinburgh, 1873.
Burton, T. (d. 1437). Chronica Monastern de Melsa. Ed. F. A. Bond. R.S.
3 vols. London, 1866-8

Bartt, | Contract for building a Hall at Hamsey in Susses in 1311 Archaeological Journal, vol. xxiv. London, 1867

Burwell, J. An Historical Account of the Knights of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. London, 1757.

Butler, Alban (1710-1773) Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs, and other principal Sunts a vols. Dublin, 1833.

Cibinet Historique, Le Paris, 1855, &c.

Cadier, L. Les États de Béarn depuis seur Origine jusqu'au commencement du zvi*siècie, Paris, 1888.

Cagny P (1375-after 1438) Chroniques des Dues d'Alençon. Ed. H. Moran-Vulé, Paris, 2892.

Cahier, C. (1807-1882). Caractéristiques des Saints dans l'Art populaire.
2 vols Paris, 1867

- Nouveaux Mélanges d'Archéologie, d'Histoire et de Littérature sur le Moyen Age. 2 vols. Paris, 1874.

- Le Traité d'Arras de 1414. In Mém de l'Académie d'Arras, vol. x.. Att23, 1000.

Callichotte. Essas sur l'histoire et les antiquatés de la ville et artondissement de Domfront, Domfront, 1827.

Caillet, L. Étude sur les relations de la commune de Lyon avec Charles VII et Louis XI. Lyons, 1909.

Cux de St Aymour, A. X. La Masson de Caix. Pans, 1895.

[Cal. Dipl. Doc] Calendar of D plomatic Documents. In Deputy Keeper's Report, vol. xlv, App. I. London, 1885.

[Cal. Doc. Franc.] Calendar of Documents preserved in France. Ed. J. H. Round, London, 1899.

[Ca]. Dot. Scot.] Calendar of Documents relating to Scotland preserved in the Public Record Office. J Bain. 4 vols. London, 1881-6 [Cal. Pap. Lett.] See Papal Letters

[Ca. Pat.] Calendar of Patent Rolls. Richard II. 6 vols. London, 1895-1909

- Henry IV. 4 vols. Landon, 1903-9. — Henry V. 2 vols. London, 1910, 1911. - Henry VI. 6 vols. London, 1900-11.

[Cal. Rot Hib] Rotulorum Patent, am et Clausorum Cancellariae Hiberniae Calendarium. Dublin, 1828

Calendar of State Papers (Domestic), 1603-1610. London, 1857.

Calliat, V. Eglise St Eustache à Paris. Paris, 1850.

Calmet, A. (1672-1757). Histoire de Lorraine. 6 vols. Nancy, 1745-57.

Calthrop, D C, English Costume, 2 vols. London, 1906.

Cambi, G. Chronicon de rebus gestis Lucensium. In Muratori, vol. avin

Cambridge Antiquarian Society Publications Cambridge, 1846, &c.

Cambridge History of English Literature. Ed A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller 8 vols. Cambridge, 1907-12

Camden, W. Britannia. Ed R Gough. 3 vols. London, 1789.

Campanus (or Campagni), J. A. (d. 1477). De Vita et Gestis Brachii. In Muraton, vol. 11x.

Campbell, Lord J (1781-1861). Lives of the Lord Chancellers, 10 vols. London, 1856.

- Chief Justices of England. 3 vols. London, 1840-57

Carausat, N Promptuarium Sacrarum Antiquatitum Tricasinae dioecesis. Troves, 16to.

Capefigue, J. B. H. R. (1801-1872). Histoire de France an Moyen Age (1223-1485). 4 vols. Paris, 1838. Capes, W. W. The English Church in the 14th and 15th centuries. London, Capgrave, 1 (1393-1464). The Chronicle of England. Ed. F. C. Hingeston. R.S. London, 1858.

- Liber de illustribus Henricis. Ed. F. C. Hingeston. R.S. London, 1858 Carderara y Solano, V Iconografia Española. z vois. Madrid, 1855-64.

Carel, P. Histoire de la Ville de Caea depuis Philippe Auguste jusqu'à Charles IX Paris, 1886.

Carher, C. (1725-1787). Histoire du Duché de Valois. 3 vols. Paris, 1764.

Caro, J. (b. 1836). Das Bundniss von Canterbury. Gotha, 1880.

- Aus der Kanzlei Sigmunds. In Archiv für Oesterr, Geschichte, vol. lix. Vienna, 1879.

Carpentier, J. de. Histoire de Cambray et du Cambrésia. 2 vols. Leyden, Carr, W. University College. London, 1902.

Google

Carriet, J. C. Wycliffe and the Lollards. Edinburgh, 1908
Carrigin W. The History and Antiquities of the Diocese of Ostory 4 vols Dubba, 1905.

Carro, A. Hutoire de Menuz. Menuz and Paris, 1865.

Carse, Thos. (1686-1754). A General History of England. 4 vols. London, Caulogues des Rolles Gascons, Normans et François. 2 vols. London, 1743

Cirtelkeri, O. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Herzoge von Burgund. In Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Heidelberg, 1912. Carter, A. T. A History of English Legal Institutions. London, 1902.

Carter J. Specimens of the Ancient Sculpture and Painting now remaining in this kingdom. 2 vols. London, 1780-94.

Carrefort, W. har of The Pageants of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warmel. Roxburgha Club. Oxford, 1908

Cassell, J. Blustrated History of England. 10 vols. London, 1873. Castellane, Marquis de. Voyage au Purgatoire de St Patrice. In Mém. de la Soc. Archéologique du Midi de la France, vols. i, ii. Toulouse, 1834.

Cat, E. Les Grandes Découverres maritimes du troisième au se zième siècle. Paris, 1882

Citalogue of Additional manuscripts in the British Museum London, 1864, &c. Catalogue of the Harieran manuscripts in the British Museum. 4 vols. London, Catalogue of the Lansdowne manuscripts in the British Museum, 2 parts. London, 1812-19.

Catalogue of the manuscripts in the Cottonian Library deposited in the Braish Maseum, London, 1802 Catholic Encyclopædia. 17 vols. New York, 1907, &c.

Catholicon Anglicum, Ed. S. J. H. Herrtage, E E.T.S. London, 1881

Caumons, A. (1801-1873). Journal de l'Expédition de Heavy V en Normandie. en 1417 et 1418. In Mém de la Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie. vol. zn. Paris, 1841.

Cavanilles, A. Historia de España. 5 vols. Madrid, 1860-3.

Caxton, W (1412-1492). The Cronycles of England. London, 1525

Polychronicon liber ultimus. In Blades, vol. i

- Dialogues, Ed H. Bradley, E.E.T.S. London, 1900.

- Book of the Favra of Arms and of Chyvalerie, translated from Chostine de Pisan. Westminster, 1489

- The Curial. See Chartier, A.

Cennini, C (b. c. 1350). Le livre de l'Art. Tr V. Mottez. Paris, 1911. Cent Ballades, Livre dei. Ed. A. Le Queux de St Hilaire. Paris, 1868.

Cerí, C. Histoire et Description de Notre Dame de Reims, 2 vols. Rheims, Pierre Cauchon de Sommièvre. In Travaux de l'Academie Nationale de Reims, vol. či. Rheims, 1898

Chabeuf, H. Jean de la Huerta, Antoine de Moiturier, et le Fombeau de Jean sans Peur. In Mein, de l'Acad des Sciences, Arts et Belles-Lettres de Dijon, ser, iv vol. ii. Dijon, 1891

- Dijon. Monuments et Souvenirs. Dijon, 1894

..... Dipon à travers les Ages Dijon, 1897

Chalcondylas, Lucascus (c. 1450). De origine et rebus gesus Turcorum. Paris, Chaimel, J. L. Histoire de Toumine. 4 vols Pans, 1828 Chaivet, P. V. Poéstes de Charles d'Orleans. Grenoble. 803. Chambers, E. K. The Mediaeval Stage 2 vols. Oxford, 1903 Champeaus, A. Le Meuble. 1 vols. Paris, 1885. - Hotoire de la Peinture décorative. Paris, 1 $90. -- Les relations du Duc de Berry avec l'Art Italien. Ja Gazette des Beaux Arts, vol. xxxviii. Paris, 1808. Champeaux, A. and Gruchery, P. Les l'ravaux de l'Art exécutés pour Jean de France Duc de Berry. Paris, 1894. Champion, P. Guilaume de Flavy, Capitaine de Compiègne. Pans, 1906. - Chronique Martiniane. Parii, 1907 - Vie de Charles Duc d'Orléans (1394-1465). Paris, 1918 —— Document inéait sur l'Insurrection parisienne de 1413. In Balletin Soc. de l'Hist, de Paris, année xxxvii Paris, 1010. - Le Prisonnier desconforté du Château de Lockes. Paris, 1909 Champodion Figure, A. Lettres de Rois, Remes et autres Personnages des Cours de France et d'Angleterre. 3 vols. Pars, 1839-47 - Louis et Charles, ducs d'Orléans. Paris, 1844 Les Poesies du duc Charles d'Orléans. Paris, 1842. Chantelior E. B. History and Amaquines of Richmond, Kew, Petersham and Ham. Richmond, 1894. - Haterical Richmond, London, 1865. Chandles, H. W. Five Court Rolls of Great Cressingham London, 1885 ----- A Catalogue of Editions of Aristotle's N comachean Fibres and of world allustrative of them printed in the 15th century. Oxford, 1868. Chapmin, M. D. Atravers l'Histoire dominicaine ancienne et contemporaine Paris, 1901 - Études historiques sur la Province dominicaine de France. Pana, 1890. Chappel, W. (1809-1888) Old English Popular Munc. Ed. H. E. Wood-bridge. 2 vols. London, 1893. Charavay, E. Jean d'Orléans, Couse d'Angoulème. Paris, 1876. Charles, R. L'Invasion anglaix dans le Maine de 1417 à 1426. Mamers, 1889. Charma, A. (1801-1809 Partie des Dons aits par Henri V, Roi d'Angleterre appopulaise for rendu maître de la Normandie. In Mêm Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. 1311. Czen, 1858 Charmettes, P. A. Lebrun de. Histoire de Jeanne d'Arc. 4 vols. Pans, 1817. Charnock, History of Marine Architecture. 4 vols. London, 1800, 1802. Charrier, G. Les Juredes de la Ville de Bergerae (1352-1652) 12 vois Bergerac, 1892-1901 Chartier, Alam (c. 1585 1429). Œuvrei. Ed A Ducheme, Piris, 1607. - The Carial Translated by Wrn. Caxton. E.E.T S. London, 1888. Chartier, J. (c. 1400). Chronique de Charles VII In D. Godefroy : Histoire de Charles VII Paris, 1001 — Chronique de Charles VII. Ed. Vallet de Viriville. 3 vois. Paris, 1850 Charton E. F., Voyageurs anciens et modernes. 4 vols. Paris, 1854-6.

Chastellain, G (c. 1405-1475) Envies. Ed. Kervin de Letterhove. B vois, Brussels, 1863, &c.

Christellux, H. P. C. Historie généalogique de la Marson de Chastellux. Auxerre, 1869

WILL

Chatel, E. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales: Calvados. Paris. 1867, &c.

Chaucer, Geoffrey, Poetical Works of Fd R Bell. 4 vois. London, 1889-92.

— Complete Works of Ed. W. W. Skeat. 6 vols. Oxford, 1894.

Chaulise, Guy de (c. 1290-1368). La grande Chirurgie. Ed. E. Niense. Paris, 1890.

Chaumeau, J. Histoise de Berry. Lyons, 1566.

Chauncy, H. Historical Antiquities of Hertfordshire. London, 1700.

Chetta, J. Recueil des antiquitez et pravaèges de la Valle de Bourges et de plusieurs autres villes capitales du Royaume. Paris, 1621

- Archiepiscoporum et Episcoporum Gallian chronologica Historia Paris,

1611

Chéraei, P. A. Histoire de Rouen pendant de l'Époque communale de 1150 à 1382, 2 vois, Rouen, 1843, 1844.

Historie de Rouen sous la Domination Anglaise. 2 parts. Rouen, 1840.
 Dir ionnaire Historique des Institutions, Manurs, et Coutumes de la France.
 2 vois. Paris, 1899.

- Histoire du Moyen Age. Pans, s.a. Cheshire Sheaf, The. Chester, 1880, &c.

Chevalier, A. L'Hôtel Dieu de Paris, et les Sœurs Augustines: Paris, 1901. Chevalier C U. J. Répentoire des Sources historiques du Moyen Age. Topo-Bibliographie. 2 vols. Monthéliard, 1894-1903.

Bio-Bibliographic. 2 vols. Paris, 1905-7.

Chifflet J. J. Anastana Childerica I. Francorum regis sive Thesaurus Sepulchralia Fornaci Nerviorum. Antwerp, 1655

Child, F. J. The English and Scottish Popular Ballads 5 vols. Boston, 1882-98.

Chorsy, F. T. H storre de Charles VI, roi de France. Paris, 1695.

Chorier, N. Histoire Généalogique de la Maison de Sassenage. Grenoble, 1609.

— Histoire générale de Dauphiné. 2 vols. Valence, 1809, 1878.

Chrétien, H. Le prétendu Complot des Juisset Lépreux en 1327. Chatenuroux 1867.

Christine de Pisas (1164-c. 1430). Livre des fairts du sage Roi Charles V. In Michard et Poujoulat, Nouv. Coll. vols. 1 and ii — Œuvres pottiques. Ed. M. Roy. Soc des Anciens Textes Français. 2 vols Paris, 1886, 1891.

- Le Dr de Pousy In Bibl. Ec Chartes, vol xvvi Paris, 1456.

[Chron. Giles.] Interti Scriptoris Chronicon. Ed. J. A. Giles. London, 1848 [Chron. Lond.] A. Chronicie of London, 1189–1483. Ed. N. H. Nicons. London, 1827

[Chron R II-H VI] A chronicle of the reigns of Richard II, Henry IV Henry V, and Henry VI(1377-1461). Ed.]. S. Davies. Camden Soc. 1856. [Chron. Ser.] See Dugdale, W.

Chronique rouennaise. Printed with Cochon, g.w.

Chronographia Regum Francorum, 1279-1405. Ed. H. Moranvillé. Soc. de l'Hist de France. 3 vols. Paris, 1891-7.

Church, A. J. Henry V. London, 1889 Church Quarterly Review. London, 1875, &c.

Cibrario, L. Storia e descrizione della R. Badia d'Altacomba. Turin, 1845.

— Crinclogia dei Principi di Savova recificata. In Accad. delle Scienze d.

Torino, seri iz, vol. 2.

Circourt, A. de Combat naval devant La Rochelle en 1410. In Bull de la Soc. des Archives Historiques de la Saintonge et de l'Aunis, vol u. Paris and Saintes, 1886.

Clamageran, J. J. Histoire de l'Impôt en France y vols. Paris, 1867-76.

Clark, A. Lincoln College, London, 1898.

- Great Waltham Five Centuries Ago. In Essex Review, vol. 2011. Colchester,

-Serfdom on an Essex Manor (1308-1378). In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. 2x. London, 1909.

Clark, G. T. Genealogies of Morgan and Glamorgan. London, 1886. - Mediaeval M.litary Architecture in England. 2 vols. London, 1884.

Clark, J. W. Libraries in the Mediaeval and Renaissance Period. Cambridge,

The Care of Books. Cambridge, 1902.

Clarke, C. W. B. The true Hutory of St George the Martyr. Cape Town, 1900.

Clarke, J. Military Institutions of Vegetius. London, 1767.

Clay, R. M. The Mediaeval Hospitals of England. London, 1909. Clemanges, Nicolas (1360-c. 1435). Opera omnia. Leyden, 1613.

Clerc, F. Essa sur l'Histoire de la Franche Comté. 2 vols. Besançon, 1870. Cleveland, Duchess of The Battle Abbey Rolls. 3 vols. London, 1889.

Cièves, P. de (1459-1527). Instruction de toutes manières de guerroyer. Paris, rggB, Clarch, G. Bloomsbury and St Giles, Past and Present, London, 1890.

- Engush Costume. London, 1909.

Clouet, L. Histoire de Verdun et du Pays Verdunois. 3 vols. Verdun, 1867–70. Clowes, W. L. The Royal Navy A History from the earliest times to the present 6 vols. London, 1897-1901

Clutterbuck, R. History of the County of Hertford. 3 vols. London, 1815-27.

Cobbett, R S. Memorials of Twickenham. London, 1872.

Cochery, A. Dictionnaire des Postes de la République Française. Paris, 1881 Cochet, J. B. D. Les Églises de l'Arrond.ssement du Havre. 2 vols. Ingouville, ---- Calture de la Vigne en Normandie. In Revue de Rouen. Rouen, 1844. - Répertoire archéologique du departement de la Seine-Interieure. Paris, Cochiceus for Dobnect), J. (1479-1552) Historia Hussitarum Mainz, 1540. Cochon Pierre (c. 1390-c. 1456). Chron que Normande. Ed. Ch. de Robillard. de Beaurepa en Soc de l'hist normande Rouen, 1870

Cockayne, A. E. Cockayne Memoranda 2 vols Congleton, 1869, 1875.

Cockie, M. J. D. Bibliography of English Military Books up till 1642. London, 1900.

Cohausen, A von Die Befeitigungsweisen der Vorzuit und des Mittelaiters. Ed. M. Jahns. With an atlas. Wiesbaden, 1898

Core, J. The Debate between the Heralds of England and France. London, 1550.

Core, J. History and Antiqu ties of Higham Ferrers. Wellingborough, 1838.

Collas, E. Valentine de Milan, Duchesse d'Orléans. Paris, 1911

Conertanea Topographica et Genealogica. Ed. F. Madden, J. G. Nichols and others. 8 vols. London, 1834-43

Collection of Remarkable Events relative to the City of New Sarum, from 1356 m 1789 Salishury, 1817.

Collier, Jeremy (1650-1716). Ecclementical History of Great Britain. 9 vols. London, 1851

Collins, A. (1681-1760). The Peerage of Eagland. 9 vols. London, 1779.

Collins, J. C. Jonathan Swift. London, 1893.

Collinson, J. (1757-1793). History and Antiquities of the County of Somenet. 1 vols. Bath, 1791.

Colonna, G Rei de. See Aegidius Romanas.

Comba, E. Histoire de Vaudon. London, 1901.

Combrouse, G 11 to8-1873). Catalogue ranonné des Monnues Nationales de France. 1 vob. Paris, 1819-44.

Comines, P. (1445-1509) Mémoires, Ed. L. M. E. Dupont. j. vols. Paris, 1840-7

Ed. B. le Mandret. 2 vols. Paris, 1901.

Contaté des Travaux historiques et des Sociétés savantes. Bulletin. Pans, #$83, &c. Comparer, C. É udes hotoriques et Documents inédita sur l'Albigeon, le Carris, et l'ancies Diocèse de Lavaur. A.b., 1841 [Conc.] Concilia Magnae Britanniae et Hiberniae. Ed. D. William. 4 vols. London, 1737.

Commission, I (d. 1625). Journal of the Siege of Rouen, 1591. In Camden Miscellany, vol. 1. London, 1847.

Continuation of the Croyland Chronicie. In T. Gale, Rerum Anglicatum Scriptores, vol. 1

Conybeare. See Page, J.

Cook, T A The Story of Roven. London, 1899.

Cookry, Noble Boke off (c. 1467). Ed R Napier Landon, 1812.

Cooper, C. P. Report on Foeders. Appendices. 7 parts. London, 1864.

Cooper, W. D. Sussex Men at Agineour. In Sussex Archaeologica. Collections, vol. xv Lewes, 1864.

- The Families of Chesworth and Hoo. Ibid. vol. via. London, 1856.

Copinger, W. A. Heraidry amplified. Manchester, 1910.

Coqualle, G. de [1(2)=1001). Histoire du Pays et Daché de Nivernou. Paris, Cordeliers, Chronique des (1400-1412). In Monstrelet, ed. Douët d'Arrq, rol. vi.

Corrard de Breban, A. Les Rues de Troyes, Troyes, 1857

Corroget, G. Les divers Propos mémorables des nobles et l'Instres Hommes de la Chrestienté. Pani, 1557.

Cosneau, E. Le Connémbie de Richemont. Paris, 1386.

Les Grands Traites de la Guerre de Cent Ans. Pans, 1889. Cota de Beaurega d. H. J. Mémoires historiques sur la Mapon Royale de Savoie vol ived, by C. A. Costa de Beauregard), 4 vols, Turm, 1816, 1886. Costa de Beautegard, L. Souvenirs du Régne d'Amedée VIII, premier Duc de Savore. Chambery, 1849. Cotgrave, R. A dictionarie of the French and English tongues. London, 1611. Octhi, Lewis Givn Poetical Works Commodorion Society Ox ord, $117 Cotman, S. Engravings of Sepalchral Brasses in Nortolk and Suffork 2 vols London, 1818.

Cotman, J. S. and Turner, D. Architectural Antiquities of Normandy a volu-London, 1822

Cotton, H. Fasti Ecclesia Hiberniae. 4 vols. Dublin, 1851. Cotton, Sir R. B. Abridgement of Records. London, 1657.

Cotton, W. An Elizabethan Guild of the City of Exeter. Exeter, 1871.

Cotton, W. and Dallas, J. Notes and Gleanings 5 vois. Exeter, 1888-92

Cotton MS. Galha B 1. 8ee Gilaodts van Severen

Coudert, C. Livre de la Chasse, par Gaston Phébus Comte de Foix Réproducnon de 87 miniatures. Paris, 1000.

Albert de Portraits d'après les Collections du Département des Manuscrits Paris, 1909.

Courtaion-Delaistre, J. C. Topographie historique de la Ville et de Diocèse de Troyes, 3 vols. Troyes, 1783-4.
Conneault, H., Un Archiviste des Comtes de Foix au xvº siècle. In Annales du Mid Toujouse, 1894.

- Gaston IV, Comte de Foix (1423-1472) Toulouse, 1895.

 Les Archives d'Aragon et Navarre au xve siècle. In Revue des Bibliothèques, vol. . Paris, 1891.

Courtenay, T. P. Commentaries on the Historical Plays of Shakespeare. 2 vois-London, 1840.

Courté pée, C. Description historique et topographique du Duché de Bourgogne. 7 vois. Dijon, 1774-85

Consinot, Guillauras (d. after 1442). Les Gestes des nobles Françoys. In Chronique de la Pucelle. Ed. Vallet de Viriville. Paris, 1859.

Coussemaker, F. de. Thierry Gherbode, secrétaire et conseiller des Ducs de Bourgogne Philippe le Hardy et Jean sans Peur Lille, 1902.

[Cov Leet] The Coventry Leet Book. Ed. M. D. Harris. E.E.T.S. 4 vols. Lendon, 1907-13.

Covide, A. Les Cabochiens Paris, 1888.

— L'Ordonnance Cabochienne. Paris, 1891.

- Recherches sur la Misère en Normandie. In Annales de la Faculté des Lettres de Caen, année 1. Caen, 1886.

- Les États de Normandie leurs Origines et leur Développement au xivi siècle. Paris, 1894.

- Les premiers Valois et la Guerre de Cent Ans. In Lavisse, Histoire de France, vol iv. Paris, 1902

- Le Véritable Texte de la Justification du Duc de Bourgogne par Jean Petit. In Bibl. Ec Chartes, vol. hun. Paris, 1911.

Cowen, L. The Royal House of Stuart. 2 vols. London, 1908. Cowell, J (1554-1611). Law Dictionary. London, 1727. Cox, G W The Crusades. London, 1894.

Cox. J. C. The Royal Forests of England. London, 1905.

Notes on the Churches of Derhyshire, 4 vols. Chesterfield, 1875-9.

Cox, R. Hibernia Anglicana. 2 vols. London, 1680.

Coxe, H. O (1811-1881) Catalogi Codicum MSS Bibliothecae Bodlejanae 14 vols. Oxford, 1851-1909.

Catalogus Codicum MSS, qui in collegus aulisque Oxoniensibus hodie adservantur 2 parts. Oxford, 1852

Coxe, W. Historical Tour to Monmouthshire. London, 1801.

Coyecque, E. L'Hôtel Dieu de Paris au Moyen Age. 1 vols. Paris, 1889-91. Crark, G. L. and Macfarlane, C. The Pictorial History of England 4 vols London, 1856

Crark, H. The Life of Jonathan Swift. 2 vols. London, 1894.

Creeny, W. F. A Book of Facs miles of Monumental Brasses of the Continent of Europe. Norwich, 1884

Creighton M. Some Literary Correspondence of Humphres, Duke of Gloucester. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. z. London, 1800.

- The Early Renaissance in England. Cambridge, 1895.

- Historical Fisays and Reviews. London, 1902

Crespin, Actes des Martyn. Geneva, 1364

Crevier, J. B. Histoire de l'Université de Paris, 7 vols. Paris, 1761.

Crisp. R. Richmond and its inhabitants from the Olden Time. London, 1866.

Cristofori, F. Storia dei Cardinali. Rome, 1888

Cronin, H S. The Twelve Conclusions of the Lollards. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. axi. London, 1907

Crost twade, J. F. Brief Memoir of Major-General Sir John George Woodford Keswick, 1881

Crowe, E. E. The History of France, 5 vols. London, 1858-68,

Crowe, J. A. (1825-1896) and Cavalcaselle, G. B. History of Painting in Italy. from the Second to the Sixteenth Century. 6 vols. London, 1901.

- The Early Fiernish Painters, London 1872

Crowned King. In Piers Plawman, part m. E E T S. London, 1873

[Croyl. Hist.] Historiae Croylandensis Continuatio. In T. Gale, Rerum Anglickrum Scriptores, vol. 1

Cunsard, C. Étude sur le Commerce et l'Industrie à Orléans avant 1784. In Mém. de la Soc. d'Agriculture, Belles-Lettres, et Art d'Orléans, voi. 1219. Orléans, 1897.

Cunningham, P. Handbook of London Pag and Present. London, 1850.

Curial. See Chartter, A.

Curmer, H. L. See Impatto Christi.

Cussans, J E History of Hertfordshire. 3 vols. London, 1870-3.

- Handbook of Heraldry. London, 1869.

Curt, L. Catalogue il ascrative of Farly English Portraiture-Luin Collection, Burlington Fine Arts Club. London, 1909.

Czephan, R. Die Schiacht bei Crécy. Berlin, 1906.

[D k R or Dep Keepers' Rept] Annual Reports of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. London, 1840, &c.

Dacher, G (d. 1471). Constanzer Chronik, 1464.

D'Achery, J. L (1609-1685). Veterum al quot scriptorum Spicilegium 13 vols, Paris, 1664, &c.

Daire, L. F. Histoire de la Ville d'Amiens. 2 vols. Paris, 1757.

Dale, L. The Principles of English Constitutional History London, 1902.

Dallaway, J. History of West Sussex. 2 vols. London, 1815-30. D'Alton, J. History of the County of Dub.in. Dublin, 1838

 Memours of the Archbishops of Dublin. Dublin, 1838 Daniel, Gabriel H stoire de France. 3 vols. Paris, 1713.

Histoire de la Milice françaire, 2 vols, Paris, 1721.

Daniel, Geo (1616-1637). Poems, J.d. A. B. Grosert, 4 vols. Boston, Lince 1878.

Danvin, B. Vicissitudes, Heur et Malheur du Viell Heidin. Si Pol, 1866. Daris, J. Histoire du Diocèse et de la Principauté de Liège pendant le ny siècle.

Luipe, 1887 Darmewiter, A. M. J. Marguerites du Temps Passé. Paris, 1802. Translated au

"A Mediaeval Garland" by M. Tomlinson. London, 1898.

Darne, Macé. See Joubert. Dart, J. (c. 1723). Westmonasterium. 2 vols. London, s.e.

Dasent, A. I. The Speakers of the House of Commons, London, 1011.

Daumet, G. Calais sous la Domination Anglaise. Paris, 1802

- Etude sur l'Alliance de la France et de la Cast lle au xive et au xve siècles Paris, T 898

Daussy, H. La Ligne de la Somme pendant la Campagne 1870-1871. Paris, : B75

Davenport, C J. The English Regalia. London, 1897 Davey, R B The Pageant of London, London, 1906.

Davies, C. M. History of Holland. 3 vols. London, 1841. Davies, J. S. History of Southampton. Southampton, 1883.

Day es. R. Extracts from the Municipal Records of the city of York London, 1843

Dearmer, P. Highways and Byways in Normandy. London, 1900.

Debate, See Coke.

Découverte des Corps des Ducs de Bourgogne. Philippe le Hard, et Jean 1278 Peur In Mem, de la Compussion des Antiquités du Département de la Côte d'Or, vol. 1. Dijon, 1841

Defeyre, G. Les Ducs de Rourbon. Paris, 1897.

Deguileville (ne Digulleville), G. (b. c. 1295, d. c. 1360). Le Pélermage de l'Ame Ed] | Stürzinger Rorburghe Club. London, 1895.

Dehammes, C. Histoire de l'Art dans la Flandre, l'Artois et le Hamault avant le xresiècle. Lille, 1886, Dehuisnes-Finot, J. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales. Nord. Ser. B 3 vols. Lille, 1865, 1899, 1906 Delachenal, R. Histoire de Charles V 3 vols. Paris, 1909-16.

--- Chroniques des Régnes de Jean II et de Charles V. 2 vols. Paris, Délarbre, A. Notice sur l'ancien Royaume des Auvergnats et sur la Ville de Clermont, Clermont, 1865

Delariic, G. Essa's historiques sur la Ville de Caen et son Artondissement. 2 vols Caen, 1820.

Nouveaux Essais historiques sur la Ville de Caen. 2 vols. Caen, 1842.

Delaunay, D. Etude sur Alam Chartier. Paris, 1876.

Delaville le Roux, J. Registres des Comptes Municipaux de la Ville de Tours. 2 vols. Tours, 1878-81

- La Dom nation Bourguignonne à Touts. In Cabinet Historique, ser. tivol i. Parn, 1877

Delbrück, H. Geschichte der Kriegskunst. Berun, 1900, &c.

Deschaye H. Le Pèlermage de Laurent de Pasztho au Purgatoire de St Patrice. In Analesta Bollandiana, vol. xxvii. Brussels, 1008.

Delisle, L. V. Histoire du Château et des Sires de S. Sauveur-le-Vicomte Valognes, 1867

 Études sur la Condition de la Claise Agricole et de l'Étai de l'Agriculture en Normandie au Moyen Age Paris, 1851

- Mémoires cur les Bailles du Cotentin. Caen, 1857. In Mém. Soc. des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. xix. Caen, 1851.

Les Heures de Jacqueline de Bavière : În Bibl. Ét. Chart vol. xhv. Paris,

- Fragments de l'Histoire de Gonesse. Paris, 1859

 Review of P. Margry · Conquéte des Iles Canaries. In Journal des Savants, Nev 1896.

- Recherches sur la Libraine de Charles V., a vols. Fans, 1907.

Google

Deliste, L. V. Fac-situlé de Livrei copiés et enluminés pour le Roi Charlei V. Paus, 1903.

- Le Cabinet des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale. 4 vols. Paris,

1868-81

Delpia, J. Collection générale des Documents français qui se trouvent en Angleterre Paris, 1847

Demay, G. Inventage des Sceaux de la Collection Chirambauk. In Collection de Documento inadita. A vola, Paris, 1885 6.

- Le Costume au Moyen Age d'après les Scenux. Paris, 1880.

- Le Costume de Guerre et d'Apparat d'après les Scenux du Moyen Age Paris, 1875

Demogeot, J. Histo re de la Lattérature Française. Paris, 1857 Demotier, C. E. Annales de Calais, Calais, 1856

Denille, H. La Désolation des Églises, Monascères, et Hôpitaux en France pendant la guerre de cent ans. 2 vols. in 3. Paris, 1897-9.

Denike, H., and Chatchin, E. Chartularium Universitats Parintensu. 2 vols.

Pans, 1800-1.

- Auctarium Chartularii Universitatis Parisiensis 2 vols. Paris, 1894-7. Denis, F. (1798-1890). Histoire de l'Ornamentation de Manutent. In Immano. Christi, g.s. App.

Denis, VI (1729-1800) Codices Manuscripti Bibliotheone Vindebonenus 1 volt. Vienza, 1701-1802.

Devis, Piramus (12th cent.). La vie seint Edmand le rei- Ed. F. L. Ravenel. Philadelphia, 1906, Dessivre, L. Le Mythe de la Mêre Lusine. In Mêm de la Suc de Statistique des Deux Sevres, ser. 11, vol. 2x. Niort, 1882.

- Notes sur Melusine. In Bulletin de la Soc. des Antiquaires de l'Ouest, ser 11. vol. zx. Poitiem, 1800

Deschamps (or Morel), Eustache (b. c. 1140). Œuvres compiètes. Ed. A. Le. Queux de St H.laire and G. Raynaud, 11 vols. Paris, 1878-1903.

Descalle, F. Box logne en 1411. In Mem de la Soc. Aradémique de l'Arrondassement de Boulogne-sur-Mer, vol. 1x. Boulogne, 1879.

- Inventaire sommaire des Archives de la Ville de Boulogne-sut-Mer Boulogne-sur-Mer, 1884

Desjardins, A. Etats Généraux (1355-1614). Paris, 1871.

Des Meloizes, A. Vittaux peints de la Cathedrale de Bourges. Paris, 1891-7. Destrues, F. Description contenunt toutes les 5 ngularitez des plus celebres Villes et Places remarquables du Royaume de France. Rouen, 1624.

Desselles, L. Histoire du Périgord, 3 vols. Libourne, 1886

Dessalies, L. and Chaballe, P. Mystère de St Crecom et St Cropoman. Paris, 1816. Devienne, C. J. B. d'Agneaux (1748-1792). Histoire de la Ville de Bordeaux Paris, 1862.

- Histoire de l'Église de Bordeaux Ed. V. Lacaze. Bordeaux, 1162

- Histoire d'Artois, 5 vols. (n.l.), 1784 7.

Deville, J. A. (1789-1875). Cartulaire de l'Abbave de la Sainte Trinite du Monde Rouen. Paris, 1840.

 Compres de Duye ses de la Construction du Chateau de Gaillon. Paris. 1850. With Atlas. Paris, 1801

- Revue des Arch tectes de la Cathédrale de Rouen - Robert, 1848

--- Histoire du Château et des Sires de Tancarville. Rouen, 1834.

— Histoire du Château d'Arques, Rouen, †839

Devon, F. Issues of the Exchequer, Henry III to Henry VI. London, 1837.

Devon Notes and Queries. Exercit. 1001

Devonshire Association. Transactions. Plymouth, 1874, &c.

Dewitke, E. S. The Coronation Book of Charles V of France. Henry Bradshaw Society London, 1899. De Witt, H. Les Chronoques de Froissart Paris, 1881.

D.bd.n, T F The Biographical Decameron or Ten Days Pleasant Discourse upon Illuminated Manuscripts. 3 vols. London #817.

Tour in France and Germany, 3 vols. London, 1821

Dick, W. R. A Short Sketch of the Beauchamp Tower. London, 1850 Inscriptions and Devices in the Beauchamp Tower. London, 1853.

[Dict Nat Biog.] Dictionary of National Biography. London, 1885, &c. Didron, A. N. Vandalisme dans les Travaux d'Art. In Annaies Archéologiques, vol. vu Paris, 1847.

Dieudonné, A. La Monnaie Royale depuis la réforme de Charles V , usqu'à la restauration par Charles VII Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vols Izzu, Izzu. Pans. 1Q11 11

Dieve (or Divaeus), P. van (1535-1581). Rerum Brabarticarum Libri 112 Antwerp, 1610.

Opera Varia. Louvain, 1757

Dillon, H. A. Calais and the Pale. In Archaeologia, vol. liii London, 1892. - The Besague or Motor. In Archaeological Journal, vot. xiv London, 1907

Dillon, H. A. and Hope W. H. St. ohn. Inventory of the Goods belonging to Thomas Duke of Gloucester. London, 1897.

Dinaux, A. M. (1793-1864). Trouvères, Jongleors, et Ménestrels du Nord de la France et du Midi de la Belgique. 3 vols. Paris, 1837-43.

Diss, W. (d. 1405). Carmen de Schismate Ecclesiae. In Clemanges, Opera. Dixon, W. H. (1821-1879). Her Majesty's Tower Ed. W. J. Loftie. 2 vols. London, 1901.

Diugosz, J. (1415-148a) Historia Polonica libriui, avols. Leipzig, 1711-12. Dobeneck, F. L. P. Des deutschen Mittealten Volksglauben und i leroensagen. Berlin, 1815.

Dobie, R. History of the United Parishes of St Gales'-in-the-Fields and St George's, Bloomsbury. London, 1814.

Dodu, G. La Folie de Charles VI. In Rev. Historique, vol. cl. Paris, 1925. Dogatoni (or Doleonus), G N (1558-1625) Del Theatro Universale de' Prencipi et di tutte 'Historie del Mondo. 2 vols. Venice, 1606.

Dognon, P. Les Armagnaes et les Bourguignons en Languedoc (1416-1420) In Annales du Midi, vol. 1 Toulouse, 1889

Les Institutions politiques et Administratives du Pays de Languedoc Toulouse, 1895

Quomodo Tres status Linguae Occitante ineunte quinto decimo sacculo inter se convenire assueverint. Toulouse, t 896.

Donal, H. La Basse-Auvergne. Paris, 1900.

Doucet, R. Les Finances Angiaises en France à la Fin de la Guerre de Cent Ans. in Le Moyen Age, ser. 11, vol. 12vii Paris, 1926

Douët d'Arcq, L. Choix de Pièces Inédits relatives au règne de Charles VI z vola. Soc. de l'Hist de France. Pans, 1863-4.

- Comptes de l'Hôtel des rois de France, aux mivé et nyésiècles. Soc. de l'Hist de France. Paris, 1865.

Douët d'Areq, L. Des brais d'Enterrement dans Paris au xive siècle. In Mem. Soc. de l'Hist de Paris, vol iv Paris, 1878

Comptes de l'Argenterie des Rois de France au xive siècle. Soc de l'Hist.

de France Paris, 1851

--- Documents médits sur l'Assassinat de Louis duc d'Orléans. In Annusire Bulletin de la Soc. de l'Hutoire de France. Paris, 1864 Collection de Scenux. 3 vols. Paris, 1863

Douglas, R. Peerage of Scotland. Edinburgh, 1764.

- Baronage of Scotland. Edinburgh, 1708.

Douglas Book, The. Ed. W. Fraser, 4 vols. Edinburgh, 1885.

Dowden, J. Chartmary of the Abbey of Lindores (1195-1479). Edinburgh, 1903. Doyen, C. L. Histoire de la ville de Beauvais depuis le 14º mècle. 2 vols. Beauvais, 1842.

Doyie, J. E. Official Baronage of England. 3 vols. Lundon, 1886.

Drake, F. History of the city of York, London, 1736, Drayton, M. (1563-1618). The First Part of the true and honourable History of Sir John Oldcastle. In Ancient Bratish Drams, vol. i. London, 1810.

- The Ballad of Agmeourt. In Nicolas, Agmeourt

Dreux du Radier, J. F. Mémoires historiques, crinques et Anecdotes des Remes et Régentes de France. 6 vols. Paris, 1808

Drouys, L. Bordeaux vers 1450. Bordeaux, 1874.

- La Guienne Mintaire. Histoire des villes fortifiées, forteremes et chiteaux pendant la domination Anglaise. 2 vols. Bordeaux, 286 ς.

Druxt, H. A Manual of Costome as illustrated by Monumental Brasies. London, 1 906.

Duarte king of Portugal (1392-1438) O Leal Conselheiro. Ed. J. L. Roquete. Paris, 1842.

Dubl o Review, The London, 1846, &c.

Dublin St. Mary's Abbey, Charmilanes of Ed. J. T. Gibert, R.S. 2 vols. London, 1884.

Du Bois, L. F. Vaux de Vire d'Olivier Basselin. Caen, 1821.

Du Boulay. See Boulay

Du Cange, C du Fresne. Glossatzum ad Scriptores mediae et infimae Latiritatus.
6 vols. Pazis, 1733.

Dutatel, A. C. Anglo-Norman Antiquities considered in a Tour through Part of Normandy London, 1767.

 A Series of about 200 Anglo-Gallie or Norman and Aquitain Coins of the ancient Kings of England. London, 1757

— The H story of the Royal Hospital and Collegiate Church of St Kathazine In J. Nichols, Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, vol. ii.

Duchesne, A. (1584-1640). Histoire d'Angleterre. Paris, 1614

- Les An iquitez et Recherches des Villes, Chasteaux et places plus remarquables de toute la France : 2 parts. Paris, 2609.

- Hotoriae Normarmorum Scriptores antiqui Paris, 1619.

Duchesne, F. Histoire des Chancebers et Gardes des Sceaux. Parts, 680. Duchet, l'it and Giry, A. Carturaire de l'Église de Térouanne. Se Omer, 1887

Duck, A (1580-1649). Vita Henrici Chichele. Oxford, 1617. Translated 18
"Life of Archbishop Chichele." London, 1699.

Gos gle

Duckett, G. F. Charters and Records of Clunic 2 vols. London, 1888.

- Visitations of the order of Clum, London, 1891

Remarks on a Bettle Abbey Roll of the 15th Century from the Collections of William of Worcester In Sussex Archaeological Collections, vol. zxviii London, 1878

Duclaux, Agues M. F. The Fields of France. London, 1903

Dutom, A. La Commune d'Agen. Paris, 1892.

Dufott, V. Le Chancelier Poète. In Le Bibliophile Français, vol. viz. Paris, 874

 Une Famille de Peintres paraiens aux xive et xve siecles. Paris, 1877. Durdue, W. (. 605-1686). A Perfect Copy of all Summons of the Nobility to the great Councils and Parliaments of this Realm. London, 1685

- The Baronage of England 2 vols London, 1675

- Ongmes Juzzdiciales. London, 1671.

Antiquities of Warwickshipe. Ed. W Thomas & vols. London, 1730. - Monassicon Anghosnam Ed. J. Caley, H. Ellis, and B. Bandinel. 6 vols. in 9. London, 1817-30.

Dulaure, J. A. Nouvelle Description des Environs de Paris. Paris, 1786. Descriptions des principaux Lieux de la France. 5 vols. Paris, 1789.

Dulcken, H. W. Illustrated History of England. London, 1888.

Dumas, A. Le Siege de Rouen. In Revue de Rouen, vol. 1

Dumont, E. L'Abbaye de Montre lliers. Havre, 1876.

Dumont J. (1602-1726) Corps L. riversel Diplomatique. 8 vols. (each in two parts). Amsterdam, 1726-41.

Dumontet, J. Foulies des Caves du Palais du Duc Jean de Berry. In Mém du Comité des Travaux historiques et des Sociétés savantes. Paris, 1863.

Duncombe, 3 (1729-1716). History and Antiquities of the three archiepiscopil. hospitals at and near Canterbury. In J. Nichols, Bibl. Top. Brit. vol. 14 Duncumb, J. History of the County of Hereford. 2 vols. London, 1884

Dunon, Registres et Minutes du Comté de Ed L. Merlet. Chartres, 1886 Dupm, L. Ellies (1657-1719). History of the Church 4 vols. London, 1716. Dupleix, Scipion. Histoire Générale de France. 3 vols. Paris, 1634

Duplet-Agier H. Registre Criminel du Châtelet de Paris (1389-1392). Soc des Bibliophiles Français. 2 vols. Paris, 1861-4.

Dupont, E. Ser Regnoult, R.

Dupont, G. Le Cotenun et ses lles 4 vols. Caen, 1870-85

Dupont-Ferrier G. La Date de la Naissance de Jean d'Orléans Comte d'Asgoulenc in Bibl Ec Chartes, vol ly Paris, 1894

- Histoire et signification du mot "aides" dans les institutions financières de le France la Bibl Éc Char es vol lavaix Paris, 1948.

Durand, G. Ville d'Amiens. Inventaire jommaire des Archives communales. Pans, tägt, &c.

Duzanvalle, L. de Essa historique et archéologique sur la Vi le de Port de l'Arche et sar l'Abbaye de notre Dame de Bonport. 2 vols. Rouen, 1856, 1870.

- Essai sur l'histoire de la Côte Sainte-Catherine et des Fortifications de la ville de Rouen. Para, 1857

Dureau de la Maire, A. J. C. A., Méridoire sur la Population de la France au xivé niecle. In Mém de l'Acad, des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, ser. it, vol zw Paris, 1845

Durham, F. H. English History from original Sources (1399-1485). London, 1901.

Duro, C. Fernandez. La Marma de Castisla. Madrid, 1894.

Durrieu, P. Le Nort, le Blason et l'Origine de la Famille de l'Historien Javénal des Urims. In Ann. Bull, de la Soc. de l'Hist, de France, voi zinz. Paris, 1802.

--- Let Très Riches Heures de Jean Duc de Berry Paris, 1904

 Hourst de Turin de Jean de France Duc de Berry. Paris, 1901
 Les Souvenire historiques dans les MSS. à Miniature de la Domination Anglesie en France. Paris, 1905.

- Deux Miniatuzes inédits de Jean Fouquet. Paris, 1902

 Le Maître des Heures de Maréchal de Boucicaut. In Revue de l'Artancien et moderne, vols. xiz, xx. Para, 1906.

Le Boccace de Munich. Munich, 1909.

Durny, V. Histoire de France. 2 vols. Paris, 1860 Dusevel, F. H. G. (1795-1881). Histoire de la Ville d'Armens. 2 vols. Ameris, 1842.

 Égises, Chircust, Beffrois et Hôtels-de-mile de la Picardie. 2 rols. Amiens, 1846.

Duthillneul, H. R. Petites Histoires du Pays de Flandre et d'Arton Douas, 1835

Duthy J. Sketches of Hampshire. Winchester, 1819.

Duvil Pinen, A. Histo re de France sous le Regne de Charles VI. 2 vois. Para, 1842.

Daval Pirea, V. (1767-1842). La Jeunesse de Henry V. In Œuvres complètes, vol. z. Brunch, 1814-5.

Dvofac, M. Die halschungen des Reichstanzlers Kaiper Schlick. In Mitt des Inst für Oesterr, Geschichtsforschung, vol. xxxi. Vienna, 1401.

Dybosa, R. Catoli and Songistrom Richard Hild's MS. F. F. T.S. Loedon, 1901.

Dyrter, Edmund (c. 1382-1448). Chronique des Duci de Brahant. Ed. P. F. X.

Ram. Chilocum de Chroniques Beiges inédites. 1 vols. Braniels, 1844-60.

[E.H.R.] English Historical Review. London, 1886, &c. Earle, J. The Philology of the English Tongue. Oxford, 1892. Early Chancery Proceedings, List of 7 vols. London, 1901, &c.

Earwaker, J. P. East Cheshire Past and Present. 2 vols. London, 1880.

Ebendorfer, T (1187-1464) Chronica Regum Romanerum Ed A F. Pibram. In Mitt des Inst. für Oesterr Geschichtsforschung, Erginzungsbund a. Junshruck, 1890.

— Chronicon Austriacum. In J. Pez, Scriptores Rerum Austriacum, vol. ii

Echard, L. History of England, 3 vols. London, 1718 Ecole Jes Chartes, B bl otheque de l' Paris, 1839, &c

Edinburgh Review, The Edinburgh, 1803, &c.

Edward the Confessor, Lives of Ed H R Luard, RS. London, 1858.

Edwards, H. S. Old and New Paris. 2 vols. London, 1803-4

Ehrle, F. Atte den Acten des Afterconcils von Perpignan. In Archiv für Lecturar und Kir hangeschichte des Mitteatters, vols. v. vis. Freiburg im Brengau, 1880, 1804.

[Ellicon be, H. F.] Accounts of the Executors of Richard (Gravesend) B. bep of London, 1303, and Thomas (Bitton) Bishop of Exeter, 1310. Ed. W. H. Haie and H. T. Ellicombe. Camden Soc. London, 1874.

Eller, I. History of Belvoir Castle. London, 1$41.

Eath, H. See Original Letters.

Einham, Thomas Liber Metricus In Memoria, of Henry V. Ed. C. A. Cole. R.S. London, 1858

Elmham, Thomas Historia Monasterii S. Augustini Cantuariensis Ed. C. Hardwick, R.S. London, 1858

Ermino, P. (d. 1529). De Rebus Gestis Francorum. Basie, 1601.

Emmerig, O The Bataile of Agyacourt. Nurnberg, 1907.

Darnusbrief und Temnsballgeschichte. In Englische Studien, vol. zuzur.
 Leipzig, 1908.

Engebrechtsz, P., Accounts of (1416-1417). Ed J. P. Sisc. In Kronijk van het Historisch Gezelschap te Utrecht, ser. 11, jaargang 8. Utrecht, 1852.

Engelsheim or Engelsom, D (d after 1444). Liber dissensionum archiepiscopi Cotoniensis et tapituli Paderbornensis. In Ergänzungshefte zur Zeitschnift für vaterländische Geschichte und Alterthumskunde, vol. li. Münster, s.e.

Englefield, H. C. A Walk through Southampton. Southampton, 1801.

Englische Studien. Heilbronn and Lespzig, 1877, &c.

English Cootery five hundred years ago (The forme of Cury). Ed. C. Clark, Totham, 1849.

Enlart, C. Monuments religioux dans la Région picarde. Amiens, 1895.

Epistolae Academicie Ozonienses. Ed. H. Anstey. Oxford H.st. Soc. 2 vota. Oxford, 1898

Erredge, J. A. History of Brighthelmston. Brighton, 1862.

Escouchy, Mathieu d' Chronique. Ed G du Fresne de Beaucourt Soc. de l'Hist, de France. 3 vois, Paris, 1863-4.

Esquerrier, A. and Milgevelle (fl. c. 1460) Chroniques Romanes des Comtes de Foix. Foix, 1895.

Essenwein, A. Quellen zur Geschichte der Feuerwaffen. Leipzig. 1872.

Fessex Herald, The. Chelmsford, 1812, &c Essex Review, The. Chelmsford, 1892, &c

Eubel, K. Hierarchia Catholica Medii Ævi. 2 vols. Münster, 1898, 1901, with corrections in Historisches Jahrbuch, vol. 21x, pp. 476 sqq.

 Die Provisiones Prelatorum während des grossen Schismas. In Römische Quarabehrift, vol. vii. Rome, 1893

 Zur Geschichte des grossen abendländischen Schismas. Ibid. vol. vii... Rome, 1894.

Eulogiam Historiarum. Ed. F. S. Haydon. R.S. 3 vols. London, 1858-63. Evans, J. Edmund of Langley and his Tomb. In Archaeologia, vol. klvi. London, 1881

Evans, J. Richmond and its vicinity. Richmond, 1825.

Frans, R H Old Ballads, Historical and Narrative. 4 vols. London, 1810.

Evelye, J. Diary Ed W Bray 4 vols. London, 1850-1

Even, E. van. Louvain dans le Passé et dans le Present. Louvain, 1895.

Ewald, A. C See D.K.R.

Excerpta Historica, Ed. S. Bentley, London, 1833

Exchequer Rolls of Scotland Ed G Barnet. 4 vols. Edinburgh, 1876-80. Exeter city rauniments. In Notes and Gleanings of Devon and Cornwall, vols ii-v, passim. Exeter, 1889-92. Eynès, G. Les Châteaux historiques de la France. 3 vols. Paris, 1877-81. Fabric Rolls of York Minster. Ed. J. Raine. Surtees Soc. Durham, 1859.

Fabritus, J. (1668–1736). Bib.: otheca Latina mediae et infimae aetotis. 6 vois. Padua, 1754

Fabyan, R. (d. 1513). New Chronicies of England and France. London, 1811. Fages, H. Histoire de St. Vincent Ferrier. 2 vols. Paris, 1894. 3 vols. Paris, 1901.

Fages, H. Notes et Documents de l'Histoire de St Vincent Ferrier Louvain, Fagnier, G. Inventurei du Trésor de Notre Dime de Paris. In Revue Archéologique, vol. axon Paris, 1874.

Fragment d'un Répertoire de Jurisprudence parisienne au 200 siècle. In Mem. Soc de l'Hist de Paris, vol. zvii. Paris, 1891.

Faguet, E. Histoire de la Lattérature française jusqu'à la Fin du xve siècle. Paris, 1900.

Fairholt, F. W. Lord Mayor's Pageants. Percy Soc. London, 1843.

Fallue, L. Histoire politique et reagieuse de l'Église métropolitaine et du Diocèse. de Rouen, 4 vols. Rouen, 1850-1 Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth containing the honorable battel of Agincourt-Sha tespeare Quarto Facsimiles, no. 19. London, 1887.

Faragla, N. F. Moria della Regina Giovanna I. d'Angio. Lanciano, 1904. Faria y bousa. M. de (1590-1649). Historia del Reyno de Portugal. Brasseli, 1730 Translated by J Stevens, London, 1698 Ferm, N (1604-1675). Historic de la Ville de Rouen, 2 vols. Rouen, 1738.

--- Le Château Fortifié. Ed. J. Félix. Rouen, 1884 Fasciculi Zizaniorum. Ed. W. W. Shirley. R.S. London, 1858.

Fauquembergue, C. de. Journal, 1417-1435. Ed. A. Tuctey and H. Lacaille. Soc de l'Hist de France, 3 vols. Paris, 1903-15

Feases, H. J. and Micklethwaite, J. L. Westminster Abbey historically described. London, 1899.

Fejer, G. (1766-1851). Codex diplomaticus Hungariae ecclesissicus et civilu-40 rob. Budz, 1829-44.

Félibien, M. (1666-1719). Histoire de la Ville de Paris. 5 vols. Paris, 1725. - Histoire de l'Abbaye royale de St Denys en France. Paris, 1706.

Félice, Ph. de. L'autre Monde. Mythes et Légendes. Le Purgasoite de 5t Patrice. Paris, 1906.

Félix, J. Comptes rendus des Échevins de Rouen. 2 vols. Rouen, 1890.

Fernin, P. de. Memoires, Ed. L. M. E. Dupont, Soc. de l'Hist, de France. Paris, 1847

Feret, P. La Faculté de Théologie de Paris et ses Docteurs les plus célèbres. Moyen Age 4 vols. Paris, 1894-7

Ferrer, V. (1350-1419). Quivres. Ed. H. Fages, Paris, 1909, &c.

Permane, A. de (1786-1836). Builenn universel des Sciences et de l'Industrie Paris, 1#2 1- 10

Fervel, J. N. Histoire de Nice et des Alpes Maritimes. Paris, 1862.

Feudat Aids, Inquisitions and Assessments relating to: 6 vols. London, 1899-

Featillerat, A. Documents relating to the Office of the Revels in the time of Queen El zabeth. Louvair, 1908

Ffoulies, C. Armour and Weapons. Oxford, 1907

Fichot, C. Statistique monumentale du Departement de l'Aube. 3 vols. Troyes. 1884-94

Fifty Earliest English Wills (1387-1439) Fd F J Furnivall E E T'S. London, 1882

Figunière, P. F. de la. Catalogo dos Manuscriptos Portugueses existentes no Museu Britann co. Lasbon, 1853.

Figgis, J. N. John Wyclif. In Typical English Charchmen, vol. ii. S.P.C.K. Loudon, 1909.

Finke, H. Acta Concilis Constanciensis. 4 vols. Münster, 1896-1928.

 Quellen und Forschangen zur Geschichte des Konstanzer Konzils. Padetborn, t 889.

Kleinere Quellenstudier zur Geschichte des Konstanzer Konzik. In Historisches Jahrbuch, vol. vin. Munich, 1889.

Finot, J. La Paix d'Arias, 1414-1415. Nancy, 1906.

Etude historique sur les Rejations Commerciales entre la France et la Flandre au Moyen Age. Paris, 1894.

Relations Commerciales et Maritimes entre la Flandre et l'Espagne au Moyen Age. In Anna.es du Comité flamand de France, voi xxiv. Lille, 1898 Fisher, H. A. L. History of England, 148 (-1547. London, 1906.

Fishwick, H. History of the Parish of St Michael's-on-Wyte. Chetham Society.

N.S vol xxv Manchester, 1891

Flammermont, J. Histoire de Senlis pendant la seconde Partie de la guerre de Cent Ans (1405-1441) In Mém Soc de l'Hist de Paris, vol. v Paris, Flandre, La Revue des Monuments d'Histoire et d'Antiquités. Bruges, 1867, &c.

Flavigny, C. Sainte Brigitte de Suède, sa Vie, ses Revélations et ses Œuvres. Paris, 1892.

Fleming, W. Life of St George the Martyr. London, 1901.

Fietcher, C. R. L. An Introductory History of England from the earliest times to the close of the Middle Ages. London, 1904.

Fietcher, C. R. L. and Kipling, R. A. History of England. Oxford, 1917

Fietcher, C. R. L. and Walker, E. Historical Portraits (1400-1600) Oxford, Fetcher, J. S. Picturesque History of Yorkshire 6 vols. Landon, 1903-4

Fietcher, W. G. D. The Black Friers at Oxford Oxford, 1882

Flete, J. (d. 1468). History of Westminster Abbey. Ed. J. A. Robinson, Cambridge, 1909.

Figury, C. (1640-1725). Histoire Ecclésiastique. 34 vols. Pura, 1722-34. - Histoire du Christianisme, 6 vols. Paris, 1837.

Figury, J. and Vallee, H. Cherbourg et ses Environs. Cherbourg, 1840.

Ploquet, P. A. (1797-1881). Essai Historique sur l'Échiquier de Normandie. Rouen, 1840.

- Histoire du Parlement de Normandie. 7 vols. Rouen, 1840-2.

Flourat, L. Jean Jer Comte de Foix. Paris, 1884.

Foedera, App. See C. P. Cooper

Fonblanque, E. B. de. Annals of the House of Percy. 2 vols. London, 1887. Foppens, J. F. (1689-1761). Bibliotheca Beigica, 2 vols. Brussels, 1719.

[For, Acces P.R.O.] List of Foreign Accounts enrolled on the Great Rolls of the Exchequer, London, 1909.

Porbes Leith, W. The Scots Men at Arms and Life Guards in France (1418-1830). 2 vob. Edinburgh, 1882.

Fordun See Scottchrontcon

Forestié, E. La Variation des Monnaies du Début de la Guerre de Cent Ans. In Builein archéologique et historique de la Sociarchéologique de l'arn-et-Garonne, vol. x. Montauban, 1882

Forme of Cury. See English Cookerv Formeville, H. Nonce sur les francs brements-canopalers de la V lie de Cien. In Mém Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. 31. Caen, 1840.

Digitized by Google

[Forshall-Madden.] The Holy Bible in the earliest English Versions. Ed. J. Forshall and F. Madden. 4 vols. Oxford, 1850.

Forster, J. Sir John Eliot. London, 1864.

Forter, M. Eine nordenglische Caio Version. In Englische Studien, wolseeve Lopeig, 1905

Forsyth, W. History of Trial by Jury London, 1852. Fortescue, Sir John (1394-1476). The Governmence of England. Ed. C.

Plummer. Oxford, 1885 Poztescue, J. W. The History of the British Army. London, 1899, &c. Foshroote, F. D. History of the City of Gloucester. London, 1819.

Foss, F., 1787-1870) Hackington or St Stephen's Canterbury. In Archaeologia. Cantana, vol. 11. London, 1858

- The Judges of England, 4 vols. London, 1848-51,

- Biographia juridica. A bibliographical dictionary of the judges of England. London, 1870

Foster, J. Some Feudal Couts of Arms. Oxford, 1902.

The Baronetage and Knightage of the British Empire. Westminster, 1884 Collectanes Genealogica. London, 1881, &c.

Foucart, Posters et ses Monuments. In Mém de la Soc des Antiquaires de POucst Posticis, 1841

Foucquet, J. (c. 1420-1480). Heures de Maistre Estienne Chevalier. Ed. H. L. Curmer 2 voh. Paris, 1866.

Four Masters, Annals of the kingdom of Ireland by the, Ed. J O'Donovan. 7 vols. Dabka, 1856.

Fournier, M. Les Statuts et Privilèges des Un versités françaises depuis leur Fondation jusqu'en 1789. 3 vols. Paris, 1890.

Fox-Bourne, R. H. Famous London Merchants. London, 1864.

-- English Merchants. London, 1886.

Fone, J. (1517-1587). Acts and Monuments. 3 vols. London, 1641.

France, A. Vie de Jeanne d'Arc. 4 vols. Paris, 1910

Fran, L. Il Purgatorio de S. Patrizio secondo Stefano de Bourbon ed Uberto da Romano. In Giornale Storico della Letteratura Italiana, vol. viu, Turia, Tradizioni Storiche del Purgatorio di San Patriz o. Ibid. vol. zvii. Turin.

Fraysee, C. Le Folk-Lore du Baugeois. Baugé, 1906.

Freeman, E. A. (1823-1892). Historical Essays. 4 vols. London 1878-92.

- Historical Geography of Europe, with Atlas. London, 1901

- The Reign of W lham Rufus. 2 vols. Oxford, 1882.

- Freter, London, 1887.

Fremmulle, | Inventage sommaire des Archives départementales Loire, St Et nac. 1905.

French, G. R. Shakespeareana Genealogica. London, 1869.

Freshield, H. Wills, Lesses, and Memoranda in the Book of Records of the Church of St Christopher-le-Stocks. London, 1895.

Fréville, E. Mémo resurve Commerce manatine de Rouen, 2 vols. Rouen, 185%.

Fréville, V. Les Ducs de Normandie. Limoges, 1876.

Fromentin, C. A. Hesdin. Arras, 1865 Fromenc, B. Die spanische Nation and das Konstanzer Konzii. Müester, 1896. Froude, J. A. History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada. 12 vols. London, 1870-5

Fuller, Thomas History of the Worthies of England. Ed. J. Nichols. 2 vols.

London, 18:1

Ecclesiastical History of Britain. Ed. J. S. Brewer. 6 vols. Oxford, 1845. Fuller Maidand, J. A. English Cazols of the Fifteenth Century. London, 1891. Furnivall, F. J. Captain Cox, his Ballads and Boots. Ballad Society. London, 1871.

Gachard, L. P. Analectes Belges. Brussels, 1830.

Gaguin, R. (1425-1501). De Francomm Gestis Annales. Paris, 1521.

La Mer des Chroniques et Misoir historial de France. Paris, 1527.

— Compendium supra Francorum gestis. Paris, 1497.

Gaidoz-Rolland. See Melusine.

Gaillard, A. Le Conseil de Brabant. Brussels, 1898.

Gallirdet, F and Dumas, A. La Tour de Nesie. In La France Dramatique. Paris, 1847.

Gaimar Geoffrey, Lestorie des Engles, Ed. T. D. Hardy and C. T. Martin, R.S. 2 vols. London, 1888-9.

Gairdner, J The Houses of Lancaster and York London, 1874.

Lellardy and the Reformation in England. 4 vols. London, 1908, &c. Early Chronicless of England. London, 1879.

Gale, T. Rerum Angucarum Scriptores. 3 vols. Oxford, 1684-91.

Galeron, J. F. Histoire et Description de Falaire. Faiane, 1830.

----- Statistique de l'Arrondissement de Falaise, 3 vois. Falaise, 1826-8

Galland, A. (d. c. 1645). Des anciennes Enseignes et Estandarts de France. Paris, 1637.

Gallia Christiana. Ed D. de Ste Murtine &c. 16 vois. Paris, 1715, &c. Gallia Christiana novissima. Ed. J. H. Albanes. Montbéhard, 1899, &c.

Galhard, E. Siège de Rouen en 1418. In Précis analytique de l'Académie de Rouen, 7834

Gallwey, R. P. The Crossbow, its Construction, History and Management London, 1903

Galton, A. Church and State in France London, 1907.

Galvano, A. (1505-1557). The Discoveries of the World. Ed. C. R. D. Bethune. Hakluyt Society. London, 1862.

Games, Gunerre Diez de (1379-1450). Le Victorial Chronique de Don Pedro Niño. Translated by A. de Circourt and the Count of Puymaigre. Paris, 1867.

Gami, P. B. Series Episcoporum Ecclesiae Catholicae. Ratisbon, 1871—— Die Kirchengeschichte von Spanien. 3 vols. Ratisbon, 1862-76.

Gardiner, S. R. Student's History of England. London. 1892.

Gardiner, S. R. and Mullinger, J. B. Introduction to the Study of English History. London, 1881

Gardner, J. S. Armour in England London, 1807
---- Foreign Armour in England. London, 1808

Garnett, R. Richmond on the Thames, London, 1896.

Garnett, R. and Gosse, E. English Literature. 4 vols. London, 1903.

Garnier, J (b. 1818). L'Artilierie de la Commune de Dijon. In Annuitre du Département de la Côte d'Or. Dijon, 1893

 Notxe historique sur la Maladrerie de Dijun. In Mém. de l'Acad. de Dijon, ser. i., vol. L. Dijon, 1854.

Documents relatifs à la Surpr se de Paris, par les Bourgu gnons in Ma. 14 18.
 In Bull Soc de l'Hist de Paris, année iv. Paris, 1877.

Garnier, N. La Côte d'Or. Monlins, 1.a.

W CCC

[Gascoigne T. Collectanea historica e Dictionano Theologico T. Gascoigni. Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1731.

Gaspey, T. The lafe and Times of the Good Lord Cobbam. 2 vols. London, 1843.

— The Lollards. A Tale. 3 vols. London, 1822.

Gasquet, A. Préca des Institutions polarques et sociales de l'ancienne France a vols. Pans, 1895

Gasquet, F A. The Old English Bible and other Emays. London, 1908.

- Some Notes on Mediseval Libraries. Yeovil, 1891.

The Pall, a Pledge for the Unity of the Catholic Pauth. London, 1892

Gassé, A. Chansons Normandes du xvº siècle. Caen. 1866.

— Les Vaux de Vire de Jean Le Houx. Pans, 1875.

Olwier Basschn et le Van de Vire. Pans, 1887.

Gaufreteau J. de (d. 1643). Chronique Bouideloue. Ed. J. Delpit. 2 vols. Bordeaux, 1877-88.

Gaujes, A. F. (1772-1856). Etudes historiques sur le Rouergue. 4 vols. Paris. 1858.

[Gaun: Reg] John of Gaunt's Reg ster (1372-1376). Ed S. A. Smith. 2 vols. London, 1911

Gauther J. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales. Seine-et-Marne. 5 vols., Paris, 1863-80.

Gavard, J. D. C. Versailles. Galérie historique, 19 vols. Paris, 1818, &c.

Gazanyok, J. (1766-1851). Histoire du Roussillon. Perpignan, 1857.

Gazette Archéologique. Paris, 1875-89. Gazette des Beaux Arts. Paris, 1859, dec.

Gebhart, E. La Rennssance Italienne. Paris, 1887.

—— Contears Florentins du Moyen Age. Paris, 1901

Gee, H. and Hards, W. J. Documents idustrative of English Church History. London, 1896

Gee, R. The Two Langleys. St Albana, 1857

Geiger L. Renaisunce und Humanismus in Italien und Deutschland. Ber'in, 1881.

Gelis Dinot, P. and Grassoreille, G. Le Château de Bourbon l'Archambault. Paris, 1887.

Genealogist, Ed. G. W. Marshall and W. D. Selby. London, 1877, &c.

[Gent's Mag] Gentieman's Magazine. London, 1731, &s., George, H. B. Banles of English History London, 1895.

— The Archers at Crécy. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. E. London, 1895. George, H. B. and Sidgwick, A. Poems of England. London, 1896.

Gerson, Jean 1363-1429) Opera Omnia Ed L. E. Dupin. 5 vois. Antwerp.

Gernzet, E. Histoire de la Littérature Française. 2 vols. Paris, 1866.

Gervolle, C. A. A. Sur les anciennes Châteaux du Département de la Manche. La Mém. Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie vol. i. Chen, 1825.

Geslin de Bourgogne J and Barthélemy, A de Anciens Évéchés de Bretagne 4 vols. Pans, 1855-64

[Gesta.] Henrici Quinti Angliae Regii Gesta. Ed. B. Williams. English. Historical Society. London, 1850

Giannone, ? (1676-1748) History of Naples Trans J. Ogilvic. avols. London, 1729-31

Gabbona, A. Early Lincoln Wills. Lancoln, 1888.

Giblet, H. Hutoire des Rois de Chypre. Trans. H. G. C. Chevalier. 2 volt Paru, 1733.

Gidley, | Royal Visits to Exeter Exeter, 1863

Statement relating to William Wynard's Charity in Exeter. Exeter, 1865 Greeth, W. Die Vermittelungsversuche Kauer Sigmunds zwischen Frankreich und England im Jahre 1416. Halle, 1895.

Oifford, J. The History of France. 4 vols. London, 1793. Gilbert, J. T. Facsimiles of National MSS, of Ireland. 4 parts. London and Southampton, 1874-84.

Viceroys of Ireland Dublim, 1865.

Gilles, N. (d. 1503). Annales et Chroniques de France. Paris, 1549 Gilhodts van Severen, A. Bruges ancienne et moderne. Brussels, 1803. - Cartulaire de l'ancienne Étaple de Bruges. 4 vols. Bruges, 1904-7 — Inventaire des Chartes. In Inventures des Archives de la Ville de Bruges. 4 vols. Bruges, 1876.

- Le Cotion Manuscrit Galba, B 1. In Collection de Chroniques Be ges medites. Brussels, 1896.

Gilpin, W. The Lives of Wickliffe, Lord Cobham, John Huss, Jerome of Prague and Zisca. London, 1765.

Gitaldus Carobrensis, Opera. Ed. J. S. Brewer, J. F. Dimock and G. F. Warner. R.S. 8 vols. London, 1861-91.

Girardot, A. T. Baron de La Cathédrale de Bourges. Moelins, 1840.

[Gironde,] Archives historiques du Département de la Gironde, 12 vois. Paris, 1859-70.

Glustiniani, A. (1470–1536). Annazi della Repubblica di Genova i 2 volsi. Genos, Glassberger (or de Moravia), N (d after 1517) Chromica. In Analecta Franeiscene, vol. ii. Quaracchi, 1887.

Glover, S. (d. 1869). History and Gazetteer of the County of Derby. 2 vols. Derby, 1831-3

Godefroy, D. (1615-1681). Histoire de Charles VI. Paris, 1658

- Histoire de Charles VII. Pans, 1661.

Godefroy, F. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne langue française 10 vols. Paris, 1880-92. [Godstow.] Anonymi Chronicon Godstovianum. Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1716.

Godwin, F (1561-1633). De Praestrubus Angliae. Ed. W. Richardson. 2 vols. Cambridge, 1743.

Goldast, M. (1576-1635). Collectio Constitutionum Imperalium. 4 vols. Frankfun, 1713.

.mperatorum Statuta et Rescripta, 3 vols. Frankfurt, &c., 1607-16.

Goldie, F. A Byegone Oxford. London, 1881

Gollut, L. (1537-1595) Mémoires historiques de la République Séquanoise et des Princes de la Franche Comté de Bourgogne. Ed C L E. Davernoy. Aztois, 1846.

Conse, L. L'Art gothique, l'Architecture, la Peinture, la Sculpture, le Décor-Paris, 1891

- La Sculpture frança se depuis le xiv^a siècle. Paris, 1895

Goodwin, T (1650-1715). History of the Reign of Henry V. London, Gostling, W. (1696-1777). A Walk in and about the Cathedral of Canterbury. Canterbury, 1825.

Gonget, A. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales: Gironde-Bordenux, 1892

Greek, R. An Account of a rich Huminated Moval executed for John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France under Henry VI London, 1794.

- History of Pleshy. Landon, 1803

--- Sepulchral Monuments, 3 vols. Loadon, 1786-99.

Gouvenain, L. Inventaire sommaire des Archives communales de la ville de Dijon. Paris, 1867.

Gower, J. Complete Works. Ed. G. C. Macaulay. 4 vols. Oxford, r 199-1902.

- Confessio Amantis Ed. R Pauli, 3 vols. London, 1857 Gower, R. S. The Tower of London. 1 vols. London, 1901

Gradl, H. Geschichte des Egerlandes. Prague, 1893.

Graes (or Gratius), O (d. 1343). Fascicular ferum expetendarium et fugiendarum, Ed. E. Brown, 2 vols. London, 1690.

Grasse, J. G. T. Trésor de Livres rates et précieux. 7 vols. Dresden, 1859-69. Graetz, H. (d. 1891). History of the Jews. Trans B Liwy 5 vols. London, 18g1-2

Grande Encyclopédie. 31 vols. Paris, 1847-1901.

Grandes Chroniques de France. Ed. Paulm Paris, Paris, 1846-40.

Grand nation, C. de. Nouvesur Documents sur les États Générals du 200 né le (Mémoire lu aux réunions de la Sorbonne.) Paris, 1876.

Granger, J. (1723-1726). A Biographical History of hogland from Egbert the Great to the Revolution; with continuation by M. Nobie. 7 vols. London, E775-1806. Gras, M. Inventaire sommusee des Archives departementales. Gasonde. Paris, 1861, &c.

Grasserellie, G. Historie postique du chapitre de Notre Dame de Paris pendant la domination anglaise. In Mém. Soc. de l'Hist de Parzs, vol. ix. Paris, t883.

Grave, M. Archives Musscipilles de Mantes. Paris, 1896.

Gray, F. A. P. The Roll of Ramie Ashev or far as it repates to Lancachire and Cheshwe In Transactions of the Historic Society of Lancachine and Chesh re, vel zivi. Liverpoel, zigt.

Gray, T (d. 1569). Scalachronica. Ed. H. Maxwell, London, 1907. Green, A. S. Town Life in the Fifteenth Century 2 vols, London, 1904

Green J. R. (1847-1881). A Short History of the English People. London, 1877. Illustrated edition. 4 vols London, 1892-4

[Greg Chron] Gregory i Chronicle. In Collections of a London Citizen. Ed.]. Gardner Camden Soc. London, 1876.

Gregorovius, F. Geschichte der Stadt ihnn im Mittelaker. 8 vols. Sturtgirt, Grey, E. C. W. St Giles of the Lepers. London, 1905.

Grev Frists Chronicle, Ed. J. G. Nichnik, Camilen Noc., London, 1852. Also in Monumenta Franciscana, vol. 1

Grafiths, J. Index to Walk provid in the University of Oxford. Oxford, Guliet, J. L. (1756-1812). Dictionnance historique, littéraire et statique des Départements du Mont Bianc et du Léman 3 vols. Chambéry, 1807.

Gasel, H (1595-1617) Fasti Rothomagenses. Ed. F. Bouquet. 2 vols. Rouen, [Greees Archives] Fact mile of first volume of M5 Archives of the Company of Grocers. Ed. J. A. Kingdon, 2 parts. London, 1886.

Grose, F (1731-1791). Making Antiquities respecting the History of the English Army. 2 vols. London, 1801.

Antiquities of England and Wales. 4 vols. London, 1773.

Grosley, P. (b. 1718). Memoires historiques et critiques pour l'Histoire de Troyes. 2 rois. Paris, 1774, 1812.

— Ephémérides, 2 vols, Paris, 1811.

Gross, C. A Bibliography of British Municipal History. New York, 1897.

The Mediaeval Law of Intestacy. Cambridge, Mass., 1904.

Select Cases concerning the Law Merchant. Selden Soc. London, 1908.

Grote, G. History of Greece. 8 vols. London, 1862.

Grudé de la Croix du Maine, F. (1552-1592). Les Bibliothèques Françoises. 2 vots. Paris, 1772.

Gruel, G. (fl. c. 1450). Chronsque d'Arthur de Richemont. Ed. A. le Vavasseur. Soc. de l'Hist. de France. Paris, 1890.

Gruyer, F. A. Les quarante Fouquet. Paris, 1897. Grynæus, S. Novus orbis regionum. Basel, 1537.

Guadet, J. Atlas géographique, historique, politique, et administratif de la France. Paris, 1828.

Guérin, L. Histoire Mantime de France 6 vols. Paris, 1859-61

Guerinière, J. Histoire générale du Poiton. 2 vois. Poiners, 1838-40. Guesard, F. (1814-1882) Gauluet ou le Sire de Gaule (1380-1423). In Bibl Ec. Chartes, vol. 12. Paris, 1847-8 Guichenon, 5 (1607-1664) Histoire de la Souveraineté de Dombes. Ed M. C. Gigue, 2 vols, Lyons, 1874.

Histotte généalogique de la Masson de Savoie. 4 vols. Turin, 1778-80.

Guiffrey, J. Inventaires de Jean Duc de Berry (1401-1416). 2 vols. Paris, 1894-6.

Guilhermy, R. F. M. N. Monographie de l'église royale de St Denis. Paris, 1848

La Sainte Chapelle de Paris. Paris, 1857.

- Innéraire Archéologique de Paris, Paris, 1855.

Guinness, H. G. Creation centred in Christ. 2 vols. London, 1896.

Guinodie, R. C. Histoire de Libourne et des autres villes et bourgs de son Arrondissement 3 vols. Bordeaux, 1845

Guizot, F. P. J. (1787-1871). Histoire de France depuis les Temps les plus reculés jusqu'en 1789, racontée à mes petits enfants 5 vols. Paris, 1872-6.

Gathrie, W. General History of England. 3 vols. London, 1744-51.

Guzman, F. Perez de (1405-1470). Cronica del serenissimo Rey Don Juan segundo. Pampiona, 1591

Haggard, A. C. P. The France of Joan of Arc. London, 1911. Haines, H. Manual of Monumental Brasses. 2 vols. Oxford, 1861.

Haitze, P. J. (657-1737). Histoire de la Ville d'Aix. 4 vols. Aix, 1880-9 Haklayt, R. (1553-1616). The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffiques and Discoveries of the English Nation. 3 vols. London, 1599-1600. 5 vols. London, 1809.

Hale, M (1609-1676). The History of the Pleas of the Crown Ed. T. Dogberty, a vols. London, 1800.

Hale, W. H. The Carthunan Monastery of London. In London and Middlesex Archaeological Sec. Transactions, vol. ni, part v. London, 1869.

Hales, J. W. and Furr wall, F. J. Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript. 4 vols. London, 1867. 8.

Hall, H. Studies in English Official Historical Documents. Cambridge, 1908.

Hall, H. Antiquities and Curiosities of the Exchequer. London, 1891.

Place, F. (< 1498-1547). The Union of the two Noble and Idustre Families of Lancaster and Yorke. London, 1809

Haller, J. England and Rom unter Martin V. In Queles and Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken Königl, preussisch, lustorisch, Institut in Rom, vol. vi 1. Rome, 1905.

Halliwell, J. O. Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words. 2 yels. London, 1842

-- Letters of the Kings of England. 2 vols. London, 1841.

The Earliest Naval Ballads of England. Percy Society. London, 1841.

Hamerton, P. G. Paris in Old and Present Times. London, 1855.

Hamikon, A. 'The Angel of Syon. Edinburgh, 1905.

Hammench, F. St Birgitta, die nordische Prophetty und Ordensträerin. Trans A Michelson, Gotha, 1872

Hammond, E. P. Chancer, A Biographical Manual, New York, 1908

- The Departing of Chaucer. In Modern Philology, vol. 1. Chicago, 1903-4.

Hampson, R. T. Meda Ævi Calendarium. 2 vols. London, ($4). Hancock, F. Minchead in the County of Somemet. Taunton, 1905.

- Dunger Church and Priory. Taunton, 1905.

Hanotrut, G. Jeanne d'Arc. Pans, 1911

Hansrecesse (1256-1418). Ed. K. Koppmann. 6 vols. Leipzig, 1870-89. Harbaville, M. Mériona, l'oter que et archeolog que du Département du Parde Cantis, 2 vols. Arras, 1842.

Harbert, W. (b. 1 (83)). Poems Ed. A. B. Groun: In Mucellaries of the Faller Worther Library, London, 1870.

Harcourt, L. W. Vernon. His Grace the Steward and the Trial of Peers. London,

 The Two Sit John Fagolfs. In Transactions of the Royal Historical Society. ser in, vol ir London, 1910

Harding, S. (1743-1809). Shakespeare Il ustrated. London, 1793.

Hardt H von der (1660-1746) Magnum Oecamenicum Concilium Constantiense. 7 vols. Helmstadt, 1697-1740 Hardy, E. La Guerre de Cent Ant. Paris, 1879.

Hardy, Elizabeth. Owen Glendower, or the Prince in Wates. 2 vols. London, r849.

Hardy, J. S. Literary Remains. Ed. J. G. Nicholi. Westminster, 1842. Hardy, T. D. Syllabus of Rymer's Foedera. 3 vols. London, 1869-85

- A descriptive catalogue of materials relating to the history of Great Britain and Ireland, to the end of the reign of Henry VII. R.S. 3 vols London, 186x-71. See else Rotuli Normannia

Hardy, W. J. and Page, W. Calendar to the Fret of Fines for London and Middlesen 2 vols. London, 1892-3.

Hardyng, John (1378-c. 1470) Chronicle, Ed H. Ellis, London, 1812. [Harflet] The Siege of Harflet and the Batayl of Egincoust attributed to J Lydgate. In N. H. Vicolas, History of the Battle of Agracoust; also W. C. Hazlitt, vol. ii, pp. 88-108

[Harl, Cat] A Catalogue of the Harlesan Collection of Manuacripts preserved in the British Museum, 4 vols. London, 808-12,

Harlenn Mucellany Ed. W. Oldys (1696-1761) and T. Park. 10 vols London, 1808-13.

Digitizes by Google

Harleran Society, The. Publications. London, 1869, &c.

Harpsheid, N (1519-1575) Historia Angheana Ecclenames. Donas, 1622

Harris, J. The History of Kent. London, 1719.

Harns, M. D. Life in an Old English Town. A History of Coventry from the Earliest Times. London, 1898.

The Story of Coventry London, 1911.

Hartshorne, C. H. Feudal and Military Antiquities of Northumberland. London, t 8 ç 8.

Hartwright, H. The Story of the House of Lancaster. London, 1897.

Hassall, A. A Class book of English History London, 1901, Hasted, E. History of Kent. 4 vols. Canterbury, 1778-99.

Hastings, T. The British Archer. London, 1811.

Hauser, A. Études critiques sur les sources narratives de l'Histoire de France at xy siècle. In Revue d'Histoire Moderne et Contemporaine, vol. v (190¢) Hauteclocque, G de Arrondissement de St Pot. In Dictionnaire historique et archéologique du Département du Pas-de-Calais, vol. 11. Arras, 1880.

Hawkins, E. Description of the Anglo-Galac Coins in the British Museum. London, 1826.

Hay, J Swift The Mystery of his Life and Love London, 1891

Hazlitt, W Carew Remains of the Early Popular Poetry of England. 4 vols. London, 1864-6.

The Livery Companies of the City of London. London, 1892.

Heart, J Life and Writings of St Patrick Dublin, 905.

Heda, G See Beka, J de

Hefele, C. I von. Conciliengeschichte. 9 vols. Freiburg-im-Breitgau, 1874-90. Hefner Alteneck, J. H. Trachien, & ansiwerke and Geraischaften vom früheren M tielalter 3 vols. Frankfurt, &t., 1840–54. Hegel, C. Die Chroniken der Stadt Cöln. In Die Chroniken der deutschen Städte

3 vols. Leipzig, 1875-7.

Heigel, K. Die Wittelsbacher. Munich, 1880.

Heiss, A. Les Medailleurs de la Renaissance. 8 vols. Paris, 1881-92.

--- Descripcion general de las Monedas Hispano-Cristianas. 3 vols. Madrid, Hellot, A. Essai historique sur les Martel de Basqueville et sur Basqueville-en-Caux Rouen, 1879.

- Récit du Siège d'Harffeur en 1415. Rouen, 1881. See Petit, J.

Henaux, F. Histoire du Pays de Liége. 2 vois. Liège, 1872-4.

Henderson, E. F. Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages. London, 1892.

Henley, Walter of (c. 1156) Husbandry Ed E Lamond London, 1890 Hennebert, J. B. F. Histoire génerale de la Province d'Antois. 3 vols. Lule and St Omer, 1786-9.

Hennessy, G. Novum Repertorium Ecclesiasticum Parochiaie Londinense. London, 1808

Henry, D. M. J. Histoire de Roussillon. 2 vols. Paris, 1835.

Henry, E. Essai sur la vie politique de Gerson. In Traysur de l'Acad Impériale de Reims, vol. 121 Rheims, 1855.

Henry, G. A. At Agincourt A Tale of the White Hoods of Paris. London, 1897. Herbert, J. A. A Catalogue of the Romances in the Department of MSS. in the British Museum, Vol. at. London, 1910.

Herbert, W. History of the Twelve Great Livery Companies of London, a 846-7.

Héricauli, C. J. Poéses complètes de Charles d'Orléans. 2 vois. Paris, 1874.

Hencourt, A. Les Sièges d'Arras. Arras, 1844.

Hermant, J. Histoire du Diocèse de Bayeux. Caen, 1725. Héron. A. Deux Chromques de Rouen, Rouen, 1900.

Heuterus, P. (1535-1602). Rerum Burgundicarum libri sex. The Hague, 1639.

Hewitt, J. Ancient Armour and Wespons in Fiscope. 3 vols. London, 1855-60.

Hewlert, L. M. Anglo-Gallic coms. London, 1920.

Heylyn, P (1600-1661) The History of that most famous Sayat and Souldier of Jesus Christ St George of Cappadona. London, 1823.

Hiatt, C Westmanster Abbey. London, 1902.

Higden, Ralph (d. 1164). Polychromeon. Ed. C. Babington and J. R. Lumby. R.S. 9 vols. London, 1865-86.

Higgirs, L. E. Women of Europe in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries, 2 vols. London, 1889.

Hime, H. W. L. Gunpowder and Astronomous their Origin and Progress. London, 1904.

Hippeau C. L'Abbaye de St Étienne de Caen. Caen, 1855

Hirsch, Th., Toeppen, M. and Streblke, E. Scriptores rerum Pressicurum. 5 vols. Leipzig, 1861-74

Historiam History of the World Ed H S Williams 25 vols London, 904-7

Historical Manuscripts. Commissioners' Reports. London, 1870, &c.

Historical Monuments (England), Roya: Commission on. An Inventory of the Historical Monuments in London. Vol. i. Westminster Abbey London, 1924.

Houre, R. C (1758-1838). History of Medicin Wilishite. 6 vols. London, 1822-14.

Hoccleve, T. (1369-c. 1450). Minor Poems. Ed. F. J. Furnivill. E.E.T S. London, 1891.

— The Regerment of Princes, Ed. F. J. Furnivall. F.E.T.S. London, 1897.

Hochart, P. Nouvelles Considérations au sujet des Annales et des Histoires de l'acrte. Paris, 1894

Hodgion, F. C. The Early History of Venice from the Foundation to the Conquest of Constantinopie. London, 1901.

Hodgson, J. History of Northemberland. 6 vols. Newcastle, 1827-15

Hochfiner, E. Eustache Deschamps, Leben und Werte Strassbourg, 1904.

Hoffbauer, F., Paris à travers les Ages, la vols. Paris, 1875-82. Hoffmann, H., Les monnaies royales de France. Paris, 1878.

Holmshed, Raphaei (1, c, 1980). Uhron elesor England, Ireland, Scotland | 3 vols. in 2 | London, 1987

Holmes, I 5 I he Registers of Heavy Bowett. In Somerset Record Society London, 1899.

Wells and Glastonbury. London, 1908 Holi, F. S. Eights in the Darkness. London, 1896.

- White Rose of Langley London, 1875 Home Counties Magazine, London, 1899, 1912

Hommey, L. Hutore générale eculémenque et avile du Diocese de Seez. 3 vals. Alençon, 1899-1900.

Go. gle

Hook, W. F. (1789-1875). Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury. 12 vols. London, 1861, &c.

- Church Dictionary, London, 1887.

Hookham, M. A. The Life and Times of Margaret of Anjou. 2 vols. London, 1872.

Hope, W. H St John. Heraldry for Craftsmen and Designers London,

The Stal Plates of the Knights of the Garter (1348-1485) Westminster, — The London Charterhouse and its Old Water Supply. In Archaeologia, vol. Ivili. London, 1902.

Hopkins, Tighe The Dungeons of Old Paris. London, 1898

Horsefield, T. W. (d. 1831). History and Antiquities of Lewes. 2 vols. Lewes, 1824-7.

Herstmann, C. Richard Rolle of Hampole and his Followers. 2 vois. London, 1895-6.

Hoskins, E., Horae Beatae Mariae Virginis; or Sarum and York Primers. London, 1001.

Howard, J. J. Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica. London, 1868, &c.

Hudson, F. The Brasses of Northamptonshire. London, 1853.

Hudson, H. N. Shakespeare. His Life, Art and Characters. 2 vols. Boston, 1872

Huet, F Les Origines de la Ville de Caen. Rouen, 1702.

Hugo, T. The Jerusalem Chamber. In Transactions of London and Middlesex Archaeological Soc. vol. 11, part v. London, 1863.

 The Hospital of the Papey in the City of London, Ibid. vol. v. London, 1866.

Huillard Bréholles, J. L. A. (1818-1871). Titres de la Maison Ducale de Bourbon. In Archives de l'Empire. 2 vols. Paris, 1867, 1874.

La Rançon du Duc de Bourbon Jean I. In Mémoires présentés par divers Savants à l'Acad des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres de l'Institut de France, ser. t, vol van. Pans, 1874.

— Histoire générale du Moyen Age. 2 vols. Paris, 1842

Hume, D., of Godscroft (b. c. 1560) The Houses of Douglas and Angus Edinburgh, 1644.

Hume, M. A. S. The Spanish People. London, 1901.

Humphreys, H N Illuminated Illustrations of Froissart. 2 vols. London, 1844, &c.

Hunter, J. South Yorkshire. 2 vols. London, 1844.

Agincourt: A Contribution towards an Authentic List of the Commanders of the Engush Host. In Critical and Historical Tracts. London, 1850.

Proofs of the Early Use of Gunpowder in the English Army. In Archaeologia, vol 2001. London, 1847.

Hunter, R. The Imperial Dictionary and Cyclopaedia. 8 vols. London, 1901 Hurry, J. H. Reading Abbey. London, 1901

Husson, A. Etude sur les Hopitaux. Paris, 1862

Hutchine, J. (1698 1771). History of Dorset. 4 vols. London, 1774, &c.

Hutchmon, W. A View of Northumberland, 3 vols. Newcastle, 1778.

Hymans, L. Historic populaire de la Belgique. Brussels, 1860. Illustration, L'. Paris, 1843, &c.

[Imitatio Christi] IV Livroi de l'Imitation de Jésur-Christi, Ed. H. L. Curmer Paris, 1856, &c.

Imperis, P. (b. 1523). Chromas Monachi Bethlehemines. Ed. Kerryn de Lettenhove. In Chroniques relatives à l'Histoire de la Belgique sous la Domination des Ducs de Bourgogne, vol. iii. Brussels, 1876.

Inferrura, 5 (c. 1440-c. 1500). Diano de la Città de Roma. Ed. O. Tommanni Rome, 1890.

Ingram, J. Memorials of Oxford 3 vols. Oxford, 1837.

[Inq. post mort] Calendarium Inquistionum post mortem. 4 vols. London, 1806-18

Inquisiones ad Quod Dimnum, Lin of (PRO Lists and Indexes, 17 and 12). 2 vols. London, 2904, 906.

Intermédiaire, L', des Chercheurs et Curieux. Paris, 1864, &c. Iolo MSS. Ed. E. Williams (1745-1827). Landovery, 1840.

Izodalomtörtenet. Közlemények. Budapest, 1891, &c.

from de, h. Monumental fractitions in the charch and churchyards of Islaworth, &c., in the county of Middlesex. London, 1786.

Isambert, F. (1702-1817). Recueil Genéral des anciennes Lois françaises. 29 vols. Paris, 1822-11

[Jun] Innéraires de Phiappe le Hardi et de Jean uni Peur (1369-1419). Ed. E. Petit. Collection de documents médits. Paris, 1888

Izacke, R. Antiquities of the City of Exeter. London, 1677.

Jackson, J. E. 1805 1891). A Guide to Fatleigh and Hungerford. Chippenham, 1875

On the Lungerford Chapels in Salabury Cathesical. Devices, 1855 - Leland's Journey through Wiltshire (1540-1542). Devizes, 1873

Jackson, T. G. The Church of St Mary-the-Virgin, Oxford, Oxford, 1897.

Jacobs, J. The London Jewry, 1290. London, 1887.

Jadart, H. Jean de Gerson, Rheims, 1881.

Jachns, M. I. Handbuck einer Geschichte des Kriegswesens von der Urzeit bis zur Renaissance. Leipzig, 1480.

Jaillot, J. B. M. Recherches cataques, historiques et topographiques sur la Ville de Paris. 20 parts and 2 vols. of plans. Paris, 1772-5.

[4], Auguste. Glossaire Nautique. Paris, 1841.

James, G. Joan of Arc. London, 1910. James, H. Faccimiles of National manuscripts. 4 parts, Southampton, 1865-8

James, R. Poems. Ed. A B. Grount. London, 1880.

Jameson, J. An e-y mulogical dictionary of the Scottah language. 4 vols. Panky, 1879-82.

Janer, F. Examen de los Sucesos y Circanstancias que motivaron el Compromiso. de Caspe. Madnd, 1845.

Janicke, K. Die Magdenurger Schöpgenehronik. In Chroniten der deutschen Städte. Lerpzig, 1869.

Janin, J. G. La Normandie. Pars, 1842. - Voyage de Paris à la Mer Paris, 1847

Janvier, A. Boves et ses Seigneurs. Amiens, 1877.

Jarry. F. La Vie Politique de Louis de France, duc d'Orléane (1372-1404) Paris, 1889

Jorry, L. Jean Grancher de Tramou de Jean d'Orleans. In Bulletin de la Société archéologique et historique de l'Orleanais, vol. viir. Orléans, 1886.

Jarry, L. Découvertes des Tombes de Mane d'Harcourt '&c] In Mém de la Soc archéologique et historique de l'Orléanais, vol xxii Or éans, 1880
 Jeanroy, A. and Teu ie, H. Mystères Provençaux du xv* siecle. Tou oute, 1893
 Jeanroy, A. and Vignaux, A. Voyage du Purgatoire de St. Patrice. Visions de Tindal, et de St. Paul. Toulouse, 1903

Jeantoy, Felix V. Histoire abrégée de la Littérature française. Paris, 1892. Jenkins, A. History and Description of the City of Exeter. Exeter, 1806.

Jennings, A. C. Ecclesia Anglicana. London, 1882.

Jervis (Pearson), W. H. The History of France. London, 1898.
Jessopp, A. Norwich. In Diocesan Histories. London, 1884.
Jewitt, Ll. The Ballads and Songs of Derbyshire. London, 1867.
Jewitt, Ll and Hope, W. H. St. The Corporation Plate and Insignia of Office.

Jewitt, Li and Hope, W. H. St. J. The Corporation Plate and Insignia of Office of the Cities and Towns of England and Wales. 2 vols. London, 1895.
Joanne, A. Dietionnaire géographique et administratif de la France et de sei Colonies. 7 vols. Paris, 1802-1905.

— Normandie Parii, 1866 — Le Nord, Parii, 1878

Johnson, T. F. Glimpies of Ancient Leicester. Lescester, 1906.

Johnson, W. N. A Handbook of the Collection of Works of Ancient Masters, published by the Arundel Society. Manchester, 1907

Jolimont, T. Les Principaux Edifices de la Ville de Rouen en 1515 Rouen, 1845.

Jollois, J. B. P. Histoire du Siège d'Orléans. Paris, 1835.

Jones, Theophilus 1759-1812). History of Brecknockshire. Ed. G. Davies. Brecknock, 1898.

Jones, W. Crowns and Coronations. London, 1883.

ones, W. H. Fasti Ecclesiae Samburiensis. Salisbury, 1879.

Jonston, J (1570-1611) Inscriptiones historicae Regum Scotorum. Amsterdam, 1602.

Joret-Desclouéres, G. Un Écrivain national au xv^a siècle (Alain Chartier). Paris, 1876.

Jorge, N. Phihppe de Mézières (1327-1405) et la Crossade au nive siècle. In Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Fasc. 110. Paris, 1896.

Joubert, A. Documents médits sur la Guerre de Cent Ans. Angers, 1890.

Les Invasions anglaises en Anjou au xive et xve siècles. Angers, 1872.

- Émide sur la Vie Privée en Anjou au xvº siècle. Angers, 1884.

— Une Tentative des Anglais contre Château-Gontier en 1421. Mamers, 1888.

 Étude sur les comptes de Macé Darne, maître des œuvres de Louis les duc d'Anjon. Angers, 1890.

Journal des Savants. Paris, 1816, &c.

Journanyault, Baron de, Catalogue des Archives de. 2 vols. Paris, 1838 [Jurade] Registra de la Jurade de Bordeaux (1414-1422) In Archives Municipales de Bordeaux, vol iv. Bordeaux, 1883.

Jusserand, J. J. Le Roman d'un Roi d'Écosse. Paris, 1895.

Literary History of the English People. 3 vols. London, 1907.

English Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages. Trans. L. T. Sm.th. London, Ustinger, G (d. c. 1425) Die Berner Chronik. Ed. G Studer. Berne, 1871. [Juv.] Jean Javenal des Ursins (1388-1473). Histoire de Charles VI Ed. J. A. C. Buchon. In Choix de chroniques et mémoires sur l'histoire de France, vol. iv. Paris, 1836.

Kabel, P. Die Sage von Heinrich V bis zu Shakespeare. Berlin, 1907. Coatinued in Palistra, vol. laix.

Kaemmerer, L. Hubert und Jean Van Eyek. Bielefeld and Leipzig, 1898

Kan, . , Ed }. I wenty six Politics, and other Poems. E.E. I.S. London, 1904. [Kal. and .nv.] Antient Kalendari and Inventories of the Treasury of H.M. Exchequer. Ed. F. Palgrave. 3 vols. London, 1816.

Kausler, F. (1794-1848). Synchronistische Uehersicht der Kriegsgeschichte und threr gleichzeitschen Quellen Ulm, 1830 - Worterbuch der Schlachten, Belagerungen und Treffen aller Völker 4 vols. Ulm, 1815 13.

Keble, R. History of the Parish and Manor House of Bishopthorpe. Leeds, Keepe, H. (1652-1685). Monumenta Westmonasteriensia. London, 1642.

Keightley, T. The Fairy Mythology. London, 1850.

Relly, J. F. A History of Spanish Literature. London, 1898.

Kelly, W. Royal Progresses and Visits to Leicester. Leicester, 1884.

Kempe, D. A Middle English Tale of Troy In Englische Studien, vol. 2212 Leipzig, 1901.

Kemilworth Elustrated, or the History of the Castle, Priory and Church of Kemilworth. Chiswick, 1821.

Kennet, W. Compleit History of England. 3 vols. London, 1706.

Kenyon, F. G. Our Bible and the Ancient MSS. London, 1898. Kerry C. A History of the Municipal Church of St Laurence, Reading. Reading. #86 q.,

Kervan de Lettenhove, J. M. B. C (1817-1891). Histoire de Flandre, y vols Bruges, 188 t

- Relation inédite de la Mort de Jean sans Peur. In Compte Rendu de la Commission royale d'Histoire, ser. 111, vol. viii Brussels, 1866.

- Une nouvelle Relation inédite de la Mort de Jean sans Peur Ibid. ser 18.

vol i. Brussels 1873

- Richard II est il mort à Pomfret? In Bull de l'Acad, des Sciences et Bellei-Lettres de Belgaque, ser. 11, vol. xxxiv. Brussels, 1871

Keussen, H. Die Matrikel der Universität Köln. Bonn, 1892, &c.

King, C. Cooper, History of Berkshire, London, 1887. Kingsford, C. L. Henry V. New York, 1901.

- Chronicles of London. Oxford, 1905.

--- The Early Biographies of Henry V. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol xxv London.

--- The First English Life of Henry V. Oxford, 1941.

- A Legend of Sigismand's visit to England. In Eng. Hist Rev. vol. xxvi London 1911

- The First Version of Hardyng's Chronide. In Eng. Hist Rev. vol xxva London, 1912

- English Historical Literature in the Friteenth Century. Oxford, 1913

- An Historical Collection of the Fifteenth Century. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol xux London, 1914

 Prejudice and Promise in 15th Century England Oxford, 1925 Kirby, T. F. Annals of Winchester College. London, 1892.

The Alien Priory of St Andrew, Hamble, and its Transfer to Winchester College in 139 . In Archaeologia, vol. l. London, 1887.

Kirk, R. E. G. L fe Records of Chaucer. Chaucer Society London 1900.

Kirk, R. E. G. and Furnivall, F. J. Analogues of Chaucer's Canterbury Prigrimage. Chancer Society. London, 1903

Kitchen, J. Le Court Leete et Court Baron. London, 1623. Kitchin, G. W. A History of France. 3 vols. Oxford, 1899.

 The Records of the Northern Convocation. Surfaces Society, vol. cxia. Durham, 1907.

Kittredge, G. L. On Chaucer's Dream. In Englische Studien, vol. zun. Heilbronn, 1880.

Kling, G. (b. 1882). Die Schlacht bei Nicopolis im Jahre 1396. Berlin, 1906. Kluge, F. Mittelenglisches Lesebuch. Halle, 1904.

Knackfuss, H. H. Holbein der jüngere. In Künstletmonographien, vol. zwi. Bielefeld, Leipzig, 1896.

Krught, C (1791-1873). Pictorial edition of the Works of Shakespeare. London, 1819.

Kright, H. G. Ar Architectural Tour in Normandy London, 1836.

Knights Hospitaliers in England Ed L. B. Larking Camden Soc. London, 1857. Knopler, A. Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte. Freiburg-im-Breisgau, 1895.

Roch, F. Leben und Werke der Christine de Pisan. Goslar, 1885

Koenig, W. Zur französischen Latteraturgeschichte Studien und Skizzen. Halle, 1877.

Kohler, J. Der Umprung der Meiunnenunge. Leipzig, 1895.

Kopp, K. A. Petrus Paulus Verger.un der Acture. In Historisches Jahrbuch, vol. zwis. Munich, 1897.

Korner, H. (c. 1365-1438) Chronica Novella, Ed. J. Schwalm, Göttingen, 1895. Kripp, G. P. The Legend of St Patrick's Purgatory. Baltimore, 1900.

Krius, F. X. Geschichte der christlichen Kunst. 2 vols. Freiburg-im-Breisgau, 1896-1900.

Krop', L. L. Pászthól Rátholds Loorincz Zarándoklása. In Századok, vol. 222. Budapest, 1896. Also in Catholic Home Annual. New York, 1897.

Kunze, K. Hanseatten aus England (1275-1412). Halle, 1891.

Kymer, G (fl. 1424). Dietarium de sanitatis custodia. În Hearne: Liber Niger

Scaccaru Oxford, 1728
La Barre, L. F. J. de Mémotros pour servir à l'Histoire de France et de Bourgogne. 2 vols. Paris, 1729.

Labitte, C. Bataille d'Azincourt. In Revue Anglo-Française, vol. ii. Poitiers, 1835. Laborde, A. Les Monuments de la France. 2 vols. Paris, 1816, 1836.

---- Paris Municipe. Paris, 1833

Laborde, L. E. de Les Ducs de Bourgogne. 3 vols. Paris, 1849-52.

Laboureur,] le (1623-1675). Hissoire de Charles VI, Roi de France [transatted from Chronique de St Denys]. 2 vols. Paris, 1663

Labourt, L. A. Recherches sur l'Origine des Ladrenes, Maladrenes et Léproienes. Paris, 1854.

Labroue, E. Le Livre de Vie. Bordeaux, 1891.

— Bergerag sous les Anglais (1 379-1 382). Bordeaux, 1893.

Labatte A. Études havoriques sur l'Arrondissement d'Yverot. Rouen, 1851. Lacabane, L. De la Poudre-à-Canon et de son Introduction en France. Paris, 1845.

Lacaille, H. La Vente de la Baronnie de Courcy. In Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. lv. Paris, 1894.

Lachaurenge, J. Guerres des Français et des Anglais du xit au xvt siècles. 2 vols. Moulins, 1875.

Google

La Clède, N. de. Histoire générale de Portugal. 2 vols. Paris, 1735.

La Coudrette (c. 1400). The Romans of Partenay or of Lusignan. Ed. W. W. Skeat. E.E.I S. London, 1866.

Lactore, A (1793-1875) Épisode du Regne de Jean de Bavière surnommé Jean-sant-Pitié, élu de Liége. Mons, 1841.

— inventa re des Meubles de l'Hôtel de Guillaume IV, Doc de Bavière, à Paris. Mons, 1842.

Lacroix, D. Histoire arecodotique du Drapeau Français. Paris, 1876.

Lacroix, P. (1807-1884). Mœurs, Usages et Costumes du Moyen Age et à l'Époque de la Renaissance. Paris, 1873.

Lacroix, P. and Seré, F. Le Lavre d'or des Métiers. Paris, 1850.

Lacy, F., bishop successively of Hereford and Exeter (d. 1455). Register of, Ed. F. C. Hangeson-Randolph. 2 vols. London, 1909

Lafenestre, G. L'Exposition des Primitifs Français. Paris, 1904.

Lafenestre, G and Richtenberger, L. The National Museum of the Louvre Irans B. H. Gausseron. Parts, 1893

Laferrière, F. Cours de Droit publique et administratif. Paris, 1841.

Laffetav, J. Mémoire sur les Fondateurs, les Obits et les Sépultures de la Cathédrale de Bayeux. In Bulletin de la Société de Belles-Lettres de Bayeux. Bayeux, 1852.

La Fons-Mélicocq, J. F. A. Noyon et le Noyonnais au Moyes. Age. Noyon, L'Artillerie de la Ville de Lille aux xive, xve et xvie siècles. Lille, 1854. Lalanne, M. L. Chrétien-, Dictionnaire historique de la France, Paris, 1872.

- Recherches sur le Feu Grégeois et sur l'Introduction de la Poudre-à-Canon en Europe. Pans, 1845.

Lalanne, P. H. de. Fontarable. Paris, 1896.

La Marche (flivier de 1426-1502) Mémoires. Ed. H. Beaune and J. D'Arbaumont. Soc. de l'Hist. de France. 4 vois. Paris, 1883-8.

Lan barde, W. (1536-1601). Dictionarium Angliae topographicum. London, Lambert, A. Leproxy Present and Past. In Nineteenth Century, vol. 273. London, 1184.

Lambert, N. Recherches historiques sur quelques communes de l'Arrondissement de St. Pol. In Le Puits Artésien, vol. ni. St. Pol, 1839.

Lambert de Ballyhier. Compiègne historique et monumental. 2 vois. Compiègne, 1842

Lameere, E. Le Grand Conseil des Ducs de Bourgogne de la Maison de Valois. Brusseis, 1900.

Latti, J. Delxiae eruditorum seu veterum arcaborus opusculorum collectanes. 16 vols. Florence, 1736-54.

Lami, S. Dictionnaire des Sculpteurs de l'École Française du Moyen Age nu Regne de Louis XIV. Paris, 1898

Lamothe Contumes in Ressort du Parlament de Guienne. Bordeaux, 1768-9. Lamotte, F. de. d. 1787). Antiquitez de la V lie de Harfleur. Havre, 1676. Also ed. E. Lésens. Rouen, 1868.

La Mure, J. M. de (1616-1675) Histoire des Ducs de Bourbon et des Courtes de Forez. Ed. F. R. Chantelauze 4 vols. Paris, 1860-97

Lancet The London, 1823, &c.

Ling, A. I. story of Scottand from the Roman Occupation. 4 vota. Edinburgh. 1900—7.

Lang, A The Maid of France. London, 1908.

Lang, K. H (1764-1833). Geschichte des barrischen Herzogs Ludwig des Bärtigen zu Ingolaadt. Nürnberg, 1821.

Langebek, } (1710-1775). Scriptores rerum Danicarum. 9 vols. Copenhagen, 1772-1878.

Langlois, E. H (1777-1827). Notice sur les Bas-Reliefs des Stalles de la Cachédrale de Rouen. In Soc. abre d'Émulation de Rouen, 1827.

Esui historique, philosophique et pittoresque sur les Danses des Morts 2 vols. Rouen, 1851.

 Note sur les anciennes Ferteresses de Rouen. In Soc. libre d'Émulation de Rouen. Rouen, 1830.

Langton, W. Abstracts from Inquisitiones Post Mortem Chetham Society 2 vols Manchester, 1875, 1886.

Lanney, G. (1986-1461). Œuvret. Ed. C. Potvin Louvain, 1878 —— Survey of Egypt and Syna. Ed J. Webb. Archaeologia, vol. xxi. London, 1827.

La Quérière, E. de. Nouice historique et descriptive sur l'ancien Hôtel-de V.lle, le Beffrei et la Grosse-Horloge de Rouen. Rouen, 1864.

Larchey, E. L. Origines de l'Artillerie française. Pans, 1867.

La Roque, G. A. de (1598-1686). Histoire généalogique de la Maison d'Harcourt, 4 vols. Paris, 1662.

Larousse P Grand Dictionnaire universel du xixe siècle. 15 vols. Paris, 1866-76.

Larrey, I. de. Histoire d'Angleterre, d'Écosse, et d'Irlande. 4 vols. Rotterdam, 1697-1713.

Lascelles, R. Laber munerum Hiberniae (†152–1827). 7 parts. London, 1824. Lascels, R. (1603–1668). An Italian Voyage or a Compleat Journey through July 2 vols. London, 1698.

Lasteyrie, R. Les Miniatures d'André Beauneveu et de Jacquemart de Hesdin. In Monuments et mémoires publiés par l'Académie des Inscriptions (Fondation Piot), vol. in. Paris, 1890.

La Thaumassère. See Thaumas

La Trémoille, C. L. Les La Trémoille pendant cinq siècles. 6 vols. Nantes, 1860.

— Guy de La Trémoille et Marie de Sully Livre de Comptes (1396-1406). Nantes, 1887.

Laud Troy Book. Ed. J. E. Wülfing. E E.T.S. 2 vols. London, 1902-3.

Launci, J. Regii Navarrae Gymnasii Parisiensis Historia. 2 vols. Paris, 1677

Laurent, B. et Doinel, J. Inventa re sommaire des Archives de Carcassonne.

Carcassonne, 1900.

Lauzun, P Les Couvents de la ville d'Agen. 2 vols. Agen, 1889-93

Lavallée, Th. Histoire des Français. 2 vols. Paris, 1845.

— Histoire de Paris. Paris, 1852.

--- Jean Sans Peur. Scènes historiques. Paris, 1861.

Lavdiegide, P. A. Nouail de la Des anciennes Fourches patibulaires de Montfaucon. Paris, 1836.

Lavirotte, C. Odette de Champdivers à Dijon après la Mort de Charles VI. In Mémoires de l'Acad. des Sciences, Arts et Belies-Lettres de Dijon, ser 15, vol 11. Dijon, 1854.

Lavisse, E. Album historique. Paris, 1897.

- Études historiques du Moyen Age. Paris, 1896.

Google

10

Lavisse, E. Histoire de France jusqu'à la Révolution 19 vols. Paris, 1900-11. Lavisse, E. and Rambaud, A. Histoire générale du 11º uècle à noi jours. 12 vols Pans, 1891 - 1901.

Lawson, A. The Kings Quair and the Quare of Jelusy. London, 1910.

Lay of Agincourt and other Poems. Edinburgh, 1819.

Leach, A. F. Visitations and Memonals of Southwell Minster. Camden Soc. London, 1891

- Memorials of Beverley Minster (1286-1347). Surfees Soc. 2 vols. Durham, 1898-1903.

- Sr Paul's School before Colet. In Archaeologia, vol. Izii. London,

- A History of Winchester College. London, 1809.

Leader, J. T. and Marcotti, G. Giovarni Acuto. Florence, 1889.

Le Baud, P (d. 1505). Cronicques et Vistoires des Bretons. Ed. C. de la Lande. de Calan. Rouez, 1907

Le Blant, E. Les quatre Managet de Jacqueline, Duchesse en Bavière. Paris, Lecesse, E. Le Roman de Mélusine. In Mém. de l'Acad des Sciences, Lettres er Arts d'Arres, ser. II, vol. 212. Arras, 1878.

- Histoire d'Arras, Arras, 1880.

- Notice historique, monumentale et statistique sur la Ville d'Arras. Arras, 1872.

Lechandé d'Anisy, L. Rottli Normanniae [5 Hen. V]. In Mém. Soc. des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. zv. Caen, 1845.

- Entraits des Chartes et autres Actes Normands qui se trouvent dans les Archives de Caivados. 2 vols. Caen, 1834, 1835.

Lechler, G. V. Johann von Wichf und die Vorgeschichte der Reformation. a vols. Lespzig, 1873

Lecoy de la Marche, A. Le Roi René. 2 vols. Para, 1875. La Chaire française au Moyen Age. Paris, 1886.

L'Ecuy, J. B. Essai sur la vie de Jean Gerson. 2 vols. Paris, 1832.

Ledain, B. Histoire de la Ville de Parthenay Paris, 1858.

Lediard, T. Naval History of England. 2 vols. London, 1735 Ledien, A. Inventage summaire des Archives municipales: ville d'Abbeville Abberille, 1902.

L'Estrange A. G. K. Royal Winchester London, 1889,

-- The Pauce and the Hospital, or Chronicles of Greenwich. 2 vols. London,

Le Fèvre, Jean, seigneur de St Remy Chronique, Ed. F. Morand, Soc de l'Hist de France. 2 voss. Paras, 1876-81

Lefevre-Pontalis, G. La Guerre de Partisans dans la Haute Normandie (1424-1429). In Bibl. Ec Chartes, volt iv lv, lvii. Pana, 1891-6.

Lefile, Fl. Histoire civile, politique et religieuse de St Valéry et du Comité du Vimes. Abbeville, 1858

Le Flaguais, J. A. Œuvres poetiqueis. 4 voli. Caen, 1850-60

Lega-Weekes See Weekes

Legg. J. W. Missale ad Usum Ecclesiae Westmonasteriensis. Henry Bradshaw Soc. 3 vols. London, 1891 6.

Legg, L. G. W. English Coronation Records. Westminster, 1901

Legrand, A. (d. c. 1644). Les Viet det Saints de la Bretagne Armorique. Quimper, 1901.

Google

Legrand, H. Paris en 1380. Paris, 1865.

Le Grand, L. Les Maisons Dieu et Léprosenes du Diocese de Paris. In Mera. Soc. de l'Hist, de Paris, vols. xxiv, xxv. Paris, 1897-8.

- Les Maisons Dien, leur Régime intérieur au Moyen Age. In Revue des Questions Historiques, vol. 12x. Fans, 1898.

- Lei Quinze Vingts. In Mém Soc de l'Hist de Paris, vo., xiii. Fans, 1887.

- Statuts d'Hôtels Dieu et de Léproseries. Pans, 1901.

Leibnitz, G. W. Codex Juris Gentium Diplomaticus. 2 vols. Hanaver, 1693-

Leicestershire and Rutland Notes and Quenet 3 vois Leicester, 1889-04.

Leicestershire Architectural and Archaeological Society. Transactions. Leicester, t 866, &c.

Le Keur, J. (1785 1846) History and Anaquities of Westminster Abbey. London, 1856.

Leland, J. (d. 1552) De rebus Britannicis Collectanea. Ed. T. Hearne. 6 vols. London, 1715.

- Commentaria de Scriptoribus Britanaise. Ed. A. Hall. 2 vols. Oxford,

- atmerary. Ed. L. T. Smith, 5 vols. London, 1906-10.

Lelewel, J. Guillebert de Lannoy et ses Voyages en 1413, 1414, 1421. Brussels, 1844

Le Marchant, J. (c. 1270). Le Livre des Minacles de N.D. de Chartres. Ed. G Duplessis. Chartres, 1855

Le Mene, J. M. Histoire du Diocèse de Vannes. Vannes, 1888 L'Église Cathodrale de Vannes. In Congrès archéologique de France (Vannes), vol. alvin. Paris, 1881.

Le Neve, J (1679-1741). Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae. Ed. T. D. Hardy. 3 vols. Oxford, 1854.

Lenfant, J., 1661-1728) Histoire du Concile de Pise. 2 vols. Amsterdam, 1724. - The History of the Council of Constance. Trans. S. Whatley. z vols.

London, 1730. Lensent, C. F. La Poësse patriotique en France au Moyen Age. Paris, 1891

Lennel, F. Calais, son Port, son Industrie. Paris, 1908

Lenz, M. König Sigismund und Heinrich V von England. Berlin, 1874.

Drei Tractate aus dem Schriftencyclus der Constanzer Concils. Marburg.

Le Petit, F. La Grande Chronique de Hollande, Zélande, Westfrise, Utrecht, Overyssel, et Groeningen a vols Dordrecht, 1691

Lépinois, E. de, and Merlet, L. Cartulaire de Notre Dame de Chartres. 3 vols. Chartnes, 1865.

Leroux. Histoire de la V'île de Soissons. 2 vob. Soissons, 1849.

Leroux, A. Nouvelles Recherches Cranques sur les Relations Politiques de la France avec l'Allemagne (1378-1464). Paris, 1892 Leroux de Lincy, A. J. V. Recueil de Chants Historiques Français depuis le xir jusqu'au xviir siècle. 2 vols. Paris, 1841-2

- Le Roman de Le Brut, Paris, 1836.

- Nouvelle Bibliothèque bleue, ou Légendes populaires de la France. Paris,

Le Roy, O. Etude sur les Mystères. Paris, 1837

Lespinasse, R de Cartulaire du Prieuré de La Charite-sur-Loire Nevers, 1887. Letellier, E. La Normandie Monumentale. Havra, 1892.

W [2]

Lethaby, W. R. Mediaeval Art from the Peace of the Church to the Eve of the Renassance. London, 1904.

- Westminger Abbey and the King's Craftsmen. London, 1 006.

- The Palace of Westminster in the Eleventh and Jweith Centuries. In Archaeologia, vol. lx. London, 1906.

Le l'ort, H., d. after 1521). Chemique des Évêques et des Comtes de Nevers. Ed. R. de l'Espinasse. Nevers, 1870.

Letter Books preserved among the Archives of the City of London. Ed. R. R. Sharpe g vols. London, 1899, &c

Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII Ed. J. S. Boewer and J. Garedner. 11 vois, London, 1161-1910

Levalion, J. Autour de Para, Promenades Historiques. Tours, 1884. La Vieille France. Tours, 1882

Le Vavasseur, A. Valeur Historique de la Chronique d'Arthur de Richemont par Guillaume Gruel Bibt. Éc. Chartes, vois. xlvii., xlvin. Paris, 1886, 1887.

Le Verdier, P. Documents relanfs à la Confrérie de la Passion de Rouen. In Soc de l'Hist de Normandie, Mélanges, ser 1. Rouen, 1891.

- L'Entrée du Rot Louis XII et de la Reise à Rouen. Rouen, 1900.

Lewis, C. T and Shart, C. Latin Dectionary. Oxford, 1900. Lewis, J. History of the Church of Faversham. 1727

Lewis, S. Topographical dictionary. 4 vols. London, 1831.

Leyden, Jan van (d. 1504). Chronicon Hollandine Comitum et Episcoporum Ultrajectensium. In F. Sweert, Resum Beigicarum Anasles, vol. 1

Lhomel, G. Edits de Police de la Ville de Montreuil-sur-Mer (1419-1519) Abbeville, 1903.

- Le Bailiage Royal de Montreuil sur Mer (1360-1790). Abbeville, 1903. - Le Curtulure de la Vide de Montreial-nur-Mer Abbevale, 1904. Liber Albus, Ed. H. T. Riley R.S. 2 vois, London, 1859-62. Trans. H. T.

Riley. London, 1861.

Liber Custumuraru, Ed. H. T. Riley, R.S. 2 vols. London, 1859-62.

Liber Niger Scaccarl., Ed. T. Hearne, a vols. London, 1721

Licquet, F. Notice sur Auen Blarchard. In Precis de l'Académie royale de Rouen, Rouen, 1828.

Lincoin's I'm Black Books. Ed. W. P. Baudon. 4 vols. London, 1897-1901. Lindenblatt, J., von der Pusihe, Jahrbücher oder Chronik. Königsberg, 1823. Lindner, 16. Destische Geschickte unter den Habsburgern und Luzemburgern (1273-1437). 2 vols. Statigart, 1893 Lingard, J. (1771-1851). The History of England to 1688. 10 vols. London,

Lion, J. Viell Haidin. St Omer, #857

Lipicomb, G (1775-1846). History and Antiquities of the County of Bucking bam, 4 vols. London, 1847.

Literae Cautuanenses. Ed. J. B. Sheppard. R.S. 3 vols. London, 1887-9. Little, A. G. Mediaeval Wales. London, 1902

The Grey Fram in Oxford, Oxford Historica, Society, Oxford, 1892.

Littlehales, H. The Prymer or Prayer Book of the Lay People in the Middle Ages. 2 vols. London, 1891-2

— Chauce 's Pilgrims Was from London to Canterbury London, 1896. Littré, M. P. E. Dictionnaire de la langue française. 5 vols. Paris, 1863-77 Llorente, T. Valencia. 2 vols. Barcelona, r187-9.

Lloyd, E. M. The Herse of Archers at Creey In Eng. Hist Rev vol. 1 London, 1895.

- A Review of the History of Infantry London, 1908

Lobineau, G A. (1666-1727). Histoire de Bretagne. 2 vols. Pans, 1707.

- Les Yies des Saints de Bretagne ; voh. Paris, 1836-8

Loch Cé, Annals of, Ed. W. M. Hennessey, R.S. 2 vols. London, 1871. Locre, F. de (or Locranos) (1571-1614). Chronicon Beigicum, Arras, 1616. Lodge, F. C. Serfdom in the Bordelais. In Eng. Hist Rev. vol. xviii. London, Gescony under English Rule. London, 1926.

Lodge, J. (d. 1774). The Pecrage of Ireland. 7 vols. London, 1789. Lodge, R. The Close of the Middle Ages (1273-1494). London, 1901.

Loftic, W. J. Memorials of the Savoy. London, 1878. - The History of London, 2 vols. London, 1884. - The inns of Court and Chancery. London, 1895.

Löher, F jakobža von Bayern und ihre Zest. 2 vols Nördlingen, 1862-9. - Beiträge zur Geschichte der Jatobäa von Bayern. In Abhandlungen der Historischen Classe der Königl. Bayerischen Akad. der Wissenschaften, vol. x. Munich, 1867.

Lollards, The. Rel. Tract Soc. London, 1843.

London Migazine. The. London, 1820-9

Long, H. L. A. Visit to the Battlefields of Cressy and Agincourt. In New Monthly Magazine and Humorist, vols. Izzzia, Izzziv. London, 1849.

Longnon, A. Paris sous la Dominanon anglaise (1420-1436). Paris, 1878.

- Atlas historique de la France. Pare, 1885.

- Les Limites de la France et l'Étenduc de la Domination Anglaise à l'Époque de la Mission de Jeanne d'Arc Pans, 1875.

- Fritrée de la reme Isabeau et du dac de Hourgogne à Paris. In Bull Soc.

de l'Hist, de Paris, vol. 1. Paris, 1874.

Lopes, H. (1617-1694). L'Église Métropolitaine et Primatiale St André de Bourdeaux. Ed. J. Callon. 2 vols. Bordeaux, 1882.

Loserth, J. Geschichte des späteren Mittealters; von 1197-1492. Munich.

Wielif and Hus. Tr M J Evans. London, 1884

..... Die Kirchkehe Reformbewegung in England im 210 Jahrhündert und ihre Aufnahme und Durchführung in Böhmen in Vorträge und Aufsätze aus der Comercius Gesellschaft. Leipzig, 1893 Les Ries y Villaite, R. A. de. Burges. 4 vols. Barcelong, 1888 91.

Lot, H. Des Frais de Justice au x ve siècle. In Bibl. Et. Chartes, vol. xxxiii. Рати, т872.

Loth, A. Les Cathédrales de France. Paris, 1900.

Lottin, D. Recherches historiques de la V.Le d'Otléans. 3 vols. Orléans, 1836-8

Louandre, C. L. Les Arts Somptuaires. 4 vols. Paris, 1852-8.

Louandre, F. C. Histoire d'Abbeville et du Comté de Ponthieu. 2 vols. Paris, 1844-5.

Lounsbury, T R. Studies in Chancer, his life and writings. 3 vols. London, 5 8 g a Low, C. R. Bittles of the British Army. London, 1890.

- Her Majesty's Navy, 3 vols. London.

Low, S. J. and Pulling, F. S. Dictionary of English History London, 1897.

91-2

Lower, M. A. A Compendious History of Susiex. 2 vols. Lewes, 1870.

— Historica, and Genealogical Notices of the Pelham Family. Lewes, 1873.

Lowth, R. Life of William of Wykeham. Oxford, 1777

Loyens, H. (1500-1684). Brevis et succincta synopus rerum gestarum ab serenissimis Lotharingiae, Brabantise et Limburgi Ducibus. Brusseis, 1672.

Lucas, C. P. West Africa. in Historica. Geography of the British Colonies. Oxford, 1000

Oxford, 1000 Lucas, E. V. A Wanderer in London. London, 1906.

Luce, S. (1833-1892). La France pendant la Guerre de Cent Ans. 2 vols. Paris, 1890-3

— Histoire de Bertrand du Guesclin et de son Époque. Paris, 1876. Jeanne d'Arc à Domeiny. Paris, 1886.

Lucing, J. C (1662-1740) Codes Germanue D plomaticus, a vols, Frankfuri, Luctzow, Count F. The Story of Frague. London, 1901.

- The Lafe and Times of Master John Huss London, 1909.

Luzarche, V. Leures historiques des Archives communales de la Ville de Tours. Tours, 1861

Lydgate,) (c. 1370-1452). The Pilgrimage of the Life of Man, transl from Guillaume de Deguileville, Ed. F. J. Furnivall. E.E.T.S. London, 1899-1901.

- The Fall of Princes. London, 1954.

 A Selection from the Minor Poems of. Ed. J. O. Halliwell. Percy Soc. London, 1840

- The Temple of Glas. Ed. J. Schick. E.E.T.S. London, 1891.
Troy Book. Ed. H. Bergen. E.E.T.S. 2 parts. London, 1906-8.

- Minor Poems Ed H N MacCracken, London, 1911.

— The Two Nightingale Poems. Ed. O. Glauning. E.E.T.S. London, 1906. Lydgate, J. and Burgh, B. (d. 1483). Teories of old Philosoffres. Ed. R. R. Steele. L.L.T.S. London, 1894.

Lyndwood, W (c. 1376-1446). Provinciale seu Constitutiones Anglue. Oxford, 1670.

Lysons, D. Environs of London, 2 vols. London, 1811.

Lysons, D. and S. Magna Braannia. 6 vols. London, 1806-22.

Lyte, H. C. Maxwell. History of the University of Oxford, London, 1885.

--- Durister and its Lords, 1066-1881. Exeter, 1882.

 Two Chartubries of the Augustman Priory of Bruton and the Clumac Priory of Montacute. Somerset Record Soc. Exeter, 1894.

— Catalogue of MSS, and other objects in the Museum of the Public Record Office. London, 1909

— Historica, Notes on the Use of the Great Seal of England. London, 1926 MacCracten, H. N. The Lydgate Canon. In Philological Society's Transactions. London, 1908.

The Earl of Warwich's Virgini. In Publications of the Modern Language. Association of America, vol. 2222. Baltimore, 1912.

MacCulloch, J. R. (1789-1864). Geographical, Staustical and Historical Dictionary, 4 vols. London, 1866.

Dictionary, 4 vols. London, 1866.

MacDonald, A. The Clan Donald. 2 vols. Inverness, 1896-1900.

Macturare, C. The Great Battles of the British Army. London, 1843

Mactariane, C. and Thorason, J. The Comprehensive History of England. 4 vols. London, 1876-8.

Google

Mackenzie, E. An Historical, Topographical and Descriptive View of the County of Northumberland, 2 vols. Newcastle, 1825.

Mackintosh, J (1765-1832). History of England. 2 vols. London, 1853. Mackin, H. W. The Brasses of England. London, 1907.

Macquoid, K. S. Through Normandy. London, 1874

Macray, W. D. Annals of the Bedleian Library. Oxford, 1890.

Early Dedications to Englishmen by Foreign Authors and Editors. In B bliographia, vol. i. London, 1895.

Madden, F. Illuminated Ornaments selected from Manuscripts and early Printed Books. London, 1833

Magasin Pittoresque, Le. Paris, 1833, &c.

Magen, A. (1818- 893) Jurades de la Ville d'Agen (1345-1355). Auch, 1894 Mahul, A. J. Cartulaire d'Archives des Communes de l'ancien Diocèse de Carcassonne. 6 vols. Paris, 1857-71.

Maidstone, C. (c. 1390-1456) Tracts. Ed. Ch. Wordsworth Henry Bradshaw Society. London, 1894.

Maihew, E (1570-1625). Sanctiss mi Patriarchiae Benedich Trophæa. 3 pts. Rheims, 1625

Maillard, F. Le Gibet de Montfaucon Paris, 1863

Mazilard de Chambure, C. (1772-1841). Dijon ancien et moderne. Dijon, 1840. --- Vovage pittoresque en Bourgogne 2 vols, Dijon, 1871, 1835.

Manonobe, A. Inventaire sommante des Archives départementales. Tarn-et-Garonne, Montauban, 1894, &c.

Maidand F W Roman Canon Law in the Church of England. London, T 8Q8.

Mantiand, F. W. and Turner, G. F. Year Books of Edward H. 4 volts. Selden

Sec. London 1903-7.

Mariland, W. (1603-1757) History and Survey of London. London, 1756.

Marzeroy, P. G. Joly de. Trané sur l'art des Sieges et les Machines des Anciens. Paris, 1778.

Major (co Mar), J. Historia Majoris Britanniae. Paris, 1921. Edinburgh, 1740. Major, R. H. (1818-1891). Life of Prince Henry of Portugal. London, 1868. The Discoveries of Prince Heary the Navigator and their Results. London,

Makcolm, J. P. Anecdotes of the Manners and Customs of London. London, 18LC

Maiden, A. R. An Officia. Account of the Battle of Agencourt. In The Ancestor, vel. xi London, 1904.

Malden, H. E. English Records. A Companion to the History of England London, 1894.

The Cely Papers. London, 1900.

Mâle, E. L'Art religieux du xitie siècle en France. Paris, 1902.

Ma o, H. Boulogne-sur-Mer du Moyen Age jusqu'à nos Jours. le Boulogneaur-Mer et la Region Boulonnaise. 2 vols. Boulogne, 1899.

Maste-Brun, V. A. Histoire de Marcoussis. Paris, 1867.

Mamerot, 5. (d. after 1491). La Chronique Mattmiane. Paris, 1502 Mancel, G. Le Calvados pritoresque et monumental. Caen, 1847.

Mander, Carel van (1548-1606). Le Livre des Peintres. Ed. H. Hymans. 2 vols. Paris, 1884, 1885

Mandet, F. L'ancien Velay. In A. Michel, vol in-Mandeville, The Travels of Sir John Ed A. W. Pollard, London, 1900.

Gougle

Manners and Meak in the Olden Times. Ed. F. J. Furnivall, E.E. T.S. London. 1868.

Manning, J. A. Lives of the Speakers of the House of Commons. London, 18¢1.

Manning, O and Bray, W. History and Topography of the county of Surrey 3 vols London, 1804, 1814

Manu, J. D. (1/92-1769) Sectorem Conciliorum nove Collectio. Florence, Venice, Paris, Sec., 2757, Sec.

Marchal, A. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales : Meuse Paris, 1875, Ac

Marchese, V. F. Laves of the most enument punters, aculptors and architects of the order of S. Dominic, Tr. C. P. Mechan, 2 vols. Dublin, 1852.

Marco Polo, The Book of Ed. H. Yace 2 vols. London, 187 I.

Marcotti. Sre Leader

Marcou, P. F. Catalogue rasonné. Pilas du Trocadéro. Musée de Sculpture comparée Paris, 1892.

Marest, T. († 367-1434), Comptes de Ed. P. Le Cacheux, Rosen, 1965 Margry, P. La Conquête et les Conquérants des Res Canaries. Paris, 1896. Marana, I de (1537-1624). Historia de Rebus Hispaniae. 4 vols. The Hague, Marmon, L. (b. c. 1460). De rebus Hapanne memorabilibus Hispanicarum Scriptores, vol 3. Franklurt, $579.

Maris, A. Tybure Tree. Its History and Annals. London, 1408.

Marie, R. van. Un Chanceller de France sous Charles VI. Henry de Marie. Paris, 1910.

Marleburgh, H. (c. 1421). Chromicle of Ireland (1406-1421). Trans in Ware, Historie of Ireland, pirt it. London, 1633 Marner, M and Du Chesne, A. Bibliotheca Clanucenus, 2 parts. Paris, 1614. Marryat, H. One Year in Sweden. 2 vols. London, 1862.

Mariden R G. The Mytheral Town of Orwell. In Eng. Hist Rev. vol. 213. Landon, 1906.

Marshall, E. The Early History of Woodstock Manor and its Environs. Oxford, 1871.

Marshall, J. The Armals of Tennis. London, 1878.

Marsy, Counte de. Le Mythe de la Mère Lusine. In Bulletin Critique, vol. v. Paris, 1884

Mart. Col.] Martère, E and Durand, U Veterum Scripterum Collectio Ampussima. 9 vols. 1724-33.

Martène, E and Durand, U. Thesaurus Anecdotorum 5 vois Paris, 1717

Martial de Pans, dit d'Auvergne (1440-1508). Les Vigiles de la Mort du Roy. Charles VII. 2 vols. Pazza, 1724.

Martin, A. Histoire de Fécump 2 vols. Fécump, 1893-4.

- Origines de Havre: Histoire de Leure et d'Ingouville. 2 vou. Fécump, т 89 г.-- 3

Un patriote Cauchon arcusé d'Espionnage en 1415. Havre, 1908. - Histoire du Chef de Caux et de Ste Adresse. Fétamp, (B8).

Martin, A. and Cahier, Ch. Monographie de la Cathédrale de Bourges. 2 vols. Paris, 1841-4

Martin, Heari Histoire de France, 17 vols. Paris, 1878. Martin, Henry. Le Boccace de Jean sans Peur. Branch, 1911.

— Les Ministerates Français. Paris, 1906.

Martyn, W. History and Lives of Twenty Kings of England Exeter, 1615.

Mascall, R. (d. 1416). Registrora. Ed. J. H. Parry London, 1917.

Maskell, W. Monumenta nitualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae. 3 vois Oxford, 1882 Mas Latric, M J L. de Commerce et Expédit, ons militaires de la France et de Venise au Moyen Age. In Collection de Documents inédits sur l'Histoire de France Mélanges Historiques, vol. iu. Paris, 1880

Mason, R. H. History of Norfolk London, 1884.

Masseville, L. Le Vavesseer de. Histoire somma re de Normandie. 6 vols. Rouen, 1691-1704.

Massiou, D. Histoire de la Saintonge et de l'Aunis. 5 vols. Paris, 1836-8. Masson, A. L. Jean Gerson. Sa Vie, son Temps, ses Œgyres. Lyons, 1894. Masson, G. Mediaeval France, London, 1888.

Mathews, J. H. History of the Panishes of St Yves, Lelant, Towednack and Zennor. London, 1892. Matthews, T. Welsh Records in Paris. Carmarthen, 1910.

Matton, A. Inventaire sommaire des Archives de l'Hôtel Dieu de Chaupy (Aisne), Paris, 1866

Maulde la Clavière. M. A. R. de Histoire de Louis XII. 6 vols. Paris, 1889-91 Une vieilie Ville Normande Caudebec-en-Cruz Paris, 1879.

Maurice, C. E. Lives of English Popular Leaders in the Middle Ages. London, 1871.

Maurice, S. Richmond Hill. London, 1807.

Maxwell, H. A History of the House of Douglas. 2 vols. London, 1902.

Mayo, J. H. Medais and Decorations of the British Army and Navy 2 vols. London, 1897.

Mazas, A. Vies des Grands Capitaines français du Moyen Age. 7 vols. Paris, 1828-g —— Cours d'histoire de France. 4 vols. Paris, 1840. Mazure, A. Tableau historique de l'Auvergne jusqu'au xive siècle. In Annales d'Auvergne, vol. xvn. Clermont-Ferrand, 1844.

Mazzarosa, A. Storia di Lucca 2 vols. 1833

McPadden, F. Vestiges of Old Southampton. Southampton, 1891.

Medical Magazine. London, 1892, &c.

Medicis (c. 1475-1565), Chroniques de. Ed. A. Chassaing. 2 vols. Le Puy, 1869, 1874

Meindre, A. Histoire de Paris et de son Influence en Europe 5 vols. Paris, 1854-5

Melsa. See Burton, T.

Melusine. Revue de Mythologie. Ed. H. Gaidoz and E. Rolland, 10 vols. Pans, 1878-1901

Mély, A. and Bishop, E. Bibliographie Générale des Inventaires imprimés. 3 vols. Paris, 1892-5.

Memorials of Henry V. Ed C. A. Cole, R.S. London, 1858.

Memorials of St Edmund's Abbey Ed T Arnold, R.S., 3 vols. London, 1890-6

Menagier de Peris. Ed. J. Pichon. Soc. des Bibliophiles français. 2 vols. Peris, 1846-7.

Ménant, J. Mémoire sur les Portifications de Cherbourg par le Maréchal Vauban. Paris, 1857.

Ménard, L. (1706-1767 Histoire civ le, ecclésiastique, et littéraire de la Ville de Nîmes. 7 vols. Nîmes, 1874-5

Menerval, E. Paris depuis ser Origines jusqu'à nos Jours. 3 vols. Paris, 889-97.

Menteith, Red Book of. Ed. W. Friser. 2 vols. Edinburgh, 1880.

Mercadé, E (d. 1440). Le Mystère de la Passion. Ed. J. M. Richard. Paris,

Merk, C. A History of Dieppe. Paris, 1909

Merlet, L. Biographie de Jein de Montaigu. In Bibl. Éc Chartes, voi x ii. Paris,

Merriman, R. B. Life and Letters of Thomas Cromwell. 2 vols. Oxford, 1903. Métau. C. Cartulaise de l'Abbaye Cardinale de la Trimité de Vendôme. 5 vois. Paris, 1893-7.

Metz, Guillebert de (d. after 1434). Description de la Ville de Paris au xvemècle. Ed. Lezoux de Lincy. Paris, 1855.

Bleudon, G.de (c. 1350-c. 1428), Faits et Gestes de Ed. E. Maignien. Grenoble, 1807

Meung, Jean de (c. 1260—c. 1320) L'Art de Chevalene. Ed. U. Robert. Soc. des Anciens Textes français. Paris, 1897.

Meunier, F. Essai sur la Vie et les Œuvrages de Nichole Oresme. Paris, 1857. Meuse. See Marchal

Meyer, J. (1491-1553). Commentarii i ve Annales terum Flandmerum. Antwerp, 1561.

Meyer, P. L'Entrevue d'Ardres, în Ann. Bull. Soc de l'Hist de France, vol. zvin. Paris, 1881

Meyrich, S. R. (1783-1848). Ancient Armour. 5 vois. London, 1824-50
 Heraldic visitations of Wales. By Lewys Dwnn or Doune. 2 vols. Llandovery, 1846.

Mézeray, F. E. de. Histoire de France. 3 vols Paris, 1643-51.

Machel, A. L'Ancienne Auvergne et le Velay. 4 vols. Moulins, 1843-4.

Michel, F. Les Écossais en France. 2 vols. London, 1862.

Rapport sur les anciens monuments de l'Histoire et de la Littérature de la France qui se trouvent dans les Bibliothèques de l'Angleterre, Paris, 1838.

Michelet, J. (1798-1874). Histoire de France. 19 vols. Paris, 1875-8.

Michelet, L. Essais historiques et statistiques sur le Département de Scine-et-Marine. 6 paris. Melun, 1841.

Michiels, J. A. X. Histoire des Peintres. École Flamande. Paris, 1864.

Mieris, F. van (1689-1761). Groot Charterboek der Gzaven van Holland, van Zeeland, en Heeren van Vriesland. 4 vols. Leyden, 1753-6.

Millar, J. H. A Literary History of Scotland, London, 1903

Malin de Grandmasson, A. L. Antiquités Nationales. 5 vols. Paris, 1790-9. Mariar, H. H. (1791-1868). History of Latin Christianity. 9 vols. London, 1868.

Annals of St Paul's Cathedral. London, 1868.

Milner, J. (1752-1826). History and Survey of the Antiquenes of Winchester. 2 vols. Winchester, 1798-1801

 An Historical and Critical Inquiry into the Existence and Character of St George, London, 1792.

M naheu, J. (d. after 1617). Ductor in Languas. London, 1617.

M racus (i.e. Le M re, A.) (1573-1640) Resum Belgicarum Chronicon, Answerp, 1636.

Mrk or Mrc.] Instructions for Parish Priess. Ed. E. Peacock. E.E.T.S. London, 1868.

Marot, L. Les Insurrections urbaines au Début du Règne de Charles VI. Paris, 1906.

- Le Procès de Maître Jean Fosoris Chanoine de Notre Dame de Paris (1415-1416). In Mem. Soc. de l'Hist. de Pans, vol. 1370. Paris, 1901.

- Un Trousseau Royal à la Fin du xivé siècle. Ibid. vol. xxix. Paris, 1902. Isabelle de France, Reine d'Angleterre, Comtesse d'Angoulême, Duchesse d'Orleans (1389-1409). In Revue d'Histoire Diplomatique, années avia, ziz. Paris, 1904-ç.

- Le Procès du boîteux d'Orgemont. In Moyen Age, ser. II, vols xiv, xv.

Paris, 1919, 1911.

 Palements et Quittances de Travaux exécutés sous le règne de Charles VI. In Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. lizzi. Paris, 1920.

Dom Bévy et les comptes des trésoriers des guerres [bid. vol. 1111] Рапя, 1925.

Mirot, L and Déprez, E. Les Ambassades anglaises pendant la Guerre de Cent. Ans (1327-1450). In Bibl. Ec Chartes, vois lix-lii Paris, 1898-1900.

Mirror for Magistrates. Ed. J. Haslewood. 3 vols. London, 1815.

Macellanea Genealogica et Heraldica Sie Howard, J. J.

Mayn, R (d c. 1462) The Fire of Love, and the Mending of Life or the Rule of Living. Transl from Richard Rolle of Hampole. Ed. R. Harvey E E.T.S. London, 1896.

Moberly, G. H. Lafe of William of Wykeham. Winchester, 1893. Moke, H. G. (1803-1862). Histoire de la Belgique Brussels, 1881.

Molanden, Boucher de Jacques Boucher neur de Guilleville et de Mézières. in Mem de la Soc. archéologique et historique de l'Oriéanan, vol. xxu. Orléans, 1889.

Molimer, A. Les Sources de l'histoire de France. 6 vols. Paris, 1901-6.

Mohmer, C. L'inquisition dans le Midi de la France au xiii et au xivo nècles Paris, 1880

Mombert, J. L. English Versions of the Bible. London, 1907.

Monasticon Anglicarum. See Dugdale, W.

Monfar y Sors, D. Historia de los Condes de Urgel. 2 vols. Barcelons, 1853. Monget C. La Chartreuse de Dijon 2 vols. Montreuit sur Mer, 1898, 1900. Morlezon, J. J. (1800–1859). Historic de la Gascogne, 6 vols. Auch, 1846–50. Monnier, P. Le Quattrocento, 2 vols. Paris, 1901.

Monson, W. (1569-1643). Naval Tracis. Ed. M. Oppenheim. 2 vols. London, 1902.

Monstier, A. du (1607–1662). Neustria Pia seu de omnibus et singulis Abbatus et Prioratibus totius Normanniae. Ed. J. Gallemant. Rouen 1663.

Monstrelet, Enguerrand de (c. 1390-1453). Chronique. Pans, 1603.

— (Invol. II.) Ed. L. Douet d'Areq. Soc. Hist. France. 6 vols. Pars, 1857-62.

Montagnac, E. de. Les Ardennes. 2 vols. Paris, 1874 Montandré, Le Combat de (May 19, 1401). La Rochelle, 1898

Montégut, E. Souvenire de Bourgogne. Pans, 1886.

Montfaucon, B. L'Antiquité Expliquée 10 vols. Paris, 1719-14.

---- Les Monuments de la Monarchie Française. 5 vols. Paris, 1729-33. Montgomery, H. H. History of Kennington and its Neighbourhood London, Montgomeryshire Collections. Powysland Club. London, 1867, &c Month, The London, 1864, &c.

Montile, L. de Les Armes de Bourgogne et du Chancelser Robin à l'Hôtel Dieu de Beaune. In Mém Soc. de l'Hirt., de l'Archéologie et de Landrature de Beaune Beaune, 1879.

Montreu I, J. de (1354-1418). Epistolae Selectae. In Maniere, Collectio, vel. ii. Mont St Michel, Chronique du (1341-1468). Ed S. Luce 2 vols Pans, 1879. Minumenta Franciscana Ed J S. Brewer and R. Howlett, R.S. 1 vob. London, 1868, 1882

Mon-men al Brass box etc. Transactions. Cambridge and London, 1867-1914. Moore, A. W. A History of the Isle of Man. 2 vols. London, 2000.

Moore, N. The History of the Study of Medicine in the British isles. Oxford,

- The Book of the Foundation of St Bartholomew's Church in Lendon. London, 1886.

Moore, T. The History of Ireland. 4 vols. London, 1835.

Morant, P. History of Fasex, 2 vols. London, 1768.

Moranvillé, C. Rémontrances de l'Université et de la Ville de Parit à Charlet VI sur le Gouvernement du Royaume. Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. la. Paris, 1890.

Morany lle, H. Extrain des Journaux du Tresor (1945-1419). Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. 12 2. Paris, 1888.

Monce, P. H. Histoire ecclésiassique et civile de Bretagne, a vols. Paris, 1750-6. - Mémo res pour servir de preuves à l'Histoire ecclesastique et civile de Bretagne, 3 vols. Paris, 1743-6.

Morillot, L. La Question des Restes de Jean sans Peur. Dijon, 1905.

Morin, L. R. H stoire de Louviers, a parts. Rouen, 1811

Morient, I. Le Havre ancien et moderne. 2 vols. Havre, 1826.

- Voyage historique et pittoresque de Havre à Rouen, Rouen, 1836.

- Le Havre et son Arrondissement. Havre, 1841.

- Le Cap de la Heve, Eva de Vitanval ou l'Écharpe d'Azur. Havre, 1861.

Morley, H. English Writers. 8 vols. London, 1887-92.

Morosiri, Antonio (b. c. 1357). Chronique. Extraiti relat fisă l'Histoire de France. Ed. G Lesevre-Pontalis. Soc. de l'Hist, de France 4 vols. Para, 1898-1901.

Morrs, J. E. The Weish Wars of Edward I. Oxford, 1901

— The Archers at Crécy. In Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. 831 London, 1897
Morra, J. E. and Jordan, H. An Introduction to the Study of Local History and Antiquities. London, 1910.

Mous lard, J. M. Vie de St Vincent Ferner. Vannes, 1856.

Moule, T (1781-1851) and Harding, G. P. (d. 1853). Antiquities in Westminister Abbey. London, 1825.

Mowat, R. B. Henry V. London, 1919.

Moyen Age, Le. Paris, 1888, &c.

Mueritz, E. Claus Sluter et la Sculpture franco-flamande au xv^e siècle. In Magasin Pittoresque, ser. it, vol. vii. Paris, 1880.

Munier-Johan, J. Vicux avocats, vieux procès. Paris, 1870

Munimenta Academica, Ed. H. Anstey R.S. 2 vols. London, 1868

Munster, S. (1489–1552) Cosmographia Basie, 1545

Muraton, L. A. (1672-1750). Scriptores Rerum Italicarum, 27 vola. Milan, 1723 &c.

Murray, J. Handbook for Travellers in Worcestershire and Rerefordshire. London, 1804.

Murras J. A. H. A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles, Oxford, 1888 Rc.

Murray-Smith, A. The Roll-Call of Westmiester Abbey. London, 1902. Musgrave, G. M. (1798-1853). By roads and Battlefields in Picardy. London, 1861.

—— A Rambie through Normandy London, 1855.

Myroure of Oure Ladye. Ed. J. M. Blunt. E.E.T.S. London, 1873.

Nagerel, J. L'Histoire et Chronique de Normandie. Rouen, 1589 Namèche, A. J. Histoire Nationale. 4 vols. Louvain, 1879-82

Jean IV et la Fondation de l'Université de Louvein. Louvein, 1888.

Napier, H. A. Historical Notices of the Parishes of Swyncombe and Ewelme Oxford, 1858.

Nares, R. A Glossery of words, phrases, &c. in the works of English authors. Ed. J. O. Halliwell and T. Wright. London, 1905

Nash, T. R. History of Worcestershire. 2 vols. London, 1781.

Nasmith, J. Itmeraria Symonis Simeonis et Willelmi de Worcestre. Cambridge, 1778.

Nauclerus, J. (2430-1510). Memorabilium omnis aetatis et omnium gentium. Chronici commentarii. Tübingen. 2 vols. 1516.

Navarrete, A. Historia maritima militar de España Madrid, 1901. Neade, W (c. 1625) The Double Armed Man. London, 1625

Neale, J. M. (1818-1866). Mediaeval Preschers and Mediaeval Preaching. London, 1856.

Illustrations of Monumental Brasses. Cambridge Camdon Society. Cambridge, 1846.

Neale, J. P. The History and Antiquities of Westminster Abbey London, 1856. Neale, J. P. and Brayley, E. W. History of the Abbey Church of St Peter's, Westminster. 2 vos. London, 1818.

Netherditt, Autographs of the Kings and Queens and Emment Men of Great Britain. London, 1835

Netter, T., of Walden. Doctrinale Fide: Ecclesia. 3 vols. Venice, 1571. Also ed. B. Blanciotti. 3 vols. Venice, 1757-9.

Neuville, D. Le Parlement roya, à Postiers (1418-1436). In Revue historique, vol. vi. Paris, 1878

 Entrommaire des Archives de la Marine amérieures à la Révolution. Paris, 1898.

Newcourt, R. Repertorium Ecclesiasticum. 2 vols. London, 1708.

Newhall, R. A. The English Conquest of Normandy, 1416-1424. New Haven, 1924.

Newman, G On the History of the Decline and final Extinction of Leprosy in the British Islands. London, 1895.

Newman, W. L. The Correspondence of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester and Pier Candido Decembri. In Eng. Hist Rev vols xix, xx. London, 1904, 1905.

Nichols, J. (1745-1826). History of the County of Leitester. 4 vols. London, 1795-1818.

—— Six Old Plays 2 woli. London, 1779.

- The Progress and Public Processions of Queen Elizabeth. 4 vols London, 1788-1821.

Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica (with continuation entitled "Miscel tancous Autiquities"). 10 vols. London, 1780–1800

Nichols, J. G. (1806-1873). An original appointment of Sir John Fastolfe to be Keeper of the Bastilie of St Anthony at Paris, 1421. In Archaeologia, vol. zhv. London, 1873.

Google

Nichols, J. G. (1806-1871). Observations on the Heraidic Devices on the Effigies of Richard II and his Queen in Westminster Abbey. In Archaeologii, vol. xxic. London, 1843.

Autographs of Royal and Noble Personages in English History. London, See Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica.

Nicolas, N. H. (199-1848). History of the Battle of Agricourt. 2 parts. London, 1833

- The Chronology of History. London, 1844.

History of the Orders of Knighthood, 4 vols. London, 1842.

- Lafe of Chaucer. In Aldane Edition of Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, vol. i. London, 1845

- History of the Royal Navy 2 vols. London, 1847.

Nicolson, J. and Burn, R. History and Antiquities of the Counties of Westmorland and Cumberland 2 vols. London, 1777.

Niem, Th. de (1340-1418). De Scismate. Ed. G. Erler. Leipzig, 1890.

- Viu Papie Johannia XXIII In H. Meibom, Rerum Germanicarum tom 111, vol. i. Helmstadt, 1688.

Niethe,] F W Die Schlacht bei Agincourt Berlin, 1906

Natich, R. W. (1818-1880). Geschichte der deutschen Volces. 2 voh. Leipzig. £881-5.

[Noblesse] Boke of Noblesse, addressed to King Edward IV on his Invasion of France in 1479 Ed J G Nichols. Roxburghe Club. London, 1860.

Noces, B. (d. after 1798), Registre de : In Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. In. Paris, 1891. Nodier, C. Voyage pittoresque et romantique dans l'ancienne France. 17 vols. Paris, 1435, &c.

Noel, A. Souverus patieresques de la Touraine. Paris, 1814.

Noel, H. John Wise file. His Life, Times and Followers. London, 1866. Moorthoack, J. A New History of London including Westminster and Southwark. Lordon, 1773

Nordense old, N. A. F. Pereplus. An Essay on the Early History of Charts and Suring Directions. Ed F. A. Bather Stockholm, 1897.

Norgate, K. England under the Angevin Kings. 2 vols. London, 1887. [Norm Chron] Chrorique de Normandie Ed B. Williams. In Gesta Herrici. Quenti. Also ed. ai "Lei Cronicquei de Normandie" by A. Hellot. Rosen, Normandie Monumentale et Pittoresque (Neine-Inférieure). Harre, 1893. Northern Convocation, Records of the Ed. G. W Kachin Surfees Soc. Durham, 1907.

Notes and Queries. London, 1850, &c.

[Nott. Rec] Records of the Borough of Nottingham 4 vols. London, 1881-9 Nouvelle Biographie Générale. 46 vols. Paris, 1852, &c., [Nouv Rev.] Nouvelle Revue Historique de Droit Français et Étimiger. Paris, #876, Acc.

Novilleau, P. La Chapelle de Nostre Dame du Chevet en la Bassique de St Martin. et la Famille La Meingre Boucicaut (1363-1490). In Bull. Soc. Archéologique de Touraine, vol. ii. Toura, 1872.

Noyes. If H. Roll of a bubidy levied in its Henry IV as far as relating to the County of Sussex. In Sussex Archaeol. Coll vol. z. London, 1858.

Numismatic Chronicle. London, 1836, &c.

Nürnberg Chroniken. In Chroniken der deutschen Stadte 3 volls. Leipzig, # 862.

Ocland, C (d c 1590). Anglorum Proelia. London, 1582

O'Con acr, D. St Fatrick's Furgatory. Dublin, 1895.

Odolant Desnos, P. J. (1722-1801) Chronologie historique des grands Baillis du Comte et Duche d'Alençon Ed. E. F. Courtilloles. Paris, 1872.

Mémoires historiques sur la Ville d'Alençon et ses Seigneurs. 2 vols.
 Alençon, 1787.

O'Flanagan, R. Lives of the Lord Chancellors and Keepers of the Privy Seal of Ireland. 2 vols. London, 1870.

Olden, T. The Church of Ireland. London, 1892

Ohver, G. (1781-1861). History of the City of Exeter. Exeter, 1861.

Monasticon Diercesis Exoniensis. London, 1846.
 Lives of the Bishops of Exeter. Exeter, 1861.

Ollard, S. L. and Crosse, G. A. Dichonary of English Church History London, 1913.

Ollier, E. Essai sur la Coqueluche. Montpellier, 1835.

Oman, C W. C. A History of the Art of War in the Middle Ages. London, 1898 Second edition. z vols. London, 1924.

- A History of England, London, 1895.

- England and the Hundred Years' War London, 1898

— The History of England from the Accession of Richard II to the Death of Richard III (1377-1485). London, 1906.

— Warwich the Kingmaker, London, 1891.

Omont, H. Catalogue Général des Manuscrits Français. Paris, 1895, &c.

Antiquités et Guerres de Juiss de Josèphe. Paris, 1906.
 Livre de Merveilles. Paris, 1907

Oppenheim, M. A History of the Administration of the Royal Navy, and of Merchant Shipping in Relation to the Navy. London, 1896.

Naval Accounts and Inventories of the Reign of Henry VII. London, 1896.

Oppolzer, Th. Canon der Finsternisse. Vienna, 1887.

[Ord. Priv. Co.] Proceedings and Ordinances of the Privy Council of England. Ed. N. H. Nicolas. 7 vois. London, 1834.

Ordeh, T. F. Shatespeare's London. London, 1897.

Ordonnances des Rois de France de la Trossième Race 22 vols. Paris, 1733-1847

Original Letters Illustrative of English History Ed H Ellis, 3 series. London, 1814-46.

Ormerod, G. History of Cheshire, 3 vols. London, 1819. Orthographic Gallice Ed. J Stürzinger. Heilbrohn, 1884.

Orvide, Maurey d'. Recherches historiques sur la Ville, les Évêques et la Diocèse de Séez. Sees, 1829.

O'Sullevan, P. (1990-c. 1660) Historiae Catholicae Iberniae compendium. Ed. M. Kelly, Dublin, 1850.

Othorus et Ottoboni Cardinalium Constitutiones legatinae. In Lyndwood, Provinciale.

Otterbourne, Thos. Chronica Regum Angliae. Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1732 Oud.n, R. C. (1638-1717). Commentarius de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis. 3 vols. Leipzig, 1722.

Overall, W. H. Some Particulars as to the Early Maps of London. In Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries. London, 1873.

Owen, H. and Blakeway, J. B. History of Shrewsbury. 2 vols. London, 1825.

Oxenford, J. The Illustrated Book of French Songs. London, 1877

[P.D.L.] Description Archéologique des Suntes Chapelles de l'Auvergne By P.D.L. Clermont-Ferrand, 1864

[P. Plo] The Vision of William concerning Piers Plowman. Ed. W. W. Steat

E E T.S. 4 vols. London, 1867-85

Page, J (fl. 1418). The Siege of Rouen. In Historical Collections of a London. Citizen. Ed. J. Gairdner. Camden Soc., London, 1876. Also Ed. J. Conybeare in Archaeologia, vol. 222. London, 1827, 1829.

Page, W. The Certificates of the Commissioners appointed to survey the Chantries, guilds, hospitals, &c. in the County of York. Surfees Soc. 2 vols. Durham,

1894-5-

Pajot, L. La Marine militante du Ponant entre 1364 et 1374. În Positions des Thèses de l'École des Chartes. Paris, 1877.

Palacky, F. Documenta Mag. Johannis Hus vitam Ilustrantia (1403–1418). Prague, 1869.

Palaeographical Society. Facsimiles of Manuscripts and Inscriptions, ser it is London, 1873-94.

Palaestra. Berlin, 1898, &c.

Palgrave, F. The History of Normandy and England. 4 vols London, 1851-64.

Pall Mall Gazette. London, 1865, &c.

Palmer, C. F. R. Fasti Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum. In Archæological Journal, vol. 22 ev. London, 1878

The Black Frians of Yarm Ibid vol. xxxvii London, 2880.
The Black Frians of York. In The Reliquery, October, 1885.
Pannier, L. (d. 1875) La Noble Maison de St Ouen Paris, 1872.

--- Les Joyaux du Duc de Guienne. In Revue Archéologique, vols arvi, arvi. Paris, 1873-4.

Panormita (Antonio Bercadelli, 1394-1471). De dictis et factis Alfonsi regul Aragonum et Neapolis Libri quatuor. Wittenberg, 1585.

Pantin, W. A. The General and Provincial Chapters of the English Black Monks (1215-1540). In Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, ser. tv., vol. x. London, 1927.

Papal Letters Calendar of Fotnes in the Papal Registers relating to Great Bottom and Ireland. Ed W H Bitst and J A Twemlow London, 1893, &c.

Paquot, J. N. (1722-1803). Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire littéraire des Pays Bas. 3 vols. Louvein, 1765-70.

Paradin, C. Devises Hérolques. Lyons, 1557

Paradin, G. (1510-1590). Annales de Bourgogne. Lyons, 1566.

Paré, A. (1509-1590). Œuvres completes. Ed. J. F. Malgaigne. 3 vols. Paris, 1840-1

Paris, G. (1839-1903). La Littérature française au Moyen Age. Paris, 1890.

Esquisse historique de la Littérature française au Moyen Age. Paris, 1907

Paris, Matthew (c. 1200-1259) Historia Anglorum ave Historia minor, Ed. F. Madden, R.S. 3 vols. London, 1866-9.

Parker, J. H. Some Remarks upon the Church of Fotherloghae. Oxford, 1841 Parker, M (1504-1575). De Antiquitate Britannica Ecclesia historia Hanover, 1605.

Gorgle

Parler, M. (1504-1575) Historia Brevis Thomac Walsingham London, 1574. Parkes-Belloc, B. La Belle France. London, 1868.

Parton, J. Some Account of the Hospital and Parish of St Giles' in the-Fields. London, 1822

[Pas-de-Calais.] Dictionnaire historique et archéologique du Département de Pas-de-Cauls, 14 vols, Arras, 1875-83.

Pasquier, E. Les recherches de la France. Paris, 1665. Paston Letters. Ed. J. Gaardner. 4 vols. Westminster, 1900-1.

Pastoralet, Le. A poem written after the death of Henry V. In Brands, vol. 11 Pittison, Mrs Mark The Renaissance of Art in France 2 vols. London, 1879..

Paum, A. C. A Fourteenth Century English Biblical Version Cambridge, 1904. Pruset, L. Les Légendes du Château de Ham. In La Picardie, vols. v., vi. Amens, 1859.

Pauli, R. (1823 1882) Bilder aus Ak-England. Gotha, 1876. Trans. by E. C. Otte. London, 1861

- Geschichte von England 3 vols. Hamburg and Gotha, 1853-8

Pauli, R and Hertzberg, W. The Libell of Englishe Policye. Leipzig, 1878. Pauweis, Th. (1416-after 1485). De Rebus actis sub Ducibus Burgundae Compendium. Ed. Kervyn de Lettenhove. In Chroniques relatives à l'Histoire de la Belgique sous la Domination des Ducs de Bourgogne, vol. in. Brusseis, [Pays-Bar] Chromque des Pays-Bas, de France, d'Angleterre et de Tournai (1294-1458). Ed J. J. Smet. In Recueil des Chroniques de Flandre, vol. in. Brussels, 1856.

Pechenard, P. L. Jean Juvénal des Ursins. Paris, 1876.

Pecock, R. (c. 1395-c. 1460). The Repressor of Overmuch Blaming of the Clergy, Ed C Babingron R.S 2 vols. London, 1860.

The Reule of Crysten Religioun. Ed. J. Gairdner, London, 1911.

Pedrick, G. Monastic Seais of the 13th Century. London, 1902.

- Borough Seals of the Gothic Period. London, 1904.

Penguilly l'Haridon, O. de. Catalogue des Collections du Cabinet d'Armes de sa Majesté l'Empereur. Paris, 1867

Pennant, T (1726-1798). A Tour in Wales. 2 vols. London, 1784.

- Some Account of London. London, 1793.

Percy, T. (1729-1811). Reliques of Ancient English Poetry. Ed. H. B. Wheatley. 3 vols London, 1876.
The Hermit of Warkworth. London, 1791.

Pereira, Nuno Alvares de (1360~1431). Chronica. Oporto, 1848

Permar, N. Histoire sommaire et chronologique de la Vide de Rouen. Rouen, Dictionnaire Indicateur et historique des Rues et Places de Rouen. Rouen, 1870.

Periflos, Raymond de (d. after 1416) Visits to St Patrick's Purgatory, 1397 In Mém. de la Soc. Archéologique du Midi de la France, vol. 1. Toulouse, r 834. Perkens, J. H. T The Coronation Book London, 1892

Perouse, G Etude sur l'Origine de la Gabelle et sur son Organisation jusqu'en 1 180. Positions des Thèses de l'École des Chartes. Toulouse, 1898

Perzens, F. T. La Démocrane en France au Moyen Age la vols. Paris, 1875. Perret, P. M. Histoire des Rejat ons de la France avec Venise du xiisº siècle à l'Avenement de Charles VIII. 2 vols. Paris, 1896.

Perrin Nonce histor que sur Alam Blanchard. In Son libre d'Emulation de Rouen, Rouen, 1828.

Persons (or Person), Gobelinus (b. 1358). Cosmodromius. Ed. M. Jacobs.

Münster, 1900.

Petegreu fre Wilson Conquerous of the Crowne of England Innayally descend yng unto Kyng Henry the VI. In Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle. Ed T. Hearne. 2 vols. Oxford, 1724.

[Peter Chron] Chronicle in Peterhouse Library, Cambridge, from 1157 to 1461. In Leland, Collectanes, vol. it.

Péngny, J. (1801-1858). Charte inédite et secrète de la Reine Imbelle de Bavière. In Bibl. Ec. Chartes, vol. z. Paris, 1840.

Petit, F. Histoire des Ducs de Bourgogne de la Race Capétienne. E vols. Paris. 1884— 903

Petit, J. (b. c. 13 (c-1411). Le l'ivre du Champ d'Or et autres Poèmes médits. Ed. P. La Verdier. Société Rouennaite de Bibliophiles. Rouen, 1895.

- Nobles et Vilaine. Les Prouesses des Martels. Ed. A. Hellot. Paris,

Pent de Julieville. L. Histoire de la Langue et de la Linérature française. B vols. Paris, 1896-9

Petite Chronique de Guienne In Bibl Ec. Chartes, vol. givis Paris, 1886.
Petitot, C. B. (1772-1813). Lableau du règne de Charles VI. In Collection des Mémoires relatifs à l'Histoire de France, vol. vi. Paris, 1825.

Petreius, Th. (1567-1640). Bibliotheca Carthusiana Cologne, 1609. Pez, H. Schpiores rerum Austriacarum. 1 vols. Vienna, &c., 1741-5.

Peret, R. A. L. Recherches historiques sur la Naissance et la Parenté d'Alain, Jean et Gui laume Chartier. In Noc d'Agriculture Sciences, Arts et Belles-Lettres de Bayeux, Bulletin, Bayeux, 1850.

Pfater, C. Histoire de Nancy, Nancy, 1902

Philological Society. Transactions. London, 1854. ac.

Parjet, A. La Cour Amoureuse dite de Charles VI. In Romana, volu 22, 231. Paris, 1891, 1902.

- Le Miroir aux dames. Poème (nédit du xve stècle. Neuchâtel, 1908.

- Ballades de Gu llebert de Lannoy et de Jean de Werchen. În Romania, vol. 22212. Pazu, 1910.

Picardie, La, Revue littéraire et scientisque. Amiens, 1855, &c. Picot, A. E. Catalogue du cabinet des livres de Chantilly Paris, 1890. Picot, G. M. R. Histoire des États Généraux. 4 vols. Paris, 1872.

--- Documents relatifs aux États Généraux sous Philippe le Bel. Paris, 1891.

Piers, H. B. Histoire de la Ville de Thérouanne. St Omer, 1833.

—— Aragourt: In La Puits Artésien, vol. 1, St Pol, 1847 Piferrer, P. and Pi y Margall, F. Cataluña, Barcelona, 1884, &c. Figeotie, L. Les anciens seigneurs de Beaufort, Troyes, 1881

Pilham, Sieur de. Histoire du Maréchal de Boucicaux. Paris, 1697

Priotetle, M. Notice sur le Donjon de Maubergeon. In Bulletin de la Soc des Antiquatres de l'Ouest, ser ex. Poitrers, 1860.

Pina, Ruy de (d. 1519). Chronica do Senhos Rey D. Duarre y Altorso V. In. Colleccio de livros ineditos de Historia Portugueza, vol. 1. Lisbon, 1790.

Pingone, E. F. (1515-1581). Augustae Taurinorum Chronica. In J. G. Graevius, Thesaucus Apriquitatum et Historiarum Italiae, vol. is, pt. 6. Lyons, 1723

Pankerson, J. Iconographia Scotica, or Portra is of Illustrious Persons of Scotland. London, 1797

Pipe Rolls, Introduction to the study of the Pipe Roll Society Vol. in. London, Piran, A. Provincias Vascongadas. Barcelona, 1885.

Pisano, M. (d. aiter 1460). Ciesta illustrissum regis Johannis de bello Septensi. Ed. J Correa da Serta Lisbon, 1790. Piton, C. Histoire de Paris. Le Quartier des Halles, Paris, 1891

Pitre-Chevahor, P. La Bretagne ancienne et moderne 2 vols. Paris, 1850, 1860. Pits, J. (1560-1616). Relationes Historicae de rebus Anglicis. Paris, 1619.

Planché, J. R. The Conqueror and His Companions. 2 vols. London, 1874. - Monuments of the Cockayne Family in Ashbourne Church, Derbyshire. In Journal of the British Archaeological Association, vol. viz. London, r 85 a.

Planchenzalt, R De l'ardité pour l'Aistoire de France de quelques chroniques anguases de la première mostie du xv. siècle. In Bibl. Éc. Chartes, vol. axxxv. Paris, 1924.

Pancher, U (1667-1750). Histoire du duché de Bourgogne 3 vals. Dijon, 1739-48

Plauchut, E. Le Berry. In Revue des Deux Mondes, vols cia, cx. Paris, 1892. [Pluscard] Liber Pluscardens's. Ed. F. J. H. Skone 2 vi.ls. Edinburgh, 1877-80. Poggio Bracciolini, F (1380-1450) Opera, Basle, 1538.

Epitolae, Ed T Tonelu, Florence, 1832

[Pol. Reag Po.] Polagica, Reagious and Love Poems, Ed. F.] Farmivall. E.E.T S. London, 1903.

[Pol. Sorgs] Political Poems and Songs, Edward III to Richard II Ed. T. Wright R.S. 2 vols. London, 1859-6:, [Pol Verg] Polydori Virgilia (d. 1455) Urbinatia Anglicae Historiae Libri rivii Basel, 1570.

Pollard, A. W. An English Garner Fifteenth Century Prose and Verse. Westminster, 1903.

Pollock, F. and Martland, F. W. History of English Law a vols. Cambridge, Polwhele, R. History of Devonshire. 3 vols. Exeter, 1793-7

Polybiblion. Revue bibliographique et universelle. Paris, 1868, &c. Portueraye, J. F. Histoire de 'Église Cathédrale de Rouen, 1686.

Pontaumont, E. le C. de. Documents nédits sur le Siège de Cherbourg en 1478. In Mem. Soc. des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. xxiv. Caen, 1859.

Poole, R. L. Wycliffe and Movements for Reform London, 1889. Porce, A. A. Histoire de l'abbaye du Bec. 2 vols. Évreur, 1901.

Port, C. Inventaire analytique des Archives anciennes de la Mairie d'Angers. Pars, 1861.

 Dictionnaire historique, géographique et biographique de Maine-et-Loire. 3 vols Paris, Angers, 1874-8

Porta , C. Levée d'un Subside dans le Diocèse d'Aibi en 1407 pour le Rachat du Château de Lourdes. In Annales du Midt, vol. in Toulouse, 1892

- Histoire de la Ville de Cordes (Tarn), 1222-1797. Albi, 1902

— Les Insergentions des Tuchers dans le Pays de Languedoc vers 1482–1484. Annales du Mici, vol. iv. Toulouse, 1892.

Positic. See Lindenbiatt.

Postel, R. Siège et Capitulation de Bayeux en 1417. Caen, 1873. - Nos Alcux. Paris, 1892.

W III

Poulson, G (1781 1848). Beverlac or the Antiquities and History of the Town of Beverley. London, 1829.

- History and Antiquities of the Seignlory of Holderness. 2 vols. Hull, 1840.

Powel, D. (1552-1598). History of Wales. Merthyr Tydfil, 1816.

Powicke, F. M. The Loss of Normandy, Manchester, 1913.

Pradel, A., St Vincent Ferrer, Trans. by T. A. Dixon. London, 1875

Prat, H. Études Historiques, xive et xve siècles. Para, 1853.

— Études Littéraires, xive et xve nècles. Paris, 1853.

Pray, G. Annales Regum Hungariae. 5 vols. Vienna, 1764-70.

- Historia Regum Hangariae 3 vols. Buda, 1800-r

Prentout, H. Les Etan Provincianz de Normandie. 3 vois Caen, 1921-

Prevei, J. L. Nonce sur Odette ou Od nette de Champdivers et Marguerite de Valois sa Fille. In Annaies de la Société Académique de Nantes, ser v. vol. a. Nantes, 1879.

Price, J. F. Account of the Guildhall of the City of London. Lordon, 1889.

Prince, J. Worthers of Devon. London, 1701

Priorat, J. d. c. 1200). La Abrejance de l'Ordre de Cheralerie. Ed. L. Robert.

Soc. des Anciens l'extes français. Paris, 1897.

Priour, 5. Monographie de l'ancienne Abbaye rovale Suitt Yved de Brune Paris, 1859.

Procès Verbaun de la Société archéolog que d'Eure-et Loir Chamres, 1861 Ac. Promptorium Parvulorum. Ed. A. Way. Camden Soc. 3 vols. 1842-65

Prost, B. Traicté de la Forme et Devis comme on faicte les Tournois. Paris, 1878.

— Que ques Acquistions de Manuscrits par les Ducs de Bourgegne, Philippe-le-Hards et Jeon sons Peur. In Archiver historiques, aristiques, et litéraires, vul : Paris, 1890

Les Tapissières du Duc de Berry, 1416. Ibid. vol. i. Paris, 1889.

--- Une Nouve le Source de Documents sur les Artistes de jonnais du 22º sècre in Gazette des Beaux Arts. Paris, 1500.

Que ques Documents sur l'Histoire des Arts et France. In Guzette des

Beaux Arts. Paris, 1887

Prudhomme, A. Inventure tommure des Archives communales: V.Ile de Grenoble, Grenoble, 1899, 1906.

Printe, W. Brief Register of al. Parliamentary Writs. 4 volume 2. London, 1659-64.

Puiseux, L. Siège et Prim de Caen par les Anglais en 1417. Ceen, 1858

 L'Émigration Normande et la Colonisation Anglaise en Normandie au xv4 saccle. Caen, 1866.

- Siege et Prise de Rouen par les Anglais (1418-1419) d'après un Poème unglass contemporain. Csen, 1867

Les Docteurs Normands au commencement du xv* siècle. Paris, 1964.
 Des Insurrections pripalaires en Normandie pendant l'Occupation Angaine au xv* mede in Memi Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. 1/2. Caen. 18 ç t.

Pulta, P. (1370-1430), Letters of, Ed. F. Farnhaber. In Archiv für Kunde oesterreichischer Geschichtsquellen, vol. zv. Vienna, 1856.

Pulling, A. (1813-1895). The Order of the Cosf. London, 1897

Purey-Cust, A. P. The Heraldry of York Minster. 2 vols. Leeds, 1890-6.

- Walts round York Minster. Leeds, 1907.

--- The Collar of SS. Leeds, 1910.

Puyringre, T. J. de Boudet de La Cour littérage de Don Juan II, res de Casulle. 2 vols. Paris, 1873

Pyne, H. England and France in the 15th Century. London, 1870. Quadrado, J. M. Salamanca, Avila y Segovia. Barcelona, 1884.

- Aragon Barcelona, 1886.

Quarter, B. General Catalogue of Books. 7 vols. and 10 supplements. London, 1887-97.

Quatrobarbes, T. de Œuvres complètes du roi René 4 vols. Angers, 1845-6. Quétif,] (1618-1690) Scriptores ordinis Praedicatorum a vols. Paris, 1719-21 Quicherat, J. E. J. (1814–1887). Procès de Condamnation et de Réhabilitation de Jeanne d'Arc. 5 vols. Paris, 1841-9.

Aperçus neuveaux sur l'Histoire de Jeanne d'Arc. Paris, 1850.

- Histoire de Costume en France. Paris, 1875. Rabbe, F. Jeanne d'Arc en Angleterre. Paris, 1891.

Rabutaux, A. P. E. De la Prostitution en Europe. Paris, 1881

Rackham, R. B. The Nave of Westminster. In Proceedings of the British Academy, vol. iv.. London, 1909.

Radford, L. B. Henry Beaufort, London, 1908.

- Cardinal Beaufort In Typical English Churchmen, vol. 11. S.P.C.K. London, 1909.

Raine, Landon, 1852 - A Brief Account of Durham Cathedral. Newcastle, 1877.

- Catterick Chyrch, Contract for its Building in 1412 London, 1834. Raine, J., junior. Historians of the Church of York. R.S. 3 vols. London, 1879-86.

York London, 1893.
Rait, R S "The Kingis Quair" and the New Criticism. Aberdeen, 1898.

- Scotland. London, 1911.

Raicigh, W. (1552-1618). History of the World. 1614. Rambaud, A. Histoire de la Civil sation française. 2 vols. Paris, 1885-7.

Ramet, F. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales: Loire-Inférieure

3 vols. Paris, Nantes, 1865, 1879 Ramsay, Sir J. H. Lancaster and York 2 vols. Oxford, 1892 - The Foundations of England. 2 vols. London, 1898.

Ranke, L. Weltgeschichte, 4 vols. Leipzig, 1895.

Rankin, R. The Marquis of Argenson; and Richard II. London, 1901

Ransom, C. A Short History of England. London, 1894.

Ranzano, P. (1420-1492). Vita S. Vincentii Ferrenti. In Acta Sanctorum, vol. x. Raouiet, J., Chronique de (1403-1429). In Jean Chartier, Chronique de Charles VII. Ed Vallet de Viriville Vol. 11

Rapin Thoyras, P. de [1661-1725] Acta Regia. Trans by S. Whatley 4 vols. London, 1726.

- Histoire d'Angleterre, 13 vols. The Hague, 1724-36. Trans. by N. Tindal 4 vols. London, 1743-7.

Rashdall, H. New College, Oxford London, 1901

Rastell, J. (d. 1536). The Pastime of People; or, the Chronicles of Divers Realms. London, tBit

Raymond, P. Inventaire sommaire des Archives départementales Busses-Pyrénées. 4 vols. Paris, 1863-7.

Raynal, L. (b. 1808). Histoire du Berry 4 vols. Bourges, 1844-7

Raynaldus. See Rinald...

Raymaud, P. Rondeaux et autres Poésies du xvº siècle. Paris, 1889.

Reader, W. History and Antiquities of the City of Coventry Coventry, 1850.

37-1

Reber, B. (1805-1875). Felix Hemmerlin von Zürich. Zünch, 1846. Red Book of the Exchequer. Ed. H. Hall. R.S. 3 vols. London, 1896.

Rede, R. F. Isco a. Repister of (197-1415). Eu. C. Deedes, Sussea Record Society. 2 vols. London, 1908, 1910.

Redman, Robert Historia Ecarnii Quarti in Memorials of Heary V. Ed.

C A Cole. RS, London, 1848

[Reg. Herriced.]. Diocesis Herefordensis, Registrum Edmanda Lacy, Registrum Thome Politine Ed A. F. Bean ster. In Publications of Camerbury and York Sec., vol xxii, London, 1918

Regniez,] (d. after 1463), Les Fortunes et Advernitez de Ed. P. Lacrott

Geneva, 1867.

Regneuit, R. Registre des Recettes de Dépenses de la Ville de Boulogne-sur-Mer-(1+15-1416). In Méra, de la Soc. Academique de l'Arrondissement de Boulogne-sur-Mer, vol. vii. Boulogne-sur-Mer, 7 882 Realistaguarien, Deutsche (13 6-1431). Ed. J. Weitsacker, D. Kerler, &c.

Mamch and Gotha, 1867, dec.

Reiffenberg, b. A. (1764-1854). Le Chevalier au Cogne et Godefray de Boualon. n Monaments pour service : hi storre des Provinces de Namer, de Hamait, et de Luxembourg g vols Brussels, 1846-54.

-Histoire du Comté de Hamaut. 3 vols. Brussels, 1846

Reset von Landskroa, F (c. 1401-1458) Reformation des K. Sigmund Ed. W Boehm Leipzig, 1876

Reliquety, The. London, 1860, &c.

Reliquise Artiquee Ed. T Wright and J O. Halliwell 2 vols. London, 1841. Renns, E. L'Art du Moyen Age et la Cruse de sa Décadence. In Revue des Deux Monder, rok al. Paris, 1862.

Renard, C., Le Château de Bar au refon et au ou d'huit. In Mêm de la Sou des Lettres, Sciences et Arts de Bar-ie-Dac, ser. 111, vol. v. Bar-le-Duc, 1896.

René di Arrou (140 per 480), Les Illou nots de Illid. Champorator, Dubois and Charles Motte, Pans, 1127.

Report on Fredern. See Cooper, C. P.

Report tou, hing the Digritt of a Peer of the Realm. (wols. London, 1810-q. Retrospective Review, The London, 1820-8 [Return Parl] Return of Names of Members of Parliament, 4 vols. London, 1879.

Revue Anglo-Française. Poitsen, 1833, &c. Revue Archéologique. Pare, 1844, &c.

Rorne Archéologique du Département de la Manche. Valogues, 1843

Revue de l'Anjous Angers, 1881, 4cc,

Revue de l'Art Chrésen. Para, Tournas, Arras, 1857, &c.

Revue de Rouen. Rouen, 1813, &c.

Retue d'Histosie moderne et contemporaine. Paris, 1899, &c.

Rerue Internationale de l'Enseignement, Paris, 1881, &c.

Revue Lyonnaise. Lyons, 1811, &c.

Respersionship (c. 1550). Chronics van Zeeland, 1 vols. Middelburg, 1644. Resner, C. De Amiquitate Ordan's Sancti Henridi t' in regno Anghae. Douas, 1626. Reynolds, H E. A Short History of the Ancient Diocese of Exeter. Exeter, 1895 Ribadieu, H. Histoire de la Conquête de Guyenne par les Français. Bordeaux, .866

Les Chiteaux de la Gironde. Bordesux, 1856.

Ribbaseals, Lord. The Queen's Bucksounds and Stig Husting Recollectors. London, 1897.

Ricart, Robt (c. 1479). The Maire of Brislowe is Kalendar Ed. L. T. Smith. Camden Soc. London, 1872.

Richard, Ch. Recherches sur Rouen: Fortifications. Porte Martiny lie. Rouen, 1844.

Richentzl, U. von (d. 1437). Chronik des Constanzer Concils. Augsburg, 1483. Richey, A. G. A Short History of the Irish People down to the Date of the Plantation of Ulster. Dublin, 1887.

Lectures on the History of Ireland. Dublin, 1869. Riddell, J. Tracts Legal and Historical. Edinburgh, 1835

Ridpath, G. (1717-1771) Border History of England and Scotland London, Riezler, S. Geschichte Balerns. 3 vols. Gotha, 1878-89.

- Nachtselden and Jagergeld in Bayern. In Bajerische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Historische Klasse, vol. zxiii. Munich, 1906.

Rigaux, E. La Commune de Boulogne en 1415. Boulogne-sur-Mez, 1905 Riley H. F. Memorials of London and London Life in the 13th, 14th and 15th centuries (1276-1419). London, 1868

Rinaldi (or Raynaldus), Oderic (1595-1671). Annales ecclesiastici 15 Vols. Lucca, 1747, &c.

Ritton, J. B'bliotheca Poetica. London, 1802. Ritter, F. Poésies des xive et xvé siècles publiées d'après le MS, de la Bibliothèque. de Genève. In Bulletin de l'Institut National Génevois, vol. 1201. Geneva, 1880.

Ritter, G. Estraite du Journal du Trésor Bibl. Éc Chartes, vol Isriii. Paris, 1912. Rittiez, F. Histoire du Palais de Justice et du Parlement. Paris, 1860.

- L'Hôtel de Ville et la Bourgeoisie de Paris. Paris, 1862.

Rivière, H. F. Histoire des Institutions de l'Auvergne. 2 rob. Paris, 1871

Robert, U. Les Signes d'Infamie au Moyen Age. Paris, 1891.

Roberts, L. J. Owen Glyndwr Wrennam, 1904.

Robertson, W. A. Scott, Coulyng Castle, In Archaeologia Catalana, vol. 11. London, 1877.

Robineau, E. M. D. Christine de Pisan, sa Vie et ses Œuvres. St Orner,

Robinson, C. J. A History of the Mansions and Manors of Herefordshire. London, 1873

A History of the Castles of Herefordshire. London, 1869.

Robinson, J. A. An Unrecognised Westmanster Chronicler (1381-1394). In Proceedings of the British Academy, vol. in: London, 1907.

S mon Langham, Abbot of Westminster. In Church Quarterly Review, roi alvi London, 1908.

Robinson, J. A. and James, M. R. The Manuscripts of Westminster Abbey. Cambridge, 1909.

Robuthon, J. Paysages et Monuments du Poitou. Paris, 1886-92.

- Payriges et Monaments de la Bretagne. Paris, 1892. Rochas, V. Les Parias de France et d'Espagne. Paris, 1876.

Rocher, Ch. Les Bourguignons en Velay (1419-1420). In Tabietics Historiques du Velay, années v. vi. Le Puy, 1875-6.

Rock, D (1799-1871) The Church of Our Fathers. Ed. G. W. Hart and W H Frere, 4 vols London, 1901-4

Roger, P. A. The Poetical Remains of King Charles the First of Scotland. Edmburgh, (873.

[Roger of Hovedon] Chronica Rogeri de Hovedone. Ed. W. Stubbs. R.S. 4 vols. London, 1868-71.

Rogers, J. E. T. (1843-1890). Oxford City Documents. Oxford, 1892.

Rogers, W. H. H. The Ancient Sepulchral Effigies and monumental and manorial Sculpture of Devon Exceet, 1877.

Roman, J. Montres et Revues des Capitaines dauphinos. Grenoble, 1888. - lov, maires et Documents relatifs aux Jovanx et Tapissenes des Princes d'Orleans-Valon, Paris, 1894.

Romania Paris, 1872, &c.
Romeiot, T. L. Description historique et monumertale de l'Église patriarcale. primatule et métropolitune de Bourges. Bourges, 1824

Romic by Quarta schieft for christiache Astertamistande und für Kirchengischschte. Rome, 1887, &c.

Romocki, S. J. Gaschichte der Explosivitoffe. 1 voll. Berlin, 1895, 1896. Roncière, C. de 11. Histoire de la Marine Française. 2 vols. Paris, 1899-1900. Ros, Lord de (1797-1874) Montoua of the Tower of London, 1867. Rosières, F. de. Steinmaium Lothara giae, ac Barri Ducum, Toma Septem. Paris, 1,80

Ross, J. See Rous.

Rossignol, C. and Carnier, C. Investaire sommune des Archives départementaires. Côte d'Or. 6 vols. Paris, 1861-04.

[Rot. Chart.] Retu., Chartaram in Turn Londinessi asservati, Ed. T. D. Hardy. London, 1837.

[Rot. Norm. (Hards).] Retu i Normanniae in Tarri Load nenn asierviti Johanne. et Henrico Quinto Angliae Regibus. Ed. T D Hardy London, 1815

[Rot Parl] Rolls of Parlament 7 vols. London 1767-1832

[Rot. Select.] Rotali selecti ad rea Anglicas et Hibermens spectantes. Ed. J. Huster, London, 1834.

Rotuli Scotne z vols. London, 1814.

Roujoux, P. G. de. Histoire pattoresque de l'Angleterre et de ses Poiscissors dans les Index. 2 vols. Paris, 1835.

· Histoire des Rois et des Ducs de Bretagne. 4 vols. Paris, 1824, 1829. Roujoux, P G. and Mainguet, A. Histo re d'Angkterre. 2 vols. Para, 1844-5. Round, J. H. The Commune of London. Westminster 1809. Rouquette, Le Rouergue sous les Anglais, Millau, 1887.

Rous (at Ross, Rouse or Rows), 1 1421-1491) Story of Richard Beauthamp (1382-1439). In Historia vita et regni Ricardi II. Ed. T. Hearne. 2 vols.

Oxford, 1720. With illustrations in Street, Manners, vol. 11. - Historia Regum Angliae. Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1716.

- The Rows Roll. London, 1845.

Rouse See Rous.

Rouser, > J and Hucher, E. Histoire du Jeton au Moyen Age. Paris, 1818. Rowe, Benedicte J. H. A contemporary Account of the Hundred Years. War from 14 5 to 1429. In E.H.R., vol. xli London, 1926. Rowler, A. L. Henry the Fifth. London, 1865.

Rows. See Rous

Roxburghe Billids, The Ed W. Chappell, Billid Soc. London, 1869, &c. Roy, C. A élusme. Ligugé, 1848

Roy, M. Le Couvent des Dominicaires de Sens. Sens, 1901.

[Roy Let] Roya, and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV. Ed. H C Hangeston R.S London, 1860

Royal Visits to Coventry in the Olden Time. Coventry, 1858.

Roye, Gilles de (1415-1478). Chronique (1414-1431). Ed. Kervyn de Lettenhove. In Chroniques relatives à l'Histoire de la Belgique sous la dom nation des dues de Bourgogne, vol. i. Brussels, 1870.

Rozmatal, L. von (d. after 1467) Ritter-, Hof- und Pager-Reise durch die Abendlande (1465-1467). Stuttgart, 1844.

Ruding, R. Annals of the Comage of Great Britain 4 vols. London, 1817.

Ruestow, F. W. Geschichte der Infanterie, 2 vols. Gotha, 1857-8

Ruisseauville, Chronique de In Archives historiques et l'inémires du Nord de la France et du Midi de la Belgique, ser. 1, vol. iv. Vaienciennes, 1834. Ruprich Robert, V. L'Architecture Normande aux mis et x 16 siècles en Normandie et en Angleterre. Paris, 1884, &c.

Ruthin, J. Valid Amo. New York, 1886. Rye, W. An Index of Norfolk Topography. Index Society. London, 1881. Rye, W. B. Visits to Rochester and Chatham made by royal, noble and distinguished Personages. London, 1865

Rymer, Thes. (1641-1713). Feeders, &c. 20 vols. London, 1704, &c.

[Rymkrorus van Brabant] De Brabantsche yeesten, of Rymkronyk van Braband

Ed F Willems. 2 vois. Brussels, 1839-69.
Sabatier, P Etude sur la Concession de l'Indulgence de la Portioncula. In Rev. Historique, voi. Ixii. Paris, 1806.

Sablon, V. Histoire et Description de l'Église cathédrale de Chartres. Ed. K. L. Merlet Chartnes, 1860

Saint Denvi, Chronique du religieux de († 380-1422) Ed. L. Bellaguet Coll. de documents medits. 6 vois. Paris, 1859.

Saint Forz, K. Pouliais de . Essais historiques sur Paris. 3 vols. Paris, 1759 Saint-Gelsis, Octavien de (c. 1466-1502). Le Séjour d'Honneur Paris, 1.51 (4.

Samt-German, Stantslas de. Un Partage mobilier en 1414. In Bulletin Monumental, ser. 11, vol. viii. Paris, 1852.

Saint-Mémir Rapport sur les Restes de Monuments de l'Ancienne Chartreuse de Dijon. In Mém de la Commission des Antiquités du Departement de la Côte-d'Or, vol. ii Pans, 1847

Saint-Paul, Jean de .c. 1475) Chronique de Bretagne Ed. A. de la Borderic. Nantes, 1881

Sainte Marthe, P. S. (1571-1650). Histoire généalogique de la Maison de la Tremoille. Paris, 1668

Salmon, N. Antiquities of Surrey London, 1736.

Salmon, P, 4/ Salemon or Le Frutter (fl. 1409). Les demandes faictes par le Roi Charles VI touchant son Etat et le Gouvernement de sa Personne. Ed. G. A. Crapelet. Pans, 1833.

Salutati, Coluccio (1930-1406), Epistolario di. Ed. F. Novati. 4 vols. Rome, 890-1961.

Samaran, C. La chronique inédite de Jean Chartier (1422-1450) et les dern ers livres du Rengieux de St Denis. In Bibl. Éc. Chartes, vol. Ixxivii. Paris,

- La chronique latine de Jean Chartier (1412-1450). In Ann. Bull. Soc. de l'Hist de France, Paris, 1926.

Samareurlh, J. F. Histoire de l'Agenais, du Condomois et du Bazadais. 2 vols Auch, 1846-7

- Nérac et Paul Agen, 1854.

Sandeman, G. A. C. Calair under English rule. Oxford, 1908.

bardierd, F. (640-1694). Genealogical History of the rouge and Queens of England. London, 1707.

- History of the Kangs of Portugal, London, 1662.

bardis, J. E. A History of Canical Schount p. 4 vols. Cambridge, 1906-E.

Sanford, J. L. Estimates of the English Kings London, 1872.

Sartford, J. L. and Townsend, M. a be Great Governing Families of England a vols. London, 1865. Santarem, M. F., Viscount of. Rechercher sur la Priorxé de la Découverte des Pays situés sur la Côte Occidentale d'Afrique. Paris, 1842.

 Atlas compris de Mappernondes et de Cartes hydrographiques et historiques depuis le xte jusqu'au xvire necle. Pani, 1842

Saruto, M. (1466-1536). Since Oucem Venetorum Italice (engrae. In Maraton, WOMEN SER

Samer JA: Hotorede Rouer d'aprè les Miria ares des Maguients. Roger, 1904 - Pierre Cauchon, Juge de Jeanne d'Are. Paris, 1901.

- Jeanne d'Arc et la Normandie. Paris, 1896

Sathas, c. N. Documen's medius relating a Thi topre de la Grece au Moven Age. 9 vojs. Paris, 1880-90.

Saturday Review, The. London, 1856, &c.

Saulcy, F. C. de. Histoire numismatique de Henri V et Henri VI rois d'Angleterre pendant qu'ils ont régné en France. Pans, 1878.

Sauret, A. Essai historique sur le ville d'Embrun. Gap, 1860.

Sauvage, D. (c. 1520-c. 1587). Chromque de Flandre. Lyons, 1562.

Sauvage, E. P. Harfleur an zave nècle. Rouen, 1875

---- Catalogue chronologique des Grands Baillis de Caux du xi 1º au siviº siecles În Soc de l'Hist de Normandie, Mélanger, ser 1. Rouen, 1897

--- Notes sur le Monastère des Emmurées à Rouen. Ibid. - Un Plan d'Éducation au xive siècle. In Précis analytique des Travaux de l'Académie de Rouen. Rouen, 1893.

Sauval, H. (1623-1676). Histoire et Recherches des Antiquités de la ville de Parts, 3 vols. Parts, 1724. Sanvan | | | B. Histoire et Description pittoresque du Palais de Justice, de la Constergence, et de la Sainte Chapelle de Paris. Paris, 1825.

Sararon. (1 x 50-1622). Les origines de Clairmont, ville capitule de l'Auvergne Paris, 1612 Scargal Bird, S. R. A Guide to the various classes of Documents in the Public Record Office. London, 1908.

Scheder, H. (c. 1495). Chronicomm Iber. Nürnberg, 1495. Schiffmacher, F. W. Geschickte von Spanien. Vols. in vi of F. W. Lembke, Geschichte von Spanier 6 voh. Hamburg, Gotha, 1881-93

Schmidt, C. Histoire du Chapitre de St Thomas de Strasbourg, Strasbourg, 1860

Schmidt, C. G. A. Essa sur Jean Gerson Strasbourg, 1839.

Schmidt, E. A. Geschichte von Frankreich. 4 vols. Hamburg, 1815. 1848

- Geschichte Aragoniems im Mattelaker. Leipzig, † 828.

Schmidt, K. Margareta von Anjou vor und bei Shalespeare. In Palaestra, vol. liv Berlin, 1906.

Schoettl, A. Aus dem Haushalt einer Königin. Munich, i 898.

Schultz, A. Deutsches Leben im xiv und xv Jahrhundert. Vienna, t 192

- Das bäusliche Leben der Furopäischen Kulturvölker vom Mittelalter bis zur zweiten Hälfte des kvizi Jahrhunderts. Munich, 1903.

Schwab, J. B. Johannes Gerson. Würzburg, 1858.

Scottchronicon (by J. Forden, communed by W. Bower) Ed. W. Goodall.

2 vols. Edinburgh, 1775

Ed T. Hearne 5 vols. Oxford, 1722.

Scotière, L. de la Rapport sur l'Abbaye et l'Église de Loulay. In Mêm Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. xii. Caen, 1841

Scott, G. G. Gleanings from Westminster Abbey London, 1861.

Scott, J S D The British Army Its origin, progress and equipment. 3 vols. London, 1868-80

Scott, Sir Walter (1771-1832). Tales of a Grandfather. History of France Edmbargh, 1851.

Scotush Historical Review. Glasgow, 1905-28.

Scriven, J. A Treatise on he Law of Copyholds. London, 1896.

Scrope, G. P. History of the Manor and Ancient Barony of Castle Combe in the County of Wiltshare, 1852.

Scrope, S. (1398-1472). The Epistle of Other to Hector. Translated from the French of Christine de Pisan. Ed. G. F. Warner. Roxburghe Club. London, 1904.

Scrope and Grosvenor Roll. Ed. N. H. Nicolas. 2 vols. London, 1832.

Secreta Secretorum, Three Prose Versions of, Ed. R. R. Steele, E.E.T.S. London, 1898

Seebohm, F. The English Village Community. London, 1885.

Selden, J. Titles of Honour. London, 1641. Seiller, C. Le Quartier Barbette. Paris, 1899.

Sénemand, E. Inventage agramage des Archives départementales. Ardennes. Paris, . 886

Ser Cambius. See Cambi

Sergeant, P. W. The Cathedral Church of Winchester. London, 1910.

Serrava le, Giovanni dei Bertoldi da (b. 1350). Translatio et Comentum totus libri Danus Aidigherii. Ed. M. da Civezza and 1' Domeniche h. Prati, 891.

Serres (or Serranus). J. de (c. 1540-1598). Inventaire general de l'H stoire de France. 3 vols. Paris, 1600. Translated into English by E Grimeston London, 1611.

Servais, V. Annales historiques du Barrois de 1353 à 1411-2 vols. Bar-le-Duc, Servion, J. (d. c. 1466). Gestez et Chroniques de la Mayson de Savoic. Ed F. E. Bollan. 2 vols. Turm, 1879.

Seyer, S. Memoirs historical and topographical of Bristoi and its Neighbourhood. 2 vols. Bristol, 1821-3

Shafter, T. A Few Observations on the Leprosy of the Middle Ages. Exeter

Sharpe, R. R. London and the Kingdom. 3 vols. London, 1894, &c.

- Calendar of Wills, Court of Husting, London. 2 vois. London, 1889-90 Shepherd W The Life of Poggio Bracciohni, Liverpoot, 1837.

[Sheriffs' List.] List of Sheriffs for England and Wales from the Earliest Times to 1831 London, 1898

Sherzer, | B: The He of Ladies Berlin, 1903

Shillingford, J., Letters and papers of. Ed. S. A. Moore Camden Soc London

Shillington, V. M. and Chapman, A. B. W. The Commercial Relations of England and Portugal London, 1907

Shore, T. W. A Hutory of Hampshire. London, 1892

- Guide to Southampton and Neighbourhood. Southampton, 188a.

[Short Chron] Three F freenth Century Chronicles. Ed. J. Gundner. Camaen. Sec. London, 1880.

Shropshire, Visitation of, in 1623. Harleian Soc. 2 vols. London, 1889.

Shropshire Archaeological and Natural History Society Transactions. Shrewsbury, 4878, &c.

Sickel, Th. Ambroimn sche Republik und das Haus Savoyen. In Sitzungsberichte des philosophisch-historischen Classe der Kaiserl, Akad. der Wissenschaften, vol. ax. Vienna, 1856.

S Ivestre, J. B. Philographie universelle. Collection de fac-s mile d'Écorures de tous les Peuples et de tous les Temps. 4 pis. Parm, 1839-42. Translation by F. Madden. 2 vols. London, 1850.

Simeonis, S. (c. 1322). See Naimith, J.

Samon, A. L. The History of the Wine Trade in England. 3 vols. London, 1906-9

Simonyi, E. Monumenta Hungariae historica. Diplomaiaria. Vol. v. Pest, 16(9).
Sismondi, J. C. L. S. Histoire des Republiques Italiennes du Moyen Age.
16 vols. Paris, 1826

- l'instoire des Français. 31 vols. Paris, 1821-44

Sheat, W. W. Etymological Dictionary of the English Language Oxford, 1898

Skelton J (b c 1460-1529). Poetical Works. Ed. A Dyce. 2 vols. London, 1843.

Sleigh, J. Hustory of the Ancient Parish of Leek. Leek, 1862.

Smet, J. J. de. Corpus Chronicorum Flandrine. Commission royale d'histoire de Belgique. Brussels, 1837, &c.

Smith, G. G. The Transition Period. In Somethery's Periods of English Literature. Edinburgh, 2000.

Smith, Goldwin, The United Kingdom. A Political History. z vols. London, 1899.

Smith, H. E. History of Conisburgh Castle. Worksop, 1887.

Smith, I Gregory, Worcester, In Diocesan Histories, London, 1883

Smith, J. Challoner. Index of Wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canter-bury (1383-1558). The Index Library. 2 vols. London, 1893, 1893.

Smith, J. T. Antiquities of Westminster. London, 1867

Antiquities of London London, 1791

Smith, S. A. John of Gaunt. Westmoster, 1904.

Smith, T. Catalogus Librorum Bibliothecae Couonianae. Oxford, 1696.

Smith, T. F Antiquities of London. London, 1793

Smythe J. Certain discourses concerning the Forms and Effects of divers Sorts of Weapons. London, 1590.

Smyttere, J.P. E. de Lissa historique sur Iolande de Flandre, Comtesse de Bar-Lade, 1877.

Snappe's Formulary and other records. Ed. H. E. Salter. Oxford Historical Soc. Oxford, 1924

Snelling, T. (1712-1773). A View of the Gold Com and Coinage of England. London, 1763

Snow, T. B. The Lollards. In Dublin Review, vol exvus. Dublin, 1896.

Snoy, R (1477-1537) De Rebus Bataviets libri xiii. In P. F. Sweett, Rerum Beignarum Annales. Frankfurt, 1620.

Société académique de l'arrondissement de Boulogne-sur-Mer Mémostes, Boulogne-sur-Mer, 1866, &c.

Société archéologique de Tarn-et-Garonne Bulletin, Montauban, 1873, &c.

Société archéologique de Toura ne. Mémoires, Tours, 1842, &c.

- Bulieun. Tours, 1868, &c.,

Sociéte de l'Histoire de France. Bulletin. Paris, 1835, &c.

Soc été de l'Histoire de Normandie. Bulletin. Rouen, 1867, &c.

Société de l'Histoire de Paris et de l'Île de France. Mémoires and Bulleun. Paris, 1874, &c Société des Antiquaires de la Morinie. Mémoires. St Omer, 1834, &c.

Société des Antiquaires de la Normandie Mémoires and Bulletin Caen, 1825, &c. Société de statistique des Setences naturelles et des Arts industr els du département de l'Isère. Balleun, Grenobie, 1840, &c.

Société historique de Compiègne, Compiègne, 1869, &c.

Soleil, F. Les Heures Gothiques et la Lattérature pieux aux xve et xvie siecles. Rauen, 1882.

Somner, H. (1598-1669) Antiquities of Canterbury. London, 1703

Songe Véntable. Est H. Moranville. In Mem. Soc. de l'Hist. de Paris, vol. xvii. Pans, 18gt.

Sorel, A. Procès contre des Animaux et Insectes suivis au Moyen Age dans la Picardie et le Valois. In Bulletin de la Société historique de Compiègne, voz ili Compiègne, 1876.

Le Prise de Jeanne d'Arc. Paris, 1889

Souchet]. B. (2589-1651). Historre du Diocèse et de la Ville de Chartres. 4 vob. 1866-73.

Souchon, M. Die Papstwahlen in der Zeit des grossen Schismas. 2 vols. Brunswick, 1 898-9.

South, J. F. (1797-1882). Memorials of the Craft of Surgery in England Ed. D'Arcy Power. London, 1886.

Southey, R. (1774-1843). Lives of the British Admirals. 5 vols. London, 1813-40-

Soyez, E. A. La Picardie historique et monumentale. Amiens, 1898-q.

Speed, J. (1555-1629). History of Great Britain. London, 1632. Speedt, T. The Workes of our antient and lerned English Poet G. Chaucer.

London, 1598 Spelman, Sir H (1562-1642) Glossarium Archaiologicum. London, 1664.

Spencer, O. L. The Lafe of Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury. London, Sphere, The London, 1900, &c.

Spondanus (Henri de Sponde). Annalium Baronii Continuatio. 2 Vols Paris,

Spont, A. La Gabeile du Sel in Languedoc au xvº siècle. In Annales du M.di, no. 12. Toulouse, 1891

Spruner, K und Mencke, Th. Hand-Atlas für die Geschichte des Mittelalters und der neueren Zeit. Gotha, 1880

Stoboda, J. Il medagliere Mediceo nel R. Museo Nazionale di Firenze, Secoloxv-zeri, Florence, 1899.

Stacke, L. Deutsche Geschichte. 3 vols. Bielefeld, 1880.

Stafford, E., Register of (1395-1419). Ed. F. C. Hingeston-Randolph. Exeter, 1886.

Google

Stander, J. (d. after 1508) Chronicon. In Oefele, Rerum Boumann Scriptores, vol. .. Augsburg, 1763

Stanky, A. P. Historical Memorials of Wester ester Abbey. London, 1868.

- Memorials of Canterbury. London, 18,5 — On the Deposition of the Remains of Catherine of Vaion, Queen of Henry V, in Westmanter Abbey. In Archaeologia, vol. xivi London, 1881

Stapleten, I' (1805-1849). Liber de Artiquis Legibus. Camden Sec. London, 1846.

— Magni Rotuli Scaccaru Normanmae sub Regibus Angliae - 2 vols. London, 1840-4.

Starrabba, R. Il Testamento di Martino Re di Sicilia. Palermo, 1876.

[Stat] Statutes of the Realm. 12 vols. London, 1810-22.

State Papers, Calendar of. Domestic Series, 1003-1610. London, 1857.

State Trials. Ed. T. B. Howell, 21 vols. London, 1816, &c.

Statham, S. P. H. Dover Charters and other Documents in the Possession of the Corporation of Dover. London, 1902

- History of Dover, London, 1899.

Statutes at Large, Fd. O. Ruffhead and C. Runnington. 14 vols. London, 1786-1800.

Stavelot, Jean de (2388-1449). Chronique (1378-1447). Ed. A. Borgnet Collection de Chroniques Belges médites. Brussels, 1861

Stein, H. Claus Sluter l'Aîné et Hannequin de Bar le Duc à la Cour de Jean Duc de Berri (1385) In Bibl. Éc. Chartes, vol. 12. Paris, 1899.

Stelle, J. (d. c. 1435) Annales Gennenses (1410–1435). In Musaton, vol. xviv. Stengel, E. John Gower's Mannesung and Ebezachtbüchtein. In Ausgabes und Abhandlungen aus dem Gehete der romanischen Phaologie, pt. 2015. Mathbürg. 1886.

1) é à l'esten Ameningsschritten zur Erlert ing der tranzösischen Sprache.
 In Zeitschrift für neufranzösischen Sprache und Litteratur, vol. i. Oppeln, 1579.

Stephen, H. J. New Commentanes on the Iaws of England. 4 vols. London, 1899.

Stephen J. F. (1789-1859). History of the Criminal Law of England. 3 vols. London, 1883.

Stephen, K. French History for Schools, London, 1899

Stephen, L. Swift. In English Men of Leiters. London, 1881

Suphenson, M. Notes of the Monumental Brasies of Middleser. In Transactions of St Paul's Ecclesiologica, Society, vol. iv. London, 1900.

Stevens, History of Abbeys, Hospitals, Cathedrals and Codegrate Churches, 2 vols. London, 1722-3

Stevenson. Jule and Death of King James I of Scotland Mathind Club. Edinburgh, 1847.

 Letters and Papers illustrative of the Wars of the English in France. R S 2 vols. London, 1861-4 --- Narratives of the Expulsion of the Fog. ish from Normandy RS London, 1862.

Stevenson, R. L. (B50-1894). Famusar Studies of Men and Books. London, 1901.

Stewars, Duncan A Short heterical and geneatogical Account of the Royal Family of Scotland Edinburgh, 1739.

Google

Steyert, A. Nouvelle Histoire de Lyon. 3 vols. Lyons, 1895-9.

 Aperçu sur les Variations du Costume Maiture dans l'Antiquité et au Moyen Age. Lyons, 1857

Stieda, W. Em Geldgeschäft Kaiser Sigmunds mit Hännischen Kauffeuten. In Hünnische Geschichtsblätter, 1887. Leipzig, 1889.

Stocks, J. F. and Brugg, W. B. Market Harborough Panish Records. London 1890

Stone, J. (d. c. 1480) Chronick of Christ Church, Canterbury (415-1471) Ed. W. G. Searle. Cambridge, 1902.

Stone, J. M. Reformation and Remaissance (1377-1610). Loadon, 1904.

Stonthouse, W. B. History of the Isle of Arholme. London, 1819. Stothard, C. A. (1787-1811). Monumental Effigies. London, 1817.

Stourton, C. B. J., Baron Mowbray Segrave, and Stourton. The History of he Nobie House of Stourton. 2 vols. Stourton, 1899.

Stow, J. (c. 1425-1605) A Survey of London 2 ross. Ed. C. L. Kingsford London, 1908. Also ed. W. J. Thoms. London, 1876

The Annales or Generall Chronicle of England. London, 1615.

- The Suramerie of English Chronicles. London, 1567.

Strang, H. Claud the Archer A Story of the Reign of Henry the Fifth. London, Stratmann, F. H. A. Middle-English Dictionary. Ed. H. Bradley. Oxford, 1891. Strickland, Agnes. Queens of England. 6 vols. London, 1864.

Strutt,] (1749-1802) Complext View of the Manners, Customs, Arms, etc. of the Inhabitants of England. 3 vois. London, 1775-6.

Regal and Ecclessatical Antiquities of England. London, 1793.
 Sports and Pastimes of the People of England. London, 1801.
 Stubbi, W. Constitutional History of England. 3 vols. Oxford, 1880.

- Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum. Oxford, 1858

— Germany in the later Middle Ages (1200-1500). Ed. A. Hassall. London,

Suchier, H and Birch-Hirschfeld, A. Geschichte der französischen Litteratut von den ältesten Zeiten bis zur Gegenwart. Leipzig, 1900

Summonte, G. A. (d. 1602). Historia della C. tta e Regno di Napoli. 4 vols. Naples, 1602–43

Surita, Geronimo (1512-1580). Anales de la Corona de Aragon. à vols Madrid, 1853.

— Izences zerum ab Aragoniae regibus gestarum. Saragossa, 1578. Surius, L. (1522-1578). Il Camponinto di Pisa. Florence, 1896. Surrees, R. (1770-1824). History of Durham. A vols. London, 1816.

Surrees, R. (1779-1834) History of Durham. 4 vols. London, 1816, &c. Sussex Archaeological Society. Archaeological Collections. London, 1848, &c. Sveyro, Em. Anales de Flandres. 2 vols. Antwerp, 1614.

Swallow, H. J. De Nova V.IIa; or, the House of Nevill. Newcastle-on-Lyne, 188;

The Catherines of History. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1888.

Swift, J (166"-1744) Works. Ed Sir Walter Scott, 19 vols. London, 1824. Sylvestre, T Fingravings of Fortified Towns. 1662 Szazadok Pest, 1867, &c

Taillepied, N. (c. 1540-1518) Les Antiquités et Singularités de la Ville de Rouen, Ed. A. Tougard, Rouen, 1901.

Tanner, T. (2674-1735). Bibliotheen Britanno Hibernica. London, 1748. Tarbé, P. Les Lépreux à Rheims. Rheims, 1842.

Tardieu, A. Histoire de la Ville de Clermont-Ferrand. 2 vols. Moulins, 1870-2.

- Histoire de la Ville de Montferrand. Mouimi, 1875.

- H storre de la Ville, du Pays, et de la Baronne d'Herment en Auvergne. Clermont-Ferrand, 1 866.
- L'Auvergne (Puy-de-Dôme), Guide Complet Illustré. Herment, 1886.
 Grand Dictionnaire listorique du Département du Puy-de-Dôme. Moulips, 1877

- Tate, G. Antiquities of Yevering Bell. Altiwick, 1862 Taylor, E. Lays of the Minnesingers. London, 1825
- Taylor, G. W. Poems written in English by Charles Duke of Orleans during his Captivity in England. Roxburghe Club. London, 1827.
- Taylor, T. Historical and Topographical Description of the Vallage and Castle of Farley. London, 1839.

Teoh, A. Storia della vita e del culto di S. Vicenzo Ferreno. Naples, 1843.

Terrasson, A (170(-1782) Mélanges d'Histoire, de Littérature, de Junisprudence littéraire, etc. Paris, 1768.

Tessereau, A. Histoire chronologique de la grande Chancelerie de France 2 vols Paris, 1710

Testamenta Eboracensia Ed J Raine. Surtees Soc. 6 vols. Durham, 1836, &c. [Thalamus.] Le Petri Thuamus de Montpellier. Montpellier, 1844.

Thatcher, O. J. J. and Schwill, P. Europe in the Middle Age. London, 1897

Thaumas de la Thaumassière, G. (1621-1702). Histoire de Berry. 4 vols. Bourges, 1865-71.

Thenaud, J (a after 1523) Le Voyage d'Outremer Ed C. Schaefer Paris, 1884.

Therenot, F. H. Essai historique sur le Vittuil Clermont-Ferrand, 1837. Theret, A. Pourtraits et vies des Hommes illustres. 2 vols. Paris, 1584.

Thibaudeau A. R. H. (1739-1811). Histoire du Poitou. Ed. H. de St Hermine. 3 vols. Niort, 1839.

Thibault, M. Isabeau de Bavière. Pans, 1903

Thierry, J. N. A. Recueil des Monuments inédits de l'histoire du Tiers État 4 vols. Paris, 1850-70.

- Essai sur l'histoire de la Formation et du Progrès du Tiers État. Paris, 1866

Tholin, G. Inventaire sommalité des Archives communales. Ville d'Agen-Paris, 1884.

 Vale I bre et barons. Essai sur les Limites de la Juridiction d'Agen. Agen, 1886.

Thomas, A. St Vincent Ferrier dans le mid. de la France. In Annales da Midi, vol. iv. Toulouse, 1892.

—— Soldats Italiens un service de la France en 1417. Ibid.

Les États Provinciaux de la France centrale sons Charles VII 2 vols.
 Paris, 1879

--- De Johannis de Monsterolio Vita et Operibus. Parm, 1983 Le Dauphin Louis, fils de Charles VI, amsteur de Théâtre. In Romania, vol. xxxx. Paris, 1910.

Thomas, T. Memoirs of Owen Glendower. Haverfordwest, 1822.

Thomassy, R. Jean Gerson, Paris, t 843.

Thompson E M Notes on illuminated MSS in the Exhibition of English Mediteval Paintings. In Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of London, ser. 11, vol. xvi. London, 1896.

Thompson, T. Ocellum Promontorium, or short Observations on the ancient

State of Holderness, Hull, 1824.

Thomson, C. L. Historical Albums, 6 pts. London, 1903

Thoreton, R. Antiqueties of Nottinghamshire. Ed. J. Thoresby. 3 vols. London, 1797.

Thorpe, B. (1782-1870). Ancient Laws and Institutes of England. London, T840.

Three Fifteenth Century Chronicles Ed. J. Gairdner, Camden Soc. London, 1880

Thurezu-Dangin, P. Un Prédicateur Populaire. St Bernardin de Sienne. Paris, 1806.

Tickell, J. History of the Town and County of Kingston-upon Hull, Hull, 1798.

Tierney, M. A. History of the Town and Castle of Arundel. 2 vols. London, 1834.

Tighe, R. R. and Davis, J. E. Annals of Windson. 2 vols. London, 1858 Tillet, Jean du (c. 1500-1570) Recueil des Rois de France Paris, 1618. — Guerres et Traictez de Paix, Paris, 1588

Tilloy, O Histoire de Jean-sans-Peur Duc de Bourgogne. Douai, 1861

Tindal, See Rapin-Thoyras

Tinodi, S. (d. 1558). Összes Művei (1540–1555). Ed. A Szilády In Régi Magyar Költök tára, vol. ii. Pest, 1881

Tisserand, L. M. Les Armoires de la Ville de Paris 2 vols. Paris, 1874-5. T'u Livis Forojuliensis Vita Henrici Quinti Ed. T Hearne. Oxford, 1716. T'vier, H. Histoire de la Lattérature française. Paris, 1879.

Histoire de la Littérature dramat, que en France de puis ses Origines jusqu'au

Cid. Pans, 1873.

Tollet, G. De l'Assistance Publique et des Hopitaux jusqu'au xux siècle. Paris, 1889

Tolra de Bordas, J. L'Antipape Benoît XIII en Roussillon. In Revue du Monde Catholique, vol. xv. Paris, 1866.

[Top and Gen] The Topographer and Genealogist. Ed. J. G. Nichols. 3 vols 1846-58

Topham J (1746-1803) Some Account of the Codegiate Church of St Stephen. London, 1798

Touchard Lafosse, G. Histoire de Blois. Blois, 1846.

Toulgoët Treanna, E de Les Comptes de l'Hôtel du Duc de Berry († 170-1413) In Mémoires de la Soc. des Antiquaires du Centre, vol. 2711. Bourges, 1800.

Tour-Landry, La, The book of the Knight of. Ed T Wright EFTS. London, 1868.

Touron, A. Histoire des Hommes Illustres de l'Ordre de St Dominique. 6 vols. Paris, 1743-9.

Tout, T. F. An Advanced History of Great Britain. London, 1906.

-- Firearms in England in the Fourteenth Century In English Historical Review, vol. 2211 London, 1911

Review, vol. 22vi London, 1917 Towle, G. M. History of Henry V. New York, 1866 Townley Mystenes. Surfees Soc. Durham, 1846.

n Gougle

[Trahsons] La Livre des Trahisons de France envers la Masson de Bourgogna (1389-1470). In Chroniques relatives à l'Hist, de Belgique sous la demanation des dues de Bourgogne, vol. ii. Brussels, 1870.

Traill, H. D. Social England. 6 vols. London, 1893-7.

[Traison.] Chronique de la Traison et mort de Richard II. Ed. B. Williams English Historical Soc. London, 1846

Fravers, N. (1686-1750). Histoire civile, politique et re, gieuse de la Ville et du Comté de Nantes, 3 vols. Nantes, 1836-41.

Trébuchet, L. Un Compagnon de Jeanne d'Arc, Artur III, Comte de Richemont.
Paris, 1807

Trébution, F. G. 5 (1800-1870) Caen, son Histoire, ses Monuments, son Commerce et ses Environs. Caen, 1881

Trémoille. See La Tremoille.

Trench, W. F. A Marror for Magistrates ats Origin and Influence. Edinburgh, 1898.

Trévédy, J. Le Connétable de Richemont. Vannes, 1900.

Trevelyan, G. M. Engaind in the Age of Wycliffe. London, 1899.

Triger, R. Une forteresse du Maine pendant l'occupation anglaise. Mamen, 1846.

- Le Château et la ville de Beaumont le-Vicomte per dant l'invanon angane (1417-1450). Mamers, 1901.

Trube in, J. Catalogus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum sive illustriam virorum. Cologne, 1531

Trokelowe, Johannes de Chronicon Ed H T Riley, R.S. London, 1866 Trou, D (d. 1856). Recherches historiques, archéologiques, et biographiques sur la Ville de Pontoise. Pontoise, 1841

Truscher, O and Horau, G. Plan de Paris sous le Règne de Henri II. Paris, 1877.

Trussell, J. A Continuation of the Collection of the History of England [by Samuel Daniell]. London, 1636.

Tuetes, 3. Testaments e tregistrés au Parlemen, de Paris sous le règne de Charles VI. In Collection de Documents médits sur l'Histoire de France. Mélanges, vol. 18. Paris, 1880.

Turmur (or Avenums), J (1477-1534) Sämmtliche Werke. Ed. C. von Haim. 5 vols. Munich, 1880-6.

Turner, Dawson (1775-1858). Account of a Tour m Normandy. 2 vols. London, 1820.

- Sketch of the History of Caister castle. London, 1842.

Turner, G. J. Select Pleas of the Forest. Selden Soc. London, 1901,

--- Lincoln's Inn. London, 1901

Turner, S. History of England 5 vols. London, 1830.

Tumer, T. H (1$15-1852). Some Account of Domestic Architecture in England Ed J. H. Parker, 4 vols. Oxford, 1851-9

Twinger von Königshofen, J. (1349–1420). Chronzk. Ed. C. Hegel. In Chroniken der deutschen Städte. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1870–1.

Two Fifteenth-century Cookers-Books Ed T Austin E F T S London, 1881 Twysden, R. Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem. London, 1652.

Tyler, J Endell, Henry of Monmouth 2 vols. London, 1818

Tyrreil, H. History of England for Family Use. 2 vol. London, 1872-3.

Reprinted as The Royal History of England. London, 1876.

Tytles, P. F. Lives of Scottish Worthier. 3 vols. London, 1831 4.

-- Hatery of Scolland, 4 vols. Edinburgh, 1873-7.

Upton, N (c. 1410-1457). De Studio maltari. Ed E. Bysshe. London, 1654. Urry, J. The works of G. Chaucer. London, 1721

Ush, Adam of (c 1352-1430). Chronicon (1377-1421). Ed E M. Thompson. London, 1904.

Vaissète Szz Vic.

Valdory, G. (d. 1601). Relation du Siège de Rouen en 1591. Ed. E. Gosselin. Rouen, 1881.

Valla, L. (1405-1457). De Rebus & Ferdinando Aragonise rege gestis. In Rerum Hispanicarum Scriptores, vol. A. Frankfort, 1579

Vallée, Ph. Inventure sommaire des Archives communales. Ville de Dijon. Dijon, 1900.

Vallet de Viriville, A. (18 5-1868). Histoire de Charles VII. 3 vols. Paris, 1862-5.

 Extra ti des Comptes Royaux relatifs à Charles V. I. In Cabinet Historique, vol. in. Paris, 1857.

- Isabeau de Bavière. In Revue Française, vol. xv. Paris, 1859.

- Assass nat du Duc d'Orléans par Jean sans Peur. In Magasin de Labrurie, vol. vii. Pans, 1859

Les derniers Jours de Valentine de Milan. In Revue Française, vol. zvii Paris, 1859.

- Histoire de l'Instruction Publique en Europe, Pans, 1849.

Charles VII, Roi de France et ses Conseillers (1403-1461). Paris, 1859.
 Notes for deux Médialles de Plomb relatives à Jeanne d'Arc. în Revue Archéologique. Paris, 1861.

--- Nouces de que ques Manuscrits précieux sous le Rapport de l'Art. In Gazette des Beaux Arts, vois, xx, xxi. Pans, 1866.

Valors, N. Le Conseil de Roi aux xive xve et xvie siècles. Paris, 1888.

La France et le grand Schisme d'Occident. 4 vols. Paris, 1896-1902.

Vandenbrocck, H. Estra is and studies des anciens Registres des Conseux de la Ville de Tournes (1385-1422). 2 vols. Tournes, 1861-3.

Vapereau, L. G. Dictionnaire universel des Littératures. Paris, 1876-7

Varenbergh, E. Histoire des resations diplomatiques entre le Comté de Flandre et l'Angleterre. Brussels, 1874.

Varillas, A. Histoire des Révolutions arrivées dans l'Europe en matière de Religion. 6 vols. Paris, 1686-9.

Vatout, J. (1792-1848). Souvenirs historiques des Résidences Royales de France. 7 vols. Paris, 1837-45

- Le Château d'Eu illustré Paris, 1844.

Vatuer, V John Wydyff, sa vie, ses œuvres, sa doctrine. Paris, 1886.

Vaultier, M. C. F. E. (1772-1843). Histoire de la Ville de Caen. Caen. 1843.
 Recherches historiques sur l'incien Doyenne de Vaucelles. In Mém. Soc des Antiquaires de la Normandie, vol. xn. Caen. 1841.

Vautier, C. Extrart de Registre des Dons, Confiscations, Maintenus et autres Actes fa te dans le Duché de Normandie pendant les Années 1418-1420 per Henre V Ros d'Angleterre. Paris, 1828.

Vanz de Vire, See Gaste

Veer, G de Prinz Heinrich der Seefahrer und seine Zeit. Danzig, 1864.

[Ven State Papers] Calendar of State Papers relating to English affairs in the Archives of Venice. London, 1864, &c

Yenn, J. Biographical History of Gonvi le and Caius College. 4 voli: Cambridge, 1897-1912.

ии ж

Venturi, A. Storis dell' Arte Italiana. Milan, 1901, &c.

Venute, f. Dissertation a sur les anciers no unit is de la ville de Bo desur, sur les Gaheti, les antiquités, et les ducs d'Aquitaine; avec un traité historique sur les mounnyes que les Anglais ort frappes dans cette province. Bordenux, 1754

Verdier, A. and Cattois, F. Architecture civile et domestique au Moyen Age et à la Renaissance. 2 vols. Paris, 1855-7

Verbaer 'or Haraeus'), F. Anna es du um seu Principum Brabannae totusque Belgia, 3 vols. Antwerp, 1623

Verms, M gurl del Chronique dels Comtes de Foix et Senhors de Béarn. Ed. J. A. C. Buchon. In Pantheon Littéraire. Paris, 1845-45.

Verneul, Chronique d'un Bourgeeis de In Bulletin de la Soc hist de Normandie, vol. in. Also ed. A. Hellot. Paris, 1884.

Vic, C. d., and Vansète, J. J. Histoire générale de Languedoc. (6 vols. Toulouse, Viction, M. de (1502-1666). Chronica de Valencia. 2 vols. Valencia, 1881-4. Victori, K. H. Humphrey, Dutie of Giotecester. London, 1907.

- England in the Later Middle Ages. London, 1911.

[Vict. Hat. Victoria History of the Country of England, Ed. H. A. Deubleday and W. Page. London, 1894, &c.

Vidal, P. Elne historique et archéologique. Perpignan 1887.

Vidier, A. Notes et Documents sur le Personnel, les Biens, et l'Administration de la Sainte Chapelle du xilis* au av* siècle. In Mém. Soc. de l'Hist. de Paris, vol. xivoi. Paris, 1902.

Vignat, E. Les Lépreux et les Chevaliers de 5t Lazare de Jerumiem et de N.D.

du Mont Carmel. Orlenn, 1844.

Vigne, F. de. Vade Mecuni du Per (ge, og Recuen de Cortumes du Moyer Age. 2 vols. Ghent, 1835–40.

 Becherches historiques sur les Chitumes e viles et militaires des Gildes et des Corporations de Métiges. Ghent, 1847

 Mœurs et Usages des Corporations de Métiers de la Belgique et du Nord de la France. Ghent, 1857

Varier, N. (1530-1596). Histoire de la Maison de Luxembourg. Paris, 1617.

— Berura Burgundionum Chronicon. Basie, 1575.

- Recueil de l'Histoire de l'Église. Leyden, 1601

Vil art I. F. Essai d'une El stoire de la Paroisse de St Jacques de la Boucherie Paris, 1758.

Histoire Critique de Nicolas Flamel et de Pernelleza Fernine. Paris, 1761 Villard de Honnecourt (c. 1250). Album. Ed. J. B. A. Lassus. Paris, 1856. Ed. R. Willis. London, 1859. Facsimile reproduction. Ed. H. Omont Paris, 1906

Villaret, C. (1715-1766). Histoire de France. 33 vols. Paris, 1763.

Vulars, L. Oswald von Woltenstein. London, 1901.

Villemairi, A. F. Cours de Littérature française. 5 vols. Paris, 1829-38. Villeneuve-Bargemont, F. L. de Histoire de René d'Anjou. 3 vols. Paris, 1825. Villeneuve-Bargemont, F. L. de Histoire de René d'Anjou. 3 vols. Paris, 1825. Villeneuve-Bargemont, F. L. de Histoire de René d'Anjou. 3 vols. Paris, 1825. Villeneuve-Bargemont, F. L. de Histoire de René d'Anjou. 3 vols. Oztéans, 1752.

Vinchant, F (1580-1635) Annaies de la Province et Conté du Hamaut 6 vols. Brussels, 1848-53

Viollet, P. Quelques Textes pour servir à l'Histoire politique des Partiers au xvi siècle. In Mém. Soc de l'Hist. de Paris, vol is. Paris, 1878

Viollet, P. Histoire du Droit Civil français. Paris, 1803.

- Histoire des Institutions politiques et administratives de la France. 4 vois. Pans, 1890-1912

Viollet-18-Duc, E. E. Dictionnaire raisonné du Mobilier Français, 6 vols, Paris. 1855-75-

Dictionnaire de l'Architecture Française. 10 vols. Paris, 1865–8.

- Album de V llard de Honnecourt. In Revue Archeologique (N.S.), vol vu. Paris, 1863

V.rac, D. A. Recherches historiques sur la Ville de St Macaire. Bordeaux, 1890.

[Vita] Vita et Gesta Henrici Quinta Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1727 Vitry, Jacques de (c. 1178-1240). Historia Orientalis et Occidentalis. Douai, Vorgt, F. Geschichte des brandenburgisch-preussischen Staates. Berlin, 1860. Voigt G (1827-1891). Die Wiederbelebung des Classischen Alterthums. z vols. Berlin, 1880.

Volgt J Geschichte Marienburgs, Körngsberg, 1843.

– Namen-Codex der deutschen Ordens-Beamten. Königsberg, 1843

Voisin-La Hougue. Histoire de la Ville de Cherbourg. Ed "Verusmor." Cherbourg, 1839

Vossberg, F. A (1800-1870). Banderia Prutenorum, oder die Fahnen des deutschen Ordens und seiner Verbündeten, welche in Schlichten und Gefechten der 1 gen Jahrhunderts eine Beute der Polen wurden. Berlin, Geschichte der preussischen Münzen und Siegel bis zum Ende der Herrschaft des deutschen Ordens. Berlin, 1843.

Voss.us, M (d. 1646) Annales Hollandiae Zelandiaeque Amsterdam, 1680 Nowes, (or Hooker), J (c. 1526-1601) A Catalog of the Bishops of Excester. London, 1584.

Wade, J. British History chronologically arranged. London, 1844.

Wagenaar, J. 1709-1773) Vaterlandsche Historie 21 vols. Amsterdam, 1749-59 2 vols Amsterdam, 1792-1800

Wake, W (1657-1737). State of the Church and Clergy of England. London, Wakeman, H. O. An Introduction to the History of the Church of England. London, #899.

Walcott, M. E. C (1821-1880) Memorials of Westminster. London, 1851.

- Memorials of Canterbury, Canterbury, 1868

- Inventory of St Osythe's Priory, Essex. London, 1870.

- Prices and Alien Priories. In Reliquary, July, 1870. - Vestages of St Augustine's Athley without the Walls of Canterbury. In

Journal of British Archæological Association, vol. xxxv. London, 1879. Waiden. See Netter.

Waller, J. Guand L. A. B. A Series of Monumental Brasses from the 13th to the 16th Century, London, 1864

Wallis, J. The Natural History and Antiquities of Northumberland. 2 vols. London, 1769.

Wallon, H. A. Jeanne d'Arc. Paris, 1883.

Wa pole, H (1717-1797) Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors, 5 vols London, 1806.

Waiser, E. Poggius Florentinus' Leben und Werke. Leipzig and Berlin, 1914.

Walangham, Thomas. Historia Anglicana Ed. H. T. Riley. R.S. a vole, London, 1863 4.

- Hypodigma Neustriae. Ed. H. T. Riley, R.S. London, 1876.

Ward, H. L. D. Catalogue of Romances in the Department of Manuscripts in the British Museum, 2 vols. London, 1883, 1891.

Ware, J. Works concerning Ireland Ed W Harris. 2 vols. Dublin, 1764. Warner, B. E. Engash History in Shakespeare's Pairs. New York, 1894

Warner, L. F. Guide to Manuscript Autographs calub ted in the Department of MSS, of the British Museum. London, 1006.

- Reproductions from Illuminated MSS, 3 vols. London, 1907 Illuminated MSS in the British Museum, ser set London, 1901.

-Valerius Maxismus. Miniatures illustrating the French Version in a Manuscript written about 1474. London, 1907.

Warner, G. T. A Brief Survey of British History London, 1899.

Warner, R. Collections for the History of Hampshire. 6 vots. London, 1795. Warske, C. Die Quellen des Eiope der Marie de France. In Eusgabe für H. Suchier. Halle, 1890.

- Die Fabeln der Marie de France. Halle, 1898.

Warton, I. (1728-1796). History of English Poetry. Ed. W. Carew Hazhit. 4 vols. London, 1871.

Wasschourg R (. 1480). Fremier Volume des Antiquitez de la Gaule Belgique, Royaulme de France, Austrasie et Lorraine. 2 voli. Paris, 1549.

Waterland, D. (1685-1740). Works. 11 vols. Oxford, 1823.

Waters, E. C. The Counts of Eu sometime Lords of the Honor of Tickhill. In Yorkshire Archaeolog: aland Lopographi a Journal, rol. jz. Lengor, 1816. Watson, Chr. (d. 1581). The Victorious Actes of King Iterry the Fifth. London, 1368 Watt er Vadun), I uch de von (1484-155.) Chronis des Achte des Klosters St Gallen. Ed. E. Götzinger. 2 vols. St Gall, 18-4-7.

Wattenna h. W. Nene aus England. In Neues Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, vol j. Hanover, 1876.

Waugh, W. T. Sir John Oldcastle. In Eng. Hist. Rev., vol. zz. London, 190 5 Waurin, Jehan de (c. 1390-1474). Recueil des Chroniques. Ed. W. Handy and E. L C P Hardy, R.S. 5 vols. London, 1864-91.

Way, G. L. Fabriagn or Tales selected and translated. London, 1815.

Weale, W. H. J. Hubert and John Van Eyck; their Life and Work. London,

W.bb. J. (1776-1869). Roll of Household Experies of Richard de Swinefield, bahop of Hereford, 1289-1290. 2 vols. Camden Soc. London, 1854-5. Week 5, 2. Legal the Aligs Old Bargehouse. In Home Counties Magazine, vol. z. London, 1908

Weever, J. Ancient Funeral Monuments. London, 1631.

Weist, H. Kottümkunde. Geschichte der Tracht und des Geräther vom zuvien Jahrbundert his auf die Gegenwart. 2 vols. Stuttgart, 1872.

"Wesh Maruser pts.]. Reports of MSS in the Welsh Language. Historical MSS.

Commission, 2 vols. London, 1898, 1910.

Wenck & Lucin Viscent. Knopy Heinrich IV von Fryland und Edmund von Kent In Mitt. des Inst für Oesterr Geschichtsforschung, wal zust. Innsbruck, 1897.

Wenne burger, K. Th. Geschichte der Niederlande. Gothe, : 879. Werth, H. Altfranzöusche Jagdichrbücher. Halle, 1889.

Go gle

Westcott, B. F. A General View of the history of the English Bible. London,

Westlake, H. F. Westminster Abbey London, 1923

Westlake, N. H. J. A History of Design in Painted Gass. 4 vols. London, 1879-94. Wetzer, H.) and Welte, B. Kirchenlexicon oder Encyclopädie der Katholischen

Theologie, 12 vols. Freiburg-1.-B., 1886-1901

Wharton, H. (1664-1695). Historia Literaria. In Appendix to W Cave, Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Historia Literaria. London, 1689.

Wheater, W. History of the Parishes of Sherburn and Cawood with notices of Wistow, Saxton, Towton, etc. London, 1882.

Wheatley, H. B. London, Past and Present, 3 vols. London, 1897.

Whethamstede, T. Duo rerum Anglicarum Scriptores. Ed. T. Hearne. Oxford, 1712.

Whitaker, T. D. (1759-1821). History and Antiquities of Craven. Leeds, 1878. - Lordis and Elmete. Leeds, 1816.

Whitford, R. (b. 1542). The Martiloge in Englyshe. Ed. F. Procter and E S Dewick, Henry Bradshaw Soc. London, 1893.

Whitwell, R. J. Italian Bankers and the English Crown. In Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, ser 11 vol. xvii. London, 1903

W'dmore R. An History of the Church of St Peter, Westminster London, 1751 Wirkes, J Encyclopædia Londmensis. 24 vols. London, 1810–29.

Wilkinson, R. Londina Illustrata, a vols. London, 1819.

Willeman N X Z (1763-1830). Monuments français inédits pour servir à l'historie des Arts. 2 vois. Paris, 1836-9

Williams, R. F. Domesic Memoirs of the Royal Family and of the Court of England, 3 vols. London, 1860.

Wills, Browne. History of the Mitted Parliamentary Abbies. 2 vols. London 1718, 1719.

Willis, R. The Architectural History of the conventual buildings of the Monestery of Christ Churchin Canterbury. In Archaeologia Cantiana, vol. vo. London : 868.

The Architectura History of the University of Cambridge Fd] W Clark. 4 vols. Cambridge, 1886.

Wills of Kings and Queens of England, Collection of Ed | Nichols London, 1780.

W Son H. B (1774-1853). History of the Parish of St Laurence Pountney London, 1831.

Wilson L The New Testament translated by John Wycliffe. London, 1848 Windocke, E. (1380-1443). Denkwardigkeiten Ed W. Altmann. Berlin, Windle, B. C. A. A School History of Warwickshire. London, 1905.

Wolf, F. Studien zur Geschichte der Spanischen und Portugiesischen Nationalhteratur. Berlin, 1859.

Wolff, M von Leben und Werke des Antonio Beccadelli genannt Panormita Leipzig, 1894.

Wolkenstein, O (1367-1445) Gedichte, Ed J Schatz Göttingen, 1904 Woltmann, A. Holbein und se ne Zeit. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1866-8.

- Geschichte der Malerei, 3 vols. Leipzig, 1879-88. Translated by S Colvin and C. Bell. London, 1880.

Wood, Antony à (1612-1695). History and Antiquities of the Cooleges and Halls. in the University of Oxford Ed. J. Gutch. 2 vois. Oxford, 1786-90.

Wood, M. A. E. Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies, 3 vois. London, 1846. Woodward, B. B., Wales, T. C. and Lockhart, C. History of Hampshire. 3 vols. London, 1861-9.

Woolnoth, W. A Graphical Illustration of the Metropolitan Cathedral of Canterbury London, 1810.

Worcester, William (1415-1482). Innerurum. Ed. J. Nasmith. Cambridge,

- Annales rerum Anglicarum. Ed. T. Hearne in Liber niger Seaccurii 2 vols. Oxford, 1728

Wordsworth, Chr (1774-. 846). Ecclesistical Biography. 4 vols. London,

Wordsworth, Chr. (b. 1848). The Fifteenth Century Cartulary of St Nicholas'. Hospital, Salisbury, Salisbury, 1902. Workman, H. B. The Dawn of the Reformation 2 vols. London, 1901-2

- John Wyckf 2 vols. Orford, 1926

Wornum, R. N. Some Account of the Life and Works of Hans Holbern the Younger London, 1867

Worthy, C. History of the Suburbs of Exeter. London, 1892.

- Devonstrire Wills, London, 896.

Wratislaw, A. H. John Hus. London, 1892.

Wright, A. and Smith, P. Partiament Past and Present. London, 1908.

Wright, James. The History and Antiquities of the County of Rutland, London, 1684-7

Wright, Joseph, English Dialect Dictionary. 6 vols. London, 1806-1905 Wright, Thomas. (1810-1877). History and Topography of the County of Essex, 2 vols. London, 1831-5.

- History of France. 3 vois. London, 1858-62.

- History of Domesic Manners and Sentiments in England during the Middle Ages. London, 1862

-- Feudal Manuals of English History. London, 1872

- Songs and Carols from a Manuscript of the 15th Century. Percy Society London, 1847.

Wright, T. Views of Westmaster Abbey. London, 1896.

Wrottesley, G. Creey and Calais. London, 1898.

Wuerdniger, J. Kriegsgeschichte von Bayern, Franken, Pfalz und Schwaben

(1347-1526). 2 vols. Munich, 1868.

Wherth Pacquet, F. X (1801-1884). Table chronologique des Chartes et Diplômes relatifs à l'Histoire de l'ancien Pava de Luxembourg (116(-1419). In Pubacanons de la Section Historique de l'Institut de Luxembourg, vol. xxv. Luxembourg, 1880

Wurzbach, C. Biographisches Lettoon des Kaiserthums Oesterreich. Vienna, £846-gt.

Wusterwitz, E. (c. 1375-1433) Märkische Chronik. Ed. J. Heidemann. Berlin, 1878

Wyle, J. H. (1844-1914). History of England under Henry IV. 4 vols. London, 1884-98 The Council of Constance to the Death of John Hus. London, 1900.

Notes on the Agincourt Roll. In Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, ser. ..., vol. v. London, 1921.

Wyon, A. B. (1837-1884) The Great Scale of England. London, 1887. Yeatman, P. The Feuda, History of the County of Derby. 3 vois Kingstonon-Thames, t 886-95.

Yonge, C. M. Cameos from English History. 2nd ser. London, 1871.

History of Christian Names. 2 vols. London, 1863.

York, Edward Duke of (1373-1415) The Master of Game. Ed. W. A. and F. Baillie-Grohman, London, 1904

York Mystery Plays. Ed L. T Smith Oxford, 1885

York Pontifical, i.e. Liber Pontificalis C. Bambridge archiepiscop: Eboracensia. Ed W. G Henderson Surfees Soc. Durham, 1875

Yorkshire Archeological and Topographical Journal. London, 1878, &c. Young, S. The Annels of the Barber-Surgeons of London, London, 1890.

Frante, C. Un Condottere an xvº siècle Paris, 1882

— Florence. Paris, 1881.

Yule. See Marco Polo.

Zantfliet, Cornelius (d. after 1461). Chronicon. In Martene, Collectio, vol. v. Zech, K. L. F. von (1790-1829) Die merkwürdigsten Schlachten zwischen Franzosen und Engländern. In Oesterreichische militarische Zeitschrift, vol ix. Vienna, 1845 Zener, M. Topographia Galliae. 3 vols. Frankfurt, 1655-61. Zenschrift für Kirchengeschichte. Gotha, 1876, &c.

Zoller, B. La France Anglaise. Paris, 1886

 Les Armagnacs et les Bourguignons. Paris, 1886. - Louis de France et Jean-Sans-Peur. Paris, 1886.

- Le Grande Invasion Anglasse. Paris, 1885.

Zelier, J. Histoire d'Ademagne. 7 vols. Pans, 1872-91.

- Histoire de l'Italie. Paris, 1853.

Zimplers, H. The Hansa Towns. London, 1889.

Zuercher, J. Gersons Stellung auf dem Conclevon Constanz. In M. Buedinger, Untersuchungen zur mittlern Geschichte, vol. n. Leipzig, 1871.

LIST OF MANUSCRIPT AUTHORITIES USED

At the Public Record Office, London.

Chancery Records.

Close Rolls, Fine Rolls French (or Treaty) Rolls; Gascon Rolls; Norman Rolls; Patent Rolls, Warrants for the Great Seal, Ser. 1 (sometimes cited by Dr Wytte as "Privy Seal"), Inquisitions ad quod damnum, Inquisitions post mortem.

Exchaquer Records.

The King's Remembrancer.

Accounts, Various, Memoranda Rolls, Miscelaneous Books, Ser. L.

The Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer:

Foreign Accounts; Memoranda Rolls, Miscellaneous Enrolled Accounts.

Exchequer of Receipt:

Issue Rolls, Receipt Rolls.

Duchy of Lancaster Records.

Accounts, Varaous.

Special Collections.

Angient Correspondence

Collections of Transcripts.

Transcripts of Foreign Records (Record Commission Transcripts, Ser. 11).

In the British Museum.

Additional MSS.:

4600, 4601, 4602, 4603, 4660, 7096 and 14848 (Reg. of Abbot Curteys), 17716, 24062, 24512, 24513, 24704, 29704, 35295 (Streeche's Historia Regum Anglu), 37967.

Cotton MSS.:

Julius B.i., B.ii., C. vii., E.iv.; Tiberius B.vi., B.xii.; Caligua D.ii., D.v., D.vii., Claudius A.viii., E.iv., Nero D.vii.; Otho B.xiv., E.ix.; Vitellius E.xii.; Vespasian C.xii.; Titus C.ix., Cleopatra C.iv., E.ii., F.ii., F.vi

Egerton M5, 1995.

Harley MSS.:

293, 431, 565, 781, 864, 991, 1309, 3838, 4205, 4379, 4380, 4381, 4763, 6953.

Lansdowne MSS.:

762, 1054.

In the British Museum (continued).

Royal MSS.:

1 E ix, 16 F ii, 20 C vii, 20 E ix.

Sloane MS. 1776.

Stowe MS. 440

Additional Charters

11, 50, 52, 59, 65, 66, 67, 111, 260, 452, 2101, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2144, 2155, 2292, 2305, 2326, 2425, 2429, 2439, 2440, 11474, 12508, 13344, 13345, 16368 C, 17716.

Harley Charter 43 E 39.

At the College of Arms.

Arundel MS. 29.

MS. M 9 (Chronicle of Basset, etc.).

At Lambeth Palace.

Lambeth MS. 84.

Registers of Archbishops Arundel and Chichele.

In the Bodleian Library.

Bodley MSS.

496, 2159

At Emmanuel College, Cambridge.

Arderne MS.

At the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris.

MSS, francais:

Ancien fonds, 25766, 25907, 26043, 26044; nouvelles acquisitions, 1482.

Portefeuilles de Fontameu, 111-112.

In the Library of Harvard University.

Typescript, HU 90.1215 (Professor Newhall's thesis).

Miscellaneous.

Exeter Municipal Records.

Salisbary Ledgers.

Register of Thomas Langley, Bishop of Durham.

Maldon Rolls.

Dr A Clark's notes on the rolls of the manors of Great Waltham and Chatham Hall.

INDEX

Anion, Louis III, dake of, 69, 105. Aug fivez, 27 Aachen, 32 Abbeville (Somme), 6, 24, 129, 227, 295, - Yolande, duchess of, 69, 150, 152, 158, 321 333 1 44 422 173 Abbotshury (Dorset), abbey of, 42 Anne of Burguady, 174 Abergavenay, Lord, see Worcester, earl of Aquitaine, 257, 166, 264, 166, 168, 172 Abingdon Berka.) abbey of, 42 Aragon, 174, 175, 361, 165 — Alfonso V, king of, 175, 111 Agenau, 152 Agincuort (Par-de Calan), 443 aqui Roll - Ferdinand I, king of, 175 of, 50, Ballad of, 126 - Martin of, king of Steely, 175 Aguenir, Jean, 130 Arderen (Manchel, 224) Aigues Mortes (Gard), 43 Ardres (Pas de Calan), 53 Atenines (Somme), 554, 555 Azgentan (Orne), 5 q, 2 gll Aitre, Entrache de l', 200 Arles (Bouches du Rhôse), 34 A xe-sur-Vienne (Haute-Vienne), 13 Arly, Bastard of, 133, 137 Armagnac, Bernard VII, count of, 3, 17, Albany, Robert Stewart, duke of, 87, 39, 76, 102, 104 A bergau, Nicholas, bishop of Bologna, Bernard of, brother of John IV, 171 - John IV, count of, 13, 152, 258, 365, A.bi (Tazn), 11, 107 375 Albret, Chirles II, lord of, $3, 152, 158, Armagnaes, the, 1, 20, 34, 67, 78, 79, 238, 365, 372 Alcobaça, Pedro de, 223 83, 103, 116, 122, 135, 138, 162, 168, 169, 192, 196, 207, 386, see Dat-Alençon (Ozne,, 26, 66, 68, 73, $1, 151, phineste 146, 276, 240, 246, 260, 313 Arquet (Seine Inf.), 176, 242 - John II, dake of, 67, 106, 316 Areas (Pas-de-Calais), 29, 188, 190, 192, - Bastard of, 207, 197 310, 326, 3413 bishop of, see Porve, M. Aleipe, Jean, 189 Artiliery, 58, 59, 70, 71, 82, 103, 107, Alexander, Bastard of Bourbon, 49 108 19. 113, 119, 122, 110, 132, 135, 186, 209, 112, 226. 1:3, 3 7, 314, 340, Aleyn, John, 182 Alfonio V, king of Aragon, 173, 189 147, 350, 36H, 369 sq., 411 Alington, William, 251, 195, 238, 245, Artois, 153, 188, 234, 321, 326, 343, 409, 246, 250, 254, 255, 257-260 410, 411 A.kmagne (Calvados), (8 Arundel, John Fittalan, earl of, see Ma-Almay (Herefordshire), 95 feartives: Alamouth (Northumberland), 402 — John, kt., 113, 182, 318 Alawick, W. Riam, 288 - Thomas, archbishop of Camerbury, Arest, county of, 29 Altrée, river, 300, 303 Arundel and Surrey, Thomas Fitzalan, Amiens (Sorvine), 78, 79, $1, 122, 227, earl of, 12, 278 232, 234, 266, 267, 296, 321, 326, 333, Ashton, John, at , 64, 13, 218, 341 343, 354, 357, 378, 385, 407, 410 — bishop of, see Har suri, Jean d' Ashton-under Lyne Lanca.), 64 Athol, Walter Stewart, earl of, 214 Army (One), 96 Auge, 54, 111, 262 Anet (Eure et Loir), 216 Aumale, Jean d'Harcourt, count of, 122, 218, 195, 316, 342, 423 Auneau (Eure-et Low), 327, 378 Angeanes, Jean d., r.o. Angels (Maine-et-Louv), 27, 390, 514 Angoumou, 152, 371 Austria, Albert IV, Luke of, 1 Auvilian (Calvados), 54 Auxerre (Yonne), 78, 192, 330 Anjou, 254, 165, 299, 324, 325, 378. - Louis II, duke of, 17, 25, 29, 67, Avignos (Vauciuse), a

Arranches (Manche), 71, 180, 240, 246, 254, 161, 142, 343

Babington, Williams 229 Bacquerille (Some Inf), 431 Guillaume, lord of, 14 t Balton (Sarthe), 216 Banyard, Richard, 397 Bapaume (Pas-de-Calait), 198, 154 Bar, Cardinal Louis, duke of, 3 - Guy de. 104 Barbazan, Arnaud Guilliume, Jord of, 11 , 115, 230, 446 Bardolph, William, kt., 41, 175, 285, 296 Barmoor (Northumb.), 90 Barnet (Herts), 87 Barneville-le-Bertrand (Calvados), 98 Baitifie of St Antoine, the, 105, 225, 323, 128, 181 Bateman, John, 394 Bach (Someout), 44, 404 Bath Easton (Sumerset), 404 Bange (Maine et none), battle of, 271, 171, 185, 189, 193 seq. visited by the dauphin, 311 Baurne-Montrevel, Jean de la, 380, 381 Baus, Guillinums de, 150 Baveux (Calvados), 64, 72 258, 254, 248, 261, bishop of, see Langrei, J Bayonne (Basses Pyrénees), 44, 182, 365, Bazas (Gironde), 369, 370, 371 Béarn, 372 Beaucaire (Gard), e Bezuce, 296, 329 Beauchamp, Richard, etc Warwick, earl of a Wortester, earl of - Watter, kt., 141, 238, 319 - William, kt., 110, 175 Beaufort (Aute), 255 Beaufort, Edmund, 301, 306 — Henry, bishop of Winchester, 13, 22, 19. 36, 42, 98, 99, 139, 165, 171, 269, 274, 275, 278 394, 4.7, 426 — Јоал, ≄87. - John, see Somerset, earl of - Thomas, see Exeter, duke of Beaufort-en-Vallée (Mame-et-Loire), 300, 301, 304 200 Beaugency (Loret), 127 sqq Beaulieu Heath (Hants.), 48 Beau mont, Charles, 175 Beau mont le Chétif (Eure-et Loir), 316 Beaumont-le-Roger (Eure), 180 Beaumont-le-Vicomte (Sarthe), 67, 107, Beau mont pur Orse (Serne et Oise), 6, 21,

79, 140, 168, 236

Beaurevoir (Nord), 197, 211 Beauvan (Oise), 6, 16, 17, 24, 79, 135. 140, 234, 328, 322, 378, 384 bishops of, see Chewenon, B. de, Cauchan, P. Beauvaisis, 134, 357 Bec Helouin, abbey of (Eure), 181, 264, Becket, Thomas, shrine of, 10 Bedford, John of Lancaster, duke of, vo. 13. 19, 23. 37, 92. 174. 182. 219, 225, 247, 249, 267, 180, 393, 394, 398, 399, 406, 415, 420, 421, 422, 4345 guardian of England, 48, 318, proposed adoption as heir to Naples, 172 sq 1 at siege of Melun, 2011 constable of England, 269; commands Cosne rehel force, 410 sq., at Henry V s death, 416 sq Beile Isle (Brittany), 181 Belième (Orne), 67 Benedict, St. Order of, 283 sqq Benedict XIII (Peter de Luna), Pope, 1, Berkeley, James, Lord, 396 Berkshire, 173, 179 Hernay (Eure), 112, 299, 315, 413 Berry, John, duke of, 1, 4, 7, 77 Bertram, John, 88 Berwick on Tweet, 89, 90 Beveriey (Yorks.), 271 Biggleswade (Beds), 405 Bigorre, county of, 373 Biherel, river, 169 Bishop Auckland (Ducham), 222 Bishop's Waltham (Hants.), 47 Black Death, 124 Blackheath (Kent), 10, 268, 422 Blanchard, Alam, 123, 143, 144 Blanche of Navarre, 175 Blanchetaque (Somme), 333, 334 Blandy (Scine-et-Marne), castle of, 212 Blos (Loir et Cher), 80, 328, 329 — Charles de, 190 Olivian de, me Penthibure, count of Blount, John, kt., 113, 149 Blvth (Notts.) priory of, 401 Bohemia, 360, 376 Bohan, family of, 280 Bois de Vincennes (Seine), 144, 1$1, 189, 410, 411, 415, 416, 420 Bois Malesherbes (Loiret), 233 Boisruffin (Eure-et-Loir), 316 Botogna, bishop of, see Albergatt, N Bolton (Yorks) priory of, 348 Bonenfant, Jean, 54 Bonneval (Eure-et-Loir), 316, 327 Bonneville (Carvados), castle of, 54, 55 Bonport (Eure), 114, 116

Boromoulins (Orne), caste of, 246 Bordeaux (Gironde), $3, 166, 167 aqq. archbuhop of, one Montferrand, D. de Bordelais, 367 Bordenast, Yves de, 245 Bearden, Louis, So. Bouzfler (Eurej, 253 Bouchain (Nord), 71, 191 Boucieaut, Jean te Meingre de, troushal of France, 39, 40 Bouccerdiers (One), 191 Bouingne-sur-Mer (Pas-de-Caian), 7, 11, 24, 25, 26, 53, 336, 42 Bourbon, John, duke of, 19, 40, 41, 49, Bourcher, Heart, se Sa — Макатуак да Bourg (Coronde), 367, 369, 371 Bourg la Reine (Seme-et Onen 1 Bourges (Cher), 183, 144 Rournel Louis, age, 407 Rocteiller, Charles le, 306 — Guillaume le, 17, 230 - Guy le, 122, 123, 139, 241, 244, 179, 1 Eg. 240 Bowet, Henry, archbishop of York, $9 Brabant, duchy of, 27, 29, 40; — John, duke of, 79, 174, 188, 290 Bratecolini, Gun Francesco Poggio, 100 Bradenstoke (Walts), priory of, 42 Branch, Philip, kt., 413 Branden burg, see Fishenzallern, Frederich Braquemora, John, 395 - Robert de, 126, 52, 181 Bear (Scine-et-Marne), 81, 145, 201, 130 Bray aur Somme (Somme), 408 Bretoud (One), alla Bretighy, treaty of, 15, 40, 151, 153, 154, 1 37, 161, 165, 181 Bretons, 322, 328, 339, 348, 263, 364 Briequebec (Manche), 73 Bridg water (Somerset), 42, 196 Bridington (Trocks.), 17 Brie, 78, 202, 208, 2/0, 211, 197 310, 134, 117 Brie-comie-Robert (Seine-et-Marne), 416 Brieg, Louis, duke of, 13, 20 Beanding 173 Brinkeley, John, 245 Brismi, 41, 270, 272, 282, 342, 368 Bertuny, 42, 45, 67, 75, 81, 166, 216, 289, 342, 363, 37H - Aethur of see Richemons - John V, dake of, 67, 75, 77, 81, 106, E58, 161, 236, 237, 223, 144, 289, ,63 164

Brittany, Richard of, me Esampes, count of Broadwater (Summa), in Brocart, Pernel, 223 Bronzarth (Montgomerich), 43 Brook Thomas, 201, 247 Brou (Eure et Lair), 123 Brown, William, BJ, 227 Bruger (Franders), 6, 10, 110, 116 Brauch, 6, 29t Bruton (Somemet), 41 Buch, captal de, see Longueville, count of Buchan, John Stewart, earl of, 183, 114, 294, 300, 302 sq., 313, 315, 325; consubc of hunce, git Ducking hamakire, 279 Buda Pett, $ Buches (Garonde), 369, 310 — Andre de. ,69 Burgern Louis 144, 150 Burgh, John, a jl. Burgundum, he so sq., 16, 59, 131, 69, 203 Burgundy, John the Fearless, duke of, 2, 2, 3, 1 9, 27, 21, 26, 37, 53, 67, 17 S. roau trigo 106, 1 12, 1 alio 1 grio 140. His 101 172, 260, 161, 177, 174, 18 , 8., 184, 209, 290, 4204 meets Henry V at Causs, 26 sqq ; marches on Paris, 78 sq ; slies with Queen Imbel, $0; Para wised by supporters, too leng a negotiates with Hearty, 156 seq a sttenda conference at Meusan, 64 sqq; makes peace with dauphirs, 159, murdered, : #6 Margaret, duches of, wife of John the Fearles, 187, 184, 198 - Philip the Bold, duke of 14 Philip the Good, duke of, .67, .61, 195, 147, 179, ACI, LOY, BOIL ATH, 241, 2 3 2 5 219. 232, 231, 234, 234, 259, 276, #19. #90 eqq ($10,] #2,] #1 eqq ($#6, 143 igg , 362, 174, 377, 374, 38 , 404, 417, 411, 416, m count of Charolau, 20, 26, 121; negotiates alliance with Henry V, 189 sqq.; signs treaty of Troyer, 202 sqq.; is Paris with Heart, 214 sqq.; at trial of father's murderers, 210 sq.; at battle of Mont-en-Vimen, 133 1994 vinto Paris and Mesur, 143 raq.; reveves Cosne, 409 sqq ; behave un at Henry a death, 416, 420 Burnell, flugh, Lord, 275 Bury & Eamends (Suffe.k), 431 Butter James, see Ormone's -- Rapits ki i asgraću, jego jegs 483 -- Thomas, carl, acc Ormana Thorses, prior of Kalmanham, and

Caes (Calvados), 65, 70, 101, 108, 158, 247, 258, 351, mege of, 56 sqc, 79, 446, 447, Menry V 45, 62 sqq, 72, 71 aqry, 416; English settlers in, 62, 2 11; battlege of, 73, 240, 241, 260; Norman chambre des comptes at, 74, 1944 244, 448; Normal treasury st. 294; 243 194; visited by Viscent Ferrer, 75 seq., 419, 446; garrison of,

Calais (Pas-de Calau), y, 9, 30, 39, 161, 219, 220, 277, 279, 134, 170, 412 | COR ference at, 26, 18, 20, 21, 22 299, 751 further negotiations at, 41; visited by Henry and Catherine, 267; cost of defeace of, 274; Jacqueine of Hamault an aga, ficury on gis og a mint an

279, 397, 401 Caler, Jacques de, 249 Cambridge, Statute of 17 University of, 183, 412, 436 Carnoys, I homas, Lord, 10, 27 Campo Fregoro, Tomaso, doge of Genoa, 3 54 Canterbury (Kerst), 10, 18, 21, 42, 267,

318,405,422 archimhops of, see Arundel, T., Chichete, H

- St Augustine's Abbuy, me Dandelyes, M.

- treaty of, 19, 24, 30, 32, 34, 36, 359,

Capranica, Paul de, bushop of Evreus,

Carcasionne (Aude), $2, $3 Carentan (Manche), 73, 252 Carew, Peter, 30

- Thomas, kt., 45, 63, 183, 161

Carearyon, 351 Cisule, 45, 181, 181, 126, 285, 289, 360,

161, 165, 169 - John II, king of, 17, 81, 181 Carallen, Pous, lord of, 45

Curudonaès (Lot-et Garonne), 367 Caterick, John, bahop successively of Lichfield and Exeter, 26, 99, 171

Carberme of France, daughter of Charles VI, 161, 80, 187, 189, 192, 200, 203, 2 32, 26¢, picture of, 157; dowry of, 157, 162, 166, 198, 168, meeting with Henry, 165, hearothed and married to Heary V. 205 sq., accompanies Henry to Sens, 207 sq 3 at siege of Melan, 212, state entry into Paris, 225 at Rosen, 2344 her journey to England, 2694 in London, 265; crowned, 168 aqq j travels in England, 270 sq.; contributes to loan, 135, 400, gives birth to a 100, 191, in France, 402, 406, 4074 absent at Henry's death, 4165 accompanies Henry's body to England, 421 sq.; has effigy placed on Henry a tomb, 425

Cauchon, Pierre, buhop of Beauvais, 234, 344, 412, 421

Caudebec (Seme-Inf), 118 sq - 110 Caux, 194, 238, 240, 260, 267, 343, 440 Caxton, William, 23

Chardone (Orne), 65

Chalon, Louis de, prince of Omnge, see Orange

Louis de, count of Tonnerre, z es Châlons-sur-Marne (Marne), 78, 198 Chambery (Savoie) 1 Chambon (Ome), 6; Chambros (Eure), 111 Champagne, 20, 71, 221, 293, 534, 371,

Champtoceaux (Maine-et-Loire), any Charente, river, $2 Charenton (Seine), 199, 101, 415

Charles IV, emperor, 5

 V, king of France, ç - VI, king of France, 4, 19, 24, 29, 106, 130, 134, 140, 157, 158, 161, 167, .84, 189, 190, 191, 195, 201, 212, 227, 126, 229, 231, 233, 234, 254, 275, 275, 184, 116, 327, 350, 362, 372, 377, 407, 414, 426, favours peace, 16, 17; illness of, 77, 103, 162, 164, 189, 2011 HTSPINONA Queen Isabel, $9; in hands of Burgundians, 101; accepts treaty of Troyes, 198 sqq., 201 sqq., 2273 accompanies Henry on campaign, noy eq , at siege of Melun, 2115 enters Parm with Henry, 223 sq , at trial of Monteneau murderers, 230 sq.4 Henry's treatment of, 232, 387 sqq., 392, 406; at siege of Meaux, 344, 387; household of, 387 sqq , 392 the Bad, king of Navarse, 208

- the dauphon, afterwards Charles VII, 102, 106, 121, 134, 140, 191, 214, 217, 294, 309 squ 327, 365, 370, 372, 374, 190; negotiates with Henry, I so 190, t 59, 189; breaks faith with Henry, 160] makes peace with Burgundy, 168 sqq | recrusts Scots, 182 agq, at Montereau, rug sqq.; charged with morder of duke of Burgundy, 197, 230; sentenced, 234; signs treaty with Brittany, 290, assumes offensive, 311, 316; besieges Chartres, 316 sq 5 retreats to Touranc, 325, refuses battle, 327 sqq., 331; fails to relieve Meaux, 3413 besieges Coone, 409 sq — III, king of Navarre, 175

Charmes (Aime), 164 Charclais, 409 Philip, count of, see Bargundy, Philip the Good, dube of Chars (Seine-et-Dise), 193 Chartles, see Ferrers Chartrain, the, 377, 378, 413 Chartres (Fuse-et-Loir), 80, 81, 212, 296, 316; siege of, 317; Henry at, 327, basilings of, 378 - Renaud de, archbuhop of Rheims, 6, 16, 17, 24, 41 97, 101 Chastel, Tanneguy du, 103, 106, 162, 166, 230, 128, 129, 409 Chattaliax, Claude de Beauvoir, lord of, 216, 380, 314 Châteaudus (Eure-et Loir), 315, 328, 378 Chitern Gullard (Eure), 176, 177, 194, ui g, 223, 242 Château Gontier (Mayenne), 314 Châteausemant (Louret), etc., 149 Chitean Thierry (Aisne), 295. Châteauvillam, Guillaume, sord of, 324 Châtrilon (Seine et Oxe), 79 - Guidaume, ford of, 310 Chaucer, Geoffrey, 429 - Thomas, 276, 429 Chaufeur, Henri de, 189 Chaumont (Oise), 136, 243 - Bertrand de, 214 Chaumant-Quitry, lord of 294 Chef de Caux, 440 Cherbourg (Manche), 107 199, 131, 240, Cheshize 318 Chesterton (Warwicksh.), Bg, 404 Chevenort, Bernard de, bishop of Beau-V216, 1 56 Chichele, Henry, archbuhop of Capterbury, 10, 22, 47, 87, 92, 93, 137, 141, 271, 268, 269, 281, 282, 394, 403, 404, 422, diplomatic services of, 24, 25, 139, 156, 159, 64, 168, protests agains! Beaufort's cardinalate, 99 Chichester (Sussex), 2421 historis of, see Kemp, J., Folion, T. Chilworth (Hants.), 45 Chinen (Indre-et-Loire), 311 Chick (Denbighsh.), 357 Chasay, Guichard de 138, 150, 351 City, Hermann, count of, 8 Cinque Porta, the, 114 267, 269, 320, Claurae (Lot-et Garonne), 167 Clamecy (Nierrel, 130 - Gates, Tord of, KA Clarence. Thomas, duke of, 20, 19, 25, 37, 47, 51, 52, 61, 74, 115, 125, 126, 1751 2151 2721 2761 2941 3101 3124 appointed keeper of England, 223 constable of the Engish serry, 331 granus to, 54, 111, 148; at siege of Care 67 sqq at nege of Faiane, 70; comtil sqq g at siege of Rouen, 126, 137 sq., dauphin tream with, 130, captures Mantes, 164; at conference of Meulan, 165; before Paris, 184, captain of Paris, 213, enten Paris with Henry, 2254 his states in Heary 2 absence, 234, 239, raidu Beauce, 296, in command at Baugé, 299 sqq ; his son, 300, 30E Clémanges, Nicolas de, 102 Clere, Guillaume le, 200, 379, 380. Jean le, chancelior of France, 199, 227, 1 jou 344, 380 Clere, Simon, 42 Clermont on Auvergne (Clermont Feerand, Puy de Dôme), 19, 194, 3-1 Clermont-en-Beauvanis (One), 197 Clifford, John, Lord, 44, 51, 110, 269, - Robert, bishop of London, 405 Clinton and Say, William, Lord, 198, Clux, Hartung van, 2, 31, 32, 360 Cockersand (Lanci), priory of, 403 Coggeshale, Wisham, 360 Cokirnage, Wilham, 281 Col, Gontaer, 17, 14, 41, 97 Colchester (Essex), 396 Colles, Roger, 223 Cologne, 32, archbuhaps of, see Mors. Dietrick was; Frederick of Saarweerden Colvile, John, 174 186 Comminges, Mathieu de Forz, count of, 164, 172 Compiègne (Oise), 78, 135 196, 261, 293, 194, 196, 334, 336, 354, 356, 407, 408, Constance, 1, 14, 18, 31, 33, 34, 99, 100, 101, 174, 175, 233, 361, 436 Constantinople, 187 Conversen and Brienne, Peter of Luxemburg, count of, 213, 345, 349, 353 Convocation of Canterbury, 38, 91 44, 210 MQ .. 281 MQ .. 403 M of York, 38, 91 sq., 220, 401 Conway (Camarvonsh.), 351 Coq: Hugues ac, a, a Corbeit (Seine et Oise), 79, 169, 212, 224, 4to1 415 Corbridge, John, 454 Cornwall, John, kt., 10, 54, 51, 113, 121,

196, 208, 318, 339

Come (Nièvre), 341, 409, 410, 411, 415 Cotentin, the, 63, 72, 73, 180, 240, 241, 260, 143 Conastion, river, 200, 202, 203 Coucy, Raoul de, bahop of Novon, Council, Royal (English), 9, 10, 44, 89, 90, 213, 275, 277, 280, 292, 349, 377, 391, 394, 395, 398, 402, 430 Courcelles, Jean de, 314 Courcy (Calvados), 65 Coursecusse, Jean, bishop of Paris, 233, 186 sq Courtenay, Hugh, 182 Courbyron, lard of, 191 Courtonne (Carvades), titt Courances (Manche), 73; hishop of, see Malauria, P. Couteiller, Benedict, 245 Coventry (Warwicksh), 4t, 270; prior of, Coventry, John, 88 Cowdray, Richard, 156, 159, 189, 201, Crecy-sur-Marne (Seme-et-Marne), 137 - (Sorome), forest of, 32: Creil (Oise), 193 Crepy (0.se), 357 Crepy-en-Laonnan (Anne), 98 Cressonance (One), 356 Creuily (Calvados), 64 Crosset (Se ne Inf.), 139 Crossy (Chsel, 326 Croisy (Eure), 216 Croix, Jean de 1a, 303 Crosswell, Ratph, ht., 204, 315 Croy, Antoine, lord of, 410 Cumberland, county of 37, 279, 403

Dahridgecourt, John, kt., 12 Dalton, John, 244 Dammartin (Seine et Mame), 20 - Antoine de Vergy, count of, 350 Dandelyon, Marcellus, abbot of St Augustine's, Canterbury, 275 Dangess (Southe), 67 Dartford (Kent), 10, 421 Dauphiné, 34, 84, 359 Dau phinnists, 207, 234, 262, 285, 286, 293, 294, 296, 299 sqq., 385, 385, 409; 800 Årmagnacs Dax (Landes), 366, 37 t Derby (Derbysh), 42 Dereham, Richard, 39, 436 Devizes (Wills.), 42 Devon, Edward Courtenay, 12th earl of, - Hugh Courtenay, 13th earl of, 275, 196

Dieppe (Seine-Inf.), 41 53, 121, 276, 180, 240, 248, 258 Duon (Côte d'Or), 83, 105, 187, 209, 230, 292, 294, 145, 161, 409 Dinant (Namar), 52 Dives (Calvados), 58 Directio, river, 108 Dol (like-et-Viame), 158 Domfront (Orne), 107, 129, 413 Domvast Somme), 321 Derchester (Oxon.), abbey of, 42 Dordrecht (Holland), 18, 30, 33, 46 Dorac, Renaud, 389 Dorset, carl of, see Excise, clake of Douglas, Archibald, 4th earl of, 89, 90, 187, 307, 158 William, kt., 87, 181 Doule, Jean, 191, 380, 386 Douglens (Somme), 234, 267 Douvrier (Somme), 116 Dover (Kent), 9, 21 267, 287, 292, 118. 119, 370, 391, 422, 446 Dragon, Order of the, 11 Drax (Yorks.), 320 Dreux (Eure-et-Lour), 159, 160, 216, 236, 261, 315, 326, 334, 358, 381 Dablin, 308 Durister (Somerset), 430 Dunwich (Suffolk), 16 Durbam, archdoscon of, see Kemp, 7, bashop of, see Langley, T.

Earl Marshal, see Natingham, earl of Ethiquier, the Norman, 127, 194. 2.47 4QQ. Eggleston (Yorks), abbey of, 220 Elizabeth, daughter of Signsmund, 5 Ellerron (Yorks.), priory of, 220 Eltham (Kent), 11, 19, 268 Elton, john, 89 Ely, bishop of, see Fordham, J. Epergard (Eure), 251 Épermon (Eure-et Loir), 327 Erpingham, Thomas, kt., 27, 94, 95 Essau (Orne), 65; castle of, 246 Estissac, Maur gon d', 326 Estouteville, Jean, lord of, 19 Étumpes (Seine et Oise), ; - Richard of Britishy, count of, 217, 290, 316, 331, 342, 363 Étaples (Pas de Calam), 6, 296 Eternik (Calvados), 58 Eurepagny (Eure), 176 Enrickdale, 90 Eu (Seine Inf.), 26, 176, 240, 296, 354, — Charles d'Artois, count of, 19, 4.7

Eu, Henry Bourchier, count of, 240

— William Bourcher, count of, 24, 276, 252

Eure, river, 114, 236

Evenham, Richard Bromigrove, abbot of, 283

Eveux (Eure), 73, 1.2, 130, 159, 160, 240, 254, 260, 261, 327, 125, 421

Ewelme (Onon.), 430

Exchequer, the English, 43, 190, 391, 199, 433

Exeter, bishop of, see Lary, £

— Thomas Besufort, duke of, previously earl of Domet, 24, 175, 239, 261, 331, 380, 406, 432, receives title of duke, 22, 23, admiral, 42, 1, 25, 151.

of duke, 37, admiral, 53, 1 3, 181, leads force against Scots, 89 10, cap tures Evreus, 111 at siege of Rouen, 117, 123 aqq., 138; captain of Rouen, 141; at conference of Mexian, 164 1q, 160 1q, 174; at conference of Mexian, 164 1q, 161; at conference of Upper Normandy, 173, 764 antere Paris with Henry, 123; military governor of Paris, 134, 113, 130, 131; aments ford of 1 Isle Adam, 223; at siege of Meaux, 137 sqq., at Cosne, 410 sq.; at Henry's deathbod, 416 sq.

Exmes (Orne), 65, 146

Fabas, Menaut de, 369, 370 Falaise (Calvados), 62, 66, 69 199., 97, 258, 261, 415 Faistaff, Sir John, 424 Faugnernon (Calvados), 181 Fécamp (Seme-Inf.), 176 Feibrigge, S.mon. k., 93 Felicy Notted; priory of, 220 Ferrer, Vincent, 75 499 4 4 91 4461 4421 441 Ferrers of Chartley, Edmund, Lord, cs., Fiennes, Roger, lo., 256, 238 Fife, Murdach Stewart, earl of $1 Filiastre, Guadaume, cardinal, 200, 101 Fitton, John, 171 Fitzhogh, Henry, Lord, 22, 32, 14, 143, 128, 139, 91, 435 - Robert, 437 Fitzwalter, Walter Lord, 501, 306 Flanders, 152, 153, 154, 166, 118, 266, 278, 343, 418 Flavy, Jean de, 346 Fleming, Richard, buhop of Lincoln, 272 Flue, Marselin de, 399 Flower, Roger, 37, 91, 219 Foix, Azchambaud de Graully, count of, 178

Foit, Archambaud de (son of the preceding), see Newalles, lord of Gaston de, see Longueville, count of - Jean de Grailly, count of, 178, 138, 354, 372 10 .. 408 - Mathieu de, see Comminger, count of Forkames, Guérm, lord of, 100, 103, 100, Fortenay-le-Temori (Calvados), 58 Forbes, Alexander, 187 Fortham, John, beshop of Ely, 41 Forester, John, archdescon of Surrey, 32 Formeiles, Simon de, 189 Fortescue, Henry, 182 Foul Rand, the, 90 Frederick of Saarwerden, archbohop of Cologne, 3a Fremay le Vicorite (Sarthe), 107, 216 Fremel, Pierre, bashop of Lineux, 121 Fronsec (Gronde), eastle of, 400 Fuenterrabit, 364 Fulk, the Black, count of Anjou, 100

Gabelle, the, 71, 75, 228, 251 Gaeta, 171 Gaillefontaine (Seine-Inf.), 251 Gallardon (Eure-et Loir), 316, 327 Gamacher (Somme), 295, 154, 407 — Gilles de, 334, 135 — Gustlaume, lord of, 181, 294, 354, 356, - Louis de, 134- 135 - Philippe de, abbot of St Faro, Meaux, 3 50, 3 56 Gand, Jean de 419 Guza, Nicholas of, and Humpary Garganto, Thomas, 243 Garter, Order of the, ta 1999; 30, 31, 35, Gascoigne, Thorsas, 434 — Walliam, kt., 🕬 Gascony, 21, 178, 168, 178, 271, 2731 crossbowmen from, 44 Gast, Louis, 33t, 150, 351 Gitman, 210, 329 Gaucourt, Raoul, lord of, 16, 18, 39, 40, 41 - Raoul de, bailii of Rouen, 121 Grunstede, Simon, 22 Gelts, Jacques, archbishop of Tours, 140 Geneva, a, 374, 387 Genoa, 45, 288, 292, 158, 159 Genoese, the, 33, 46, 48, 59, 175, 287, 284, Germany, Henry's relations with, 12, 13, 111, 159, 367 aq 1 toe also Signimum. Gheat (Flandem), 230, 234 Giac, Jeanne de, 169 Gen (Louret), 142

Gisors (Eare), 162, 276, 177, 188, 193, 194, 236, 238, 240, 242, 243, 258, 260, 321, 322, 325, 408
Glamorgan, 195
Glamorbury (Somesset), 42
Glandower, Meredith, 85
Gwen, 85

Gloucester, Humphrey, duke of, 73, 115, 165, 204, 265, 291, 292, 325, 420, 413, 446, receives Sugismond, 91 hostoge in Flanders, 26 sq.: excorts Sigismund, 30; at stage of Caca, 58 captures Bayeax, 64; at stage of Fasate, 70, besteges Cherbourg, 107 sqq., at siege of Rouen, 131, 139; projected marriage of, 175, captures Ivry, 177; captures Possy, 194; regent, 219, 401; at Queen Catherine's coronation, 269, receives Jacqueline of Hamault, 291; besteges Dreux, 326 sq.; named protector of England, 417

Godeston Thomas, 396 Goes (Zesland), 45, 401 Golafie, John, 250 Goldbeter, Bartholomew, 402 Gordon, Alexander Seton, lord of, 287 Gournay (Seine-Inf.), 176, 237 Gournay-sur-Aronde (Ose), 356 Gran (Hungary), archbishop of, see Kanilza Grandfullers (Oise), 197 Gravennes (Nord) 26, 27, 151 Gregory, William, 125 Greindor, Henry, 86 Grentheville (Calvados), 38 Grey of Codnor, John Lord, 329 — of Codnor, Richard, Lord, 51, 58, 149 of Heton, see Tancarrolle of Ruthus, Reginald, Lord, 10 Griffith, Edward ap, 70 Guernier, John, 241 — Machel, 238 Guerney, 109, 223 Guibray (Calvados), 70 Guktine, 175, 366, 367, 371, 373, 400 Guilbant, Guy, 385 Guise (Ausne), 293, 351 Guitry, Guillaume de Chrumont, lord of,

Hasrlem (North Hotland), 46
Habart, Nicolas, bishop of Bayeux, 263
Ha hault, county of, 14, 77, 82
— Jacquel no of, see Holland
Hales (Gloucester), abbey of, 42
Haisrill, Cribert, 81, 281, 236, 327
Hambye (Manche), 73
Hamborough (Oxon), 429
Will

Hankford, Wilham, chief justice of the King's Bench, 93 Hansa, the German, 30, 34 Harcourt (Euro), 111, 112, 515400 enty of, 261

- Jacques d', tee Tancarville
Jean d', bishop of Armeni, 412
- Jean d', count of Aumaie, see Aumaie
- Louis d', archbishop of Rouen, 123
Hardicourt (Seine-et-Oise), 163
"Harele" ruing, the, 121, 124
Harfleur (Seine Inf.), 2, 2, 5, 2, 15, 17, 24, 25, 40, 44, 86, 128, 133, 251, 261, 309, 402, 441
Harington, John, 22

Wham, kt., 12
Harleth (Merioneth), 351
Harmondsworth (Middlenn), 222
Harringworth, William, Lord Zough of, 12
Hasticy, Thomas, 395
Hatfield (Herts.), 194
Haw ek (Rozburghah), 90
Hawley, John, 182
Hebron, bishop of, 172
Henley (Oxen), 42
Henry V, kng of England, entertains

Sigismund, to soot signs treaty of Canterbury with Sigismund, 19, sale to France, 22; at Calais, 22 sqq., 267, 318 st; relations with John, duke of Burgundy, 17 sq; 156 sqc; returns to England, 29; prepares to invade France, 36 sqq 4 42 sqq ; relations with duke of Bourbon, 39, 286 sq., mlations w...h Bertiany, 45. 67, 289, 342, 363, 378; makes second will. 47; returns to France, 53; besieges Chen, 51 sqq ; heneges Alençon, 66 sqq., besieges Falane, 69 sqq., at Caen, 72 sqq.; administration of Normandy, 72 sqq., 146 sq., 194 sq., ch laving receives Vincent Ferrer, 75 sqq., attitude towards papacy, 99, tor, 171 aqq., 175 aqq., 405, besieges Louviers, 113; besieges Pont de l'Arche, 114 sqq.; besieges Kouen, 118 sqq.; builds palace in Rouen, 148, treats with dauphing the squy squy at conference of Meutan, 164 squ. 1 negotiates for marriage with Catherine, 152, 155, 257, 161, 165, .68, 189, 2051 negotiates with Lorraine, Genoa, Na varre, 174 sq.; discussions with Duke Philip of Burgundy, 186 sqq., 321, 344; negotiates treaty of Troyes, 198 sqq ; besieges Sens, 208, besieges Montereau, 208 sqq., besieges Melun 2 to sqq.3 visits Parss, 224 sqq , 322, 406; policy as regent, 226 sqq., 322 sqq., chap. lixib,

No b

Henry V, king of England (contol) visits Normandy, 234 aqq-; tours England, a 70 aqq., reises loan, 272 aqq.; meets parkament, 2754 attempts monasthe reform, all supply returns to France, 111, beileget Dreite, jakoge ; campaign in valley of Low, 326 agg ; captures Villeneuve-sur-Youne, 330 ng ; hu strategy in 1421, 530 aqq.; besieger Meaux, 317 aqq ; contequent successes in Northern France, 356 sq., policy in Guerry, 163 sq., 168 sqq ; visits Scola and Complegue, 408, illness of, 410, 4144 final instructions, 416 sq ; dies, 425; body taken to England, 420 भ्यू व द्वाराताकारण वर्ष, दश्य अस्य Hereford, bushops of, and Palma, T 1 Spofferd, T Herriord, 270 Hernelles, Jean de Roubain, lord of, 214 Heidin (Par de-Calais), 16, 411 Rexhamiling, also Hohenzoliera, Frederick of, margrave of Brandenburg, 174 Helborn (London), 15 Holland, Edward, see Morton, court of - John, see Huntengdon, earl of - Zealand and Hamault, Jacqueline of Bevarin, countem of, 14, 16, 77, 78, 79. 174, 174, 190 sqq., 320, 394 — — Margaret, counten of, 14, 77, 188 — — William VI, count of, 14, 16, 19, 20, 33, 43, 77, 78, 349 Holme, Richard, 436 Honfleur (Calvados), 176, 251, 441 Hornby, Robert, 54 Housetot, Guillaume, 123, 443, 144 Hovingham, John, 26 Hunne, river, 300 Hengazy, Nicholas of Gara, count palatine of, 13, 16 Hungerford, Walter, kt., 9, 13, 110, 139, 151, 166, 159, 192, 214, 348, 349, 417 Hunslap, Harry, 35 Hunt, Roger, 26 5 Hazungdon, John Holland, earl of, 10, 12, 38, 48, 51, 54, 58, 63, 71, 127, 178, 181, 196, 110, 216, 225, 101, 306 lie de France, 137, 378 Itiers (Eure-et-Lorre), 325 Ingies, Harry, 80 Ireland, 231, 274 Iaibel of Bavaria, queen of France, 78, 80 seq. 105, 134, 160, 157, 161, 162, 164, 167, 165, 84, 187, 189, 193, 195, 203, 204, 235, 232, 344, 390, 406, 408

Husates, the, $4, 160

Isabel of Belttany, 59
Isle Adam, Jean de Vilkers, lord of F,
79.1 ... 178.179.207, 208.294.323.380
Isle of Wight, 263
Isleworth (Middleson): 446
Ivry (Euce), 176.177, 238, 245, 413

Jacqueline of Hainault, me Halland James L. king of Scott, 212, 216, 261. 269, 271, 286, 287, 317, 358, 395, 426 Janville (Eure-et-Lour), 177 lanym, John, 110 Jaquemyn, John 242 edburgh (Roxburghin), 40 leney, is and of, 109 Jeune, Robert le, 267, 384 Joan II, queen of Napter, 171 sq queen, widow of Henry IV of England, 22, 67, 68, 222 19., 292, 394, 400 John I, hang of Portugal, 8., , 28 - XXIII, pope, 100 of Aragon, 175 - Bastard of Clarence, 100, 308 - of Namau, archbishop of Mainz, 173 - the Fearless, see Burgardy Joigny (Yonne), 294, 295, 310 lourdain, Jean, 123, 143 Juck, Henri du, 151, 217

Kantiza, John, archbuhop of Gran. 1, 16 Keighley, John, kt., 55, 238 Kemp, John, successively archdeacon of Durham and bishop of Rochestez, Chichester, and London, chancellor of Normandy, 159, 161, 172, 189, 191, 200, 242, 380, 405 Kentiworth (Warwickin), 41, 86, 270, 351 Kennedy, Alexander, 217 — Fergus, 287 - Walter, 30s Kent, Lucy, counters of, 178 Kerabret, Alan, bishop of St Pol de Léon, 169 Kilmainham, Thomas Butler, prior of, 141 King's Hall, Cambridge, 416 Kirkham (Yorks.), priory of, 220 Knoldenhal, (Hants.), 48 Kuttenberg, battle of, 360 Kynwormersh, William, &c.

Labourd, county of 183
Labourde, Edmund, 427
Labourde, Edmund, 427
Labourdes, statues of, 277
La Bruére (Louret), 328
La Carne he (Orne , 242
La Chen é sur Loure Nièvre), 344, 409, 414, 477
Lary Edmund, hubop of Euror, 284

La Fayette, Gilbert, lord of, 300, 302, 313. La Fère (Aisne), 197 La Ferté (Somme), castle of, 321, 333 La Ferté Bernard (Sarthe), 316 — Villenevil (Eurr-et Lour), 328 La Flèche (Sarthe), 308 La Fontaine-la-Vaganne (Oise), 197 Lagny-sur-Marne (Scine et Marne), 1$4, 199, 139, 137, 239 La Haye da Puits (Manche), 73 La Незителе, 408 La Hire (Éturne de Vignolies), 293, 314, 409 Laigle (Ome), 65 La Lande Chases (Maine-et-Loire), 300, 302 La Marche, Jacques, count of, 172 La Marque (Gironde), 370 Lambeth (Surrey), 12, 30, 273 Lamothe-Montravel (Dordogne), 366 Lamotte de Cesny (Calvados), 64 Lançashare, 318 Lancaster, ducky of, 180 Landes, the, 167, 371 Langdon, John, histop of Rochester, 282, 404 Langley, Thomas, hishop of Duzham, 13, 22, 156; chancellor of England, 89, 99, 436; acidreses Parijament, 219, 276, 197 Langres (Haute-Mame), 192 Langret, Jean, bishop of Bayeux, 101 Languedoc, $2, 359, 364, 372, 373 Languedoil, States General of, 111 Lannoy, Gilbert de, 189 - Hue de, 199, 226, 355, 381, 410, 4-2, 416 Lante, Agosune de, 172 sq Laon (Ause), 198, 356 Larcher, John, 231 La Réole (Gironde), 8a, 366 La Rivière de Thibouville (Eure), 111, 180 La Roche Guyon (Sente-et Dise), 176 La Rochelle (Charente-Inf.), 183, 197 La Tombe (Seine-et-Marne), 83, 101, 116. La Trappe, Soligny (Orne), abbey of, 66 Laurence, John, of Feltham, 282 Laviers-le-Grand (Semine), 144 Lavilletertre (Osc), 193 Leaveland (Kent), 222 Le Cateau-Cambrésu (Nord), 408 Leche, Philip, kt., 125, 128, 210. Le Crotoy (Somme), 53, 129, 295, 196, 314: 334: 353: 354: 357: 412 Leeds castle (Kent), 16, 18 Legh, Peter de, kt , 242 Le Hommet (Manche), 73

Leicester, 90, 270 282 Le Lade (Sarthe), 300, 301, 308 Le Mans (Sarthe), 116, 309, 311, 311, 313 Le Neubourg (Eure), 113, 251 Lenthall, Ruland, kt., 73, 152 Le Sage, Raoul, 217, 244, 247, 406 Lescure (Senne-Inf), 130 Les Damps (Eure), 116 L'Estandare de Mailly (Jean, baron de Mailly), 315 Les Veys (Manche), 72 Lews, Count Palatine of the Rhine, 183, 205,212 Leyet, Richard, dean of St Asaph, 174 Liege, 31, 53 — dran of, 361 John of Bavarra, bishop of, 16, 174, 188 Lubourne, Thomas, kt., 223, 367, 371, 394, 400 Lille (Nord), 20, 26, 29, 234 Lalebonne (Seine Inf.), 176 Limousies, they 142, 217, 370 Lincoln, 172 - bishops of, see Fleming, R., Repingdon, Lingèvies (Calvados), 64 Luieux (Calvados), 55 tq., 112, 258, 262, bishop of, see Fremel, P Livet, Robert de, 123, 143, 144 Landaff (Glarnorgan), 221 Loir, river, $1, 300, 308 Loire, nver, 159, 162, 199, 293, 325, 327, 378, 409, 412 Lollards, the, 85 sqq., 221 sq., 281 sq., 395, 404, 429, 437 Lornagne, John, viscount of, $2 Lombards, the, 358 Landon, 9, 10, 15, 16, 19, 41, 42, 243, 267, 268, 292, 360, 393, 403, 404, 422, 407, bushops of see Clifford, R.; Kemp, Longueville, Gaston de Foix, captal de Bach, count of, 178, 364, 366, 370, Lore, Ambroise de, 181, 215 Lorraine, Charles, duke of, 21, 174, 361, 409 Loun, daepmn, 77 Louvain (Brabant), 6 Louvet, Jean, president of Provence, 230, Louviers (Eure), 101, 113, 114, 130, 159, Louvre, the, 4, 204, 225, 406 Lovel, John Lord, 38 Lowestoft (Suffolk), 402 Luché (Sarthe), 300

35 2

218, 345, 350, 351, 356 Davignan, Henri de, prince of Galiles, 172 Lanerell, Hugh, kt., 176, 239, 243 Luxemburg, city of, 11, 13, duchy of, 159 - John of, 196, 214, 321, 336, 345, 354, 40% 4101 411 Louis of, bulop of Thereusance, 1440 362, 320, 406 - Peter of see Converses Lyndwood, William, 361 Lynn (Norfolk), 171 Lyons (Rhone), 2, 3, 247, 290, 311, 325, 35% 374 Macon (Saine-et-Loue), 192 Maine, 49, 8 2 154, 164, 181, 216, 234, 243, 300, 109, 314, 315, 378, 413 Maintenay (Pas-de-Calais), 321 Mains, archbahop of, see John of Massen Malatesta, Pandolfo, horog of Coutances, 263, 406 Malengia (Gironde), 166 Malestroit, Jean de, bulesp of Nasins, 117, 290, 363, 364 Malet, Jean, lord of Granville, 113 Maknes (Antwerp) 36 t Malmesbury (Wilts.), 42 Marttet (Seine-et-Orie), 268, 176, 175, 194, 216, 240, 313, 353, 408, captured by Burgundiani, 792 diplomatic negotiations at, 161, 177, 189 upq. (Henry M, 164 19., 189, 190, 191, 193, 100, 325, 325 | $\text{$\te\text{$\text{$\text{$\tex{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$\text{$ Mantus, 200, 271 Mapieton, John, an Mar, Alexander Stewart, earl of, 24y Marbeuf (Eure), ags March, Edmund Mortimer, earl of, so, 63, 109, 120, 112, 193, 267, 269, 175, 334, 380, 395, 406 Marcounts (Seine-et-One), 353 Marguerite, daughter of John, duke of Burgundy, 144 Marie, daughter of Charles VI, 194 Marigny, Pierre de, 199, 230, 13 5 Marmoucier (Indre-et-Leire), abbey of, 80 Marne, river, 201, 117 Murtin V, pope, 34, 99, 169, 171, 1941 263, 310, 175, 376, 377, 116, 403 Mascal, Robert, bishop of Hereford, 13 Masham (Yorks), 11 Matilda, empress, daughter of Henry I of England, 121, 119 Mattavent, John Fitzalan, Lord, 36, 33 Mattersey (Notta.), priory of, 120 Maubumon (Seme-et-One), abbey of, 179

Luppe, Pierren de, 226, 293, 334, 335,

- Ouvier de, ford of Thiéville, 141 Maurepar (Seine-et-Oise), 316 Mexux (Seine-et-Mame), 211, 232, 231, 261, 293, 294, 330, 353, 358, 359, 363, 273; 378; 383; 387; 389; 391; 401; 403; 406; 411; 414) nege 06; 331; 337 negis fall of rown, 344 eq. , stege and captum of market of, 147 and , fate of penoners from, 350 and 5 effects of capture of 356 sq. Meaux (Yorks.), abbey of, 210 Meicombe (Dorset), 401 Meilo (Oue), 357 Meiun (Seine-et Marne), 169, 118, 31% 446 sqq , dauphin flees thather, 1034 stege of, 210 sqq.; bailli of, 232, 31% cap aix of, 38 de fuer John, 90 - No holas, 449 Mesle, Guillaume le, abbot of St Catheme's, Roven, sall Meet's foun and of, 199, 131 Mensa (Loizet), 328 Merz (Moselle), 32 Meulan (Seine-et-One), 79, 177, 193, 236, 32 5 353, conference of, this one Meung-sur-Loire (Loret), 329 Middelburg (Zealand), 46, 402 Mdan, Fuippo Maria Vacconti, duke of, 358 Milet, Jean, 199 Mars pragard, ner Montheburd Monter Vines Sommer, battle of spanis Montreute (Somerset), 42 Montagu, Thomas, are Sakebury, earl of Montaigu (Aune), castle of, 293, 356 — Gerard de, bishop of Paris, 213 Montargis (Loiret), 138, 329 Montaulan, lord of, 217 Monthéhard (Doub), $3, 105 Monthéron, Jacques de, 380, 381 Montheon (Charence), castie of, 8a Mont de Marsan (Landes), 371 Montenay, W Liam de, 59 Montepilloy (Offe), 294 Monteresu (Seine-et-Marne), $3, 103, 16 5 185, 197, 208, 229, 329, 365, 381 Monthiseon (Seme et-One), 372 Mostferrand, David de, archbishop of Bordeaux, 366, 367, 374 Montfort, Charlet de, 319 Montfoet-le-Rotrou (Sarthe), 216 Montgommery, Jacques d'Harcsuet, lord of the Tuniarials Montguyon (Charente), 171 Monter-la-Celle (Aube), abbot of, 204

Maurey, Olivier de, captain of Falance

Nevers (Nièvre), 1, 409, 412

Montavilliers (Seine-Inf), 176, 258, 441 Montjeu, Philibert de, 273 Montjoie (Seine-et-Oier), 193, 194, 326 Montibery (Seme-et-Oise), 79 Montibel (Ain), castle of 1 Montmurail (Sarthe), castle of, 316 Montoure (Loir-er-Cher), 325 Montpeller (Héravit), 83 Montreuil (Pas-de Calau), 6, 1-66, 321, 421 Mont-St-Michel (Manche), 107, 176, 2 18, 341 Mozgan, Philip, his diptomatic services, 16, 14, 26, 31, 31, 98, 241, 143, 246, 19t, 231; chancelor of Normandy, 74. 250; hishop of Worcester, 170, 281, 182, 188, 404 Mön, Dietrich von, archbishop of Cologne, 32, 175, 319 Muztagne (Orne) 66, 365, 413 Mortain (Manche), 181 - Edward Holland, count of, 117, 128, 148, 149 Mortemer (Oise), castle of, 356 Mortimer, Edmund, see March, earl of - Hugh, 26 - Joha, kt., 451 3941 395 Mordake (Surrey), 41 Morvillien, Philippe de, fir, 188, 191, 200, 230, 325, 381, 385, 186, 406 Moulins la Marche (Orne), 413 Mount Grace (Yorks.), prior of, 184 Mousseaux (Eure), 253 Mowbray. John, see Nothingham, said of May (Aisne), 156, 408 Murdach, see Fife, earl of Mustel, Roger, 189

Nanterze, Samon de, 17 Names (Loire Inf.), 69; bushop of, see Masestroit, J. de Napies, kingdom of, 172, 173, 189; queen of, see Yours Narbonne (Aude), 1, 2, $3, 172 Guillaume, riscount of, 294, 295, 341, 409, 423 Navaille, Archambaud de Foix, lord of, Navarre, kingdom of, 361; kings of, see Charles the Bad; Charles III Nchou (Mariche), 73 Nemours (Seme-et-Marne), 329 Neste (Somme), 21 - Guy de, ese Offenont - Louis de, 334, 335, 336 Netherlands, the, 45, 293, 296, 336, 357 Netley (Hants.), 41 Neufchitel-en-Bray (Seme-Inf.), 176 Neuville-en-Het (Oim), 356

Neville, John, kt., 58, 131 Newbury (Berks.), 42 Newcastle-on Tyne (Northumb.), 88 Nicholas of Reibnick, a Nicopolis, 17 Nimes (Gard), 83 Niort (Deux-Sèvres), 150 Navernais, 341 Nobiet, Jean, 128 Nogent l'Artaud (Aune), 155 Nogent-le-Roi (Eure-et-Loir), 517, 527, Nogent-sur-Seine (Aube), 199, 202, 330 Nord ingen (Bavaria), 174 Norfolk, county of, 273, 277 Norham (Northumb.), 90 Normandy, English invasion of, 53 eqq 3 continued conquest of, toy sqq., 175 sqq , 194; invaded by dauphinists, 111, 313 eqq., 342 eq., 412 sq.; English administration and policy in, 73 eq., 111, 143, 146 sq., 167, 194 sq., 235 sqq., 312, 390, 416, acutude of population, ge adie 1989 1991 addie 1989 191 addie 2014 generated in negotiational 1879 152, 153, 157, 1653 position under treaty of Troyes, 199, 23529 | chambre des comples al. 74. 194, 244 of , 247 of 1 chancery and chancellors of, 74, 242, 250, 180, 406; council of, 194, 146, 249. 250; Echiquer of, 194, 147 199.; estates of, 237 eq., 250 eq., beutenant of, 245 sq., 2505 seneschal of, 194, 239, 242, 250; treasury of, 194, 218, 243, 250, 252 sqq ; wolves 10, 264 Norry, Jean de, 150, 152, 153, 159 Northampton, 42, 86, 270, 272, 285, 436 Northumberland, county of, 37, 87, 279, - Henry Percy, and earl of, 36, 51, $9, 90, 91, 269, 275, 396 Norwich, 272 Nostell (Yorks.), priory of, 403 Nottingham, 271, 351

— John Mowbray, Earl Marshel, earl of, 26, 48, 127, 193, 198, 267 Nouani (Sarthe), 67 Nouvion-le-Courte (Assne), 197 Noyon, bushop of, see Coucy, Raoul de Nymegen (Gelderland), 31

Odon, river, 56
Offémont, Guy de Nesle, lord of, 133, 136, 146, 157
Ofort, John, 208
Oldcastle, Henry, 95
— Joan, wife of John, 98, 95

Oldcards, John St., 84 1994, 297, 404, 418 Orange, John de Chalon, prince of, $2, 10 4 - Louis de Chaion, surmamed le Bon, prince of, $2, 201, 144 Orbec, 111, 161 Organiont, Pierre 6', 380, 384 Orkney bishop of, see Straden, W Oričana, city of (Loiret), 3294 forms of, - Charles, dube of, z, 6, 21, 39, 40, 41, 190, 417 Ormonde, James Butler, 4th earl of, 10, rd, 440 iqu. I write Butter yik seel off, 449 Orne green the gli, 49 Onam. Guerdano, raidinal, 100, 151, 8-3, 151, 5° Omey (Oxon.), abbey of, 4a Ospringe (Kent), 422 Ostend, George of, 189 Osterley (Middlesex), 435 Other forest of, 197, 130 Otto of Zagenhain, archbishop of Tree, Oudine or Odeste de Champdivers, $0 Ostrode, Ralph, gar Oxford, Richard de Vere, earl of, 10, a, University of, 279, 280, 282, 432 Onfordeham, 273, 279, 419 Page, John, 123, 138.

Pare L'Évêque (Manche), 343 Paris, beshops of, see Monkague, G de, Guericcusese, J. R chemilie, J. de in - cky of, 16, 17, 77, 97, 101, 101, 106, 134, 167, 170, 191, 197, 21 5, 310, 193, 410, 420) visited by Sagamuad, I. 3 sqq.; threatened by Burgundams, 20, 79,81, taken by Burgundians, 1022qq.; threatened by English, 1143 in favour uf alliance with English, cat, cyc my 199 of 5 accepts treaty of Troyes, and 1 occupied by English tecops, 213; Heavy's first visit to, 224 200-1 22fferings of, 102, 200, 226, 194 mg , 322 mg . 1264 deuffection in, 233, 322 100-, 382, 385, 386 sq., 406 sq., 408; Henry's ner and visit to, 321 aqui 325; vesited by Prilis the Good, 343 1904 Henry's administration of, 340 1944 Henry's third visit to: 406 sq

Pariement of, 4, 17, 41, 97, 104, 106, 188, 230, 247, 249, 310, 393; favours alliance with English, 193 sq., 199 sq. 10 privileges safeguarded by treaty of Troyes, 199, accepts treaty of Troyes.

204; welcomes Heary V, 224, condemns Montereau murderers, 2:11: condemns dauphin, 234; Henry's westment of, 380 - Linkersity of, 4, 1981, 229, 411, 433 encourages Kouen, 120 sq.; arges relief of Rouen, 134, 1353 favours albance with English, 192, 199 of 4 accepts treaty of Troyes, so4, aog, welcomes Henry Y, 214, premote condemnation of Monureau murdeness, 1311 condemas dauphin, 234, protests against tazanon, 229, 331; prays for Heary's recovery, 415 Parliament, Englob, 12, 417, 4334 (Oct. 1416), 30, 36 sq., 41; (Nov. 1417), 91 sqq; (Oct. 1419), 2 9 sq.; (Dec. (410), 165 sq.; (May (414), 375 sqq., 195, (Dec. 14xt), 196 104 Payne, Thomas, 195, 404 Pelham, John, kt., 95, 223 Penthièvie, Olivier de Blos, count of, 217, 190, 363, 364 Perche, county of, 218, 316, 323, 378, 413 Percival, bastard of Bourboo, 49 Percy, Henry (Houpur), 16 Perigord, 242 Peronne (Somme), 224, 356, 408 Perpagnan (Pyrénées Orientales), 17 19 Protel, Guy, 9 Perunary (Sumar), 223, 293 Perunary (Sumar), 223, 293 Pererell, Thomas, bishop of Woromer. Philip Augustus, lang of France, 219, 212 Pail p the Bold, see Burgandy Philip, William, kt., ags, ags, 139, 190, Picards, the, 220, 213, 244, 355, 410, 411 Picardy, 216, 237, 316, 343, 345, 378, 381, 410, 412, supports Burgundian party, 10. 98, vasted by Henry, 269, paying daugh mut sociement and of a composite of easterning and a Burgon does composite of East Soc 154 of a English successes in, 407 Fichering, John, 41 Picquigny (Somme), 125 Piercefons (One), 357 Plumpton, William, kt., 435 Plymouth (Devon), 247 Poissy (Seine-et-One), 294, 236 Potters (Vienne), 106, 170, 310, 311 Portou, 152, 153, 217, 370 Pole, Walter de la, kt., 319, 360

Polion, Thomas, bishop successively of Flereford and Chichester, 273, 173,

Pons (Chazente-Inf.), 369 - lord of, 365 Pont-Audemer Eure), 111, 262 Pont-Author (Eure), 111 Pont-de-Gennes (Sarthe), 100 Pont de l'Arche (Eure), 114, 116, 146, 147, 156, 351 Pont d Ouve (Manche), 73 Pontefract (Yorks.), 87, 272, 351, 40] Pontose (Seine-et Ose), 79, 103, 113, 134, 135, 257, 261, 264, 265, 266, 168, 169, 177, 178, 179, 184, 193, 200, 236, 240, 258 Pontorson (Manche), 73, 280, 181, 246, 289 Pont Remy (Somme), 6, 333 Poole, William de la, 399 Popham, John, kt., 73 Porce, Martin, bishop of Arras, 171, 189, 190, 191 Porter, Wilham K., 34 176, 200 sq Portsdown (Haats.), 48 Portsmouth (Hants.), 48 Portugal, kingdom of, 189, 1613 king of, see John I Pot, Kegmer, 161 Pouilly (Seme et Marne), 169, 177 Powys, Edward Charlson, lord of, to, 92, Powysland, 92 Poynings, Robert, Lord, 10. Prague, 5, 205 Precy, Jean de, 379, 180 Pressy, Guiot de, 150 Prest, John, 85, 404 Provence, county of, 273 Jean Louvet, presklent of, 189 Provins (Seine-et-Marne), 141, 146, 1 (8, 161, 162, 164 1$2, 199, 202 Provisors, statute of, 172, 282, 375, 377. Puylagarde (Tarn et Garonne), 82 Paynormand (Gironde), 366

Quesnoy-sur-Airamer (Somme), 354 Quevilly (Seme-Inf.), 129 Quillebeaf (Eure), 129, 130

Radcisse, John, kt., 73, 3, 3, 367, 400
Radstone, Robert Stewart of, 302,
Rambouliet (Seine-et-Oise), 278
Raoun, Nicholas, 166, 230
Raoulet, Jean, 334, 335
Rapiout, Jean, 166
Reading (Berks.), 42, 47, 68, 86
Redesdale (Northumb.), 260
Reggio, 173
Regnéville (Manche), 260

Reibnitz, Nicholas of, 1 Remy (Oise), 356 René of Anjou, 174 Rennés (Ele-et-Vilaine), 753 363 Repingdon, Philip, bishop of Lincoln, 42 Reynald, John, 404 Rhadalan (Fant), 352 Richard II, king of England, 87, 90, 93, 95 Richemont, Arthur of Bentany, count of, 39, 267 29 , 23 8, 244, 3 39, 342, 344, 363, 406 Rieux, Jean de, marrhal of France, 226 Rinel, Jean de, 299 Rions (Gironde), 168 Risie, river, .11 Rivière, Perette de la, 177 Robsart, John, kt., 120, 139, 395 Lewis, kt., 176, 198, 200, 291, 416 Roche (korks.), abbey of, 403 Rochefort (Charente-Inf , 369 Rochester (Kent), 10, 422, hishops of, see Kemp, J. Langdon, J., Spofford, T., Yonge, R. Rochetaillée, Jean de la, patnazch of Constantinople, 187 Rochford, Raiph, 16, 24, 41 Rome, 310, 375, 376, 404 Roos, John, Lord, of Hamlake, 194, 198, 200, 301, 305 Rotherhuhe, 222, 223 Rotterdam, 46 Rouen (Seine Inf.), 2, 24, 116, 158, 172, 200, 234, 138, 154, 266, 287, 312, 322, 151, 158, 371, 186, 403, 406, 421, 446, 448; favours Burgundan party, 121, 122; visited by dauphio, 54, 127, stege of, 117, 123 seq., 148 sq , topography of, 118 seq , history of, 120 sq , 122; attempts to relieve, 134 sqq , capitula tion of, 137 sq ; under English rule, 143, 146 29-, 180, 194, 237, 242, 249, 258, 259; new palace at, 147 sq., peace negotiations at, 162, 191 sq ; bailinge of, 141, 238, 240, 260; mant of, 256, 259, 390 archbishop of, see Harcourt, Losas d' Rouergue, 152 Rougemont (Loiret), cistle of, 330, 331 Rouvres, Jean de, 350, 351, 351 Roxburgh (Berwicksh.), 18 sq Roye (Somme), 196, 197, 295 Rufford (Notts.), abbey of, 220 Rutei (Seine-et Marne), castle of, 3 39 Rutland, 36

Sable (Sarthe), 312; treaty of, 290, 363

Suntonge, 172, 173, 217, 364, 370 Saintrailles, Poton de, 333, 334, 335, Salabury (Wilts.), 42, 47, 106 - Thomas Montagu, count of Perche, earl of, 27 44, 54 113, 151, 175, 215, 159, 160, 278 10, 120, 111, 341; at nege of Caes, 51, at nege of Falane. you at siege of Rouett, 127 sq., 239. takes Honfleur, 176, lieuterant of Normandy, 130, 145; conducts operations in Maine, 216; count of Perche, 236; conducts settrat after Bauge, 304, 304, 106 sqq., attempts relief of Algagoit, 313 sq 5 mids Maine and Anjon, 3144 estimate of his services to 1421, 3144 recaptum Meulan, 353 Salvart, Jeannon, 248 Sancerre (Cher), a 19 Sandwich (Nent) ou ay itri 16, 42, 128. Santa Croce, abbey of, Rome, 176 Sarthe, river, 309 Saumur (Maine-et-Loire), 310 Saveuse, Hector de, 196 Savigny, Lourdin, lord of 199 Savoisy, Henri de, archbeilion of Sens, £ 62, £64, 106 Savoy, 79 -- Amédée VIII, dake of, 3, 289, 374, 175, 409 Scales, Thomas, Lord, 219, 141 Scotland, 45, 87, 89 aqq , 18 t, 183, 266, 278, 286, 294, 358 sq. Scots, the, in France, chir, 184, 210, 216, 266, 294, 297 200, 310, 326, 360 Scottuh border, the, 87- 89 sqq, 194 Scrope, Henry, Lord, of Matham, 21, 16, — Richard, archbahop of York, 434 sqq. - Richard, Lord, of Bolton, 111 - Stephen, archdescort of Richmond, 19 Seaford (Summer), 342 Sees (Orne), 65, 181, 214 - John, bishop of 203 Segneult, Jean, 123, 145, 144 Segovia (Casule), . 81 Scignet, Guillaume, ford of Vaudue, 5, 41, 119 Jean, 184 Settle, river, 48, 114, 139, 162, 209, 236, 240, 291, 225, 330, 415 Se by (Yorks.), abbey of, 120, 401 Selkirk, 90 Selles (Lote-et-Cher), 194 Sengleton, John, 181 Seniis (Oise), 7$, 79, 81, 227, 236, 277, 378, 386, 408, 414, 415, 416 Senonches (Eure-er-Lour), 378.

Sens (Young), 208, 294, 178, archbishop of see Savery, H de Severaci Arnaury dei 1441 409 Sexanne (Marne), 204 Stafesbury (Donet), 42 Shipton Moor (Yorks.), 414 Shirley, Walter, 196 Skrewsbury (Salop), 223, 270 Signmund, king of the Romans, commonly called emperor, journey to Perpignan, (journey and visit to Farit, 2 sqq [proceeds to England, 6 aqq., ha reception, 9 sqq., 446, 447; admitted to Order of the Garler, 22 sqq.; attempts reseduction, 24 sqq. 3 his failure, 27 sqq.4 signstreaty of Canterbury, 18 sq. 3 leaves, a ty taken part in conference at Calais, 77, 24 sqq ; his journey to Constance, gosq.; cerules and purpose of his actions, 12 sq 2 his sword, 152 Henry's later dealings with, 40, $4, 174, 259 equ.; relations with Burgundy, 34, $3, 188; his part in dection of Martin V, 99; accepts treaty of Troyes, 205 Strene Wickam, 76 Stuys (Zealand), 40. Smallhythe (Kent), at Soissom (Aime), 135, 168, 114 Somerset, county of, 195 Someraet, John, 432 - John Beaufort, earl of, 301, 306 Somme, mrer, 14t, 161, 194, 196, 131, 3 53 Soure (Eure-et-Lour), 117, 314 Southampton (Hante.], 12, 16, 42, 44. 46, 47, 48, 68, 86, 89, 182, 266, 275, 171, 195, 401, 401 Southwark (Surrey), 10 Southwick (Hanta), 42, 99, 402 Sporford, Thomas, successively abbot of St Mary's, York, and bushop of Rochester and of Hereford, 200, 40 g Springhouse, Edmund, kt., 59 $1 Aifuns (Berts.), 41, 86, 270; abbut of we Whethamstede, J St Antoine, Bastille of, me Bastille St Basellk (Lot-et-Garonne), 371 Francis, lord of, 138, 372 6t Catherine, abbey of, Rosen, 127 eq. 129, 157, 161 St Clam, John, 117 St Cloud (Seine-et-One), 79 St Denis (Seine), 6, 21, 101, 114, 178. [84, 201, 407, 420 - chronicle of, partly secrebed to] Charrier, 197, 424 – de Moronval (Eure-et-Loir), 316 St Dizzer (Haute-Marne), 409

St Dye-tur Loire (Loiz-et-Cher), 324, 319 St Emilion (Gironde), 166, 367, 371 St Faro, abbey of, Meaux, 118, 139, 144, 156, 372, 414
St Flacre, 418 sq.
St George de Boscherville, abbot of, 119 St Germann-en-Laye (Seine-et-One), 193, 194, 236 St Jean d'Angely (Charente-Inf.), 52, 370 St John, John, mayor of Bordeaux, 163, St Josse, abbey of (Pas-de-Calais), 6 St Lo (Manche), 63, 71, 193, 256, 143 St Loup, abbot of, 204 St Macaire (Gironde), 362 Sr Martin, abbey of, Pontone, 170 St Martin-ès-Aires, abbot of, 204. St Martin-le-Gaillard (Seine-Inf.), 180 St Maur-des Fossés (Seine), 106, 420 St Omer (Pas-de-Calau), 27 St Paul's Cathedral, London, 11, 47, 205, 393. 422 St Plene Église (Manche), 244 St Pierre sur Dives (Calvades), 6 s. St Pol, Pas-de-Calau), 267 - Philip of Burgundy, count of, 165, 189, 190, 413, 226 St Quentin ,Aune), 199, 191, 357 St Riquer (Somme), 6, 321, 331, 334, St Saureur-le-V.comte (Manche), 72 St Sever (Landes), 45, 37. - (Seine Inf.), 119 St Stephen, abbey of, Caen, 57 199. St Thomas' Watering, near London, 10, St Yaast (Manche), 63 St Vakery-sur-Somme (Somme), 53, 296, 135, 353, 357, 407, 412 Stafford, Anne, counters of, 180 - Humphrey, earl of, 269 - Joha, 161, 171, 188 Staffordshire, 396 Staple, statute of the, 220, 277 Stephen, William, bushop of Orkney, 182 Stephens, Thomas, 41 Stewart of Darnley, John, 311 Stokes, John, 151, 156, 175, 159 Stone, John, warden of King's Hall, Cambridge, 436 Stonesfield (Oxon.), $29 Stopyndon, John, 243 Strangways, John, 36 Strasbourg (Bas Rhim), 31 Suffork, county of, 273, 277 William de la Pole, earl of, 13, 131, rko, 246, 260, 329, 343, 363, 433

Talbot, Gilbert, Lord, 22, 51, 58, 61, 72, 73, 129, 148, 149, 219 John, Lord, 72 Tancarville (Seine Inf.), 176 Jacques d'Harcourt, lord of Montgommery, count of, 295, 296, 320 sq , 333 999- 153: 154: 407, 412 - John Gwy of Heton, count of, 74, 151, 161, 176, 30 , 305 Taylor, William, 18t Tenterden (Kent), 404 Teramo, Simon de, 375 Teutomic Order, 45 Terrottale, 90 Tewkerbury abbey (Gloucenenh), 14t Thame (Oxon), 43 Thérouanne (Pas-de-Calais), 267: bishop of, see Luxemourg, Louis of Thian, Jean, Bestard of, 327 Thierache, 20, 334, 154 Thievade, Ohver de Mauny, lord of, 142 Thoulongeon, John, lord of, 189 Thurgarton (Notts.), priory of, 403 Thury Harcourt (Cawados), 64, 261 Tichbourne Down (Hanu.), 43 Tillière (Eure), 323 Tilly our Sculles (Calvados), 64 Tiptoft, John, kt., 30, 32, 32, 33, 40, 74, 535, 248, 250, 168 199., 376 Tirwhit, William, kt., 238 Titchfield (Hants.), 47 Tombelaine (Manche), 218 Tonnerre, see Chalos Torigny (Manche), 73 Toulouse (Haute-Garonne), 81 Touques (Calvados), 54, 195, 2541 river, 53, 211 Touraine, 154, 165, 153, 325 Tournay (Flanders), 82, 162 Tours (Indre-et-Loire), 80, 299, 310, 311 | archbishop of, see *Gei*ss, T Tower of London, the, 39, 41, 88, 91, 95, 143, 151, 394, 295, 397, 402, 403, mint of 277, 402 Eq. 433 Tremblay (Seine-et-Oise), 296 True (Osse), castle of 193 Truer, archbuhop of, see Otto of Zingenham Trouville (Calvados), 53 Troyes (Aube), 78, 81, 83, 200, 104, 113, 162, 184, 87, 192, 197, 199, 200, 201, 202 sqq., 207, 295, 345, 378, 385, 409, 410, 42,, 415 - treaty of, terms, 198 sq., 203 sq., 235 20, 309, 310, 351, 572, accepted in Paris, 2051 proclaimed in London, 2044 accepted by States-General, 2271 accepted by Estates of Normandy, a 175

Troyes, treaty of (contd.)
ratified by English Parl ament, 276,
2813 Norman resistance to, 2613 accepted by French prossners, 286 sq., 364, 80., 361 sqq 4 accepted by duke of
Be 15023, 164, Henry 2 views on, 174, 416
Thus (Cabridae), 64.

From (Calvados), 65 Todert, Jean, clean of Pane, 139 Tolly (Somme), 237 Torks, the, 4, 7 I ynedale (Northumb.), 210

Ulm (Wartemberg) 99 Umfravide, Gribert, kt., 51, 58, 63, 65, 113, 114, 125, 137, 138, 189, 198, 200, 302, 306 — Robert, kt., 89, 90 Urban de Florencia, 376 Unificte, Gerard, kt., 110

Vaille, Jean de, 139 Valée, Rubert de, abbot of Bee, 111 Valenciennes (Nord), 291, 292 Valfin, Jean de la Baume-Montrerel, lord օքը լժե Valognes (Manche), 23, 111, 231 Valou, 193, 334, 357, 378 Vannes, Amaury de la Motte, bishop of, Vasques of Almada, Jolo de, 139 Vaughan, Sir Griffith, lord of Burgedin, Vaugirard (Seine-et-One), 19 Vaurus, Bastard of, 338, 350, 351 - Denn de, 350, 351 Vendome (Loir-et Cher), 125, 128, 170, – Louis, count of, 39 Venice, 46, 100 Verdauant, lord of, 353. Vergy, Antoine de, 180, 381, 409 Jean de, 161, 409 Vermandous, Br. 232, 326, 354, 378, 407 Vernauil (Eure), 66, 240, 146, 411 Vernan (Eure), 160, 161, 161, 163, 176, 194 Versadles (Some-et-One), 79 Vertus, Philip of Orleans, count of, 26 c. Ver.n. the. 180, 184 Verelay (Youne), 410 Vieil Bauge (Maine-et-Lorre), 300, 303, 104, 306 Vieil Heider (Par-de-Cabis), 43a Villebon (Eure-et Loir), 316 Villeneuve l'Archevêque (Yonne), 207

Viders-Bocage (Calvados), 64 Vimeu, 260, 296, 333, 353, 354, 357, 407, 408 Vire (Casvados), 73, 258

Wailli, Jean de, 97
Wales, 85 sq., 92, 93
Walker, Richard, 221
Walkrede, Richard, kr., 231
Wallingford (Berks.), 42, 429
Wallingford (Hants.), 43
Walsingham (Norfolk), 272
Walsingham (Norfolk), 272
Waltham, Roger, 245
Wartage (Berks.), 42
Ware, Henry, keeper of the privy stal, 25, 27, 41; bishop of Chichester, 139
Warwick, Richard Beauchamp, count of Aumaie, sail of, 14, 27, 07, 147, 226.

Warwick, Richard Beauchamp, count of Aumale, earl of, 14, 27, 97, 147, 225, 267, 275, 417; welcomes Signmund at Calan, 71 treats with Burgundy, 20, 13, 136, 161, 162, 192, at suge of Caen, 31, 60, besieges Domfront, 103; besieges Caudeber, 129; at suge of Rourn, 131, 137, 139; at conference of Meusan, 164, 168; besieges La Roche Guyon, 176 19; as envoy in Para, 193, as Troyes, 198, 200 requal suge of Melun, 210; at queen's coronation, 169; at suge of Meaux, 338 sq., 347, 349, commands in Picardy, 407, 412, at Henry's teathbed, 416

Waterton Robert, 16, 24 27, 351 Watton (Yorks), priory of, 220 Webb, Henry, 404 Weils (Somernet , 42 Weishpool (Montgomeryth, , oa Wentel, king of the Romans, 14 Weobiey (Herefordsh.), 270 Westminster, 11, 36, 39, 47, 48, 219, 267, 268 sq 286, 359, 170, 195, 422 abber of, 266, 283, 442 19 , 427 Wen morland, county of, 17, 229, 396, 403 Ralph Neville, carl of, $8, 90, 91, 269. 274. 415 Whethametede, John, abbot of St Albana, 384 Where Williams, 404 Whirington, Richard, 414 Whittington, Robert, $$ Wherlton (Yorks), 16 Wigtown, Archivald Douglas, earl of,

Whitington, Robert, $$
Wherlton (Yorks), 36
Wigtown, Archivald Douglas, earl of, 183, 294, 300, 316, 107
Willoughby, Robert, Lord, 58, 401, 411
Wilton (Wilts.), 196
Wilshire, 273
Wincheisea (Susex), 401
Windecke, Eberhardt, 2, 70

Villeneuve-sur- Yonne (Yonne), 294, 295.

124, 129, 130, 313

Windsor (Berks.), 12, 39, 42, 293, 195
Witney (Oxon.), 41
Wittelsbach, family of, 349
Wobuzn (Beds.), 43
Woodnesburgh, John, prior of Christ
Church, Canterbury, 22
Woodstock (Oxon.), 429
Woodwale, Richard, 238, 243
Wootner (Haris.), 429
Worcester 404; bishops of, see Margan,
P; Provell, T.; cathedra, of, 225; diocese of, 221; prior of, 284
— Richard Beauchamp, earl of, previously Lord Abergavenny, .0, 131, 269, 275, 348

Wyche, Richard, 89, 121

Yarmouth (Norfolk), 404
Yolande, duchess of Anjou, 805 Anjou
Yonge, Richard, bishop of Rochester, 172
Yonne, 172
Yonne, 174, 175, 176, 177
York, 35, 120, 271, 186, 435 sq
— Philippa, duchess of, 430
Yorkshire, 87, 272, 318
Ypres (West Flanders), 34

Zealand, see Holland Zuka, John, 360

Worcester, Richard, 215

CAMBRIDGE: PRINTED BY W. LEWIS, M.A., AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

